Towns of most note, according to the several Regions and parts hereof, are, for Mygdonia specially and properly so called, 1. Antigonis, so called from Antigonus a King of Macedon, the first Founder of it. 2. Xylopolis. 3. Terpillus. 4. Phisco. 5. Afforus. All mentioned by Ptolomy, but not else observable. 6. Apollonia, for distinction sake called Apollonia Mygdonia, to difference it from Apollonia in Albania, then a part of Macedon: famous for the Studies of Augustus Caesar, who here learned the Greek Tongue. For Amphaxitis, there was 7. Arethusa; 8. Stagira, now called Nicalidi, renowned for the Birth of Aristotle, hence named Stagirites. 9. Thessalonica, situate on the bottom of Sinus Thermaicus, now called the Bay of Salonichi, by the name of the Town. Anciently the Metropolis or Head City of Macedon; the Seat of the Præfatus Prætorio for Illyricum, after the removal thereof from Sirmium; as also of the Primate of the Greek Church, who resided here. To the people of this City did St. Paul write two of his Epistles. It continued in great power and credit till the Fall of the Constantinopolitan Empire into the hands of the Latines: at which time it was bestowed first on Raniface Marquis of Montferrat, the new King of Thessaly; after whose death it fell unto the State of Venice, who held it till the year 1432, when it was forced by Amurath the second to become Turkish. Which notwithstanding, it still preserves the Reputation of a beautiful and wealthy City, inhabited by Rich Merchants, who drive here a great Trade, especially for the commodities of the Indies; for Beauty, Riches and Magnificence, little inferiour unto Naples: and though the Turks and Jews make the greatest number of Inhabitants, yet here are reckoned 30 Churches for the use of Christians. As for the Jews, they swarm here in such great abundance, that in this City and that of Constantinople only there are reckoned 160000 of them; but generally hated and contemned by all sorts of People. In the year of Christ 390, The Inhabitants of this City having committed some Insolencies against Theodosius the Great, that Prince Ordered a Military revenge, in which there Perished 7000 of its People. In the year 895, it was taken and sack'd by the Sarazens. In the year 1423, it was sold to the Venetians, from whom it was Ravish'd soon after by Amurath the second, as our Author saith. In the year 1688, the Venetian Fleet began the Campaign with the Bombing this City, a considerable part of which was by that means burnt. Coronelli saith, the Walls of this City are flank'd with Towers, and are about 10 miles in compass, and it has besides three Forts. It has many Inhabitants, the most of which are Jews, yet it has 48 Mosques, 30 Christian Churches, and 36 great Synagogues, and many smaller. 10. Siderocapſa, of old called Chrysites, remarkable for its Mines of Gold and Silver; so beneficial to the Turk, that he received hence monthly 18000, and sometimes 30000 Crowns de claro. Next for Chalcidice, there was 11. Panormus, a Port-Town. 12. Sstratonica, in the Peninsula of Mount Athos. 13. Atho or Athosa, in the same Peninsula, with a Promontory of the same name, nigh which it stood. 14. Acanthus, now called Eriffo, on the Bay of the Holy Mountain. And finally in Paraxia we have 15. Ampelus. 16. Torona, giving name to the Bay adjoining, called anciently Sinus Toronaicus, now Golfo di Aromania. 17. Cassandra, on the Sea-side, so called from Cassandra King of Macedon, who repaired and beautified it; being before named Potidea. 18. Derris. 19. Merillus. 20. Pallene, situate in the Chersonese or Demi-Island called Patalene, and by some Patalia: formerly consecrated to the Muses, but before that infamous for the War which the Giants are fabled to have made here against the Gods; at what time it was called Phlegra, the Fields adjoining Campi Phlegrai, in which this great Battle is supposed to be fought. The occasion of the Fable was, (as both Theagenes and Endoxus do expound the same). That the Inhabitants hereof in those elder times, being men of a most impious and insolent Life, got the name of Giants; whom when Hercules endeavoured to subdue and reduce to Reason, it happened that there fell a great Tempest of Thunder and Lightning, by which they were constrained to fly and submit themselves. Hence the Report that those Giants made War against the Gods. Others have placed these Phlegrean Fields in Thessaly, and perhaps more probably. Certain I am, that some place nearer to the Hills of Pelion, Ossa and Olympus, doth agree best with it: if at least Ovid were not out in his Narration, who makes those Mountains to be heaped upon one another, for their better reaching to the Skies, and fighting upon even ground, as the saying is. For thus that Poet;

*Affectasse serunt regnum cæleste Gigantes, Atque congestos struxisse ad Sidera Montes.
At pater omnipotens misso perfregit Olympum Fulmine, & excussit subjectum Pelion Ossa.*

Which may be Englished in these words;

The Giants once the Throne of Heaven affected,
And Hills on Hills unto the Stars erected:
Till Jove with Thunder high Olympus brake,
And Pelion did from under Ossa take.

But from those Fables to proceed to more real Stories. This Country was first peopled by Cittim, the Son of Javan, passing over out of Asia minor; in memory whereof here was not only a Town called Cittium, spoken of of by Livie l. 42. but the whole Land of Macedon is in the Book of Maccabees called the Land of Chetium, 1. Maccab. 1. 1. and the Inhabitants hereof called Citins in the 8. Chapter of the same Book, v. 5. Spreading in tract of time from one Sea to another, from the Ægean to the Adriatick, some Colonies of them passed from hence to Italy, and first inhabited that Country, as hath there been said. Such as continued in those parts, divided unto several Tribes, as in all parts else, became in time to be united in the name of Macedons. A People not much taken notice of in former times, living a poor and painful Life, Goatherds and Shepherds for the most part, scarce able to defend their own Mountains from the next Invader, much less to dream of Conquering either Greece or Persia: And therefore Alexander told them, and not much unfitly, (though by him spoken in passion, and to their Disgrace) that his Father Philip had first made them Gentlemen. For Philip having learned the Rudiments of War under Epaminondas, (being then an Hostage with the Thebans) and by that means becoming acquainted with the Temper and State of Greece, not only freed his own Kingdom from the Illyrians, Thracians, and other barbarous Nations, who had gained upon it; but taking advantage of the Factions raised amongst the Gracians, (which he knew how to feed and cherish for his own improvement) brought them at first wholly to rely upon him, and after to be subject to him. Insomuch that never any Monarchy had a swifter growth nor a more speedy Dissolution: there passing not full 40 years from the first of Philip to the last of Alexander, in which space it was both begun, perfected, and broken to pieces. For the Foundation being laid in Murther, Perjury, and Treason, as at first it was, was never likely to be blessed with a long Continuance.

Of these 24 Kings only 6 are famous, viz. 1. Carmanus, the first King, originally of Argos, of the Race of Hercules, and by an Oracle commanded to lead a Colony into this Country, and to follow the first Flock of Cattle he saw before him. Being here arrived in a tempestuous stormy day, he espied a Herd of Goats flying the fury of the Weather: These Goats he followed unto Ædessa, into which by reason of the darkness of the Air, he entred undiscovered, won the Town, and in short space became Lord of all the Country. On which occasion as the Goat afterwards became the Arms and Ensign of the Kings of Macedon, so by that Beast those

Kings were figuratively designed in the Holy Scripture: of which see Dan. 8. 5. 21. 2. Perdiccas, the 4th King, who at Ægæ built a Burial-place for all his Successors, assuring his People, that as long as their Kings were there Buried, his Race should never fail: and so it happened. For the Kingdom of Macedon, after the death of Alexander the Great, who was buried at Babylon, was translated to the Sons of Demetrius. 3. Europus, who in his infancy was carried in a Cradle against the Illyrians his Enemies, and returned victorious: This the Macedons did, either because they thought they could not be beaten, their King being pretent; or persuading themselves that there was none so void of Honour and Compassion as to abandon an Infant, no way able to save himself from Destruction but by the Valour and Fidelity of his Servants. 4. Alexander the Son of Amyntas, famous for a notable Exploit on the Persian Embassadors; who being sent from Megabyzus, requested a view of the Macedonian Ladies. No sooner were they entred, but petulantius eas Persis contrectantibus, as Justine relateth the Story, they were called back by this Alexander, sending in their steads young Springals maidenly attired, who, upon the like Indignities offered, slew these effeminate Asians. After which he behaved himself so discreetly, that the Persian Monarch gave him all Greece between Hæmus and Olympus. 5. Philip, Father to Alexander, who governed first as a Guardian to Amyntas, the Son of Perdiccas his elder Brother; but afterwards took unto himself both the Kingdom and Title of King, which he continued in the Deposition of his Nephew and natural Sovereign, the Murther of the rest of his Brethren, and the Destruction of all such as opposed his practice. But, being otherwise a man of approved Abilities, he cleared his own Country of the Illyrians, subdued Achaia, Thrace, and a great part of Peloponnesus, and was chosen general of the Greeks against the Persians. But as soon as he had made all things ready for this expedition, he was slain by one Pausanias, a young Gentleman whom he had formerly abused in the heat of his unnatural Lust. 6. Alexander, the Son of Philip, who recovered such parts of Greece as on the death of his Father had befooled themselves with a hope of Liberty. He subdued Darius the great King of Persia, Taxiles and Porus Kings of India; founded the Monarchy of the Gracians; and in the height of his Successes was poisoned at Babylon (as it is conceived) by Cassander, one of his great Captains: his Revenue at the time of his death amounting to 300000 Talents yearly. After his death his new got Empire was much controverted in the point of Succession, he himself dying without lawful Issue, and having at his death bequeathed it to him who was thought most worthy by his Army: and his Soldiers, according to their several Affections and Relations, thought their own Leaders most deserving. At last the Title of King (and in effect nothing but the Title) was by consent of the Commanders cast on Aridæus, a Ballard of Philip, to whom Perdiccas was appointed to be Protector, (for Aridæus was a little crazed in his Brain) and to be General of the Army: by whose design he was also married to Eurydice, Daughter to Amyntas, whom Philip had before dispossessed of that Kingdom. As for the Provinces they were assigned unto the Government of the chief Commanders, viz. Ægypt to Ptolemy, Syria to Laomedon, Cilicia to Philotas, Mediæ to Lytho, Cappadocia to Eumenes, Pamphylia, Lycia and Phrygia major to Antigonus, Caria to Cassander, Lydia to Menander, Pontus and Phrygia minor to Leonatus, Assyria to Selenus, Persis to Pentestes, Thrace to Lysimachus, and Macedon it self unto Antipater: the other parts of the Persian Empire being left to them unto whose hands they were committed in the time of Alexander. But this Division held not long: for Perdiccas being once slain by Ptolemy, and Eumenes made away by Antigonus, these two became quickly too great for the rest; Ptolemy adding Syria and Cyprus to the Kingdom of Ægypt, and Antigonus bringing under his Command not only all Asia minor, but Assyria, Media

Media and almost all the Eastern parts of the Persian Empire. Antipater in the mean time, succeeding in the Protectorship, banished Olympias the Mother of Alexander out of Macedonia, as bearing but a Step-dames love unto Arideus. But he being dead she returned out of Epirus, (the place of her Banishment) into Macedonia, where raising a strong Party amongst the People, she put Arideus and his Wife Euridice to death, proclaiming Alexander the Son of Alexander by Roxane; both slain not long after by Cassander the Son of Antipater, who to make ture work, murdered also with the like Cruelty Hercules, the Son of Alexander by Barsine, (another Persian Lady, as Roxane was) the last Survivor of that House. And so the Royal Family being rooted out, Antigonus took unto himself the Title of King: as did Seleucus, who had now recovered all the Persian Provinces beyond Euphrates. The like did Ptolomy in Aegypt; and Cassander in Macedon.

The second Race of the M A C E D O N Kings.

A. M.

- 3648 1. Cassander, Son of Antipater, supposed to have been the Poisoner of Alexander, rooted out the Blood-Royal of Macedon. His Reign was full of Troubles and Difficulties. 19.
- 3667 2. Alexander and Antipater, Sons to Cassander, but not well agreeing, called unto their Aid Lysimachus and Demetrius, by whom they were both in short time murdered. 4.
- 3671 3. Demetrius, Son to Antigonus, the powerful King of Asia, after he had in one Battle against Seleucus lost both his Father and all his Asian Dominions, settled himself in Macedon, but there being outed by Pyrrhus, he fled to Seleucus, and with him died. 6.
- 3677 4. Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, was by his Soldiers, voluntarily forsaking Demetrius, made King of Macedon: but after 7 months the Soldiers revolted to Lysimachus, as being a Macedonian born. 1.
- 3678 5. Lysimachus King of Thrace, being thus made King of Macedon, was in the end vanquish'd and slain by Seleucus, the last Survivor of Alexander's Captains. 7.
- 3685 6. Ceraunus, or Ptolomy Ceraunus, Son to Ptolomy of Aegypt, having traiterously slain his Friend and Patron Seleucus, seized on Macedon: but lost it, together with his Life, unto the Gauls, who then plagued these Countries. After whose Death this Kingdom, being distracted amongst many Competitors, settled at last upon
- 3687 7. Antigonus Gonatus, the Son of Demetrius, who for his Valour shewn in expulsi^{ng} the Gauls, was made King of Macedon. And though for a while he gave way to Pyrrhus, then returning from Italy; yet after the Death of Pyrrhus he again recovered his Estate, but was outed once again by Alexander the Son of Pyrrhus. 36.
- 3723 8. Demetrius II. Son of Antigonus, recovered Macedon from the power of Alexander the Son of Pyrrhus. 10.
- 3733 9. Antigonus II. surnamed Doson, left by Demetrius as Protector to his young Son Philip, usurped the Kingdom. He divers times vanquished and crushed the Grecians, beginning then to cast off the Yolk of Macedon. 12.
- 3745 10. Philip, the Son of Demetrius. 42.
- 3787 11. Perseus, the Son of Philip, the last King of Macedon. The Subversion of which Estate was first begun in the time of his Father, who had not only warred upon the Aetolians and other of the Greeks whom the Romans had taken into their Protection, but sided with Hannibal against them. Upon which grounds they sent first Titus Qu. Flaminius, one of their Consuls, by whom Philip was vanquish'd at the Battel of Cunosccephalos, and his Kingdom made Tributary unto Rome. After which picking a Quarrel against Perseus also, managed with variable Success by Licinius, Martius, and others of their Commanders, they dispatched Paulus Aemilius with an Army into Macedon, to bring him to absolute Subjection. Who sped so well, that Macedon was made a Province of the Roman Empire, and Perseus led Captive unto Rome, Anno 3789. In which Triumph, besides the Pomp of leading a Captive King in Bonds, Aemilius caused the ready Money which he brought out of Greece to be carried in 750 Vessels, every Vessel containing three Talents; which made so infinite a Sum, that the Roman People were free for many Years after from all Taxes and Impositions. A. M. 3789.

Macedon, thus made a Province of the Roman Empire, and afterwards divided into three parts or Provinces, that is to say, Macedonia Prima, Macedonia Secunda or Salutaris, and Prevalitana, in the new Model of Constantine became a Diocese, the Diocesis hereof containing the Provinces of Crete, Achaia, Old and New Epirus, Macedonia Prima, and the greatest part of Salutaris; the residue of Salutaris and Prevalitana (which makes up the Country now called Albania) being laid to the Diocese of Dacia. It continued part of the Eastern Empire till towards the last fatal Dissolution of it; though many times harassed and depopulated by the Sclavonians, Bulgarians, Rasses, and other of the barbarous People, at their several Invasions of it. Finally, it was conquered by the Turks, first, under the Conduct of Bajazet, their fourth King, taking Nicopolis, a Town hereof bordering on Thrace, and lying North of Sinus Strimonicus now the Bay of Contesa, in the year of Christ 1392. and after under Amurath the second, their sixth King, making themselves Masters of Theffalonica, the chief City of it, and therewith of all the Country, in the year 1429. By reason of which many Invasions and last Desolation by the Turks, there is scarce one of all those many Cities before mention'd now of any eminence, except Theffalonica only; the rest being miserably destroyed. And for the Country it self, it is governed by a Turkish Sanzack, under the Beglerbeg of Greece; his annual Revenue being but 8000 Crowns, nor any thing else required of him than to maintain an 100 Horse in ordinary pay for defence of his Province, and to find 400 Horse on extraordinary occasions, as the Grand Seignior shall command him.

6. T H R A C E.

T H R A C E hath on the East Pontus Euxinus, Propontis, and the Hellespont; on the West Bulgaria and Macedon; on the North the Hill Hemus, which parts it from Bulgaria; on the South the Aegean Sea and part of Macedon. It is a very large and goodly Province, extending 20 days Journey in length, and 7 days Journey in breadth; and, in relation to the Heavens, reaching unto the 44 Degree of the Northern Latitude; so that the longest Day in Summer is about 15 Hours three quarters.

By several Men, according to the times they lived in, it hath been called by divers names: by Stephanus, Aria; by Suidas, Odrissa; by Lycophron, Crestonia; by some Writers Scythia; by Josephus the Hebrew, Thyras. But generally it is called Thrace, or Thracia, and that, as some, from Thrax the Son of Mars, as others, from Thracia, an Inchantress: More probably from the Fertility and barbarous Condition of the first Inhabitants, the Name in the Original Greek bearing that construction:

tion: Most likely from Thyrus, the Son of Japhet, who first planted here, in memory of whom it did retain the name of Thyrus in the time of Josephus; besides many other Footsteps and Remembrances of him in the Names of many of their Towns, and some of their Princes; of which we have already spoken in our General Preface. Finally, by the Turks it is called Romania; either from the many Roman Colonies which were planted here, or because Constantinople, the chief City of it, was anciently called Nova Roma; and by that name it is now called in most modern Writers.

The Country generally is neither of a rich Soil nor a pleasant Air: The Corn and other Fruits, by reason of the coldness of the Climate, leisurely ripening; the Vines yielding more Shade than Juice, and the Trees for the most part more Leaves than Fruit: Yet in some parts there be many large and goodly Plains, where they reap good store of Corn, but of Pulse especially; and towards the Sea-side they have plenty of Wine, which Pliny much commended both for strength and goodness.

The People anciently were very bold and valiant, and called by some Αυτονομοι, because every Man was a Law to himself. So that it was truly said by Herodotus, that if they had either been all of one Mind, or under one King, they had been invincible. Of Manners they were rude and savage, somewhat near to brutishness; buying their Wives, and selling both their Sons and Daughters, as in open Market: In that since imitated by the Turks, who possess their Country. The Men were more courageous than comely, wearing Clothes according to their Conditions, ragged and unseemly. The Married Women were in love to their Husbands so constant, that they willingly sacrificed themselves at their Funerals. The Virgins were bestowed not by their own Parents, but the common Fathers of their Cities. Such as brought neither Beauty nor Vertue for their Dowry, were put off according to their Money; most times sold as other Cattel in the Markets. In matters of Religion they worshipped Mars, Bacchus, Diana, Mercury, as did other Gentiles: Swearing especially by the first, from whom they bragged themselves to have been descended. But their chief National Deity was one Zamolxes, sometimes a Native of this Country, who, having been brought up under Pythagoras, and returning home, prescribed them good and wholesome Laws; assuring them, that, if they did observe the same, they should go unto a place when they left this World in which they should enjoy all manner of Pleasure and Contentment. By this means having gotten some Opinion of a Divinity amongst them, he absented himself; and after was worshipped as their God. Upon these Principles, when any one was born amongst them, his Parents and other Friends, sitting round about him, lamented bitterly his coming into the World, ripping up all the Miseries and Afflictions whereto he was to be exposed in this present Life, and so deplored his Condition as absolutely miserable and unhappy. But, on the contrary, when any one chanced to die, they buried him with all Joy and Alacrity; highly rejoicing that by this means he was freed from the Crosses and Disasters of this wretched World. Which is expressed thus briefly (after his wonted manner) by my Author, Lugentur Puerperia; natiq̃ue desuntur; Funera contra Festa sunt, & velut Sacra cantu lusuq̃ue celebrantur. A Piece of such sound and orthodox Divinity, that I wonder how they hit upon it in those times of Darknes; and favouring very much of the Primitive Piety, by which the Obits of the Saints were kept as Festivals, no notice being taken of the day of their Births. According to that of the good old Writer, Non Nativitatem sed Mortem Sanctorum Ecclesia pretiosam & festam judicat.

Here lived the Tyrant Polymnestor, who villanously murdered Polydorus, a younger Son of Priamus; for which Fact Hecuba, the young Prince's Mother, scratched him to Death. Here also lived the Tyrant Tercus, of whom before in Phocis: and Diomedes, who, using to feed his Horses with Man's Flesh, was slain by Hercules, and cast unto his Horses. And, finally, here reigned King Cotys, whom I mention not as a Tyrant, but propose as a pattern of rare Temper both in mellowing and preventing Passion. For when a Neighbour Prince had sent him a Present of Glasses of the purest Metal, and no less accurate in the Workmanship or Fashion of them, having dispatched the Messenger with all the due Complements of Majesty and Gratitude he broke them all to pieces; lest if by mishap any of his Servants should do the like, he might be stirred to an intemperate Choler.

Chief Mountains in this Country, besides Hemus spoken of already, are, 1. Rhodope, the highest next Mount Hemus in those parts of the World; craggy and rough, and the Top thereof continually white with Snow. Memorable for the Fate and Fable of Orpheus, who in a melancholick Humour (having lost his Wife) betook himself to these Mountains, where with his Musick he affected both Woods and Beasts, who are said to have danced unto his Musick: From this place of his Abode called Rhodopeius, from his Country Thracius, Non me carminibus vincet nec Thracius Orpheus, &c. as the Shepherd boasteth in the Poet. The truth is, that he was a Man of an heavenly Muse, and by his Dictates and good Counsel, laid down in Verse, first of all civilized this People, and weaned them by degrees from their Bestiality. Hence the occasion of the Fable. But for Mount Rhodope it self, it is in the midst of this Country, thwarting it from Mount Hemus towards the West; which, with the Spurs and Branches of it, and the Plains adjoining, lying betwixt the River Nessus on the West, and Melus or Niger on the East, made up that Province of the Empire called Rhodope, by the name of the Mountain. 2. Pangæus, rich in Mines of Silver. 3. Melapus, shooting towards the Sea, full of Rocks and Cliffs. And, 4. Orbelus, lying towards Macedon, where there is a little Region, from hence called Orbelia.

Principal Rivers hereof, besides Strymon, spoken of before, the Boundary in some places betwixt this and Macedon, are, 1. Nessus, by the Gracians now called Mestros, by the Turks Charason, which rising out of Mount Hemus, falleth into the Sea near the Isle of Thassius. 2. Athyra, in which name the memory of Thyrus the Son of Japhet seems to be preserved; which, rising in Mount Hemus also, loseth it self in the Propontick; as doth, 3. Bathynius, another River rising from the same Mount Hemus. 4. Hebrus, now Mariza, the most noted River of all this Country, rising out of Rhodope, and falling into the Ægean near the Isle of Samothrace: a River of so slow a Course, that it is not easie to discern which way it goeth; but memorable in the Poets for the Fate of Orpheus, who, being torn in pieces by the Thracian Women, had his Limbs thrown into it by those Furies. 5. Thearus, good against the Scab both in Man and Beast, issuing out of Thirty Fountains, some hot, some cold; with the pleasantness of whose Waters Darius the King of Persia was so delighted, that he erected a Pillar in Honour of it.

The chief Towns were, 1. Abdera, now called Prolystilo, situate not far from the Fall of the River Nessus into the Ægean, the Birth-place of Democritus, who spent his whole Life in laughing at the Follies of others. 2. Poridea, of old a Colony of Athens, from whom it revolted, and submitted to the State of Corinth. But the Athenians, not enduring the Affront, beleagured it, and after two years Siege, and the expence of Two Thousand Talents, could not recover it again but on Composition. 3. Anos, on the Ægean Sea; a Town of great strength and safety, and therefore used by the latter Constantinopolitan Emperors for the securing of great persons. For hither Michael Paleologus sent Furthines, the Turkish Sultan flying to him for Aid; and hither Mahomet the great sent Demetrius, Prince of Pe-loponnesus, when he yielded up his Country to him: both under colour of providing for their ease and safety; but in plain terms to keep them in honourable Prisons.

4. Lyfsmachia, on the Sea-shore; once of great importance, built by Lyfsmachus, who after Alexander's death laid hands on this Country: afterwards garrisoned by Philip the Father of Perscus; on the withdrawing of whose Forces, for some other Service it was taken and rased to the ground by the barbarous Thracians, and all the People of it carried into Captivity; but by Antiochus the Great Re-edified and New-peopled again, moved thereunto by the convenient situation and former glories of the place.

5. Philippopolis, so called from Philip King of Macedon, the Father of Alexander, who Built and Fortified it as a Bridle to hold in the Thracians; called also Trimontium, from three Hills on which it was situate: beautified in the time of the Romans, with a goodly Amphitheatre, continuing entire and whole till these latter days, and might have lasted longer by many Ages did not the Turks daily take away the Stones thereof, which are all of Marble, to make Money of them. Here are also many other ancient Monuments, though the Town be much wasted and destroyed, the Scythians at one time killing in it above a Hundred Thousand persons: which notwithstanding it is populous and well frequented by reason of the convenient situation of it on the River Hebrus, which they now call Mariza. It is now an Arch-bishop's See. In the year 349, here was an Arrian Council held, and here Julian was, when he heard of the Death of his Uncle Constantius the Emperor, and thereupon discovered his before conceal'd Apostacy. Frederick Barbarossa, took this City and Adrianople from the Turks in the year 1189, in the year 1359, this City was retaken by the Turks, under Amurath the first, others say in 1362. It is now the Seat of a Turkish Sangiat, under the Pacha or Governour of Romania, Hoffman. It is seated in a large Plain. One part of this Town is built on a Hill, and the other two parts are near it, and appear like Bulwarks or Fortifications, the Walls of the City are very ancient. The Inhabitants retain a Tradition that St. Paul Preached in this City, in a certain place, where stands a Chappel of great Antiquity, to which they repair with great Devotion. Sir P. Ricaut.

6. Trajanopolis, so called from the Emperor Trajan, by whom it was either Founded or Repaired; indifferently well-peopled, and still preserving its Old name. Said by others to be very small, and ill Peopled, it stands beneath Adrianople, upon the Mariza.

7. Selymbria, on the Coast of the Propontick Sea: beautified with a commodious Port for Receipt of small Vessels and many Bays adjoining capable of greater: by Ptolomy called Selybria, and Olybria by Suidas.

8. Apollonia, upon Pontus Euxinus or the Black Sea, now Sissopolis.

9. Phinopolis, on the same Sea also.

10. Nicopolis at the foot of the Mount Hemus, there being another of that name near the River Nessus.

11. Perinthus, on the Propontick Sea, near the Influx of the River Arfiss. A Town of great Note in the ancient Business of Greece, of great strength, and peopled formerly with men of such Resolutions, that they maintained their Liberty against Philip of Macedon, after almost all the rest of Thrace had submitted to him.

12. Meratton, at first a Colony of the Thbans, and afterwards of much request in the time of the Romans, as being beautified with the Palaces of Vespasian, Domitrian, and Antoninus, Emperors of Rome, as also with an Amphitheatre cut out of one entire Marble, and accounted one of the World's seven Wonders; and finally, made the Metropolitan City of the Province of Europe, one of the Provinces of the Diocels of Thrace, whereof more anon. This Town has now a good Harbour, five miles in Circumference, and it lies between the Sea and this Port, as Mr. Wheeler saith, who found here an Inscription in Honour of Severus, their great Benefactor, who subjected Bizantium to this City, but how ever it is now a poor place.

13. Olynthus, called by Xenophon the greatest City of Thrace; as possibly enough it was in Power and Riches, though not in greatness of Extent. A Colony of the Athenians, Rich in Trade, and Mistress of a fair and goodly Territory adjoining to it: the People whereof had been malicious Enemies to the Kings of Macedon, which principally enduced Philip spoken of before, to set upon them. In which Attempt he sped so well, that what he could not get by Force he obtained by Money, bribing some of the principal Officers to betray it to him. For the recovery whereof Demosthenes oft moved the people of Athens, in those elaborate Orationes called the Olynthiacks.

14. Sestos, in the Thracian Chersonese, which, being a Peninsula abutting over against Troas on the Asian side, is now called Saint George's Arm. Opposite whereunto on the other side of the Water, is the Town of Abydus; remarkable for the Tragical Loves of Hero and Leander, celebrated by Musæus, an old Greek Poet.

16. Callipolis, or Gallipoli, on the Northern Promontory of this Chersonese, the first City of Note that ever the Turks possessed in Europe, taken by Solyman, the Son of Orchanes the second King of the Ottoman Race, Anno 1358; from whence they easily and in little time spread themselves all over the rest of Thrace; the ordinary passage of late times betwixt Europe and Asia, by reason of the convenient Harbour and safe Anchorage. It is a great, Populous, well Traded Place, having an Haven, Castle and a good Magazin, but it is neither Wall'd nor well Built, within the Houses being all of Earth and Timber, low built, and the Streets Narrow. It is said to be Six Miles in Compass, and has about Five Thousand Christian Inhabitants, but there is little to be seen of its ancient Splendor and Elegance. It stands a Hundred Miles South from Constantinople, as Mr. Wheeler saith. Mr. Wheeler who saw it in the year 1675, saith it was not populous, nor wall'd, though the Inhabitants are said to be Twenty Thousand in the compass of Six Miles, but the Plague was then there. p. 75.

16. Cardia, seated on the Western side of it, opposite to the Isle of Lemnos, the Birth place of Eumenes, who being a poor Carrier's Son, attained to such an ability in the Art of War, that after the death of Alexander the Great, under whom he served, he seized on the Provinces of Cappadocia and Paphlagonia, and siding (though a stranger to Macedon) with Olympias and the Blood Royal against the Greek Caprains, vanquished and slew Craerius, and divers times drove Antigonus (afterwards Lord of Asia) out of the Field. But being by his own Soldiers betrayed, he was by them delivered to Antigonus, and by him slain.

17. Sardica, situate towards Mount Hemus, memorable for the Council there held against the Arians, Anno 381.

18. Adrianople, seated near the midst of Thrace, called anciently Uscudama; but got this name from Adrian the Emperor, who repaired and beautified it; made subject to the Turks by Bajazet, Anno 1362: From the first taking of it made the Seat of the Turkish Kings, till the taking of Constantinople by Mahomet the Great; by whom it was removed unto that City. Near this City, Constantine the Great overthrew his Rival Licinius in the year 320, by which Victory he obtained the whole Roman Empire. Solyman the Great, took it from Musa his Brother in the year 1410. The late Grand Seigneur Mahomet the fourth, lived many years in this City, yet can I not find, that any of our later Travellers have given any account of it. Barbequius saith, the Walls of it are very ancient, and of no very great Circuit, but it has vast Suburbs built by the Turks.

19. Pera, opposite to Constantinople, on the farther side of the Water, (as the word doth signify mile in the Greeks) by some called Galata; once peopled by a Colony of Genoese, as the Mart and Factory of that State; taken by Mahomet the Great, Anno 1453, but still replenished, for the most part, with Christian Merchants and Artificers. Mr. Wheler our Countryman, who saw this place faith, it is a good large City, and very populous, and yet the Circumference of the Wall takes up no great space of ground, but the Houses are thick, and the Streets narrow. It is most inhabited by Christians and Jews, and therefore the Ambassadors of the Christian Princes, who attend this Court, for the most part reside here too; and in this place is the Scale of the Merchants. It is separated from Constantinople by the Haven, which must be passed by Boats, and has had the good Fortune to suffer very little yet, in those Tumults which in the years 1687 and 1688, did very much hazard the Ruine of Constantinople.

But the chief glory of this Country, and of all the East, is the renowned City of 20. Constantinople, seated in so commodious a place for Empire, that it overlooks both Europe and Asia, and commands not only the Propontis and Bosporus, but the Euxine Sea. First founded by one Byza, and from him named Byzantium: but being taken by the Persians, and from them recovered by the Spartans, (unwilling that the Persians should grow strong in Europe) it was repaired and fortified by Pausanias, one of their Commanders, 663 years before the Birth of our Saviour. In vain it was besieged by Philip of Macedon, and of great strength in the Flourish of the Roman Empire. The Walls were of a just height, every Stone whereof was so joyned with Couplers of Brass, that the whole seemed but one entire Piece; adorned besides with Turrets, Bulwarks, and other Arts of Fortification. Siding with Niger in his War against Severus the Emperor, it endured a Siege of three years against all the Forces of the Romans: during which time the people were so distressed by Famine, that men meeting in the Streets would draw and fight, the Conqueror feeding on the Vanquished. For want of Artillery to discharge on the Assailants, they cast down upon them whole Statues made of Brass, and the like curious Imagery Houses they pulled down to get Timber for Shipping; the Women cutting off their Hair to inch out their Tackle: and having thus patched up a Navy of 500 Sail, it was lost all by one Tempest. Compelled to yield by this Misfortune, the principal of the Nobility were put to the Sword, the Wealth of the Inhabitants given for a Prey to the Soldiers, the Walls thereof dismantled, and the Town left in rubbish. Yet there appeared so much of Majesty and Beauty in the very Ruines, Ut mireris utrum eorum qui primi extruxerunt, vel eorum qui deinceps sunt demoliti, vires sint potiores, as Herodian hath it. One would admire whether the Forces of those who built, or those that Ruin'd it were greater. Severus gave the Lands and Territory of this City, and made the ground on which it stood Subject to Heraclea too, that it was not only Ruin'd but Enslaved. Re-edified afterwards by the Emperor Constantine, he honoured it with his own name, and made it the chief Seat of the Roman Empire. The City was finished May 11. Anno 331; and being so finished, was endowed with all the Priviledges of Rome; an equal number of Senators, one of the Annual Consuls, and all other Officers of State, chosen out of both; the Citizens of the one being free of the other, and capable of all places of most Trust and Power. For that cause it was called Novaroma, in some following times. This City he adorned also with magnificent Buildings, curious Statues, and such like Ornaments, transported hither from Old Rome: which City he spoiled of more costly Pieces than any twenty of his Predecessors had brought unto it. At this day the chief Buildings are the Turks Seraglio and the Temple of Saint Sophia; which as they differ not much in place and situation, so as little in Magnificence and State. The Temple of Saint Sophia was, if not built, yet re-edified, by the Emperor Justinian. It is built of an Oval form, surrounded with Pillars of admirable workmanship, adorned with spacious and beautiful Galleries roofed all over with Mosaic work, and vaulted underneath; very strong for the Fabrick, and pleasing to the Eye. The Doors are very curiously wrought and plated; one of which by the Superstitious people is thought to have been made of the planks of Noah's Ark. And yet this Temple is little more than the Chancel of the ancient Church, which contained in length 265 foot, and 180 in breadth; and yet to our Saint Paul's in London may seem for the bigness to have been but a Chappel of Ease. But what it wants in Greatness, it hath gained in Beauty, and in the Elegancy of the Building, wherein it is thought to exceed all the Fabricks in the whole World. The Sides and Floor are all flagged with excellent Marble; and before the Entrance is a goodly Portico, or Porch, in which as well the Christians, who visit it out of Curiosity, as the Turks, who repair thither for Devotion, are to leave their Shoes. By Mahomet the Great, after the taking of the City, it was converted to a Turkish Mosque, as it still continueth; frequented by the Grand Seignior almost every Friday which is the Sabbath of that People. Near hereunto standeth the Palace or Seraglio of the Ottoman Emperors, on the North-East Angle of the City, where formerly stood the ancient Byzantium; divided from the rest of the City by a Wall containing three miles in Circuit, and comprehending goodly Groves of Cypresses intermixed with Plains, delicate Gardens, artificial Fountains, and all variety of Pleasures which Luxury can affect or treasure compass. The Palace it self enjoying a goodly prospect into the Sea, was first built by Justinus the Emperor, afterwards much enlarged by the Ottoman Race, containing three great Courts one within another: the Buildings yielding unto those of France and Italy, for the neat contrivances, but far surpassing them for Cost and Curiousness.

As for the City it self, it is said to be 18 miles in compass, and to contain Seven Hundred Thousand living Souls; yet would be more populous than it is, if the Plague, like a cruel Tertian Ague, did not every third year so rage amongst them. It is fortified towards the Land with three strong and high Walls, the one higher than the other, the outermost highest of them all: towards the Sea with one Wall only, built after the old Fashion with many Turrets, which very strongly flank and defend the same. But formerly both the Town and Chersonese in which it standeth were defended from the Incursions of the barbarous people by a strong Wall built on the very Isthmus of it, some ten miles from the City, reaching from one side to the other: the work of Anastasius who succeeded Zeno, Anno 494. A City which a far off gives to the Eye a most pleasing object: so intermixt with Gardens and beset with Trees, that it seems a City in a Wood; but being entred, it much deceiveth the expectation which it promised, the buildings of it being mean, if not contemptible. The Streets for the most part are exceeding narrow, but raised on each side for the greater Cleanliness: the Houses but of two Stories high, some of rough Stone, and some of Timber, without any outward Grace or exterior Garnishing; in many places nothing but low sheds or rows of Shops; and in some places long dead Walls belonging unto great Mens Houses. The principal Beauty of the whole, next to some Monuments of Antiquity, which are still preserved, and the Tombs or Sepulchres of some of the Ottoman Kings, which are very sumptuous, are the Mosques or Temples of the Turks, about Eight Thousand in Number; and the Port or Haven, so conveniently profound, that Ships of greatest Burthen may safely lay their Sides to the sides thereof, for the Receipt or Discharge of their Lading; and so commodiously seated on the Tmaticus Rosperus, that there is no Wind, whatsoever it be, which brings not in some Shipping to it. But that which gives the greatest Pleasure to the sight from the Hills adjoining is the Situation of it on seven Mountains, most of them crowned with Magnificent Mosques, built all of white Marble, round in Form, and finished on the top with gilded Spires, reflecting the Sun-beams with a marvellous Splendour. On the first whereof standeth the Ruines of Constantine's Palace, exceeding stately to behold. On the second, a fair Turkish Mosque, built on the Palace, anciently belonging to the Greek Patriarch. On the third stands a stately Mosque, the Sepulchre of Mahomet the second: and a very large Hospital, for entertainment of Pilgrims and relief of the Poor: the Annual Rents whereof are valued at Two Hundred Thousand Chequines. On the fourth and fifth the Sepulchres of Selimus the first, and Bajazet the second. On the sixth the Mosque and Sepulchre of Solyman the Magnificent, numbered amongst the present wonders of the World. And on the seventh the Temple of Saint Sophia, and the Turks Seraglio, spoken of already. In which respect it is called Πόλις ἐπὶ ἑπτάκοις by Nicetas, Urbs septicollis by Paulus Diaconus; and so acknowledged to be by Janus Doufa, Phineas Morison, G. Sandys, and other of our modern Travellers, the Eye-witnesses of it. So that if there be any Mystery in the number of Seven, or that the sitting of the Great Whore on a seven headed Beast, be an assured direction to find out the Anti-christ; we may as well look for him in Constantinople, or Nova Roma, where the Great Turk, the professed Enemy of Christ and the Christian Faith, hath his Seat and Residence, as amongst the seven Hills of Old Rome, where the Pope Resideth. Or, if his sitting in the Temple of God shews us where to find him; we may as well look for him in the Temple of Saint Sophia, now a Turkish Mosque, as in Saint Peter's Church at Rome, till a Christian Temple.

But to return again unto Constantinople. As it was made by Constantine the Imperial City, and consequently the chief City of the East in all Civil matters, so it came in little time to have a great Sway also in Affairs of Religion. The Christian Faith is said to be first preached in Byzantium by Saint Andrew the Apostle, the first Bishop thereof. Afterwards spreading over Thrace, and the Churches thereof being Regulated by many Bishops, the chief Preheminence in matters which concerned those Churches was given unto the Bishops of Heraclea, Heraclea being at that time the Metropolis or principal City of the Province, by the appointment of Severus. But after that Constantinople was built by Constantine, and made the Imperial City, as before was said, it did not only over-top Heraclea, and draw unto it self the Metropolitan Dignity, but stood in Competition with the other Patriarchal Churches for the supreme Power: insomuch as at the second General Council holden in this City it was unanimously decreed, that the Patriarch hereof should in degree of Honour be next unto the Bishop of Rome, and above those of Antioch and Alexandria; the same Decree being confirmed in the Council of Chalcedon also. By which not only all the Churches in the Diocess of Thrace, but also of Natolia, or Asiaminor, (except Cilicia and Isauria, which remained to the Patriarch of Antioch) containing no less then Twenty eight of the Roman Provinces, were made subject to him. And though Pope Leo the first, pretending only the preservation of the Priviledges of those two great Churches, but indeed fearing lest New Rome might in the end get the Precedency of the Old, did oppose this Act, and some of his Successors persisted in the same Resistance: yet they were forced in the end to give way unto it, especially after the Emperor Justinian had by his Imperial Edict confirmed the same; by whom it was specially ordained, Senioris Romæ Papam primum esse omnium Sacerdotum, beatissimum autem Archiepiscopum Constantinopoleos, Novæ Romæ, secundum habere locum, that is to say, That the Pope of Rome should have the first place in all General Councils, and the Bishop of Constantinople, or New Rome, should have the second. Encouraged wherewith, and with the Countenance and Favour of the Emperor Mauritius, John Patriarch of Constantinople, in the time of Gregory the Great, took to himself the Title of Universal or Oecuminal Bishop, the Pastor-General (as it were) of the Church of Christ. And though Pope Boniface by the Grant of that bloody Tyrant Phocas, got that Title from him; yet the Patriarchs of Constantinople made good their Ground, never submitting either themselves or their Churches to the Pope's Authority; being for that cause specially accounted by the Church of Rome for Schismatics, and accordingly reviled and persecuted with all kind of Indignities. How it succeeded with these Patriarchs in the times ensuing, and by what means their Jurisdiction was extended over all Greece, Muscovy, part of Poland, and many other Churches in the North and East, hath been said already. Certain it is, the constant Residence of the Emperors from the time of Constantine gave great ground unto it; of whom I should here add the names, but that I must first sum up the affairs of Thrace, before the Building of this mighty and predominant City, and take a brief view of the rest of those Provinces which we have comprehended under the name of Greece. Our Learned Country-man Mr. Wheler has assured us the Latitude of this City is but 40, 56, though the Geographers have usually placed it in 43 Degrees of Latitude. It is distant one Mile from Galata to the South, and three from the shoars of Asia to the West, its form is Triangular, and the Wall next the Sea stands so near it, that there is no passing between its Square Towers and the Water. The whole Circumference of the Wall is Thirteen Miles, though usually said to be Fifteen. They are built of Rough Stone, here and there patch'd up with Brick, and very Ruinous, and in all likely-hood have been but little, if at all, repaired since the Time of the Greek Emperors. It has about Five and Twenty Gates, Seven towards the Propontus, Seven towards the Land, and Eleven towards the Haven. The Patriarch lives at Ballata, on the Western Corner of Constantinople in a poor Palace, no better than the worser sort of Parsonages, and his Church is a small obscure Edifice. May we see him restored to Saint Sophia! In the Year 1687, the greatest part of the Wealthy Inhabitants were plundered by the Soldiery, and a great part of the Town burnt in a Sedition between the Towns-men and the Army; and those that have any thing left, are said to be Removing their Persons and Effects, not only into Asia, but Egypt: and that not only for fear of the Christian Arms, but of a General Revolution at Home.

Concerning which we are to know, that the ancient Inhabitants of it had the names of Strymonii, Bardi, Dolonci, Sapai, Sai, and some others, united by most Writers in the name of Thracians. They were governed at first by the Kings or Princes of their several Tribes, as most Nations else; distinguished from the common People, as in other Poms, so most especially by their Gods, which their Kings had to themselves a part, and were not to be worshipped by the best of their Subjects. These not agreeing well together for the common good, it gave the Athenians, Spartans, Thebans, and other Nations of the Greeks, a good opportunity to invade their Country, to seize on the Sea-Towns thereof, and plant Colonies in them, the Country in those times being meanly peopled, and consequently giving that advantage unto the Grecians, as the Indies in these latter times have to the Spaniards, Portuguezes, English, Hollanders, and all other Adventurers. Such of them as lay next to Macedon, proving bad Neighbours thereunto upon all occasions, at last provoked voked Philip the Father of Alexander, to put in for a share; who, being chosen Arbitrator betwixt two Competitors for that Kingdom, (drawn at last into fewer hands) came not unto the Council with such poor Attendants as Justice and Piety, but with a great and puissant Army; wherewith having vanquished and slain the two Pretenders, he pronounced Sentence for himself, and made Thrace his own, compelling the Inhabitants to pay him the tenth part of their Revenue for his yearly Tribute. After the death of Alexander this Country was seized on by Lyfimachus, as his part of the Spoil who here built the City Lyfimachia; from hence invading Dacia, Macedon, and the neighbouring Regions: and he being dead, the Thracians, now accustomed to a foreign Yoke, were either Subjects, or at least Tributaries, to the Macedonians. Aiding them in their Wars against the Romans, they incurred the displeasure of that People; who having settled their Affairs in other places and repulsed the Cimbri, thought it fit time to call the Thracians to account for their former Actions: but sped so ill in the Attempt, that Porcius Cato lost his whole Army in the On-set, cunningly intercepted in their Woods and Fastnesses. Didius the Prætor, coming in whilst the Thracians were busie in the Chase, gave them such a stop, that he deserved a Triumph for it, and made the Victory more easie to Metellus, who succeeded Cato in that Charge, and Triumphed also over them; as also did Lucullus on another Victory. A. U. C. 680. Broken with so many ill Successes, they were finally subdued by Piso in the time of Augustus; and became so obsequious to that fortunate Prince, that Rhitemalces, a great and puissant King hereof, aided him with a strength of Horse against the Pannonians and Illyrians, who had then rebelled. Afterwards being made a Province of the Roman Empire, in Constantine's new Model it became a Diocesis under the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis; Thrace it self being cast into four Provinces, that is to say, Thrace specially so called, Hemimontum, Rhodope, and Europa; Scythia and the Lower Mæssa, spoken of before, being added to it: of which the Presidents of Rhodope and Hemimontum were not to be appealed from to the Præfectus Prætorio, as the others were, but only to the Præfect of Constantinople, the Imperial City. But as Alfonfus King of Castile, fir-named the Wise, was once heard to say, (never the wiser for so saying) That had he stood at the elbow of Almighty God when he made the World, he would have shewed him how some things might have been better ordered: so give me leave to play the fool, and to say this here, that had I stood at Constantine's Elbow, I would have Counsell'd him to lay the Diocesis of Thrace to the Præfect of Illyricum, who had originally only the Diocesses of Macedon and Illyrium under his Command; and not have placed it under the Præfect of the East, who had both Asia's and all Egypt under his Authority. For being that there lay Appeals from the Vickers and Lieutenants of the several Diocesses to their respective Præfects, how great a trouble must it be to the Subjects of Thrace on every occasion of Appeal to post to Antioch, there to complain unto the Præfect of the Orient, when Serminum and Theffalonica, the ordinary Residences of the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, were so hard at hand? But Constantine was an absolute Prince, and might do what he list'd. He had not else removed his Seat so far towards the East, and left the Western parts of the Empire open to the Barbarous people, out of a Fancy only to preserve the Eastern. For that it was a Fancy only the event did shew: the Persians for all this prevailing more than ever formerly; and Thrace it self, though honoured with the Imperial City, and planted with so many Roman Colonies, so ill inhabited, that a great part thereof lay wast and desart many Ages after. Inasmuch as the Goths, being by the Huns driven over the Danow, were by the Emperor Valens planted in this Country, (the Emperor having a design to use them in his Wars;) were not contented with the Portion allotted to them, they bid fair for all, wasting the whole Province, taking divers Towns, and endangering Constantinople it self, from whence they were not driven (Valens himself being killed in the War against them) but by the coming of some Saracens to the Aid of the Citizens. Nor could the Residence of the Emperors protect this Country, but that it was continually harrailed and depopulated by the Saluts, Bulgars, Scythians, Saracens, and other Barbarous people falling in upon it; nor hinder one Bryonius, in the time of Marcus Aurelius and Nero, from assuming to himself the Title of King of Thrace; nor finally prevent the Turks of the Ottoman Race from getting ground every day on the lesser Asia, inroaching upon Thrace it self, and in the end obtaining the imperial City.

And here perhaps it is expected, considering the Turks are now possessed of Thrace and the rest of Greece, that we should make relation of the Nature of that People, their Customs, Forces, Policies, Original, and Proceedings. But the discourse thereof we will defer till we come to Turcomania, a Province of Asia from whence they made their first Inundations, like to some unresistible Torrent, into Persia, and after into the other parts of the World now subject to them: And therefore letting that alone till another time, we will proceed to our Description of the rest of Greece, consisting of the Islands scattered in the Pontick, Propontick, Aegean, Cretan and Ionian Seas, leaving out such as properly belong to Asia, till our Description of that Country, though otherwise Greek Islands, and so accounted both for their Language and Original.

7. The Islands of the Pontick and Propontick Seas.

Before we come to the Descriptions of these Islands, we must first look upon the Seas in which they lie, beginning with the Pontick first, because the greatest, and that which doth communicate and convey its Waters unto all the rest. A Sea made up originally of the Confluence of those mighty Rivers (the greatest in those parts of the World) which do fall into it, that is to say, the Danow, Boristhenes and Tanais, falling out of Europe, besides many other fair and large Rivers, (though of lesser note) to the number of at least an hundred, which pay Tribute to it, the whole Compass of it being 2700 miles; in form by some resembled to a Scythian Bow when it is bended. A Sea not so salt as many others, and therefore much annoyed with Ice in Winter; seldom remitted in the Spring on the Northern Shore. The Trallick of it is wholly in a manner engrossed by the Turk, who is Master of all the Sea-coast of it, save what belongs to the Polonian and Crim Tartar, at first it was called Ægeus from the Inhospitality of the neighbouring People, which being brought to some Conformity caused the Sea to be called Ἰόνιον. By Horus it is called Maræ Sinistrum, because in the way from Rome to Asia minor it lay upon the left hand, as the Mediterranean did upon the right. It is commonly called at this time Maræ Maggiore, for its greatness; and the Black Sea, because of the great Mills thence arising. Others not unprobably affirm that it is called the Black Sea, from the dangerous and black Shipwrecks here happening; for it is a very dangerous Shore, full of Rocks and Sands: and for this cause there is on the top of an high Tower a Lantern, in which there is a great Pan full of Pitch, Rosin, Tallow, and the like, in dark nights continually burning, to give warning to Mariners how near they approach unto the Shore. This Sea, being the biggest of all those parts, gave occasion to them which knew no bigger to call all Seas by the name of Pontus, as Ovid, Omnia pontus erant, decrant quoque littora ponto; and in another place of the same Poet, ——— nil nisi pontus & ær: a better reason doubtless of the name, than that of the Etymologists, Pontus, quia ponte caret. Of this Sea the chief Isles are Thynius, and Frisinius, little famous.

From hence the Sea binding Southwards is brought into narrower bounds, not being fully a mile broad, and is called the Thracian Bosphorus; Thracian, for its sight nigh Thrace; and Bosphorus, for that Oxen have swam over it.

It hath no Island worth naming. It is fortified on each side with a very strong Castle. That on the Asian side, being the elder and the lesser, is by the Greeks called Asiacastron, by the Turks named Accelbisur; the other, just opposite to it, is by the Turks called Genichisur, by the Greeks named Neocastrum, or New Castle. This last was the work of Mahomet surnamed the Great, in the beginning of his Reign; in bignets not inferior to a little City, built by him in or near the place of the ancient Danalis, invironed with a Wall 22 foot broad, and containing 3 great Towers, their Wall exceeding 10 yards in thickness; exceedingly well stored with all sorts of Ordnance and Ammunition. By the English they are commonly called the Black Towers; partly because seated at the Entrance of the Euxine or Black Sea, and partly because they serve as a Prison for Malefactors of principal note, who seldom are discharged thence till released by death. Sir John Chardin a French Knight saith, this Bosphorus is one of the most Loveliest sights in the World, being about 15 miles long, and 2 broad. The Shoars consist of rising grounds, covered every where with Houses of Pleasure, Woods, Gardens, Parks, delightful prospects, and lovely Wildernesses, in which are Thousands of Springs and Fountains. The City of Constantinople and the vast variety of Ships passing or riding there are the accomplishment of its Charms and Beauty. It has 4 Forts to secure it, 2 stand 8 miles from the Mouth of the Black Sea, and the other 2 near the Mouth of that Channel, and were built about the year 1632, to prevent the Cassocks, Poles and Ruffs from Ravaging as before to the Walls of Constantinople.

This Streight, having continued 26 miles in length, openeth it self into the Tropontis, 300 miles in compass; confined with Thrace on the one side, and with Bithynia on the other; so as they which sail in the middle may decry the Land on all parts. Now called Mar di Marmora, from the Island Marmora, which, formerly called Proconnesus, hath for its abundance of Marble purchased this new name. The Soil is apt for Vines, and not destitute of Corn; yielding also good Pasturage for Goats, whereof here is plenty, with an incredible number of Partridges amongst the Rocks: the Country of Aristeus, a famous Poet, who flourished in the times of Cræsus. Anciently it had in it two Cities of the same name with the Island, called the Old and New Proconnesus: the former first built by the Milesius, an Asian People; the latter by the Natives of this Island. But both these being long since decayed, it hath now only a small Village towards the North with an Haven to it, inhabited by the Greeks, as is all the rest of the Island: Much Christian Slaves as are in great numbers employed here by the Turks, in digging Marble for their Mosques and other Buildings being only Sojourners, not House-keepers, and therefore not accounted amongst the Inhabitants. Here is also in this Propontick Sea the Isle of Cyicus: but being it is on Asia side, we shall there speak of it.

The Sea having gathered her waters into a lesser Channel is called Hellepont, from Helle, Daughter of Athamas King of Thebes, who was here drowned. Over this famous Streight did Xerxes according to Herodotus, make a Bridge of Boats to pass into Greece: which when a sudden Tempest had shrewdly battered, he caused the Sea to be beaten with 300 Stripes, and cast a pair of Fetters into it, to make it know to whom it was subject. Xerxes in this Expedition wasted over an Army consisting of two Millions and 164710 fighting men, in no less then 2208 Bottoms of all sorts. When all the Persians soothed the King in the unconquerableness of his Forces, Artabanus told him that he feared no Enemies but the Sea and the Earth, the one yielding no safe Harbour for such a Navy, the other not yielding sufficient subsistence for so multitudinous an Army. But his return over this Hellepont was as dejected as his passage magnificent; his Fleet being so broken by the Valour of the Greeks and the fury of the Sea, that, for his more speedy Flight he was compelled to make use of a poor Fisher-boat. Neither yet was his passage secure: for the Boat being overburthened, had sunk all, if the Persians by casting away themselves had not saved the Life of their King. The Loss of which noble spirits so vexed him, that having given the Steersman a golden Coronet for preserving his own Life, he commanded him to Execution as a Co-author of the death of his servants. It is now called the Dardanelles, the Castles, or the Sea of the two Castles; which 2 Castles stand one on Europe, the other on Asia side, in the Towns of Scstos and Abydus. These Castles, commonly by the Turks called Dardanelii, are exceedingly well built, and abundantly furnished with Munition. They search and examine all Ships that pass that way: they receive the Grand Seignours Customs, and are in effect the principal strength of Constantinople. At these Castles all Ships must stay three days, to the end that if any Slave be run away from his Master, or Thieves have stoln any thing, they may be in that place pursued and apprehended. So that these Castles are as it were the Out-works of Constantinople, to defend it from all Invasions, and from any Forces which may come unto it by Sea out of the Mediterranean; as for the Safety thereof from such as may find passage out of the Euxine, there are situate at the very entrance of the Thracian Bosphorus two strong Castles, the one above Constantinople on Europe side; the other on the Asian Shore, which before we spake of. No European Isle of note is in either of the Streights.

Since our Author wrote, there are two other Castles call'd the New Dardanells, which bear just upon the entrance of the Hellepont, about three miles more to the South than the Old Dardanells, as Mr. Wheler has observed, they seem to be both built since the year 1655. And in all probability, because the Venerians in the year 1655, 56, and 57, took these Castles, and stop'd all passage for the Turks that way, during the War in Candia.

8. The Islands of the Æ G Æ A N Sea.

Hellepont, after a forty miles course, expatiateth its waters in the Ægean Sea: so called either from Ægeus, the Father of Theseus, who misdoubting his Sons safe return from the Minotaur of Crete, here drowned himself: or, secondly, from Æga, once a principal City in the prime Island Eubœa; or, thirdly because that the Islands lie scattered up and down like the Leaps of a wanton Goat, from the Greek αἰγῶν.

The chief Islands of it are, 1. Samothrace, 2. Thassus, 3. Imbrus, 4. Lemnos, 5. Eubœa, 6. Salamis, 7. Ægina, 8. the Cyclades, 9. the Sporades, and 10. Cythera: all which especially from Eubœa Southwards, are called the Islands of the Archæ; the Sea being by the Greeks called the Archipelago, in regard of its greatness compared unto the narrow Seas which lie above it.

1. Samothrace is a small Island opposite to the Coasts of Thrace, where the Hebrus falls into the Sea; so called quasi Samos Thracia, to difference it from the Asian Samos, bordering on Ionia. Formerly it was called Dardania, from Dardanus the Trojan, who fled hither when he carried the Palladium thence. But Aristotle, writing of the Commonweal of these Samothracians, telleth us that it was first called Leucosia, and afterwards Samus, from Saus the Son of Mercury and Rhene, the letter M being interposed. It is now called Samandracchi, and is plentiful in Honey and Wild Deer, and better stored with commodious Harbours then any other in these Seas. It hath a Town of the same name with the Island, situate on an high Hill on the North part hereof overlooking a capacious Haven; of late, by the Pirates frequent infesting of these Seas, wholly in a manner, desolate.

2. Thassus, another little Island on the same Coast, opposite to the Influx of the River Nessus, lying betwixt that and Athos in Macedonia, at the Mouth of the Strymonian Bay: by Pliny called Æria and Æthria, by Ptolemy Thalassia, at the present Tasso. It is in compass betwixt forty and fifty miles, sufficiently fruitful, well replenished with Woods, and yielding good store of the best Wines; mountainous in some places; but those Mountains fraught with Quarries of excellent Marble, which the Romans called Thasian, from the Island, and in the times of Philip and Alexander the Great so rich in Mines of useful Metals, that those Kings received yearly 80 Talents for their Customs of them. It hath one Town of the same name with the Island, situate on a large Plain in the North part of it, bordering on a goodly Bay, which serves for an Haven to the Town: and on the South parts where the Country is more mountainous and hilly, there are two Towns more, each of them situate on an hill, but the names thereof occur not amongst my Authors.

3. Imbrus, another small Island, now named Lembro, is situate betwixt Samothrace and the Thracian Chersonese, in compass about thirty miles, but more long then broad, stretching North and South, and distant from Samothrace about ten miles. The Island is mountainous for the most part, except towards the West; where it hath some pleasant and well-watered Plains: in it is a Town of the same name, situate at the foot of the Mountains once sacred unto Mercury, but not less observable. These 3 are very thinly inhabited by reason of the Pirates.

4. Lemnos, an Island of more note, lieth betwixt Thrace and Macedon, not far from Imbrus; memorable amongst the Poets for the fabulous Fall of Vulcan, who being but an homely Brat, hardly worth the owning, was by Juno in great Passion thrown out of Heaven, and falling on this Island, came to get his Halting. Howsoever, he was anciently worshipped by the People hereof, and from hence called Lemnius. It is in compass about an hundred miles, but more long then broad, extended from the East to the West; on every side well furnished with convenient Creeks and some pretty Havens, by which the want of Rivers is in some sort recompensed.

The Country is for the most part plain, if compared unto the adjacent Islands, but otherwise swelled with rising Mountains, the interposed Valleys being very fruitful of Wheat, Pulse, Wine, Flesh, Cheese, Wool, Flax, Linnen, and all other necessities; only Wood is wanting. And though here be no Rivers, as before was said, yet have they good Fishing on the Sea-coast for their use and sustenance; and in some parts hot Baths for Health and Medicines. But the chief Riches of this Island is in a mineral Earth here digged, of excellent virtue for curing of Wounds, stopping of Fluxes, expelling Poisons, a Preservative against Infections, and the like; called Terra Lemnia from the place, and Terra Sigillaria, from the Seal or Character imprinted on it. For being made up into small Pellets, and Sealed with the Turk's Character, or Signet, it is then (not before) sold unto the Merchants; by whom it is dispersed over most parts of the Christian World. Upon the sixth of August yearly they go to gather it; but not without much Ceremony: and many Religious Preparations, brought in by the Venetians, when they were Lords of this Island, and still continued by the Greek Monks or Caloires, who are the principal in the work. There is one Hill only where it groweth, the Top whereof being opened, they discover the Vein, resembling the casting up of Worms; and having gathered as much of it that day as the Priests think fit, it is closed again; certain Bags of it being sent to the Grand Seignior yearly, the residue sealed up, and sold to the Foreign Merchant.

But to return to the Topography of the place. The Eastern parts hereof are said to be fat and fruitful, the Western very dry and barren: in both containing 57 Towns and Villages, all of them inhabited by the Greeks, except only three, and those three garrisoned by the Turks, who, being Lords of the whole Island, have new named it Stratimene. In former times, from two prime Cities in it, it was called Dipolis. Of which the first was called Lemnos, by the name of the Island, as large and well-peopled now as ever formerly, but of no great estimation when it was at the best, seated upon an high Hill looking over the Sea, with a handsome Market-place, on which Mount Albos cast a shadow, though distant 87 miles from it. It was formerly by another name called Myrina; but that held not long, the name of Lemnos still remaining. 2. The second of the two Cities was then called Hephestia, memorable for the Temple of Vulcan, hence called Hephestiades; since desolate and destroyed, and a new Town built in the place of it, being called Cochino. This Town is not great, but of considerable strength, memorable for the stout Resistance which a notable Virago, named Alcedia, made against the Turks in the time of Mahomet the Great, the Venetians then being Lords of the Island. For suddenly landing, when they were not looked for, with a purpose to surprize this Town, they found more Resistance at the Gates than they did expect: none being more commended than this Maiden, who seeing her Father slain, took up such Weapons as lay by him, and manfully made good the place, until the rest of the Citizens, awakened with the Alarm, came unto her Rescue, and forced the Enemy to retire. Near hereunto is the Hill on which Vulcan is fabled to have fell, more eminent for the Mineral earth here only gathered. And not far hence Pliny reports a Labyrinth to have stood in the days of old, little inferior unto those of Crete or Egypt; the Ruins of it being so decayed that Bellonius, who took great pains in it, was not able to trace them. 3. The third place of note is Scira, though an ordinary Village, yet memorable for the Chappel in which the Greek Caloires begin their Orisons on the sixth day of August, before their gathering of the Earth so often mentioned. In this Country anciently reigned Thoas, the Son of Bacchus and Ariadne, during whose time the Women of the Island upon some displeasure murdered all the men, the King only excepted, preserved by Hypsipyle his Daughter, whom they made their Queen, and by whom Jason with the Argonauts were so kindly entertained for two years together, that they had almost forgot their intended Expedition for the Golden Fleece; she her self being got with Child by Jason at his being there, the other Women probably following her Example. Following the Fortune of the other parts of Greece, it came at last under the power of the Constantinopolitan or Eastern Emperors. In the Subversion of that Empire by the Latines or Western Christians (of which more hereafter) it fell to the share of the Venotians, who held it till the year 1463, or thereabouts. The Principal Port in this Island is now called Mudro, which lies on the South East side, above which stands the City with an indifferent Castle Garrison'd by the Turks, before the War of Candia, there were fifty Towns and Villages, but there is now not above twenty, the Venetians taking the Island in 1662, ruin'd the strong places, and carried away the Garrison. Randolph.

Besides these on the Coast of Thrace, there are also some of less note on the Shores of Macedon. The principal whereof are, 1. Teparthi, as Ptolomy; Iuonns, as Pliny calls it, containing about 40 miles in compass, now called Saragino, as Castaldus, or Lemene, as Niger hath it; fortified on the Eastern part with a Castle built upon a Rock. Others of less note are, 2. Seyathos, now Sciati, 3. Scopelos, 4. Halonesus, 5. Cicynethus, now Pontico, and 6. Dromus: of which little memorable. All which, together with those formerly described on the Coast of Thrace, being but the Accessories of the several Continents upon which they border; followed the Fortune of the principal, and were conquered in them.

5. Eubœa, known to the Ancients by the names of Macris and Abantis, to the Moderns by that of Negropont, frontieeth all along the Coast of Achaia, parallel to which it is in Fertility; one part hereof being torn away from it by an Earthquake, and lying still so near unto it, that between the Island and the Continent is only a little Euripus, which ebberth and floweth seven times in one day. The reason of which when Aristotle could not find, it is said that he threw himself into the Sea, with these words, Quia ego non capio te, tu capies me. In this Island is the Promontory Caphereus, where Nauplius, the Father of Palamedes, placed his false Fires, to the Destruction of so many Greeks. For understanding how his son

Palamedes

Palamedes, whom he deemed to have been slain by the hand of Paris, was treacherously circumvented by the Policy of Ulysses and Diomedes, he conceived such a displeasure against the whole Host of the Greeks, that he intended their general Destruction. To this end he caused Fires to be made on the tops of the most dangerous and unaccessible Rocks in this whole Island; which the Greeks taking (according to the Custom of the time) to have been the Marks of some safe Haven, made thitherward, and were there most miserably cast away; there perishing 200 Ships, and many thousand men. But when Nauplius understood how Diomedes and Ulysses, whose Ruine he principally intended, were escaped, he drowned himself for very Vexation in this very same place. Palamedes, this Nauplius's Son, is said to have invented four of the Greek Letters, viz. θ , χ , ξ , ϕ . to have first instituted Centinels in an Army, and to be the first Inventer of the Watch-word.

It is in length 150 miles, stretched out from the North-west to the South-east; in breadth not above twenty, where it is broadest; the whole compass 365 Italian miles. It is the Queen of the Ægean Sea, not only for Greatness, but for Fertility and Strength; plentiful in Corn, Wine, Oyl, Fruit and Wood fit for Shipping; enriched with many fair Harbours and capacious Bays, and those well fortified; watered also with the Rivers of Circus and Melas, two Rivers of so strange a nature, that if a Sheep drink of the former, his Wooll turneth white, but coal-black, if he drink the latter. For the credit whereof I refer the Reader unto Strabo. Here is also said to be a Stone called Amiantus, which is drawn into thread like Hemp, and good Cloth made of it; which, when it is stained, in stead of being sent unto the Fullers, is thrown unto the Fire and so cleansed. But whether this be so or not, (for I put it only upon hearsay) certain it is, that it was once enriched with Mines both of Brass and Iron, though those now decayed; and likewise with Quarries of pure Marble, which continue still.

The Island before it was conquered by the Turks, was very populous, but the people most delighted to live in Villages; the Cities and walled Towns being only three. 1. Carysto, anciently Carystus, with little or no variation, but by Pliny called Ægea and Chironia, memorable for its marble Quarries, of which were made the Pillars called Columnæ Carysticæ. 2. Chalcis, now Negropont, by the Turks named Eribos, seated on a Plain near the Water's side, there growing into a fair and goodly Bay called the Gulf of Negropont; a populous, strong and wealthy City, so fortified with Walls and Bulwarks, that in the judgment of most men it was held invincible when the Turks first lay down before it. Nor was it purchased by the Turk (though Mahomet, who had took Constantinople, undertook the business) at a lower price than the loss of forty thousand men, who were spent upon it; but taken at the last, and the people put unto the Sword, without consideration of Sex or Age. A Town in former times of so great Wealth and Power, that it sent Colonies abroad into Macedonia, (a principal Region of the which was hence called Chalcidice) as also into Sicily and some parts of Italy; and had a strong Influence on the Affairs of Achaia also, as being situate so near the Continent, that it was joyned to it by a Bridge. When it was in the hands of the Kings of Macedon, this Town, together with Demetrius in Thessaly, and the Castle of Acrocorinth, were called the Fetters of Greece: insomuch that when the Roman Senate commanded Philip, the Father of Perseus, to set the Greeks at liberty; the Greeks made answer, that in vain was their Liberty restored them, unless these three Towns were first dismantled. Permitted by the Romans to live according to their own Laws, in memory of that Benefit they refused to declare against them in behalf of Antiochus, who thereupon made himself Master of the Town, and consequently of the Island. But forced to leave the place upon the loss of the Battel at Ther- nopyla, it became free again; till finally made subject unto Rome with the rest of Greece, and with it made a part of the Eastern Empire. In the Division whereof amongst the Latines it fell to the share of the Venetians; who from hence used with their Gallies to infest the Shores of Turkie, and disturb their Trade. Provoked wherewith especially with their taking of Ænus, a City of Thrace, under the Conduct of Nicolas Canalis, the Venetian Admiral, who in that Enterprize had taken 2000 Turks, which he carried with him into this Island, Mahomet the Great resolves upon the Conquest of it, and with a puissant Army sets before the Town. And though it cost him dear, yet at last he got it, and therewith all the Island also, which depended on the Fortunes of it, Anno 1471. This Island was Granted to the Common-wealth of Venice, in the times of Pietro Zani, for their good Services about the year 1204. The Fortifications of it were till of late, the same which the Venetians left, but within these 2 or 3 last years, the Turks having lost the Morea, have bestowed much cost on the Fortifications of it. The Inhabitants are supposed to make about 15000, the Turks and Jews living in the City, the Greeks in the Suburbs, which are separated from it by a large deep Dike. Since it came into the hands of the Turks, most of the Greeks have left the Island, so that it is but thinly peopled. It has a strong Castle, built in a small Island between the City and Greece, in the midst of the Bridge which unites the Island to the Continent. There is a place called the New-Town, which is very well built, with a large Bazare, or Market-place. In this the Christians are thrice the number of the Turks and Jews. The Harbour is very secure against all Winds, and extends two miles in length, and is secured from Enemies by the Castle, which has above 20 good Guns planted on this side. The Inhabitants of the whole Island are thought to be 60000 Souls, a tenth part of which are Turks, the rest are Jews and Christians. And it affords to the Grand Seignour 100000 Dollars Revenues, Randolph. This Place took the name of Negropont from the Black Bridge over the Euripus. The compass of the Walls are not above two miles, but the most of the Inhabitants live in the Suburbs. In this City the Basha, or General of the Turkish Fleet resides, who is Governour of the City and Island, who has a Keiah or Deputy under him, and in this place lies a Squadron of Gallies always ready for Service. Mr. Wheler. The Turks finding their Empire decline apace, by the loss of the Moreas, and Hungary and a great part of Dalmatia, bestowed great Charges on the Fortifications of Negropont in 1686 and 87; but yet the Venetians believing it absolutely necessary for the securing what they had recovered; in the year 1688 sent a powerful Fleet for the reducing of it, which the 13th of July Landed 24000 Men in the Island, the 22th, Morosini the General ordered the Trenches to be opened, the 20th of August he took all the Out-works by Storm, the 6th of October he Stormed the Town, and took the Breach, but was beaten off by the Turks. The 12th of the same, it was Stormed the second time, and that proving unsuccessful, he withdrew the Army which was much weakened; to prevent its intire Ruin; but yet it is said he intends to return in the Spring, and the Turks are now Fortifying it again to preserve it, and the Venetian Fleet Rides in the Gulph to hinder it as much as may be.

6. SALAMIS, is nigh unto Megaris, one of the Provinces of Achaia; famous for the Overthrow of the populous Navy of Xerxes by the Athenians and their Confederates. What was the number of the Soldiers and Gallies of the Persian side hath been already declared. The whole Grecian Fleet consisted of no more than 270 Vessels, whereof 127 were rigged and set forth at the charge of the Athenians only, the rest by the Associates. Yet was the Admiralty committed to Eurybiades a Lacedæmonian; the Athenians preferring the main care of the common Safety before an unreasonable contention for Priority. The Spartans, seeing the inequality of Forces, intended intended not to have hazarded the Battel, but with full sail to have retired to Peloponnesus, into which Country the Perſians had made Incuſſions; reſpecting more the Welfare of their own Country yet defenſible, than the deſperate eſtate of Attica. This Deſign was by Themisto- cles (as careful for the eſtate of Athens as they for Sparta) ſignified to Xerxes: who, getting between them and home, compelled them to a neceſſity of fighting, but to his own Ruine. For in the Conflict more than 200 of his Ships were ſunk, and moſt of the reſt taken; the Confederates having loſt of their Navy forty only. Between the Athenians and the Megareſes were many Contentions for this Iſland; the Fortune of the Athenians in the end prevailing. It hath in it a City of the ſame name, the Royal Seat of Telamon, the Father of Ajax, ſo famous in the War of Troy: More memorable for giving Birth to Solon the Legiſlator of Athens, one of the ſeven Wiſe Men of Greece. It was in after-times the See of a Biſhop, ſubject to the Archbiſhop of Athens, the principal City lying on the South ſide of the Iſle, now called Colouri, as the Iſle is Santa Brouſia. The old City was on the North ſide, and is now ruined, being called Ambelaki. Mr. Wheler ſaith it is in compaſs about 50 miles. The principal Town Colouri conſiſts of about 150 poor Cottages and 400 Inhabitants. It has two other Villages Metropolis, the other is Ambelaki, which was the old Salamina, and by the Ruins may have been four miles in compaſs. It has one of the largeſt Havens in the World, and abounds with Corn, Pitch, Roſin, Coal, and Spunges.

7. ÆGINA, now called Engia, an Iſland ſituate over againſt Sinus Saronicus, being that Bay of Corinth which openeth into the Ægean, hence called Golfo di Engia; the Realm of Æacus, made for his Juſtice and Integrity one of the Three Judges of Hell: the other two being his Brother Rhadamanthus, and Minos the King of Crete. It had formerly been call'd Oenone, and Oenope; but took this name from Ægina, the Daughter of Aſopus a King of Bootia, on whom Jupiter is ſaid to have begot both Æacus and Rhadamanthus. The People hereof are properly called Æginenſes and Æginetæ, much ſpoken of in the Wars of Athens, from which they are diſtant about 12 miles. The ground hereof is very ſtony, but good for Barley, of which it is very plentiful: inhabited in former times by a laborious and thriving People, to whom they gave in thoſe days the name of Myrmidons, (the Iſland being alſo call'd Myrmidonia) quod Formicarum more Terram foderent, becauſe Emmet-like they digged up and under the Earth, to make it the more fit for Tillage; who dwelt at firſt in Caves without any Houſes. Hence the occaſion of the Fable of turning Emmets into Men at the Prayer of Æacus. Both Tale and People after (I know not how) were carried into Theſſaly, where before we found them. This Iſland gives name at preſent to the whole Bay of Saron. It is about 30 Miles in compaſs. It has but one Village called by its own name, which in 1654 was taken and ruined by the Venetian Fleet, which took 600 poor Greek Chriſtians for Rowers and Slaves away with it. It hath plenty of Corn, Cotton, Honey and Wax, Almond, Partridges; the laſt are ſo numerous, that if they did not yearly break their Eggs they would ſtarve the Inhabitants. This Iſland did of old belong to the Venetians. There is another Iſland now called Porus, of old Calabrea, 18 miles in compaſs. This Iſland was retaken by the Venetians in 1674.

8. The CYCLADES, ſo called becauſe they lie in a Circle round about Delos, are in number 53. They are alſo called the Iſlands of the Arches, becauſe they are in the Sea called Archipelago. They ſtand ſo cloſe together, that in a clear day a Man may ſee 20 of them at a time; for which cauſe it is with good reaſon accounted to be a dangerous place for Sailors in a Storm. The chief of theſe Cyclades are, 1. DELOS, quaſi Δῖλος, ſignifying apparent; becauſe when all the Earth had abjured the reſort of Latona at the requeſt of Juno, this Iſland, then under Water, was by Jupiter created Δῖλος, and ſit to receive her; and in it was the deſtined reſort of Apollo and Diana: Of which thus Ovid;

A little Iſland entertaining ge:
To wandering Latona, ſpight of Juno's Head, Under Minerva's Palm-tree brought to Bed.

Notable alſo is this Iſland for the Temple of Apollo, and a Cuſtom, neither permitting Men to die, or Children to be born in it; but ſending ſick Men and grown belied Women to Rhene, a ſmall Iſland, and not much diſtant. By a more ancient name it is called Oergia; and by that name mentioned in any of the Poets, both Greek and Latin. The chief Town of it, called alſo Delos, is ſituate on a Plain environed with Rocks, near the Hill called Cynthus, whence Apollo had the name of Cynthius, and Diana of Cynthia; as of Delius, and Delia, from the Iſland. In this Town had Apollo both his Temple and Oracle, deliver'd here more plainly than in other places, whence, (as ſome ſay) it was called Delos; the word in Greek ſignifying maniſeſt or apparent: Made famous by the reſort of People from all places higher, eſpecially from the neighbouring Iſlands, who ſent yearly multitudes of Men and troupes of Virgins to celebrate his ſolemnities with Herds of Sacrifices. More weakly afterwards by removing of the Trade of Carthage thither; that Town being utterly deſtroyed by the Romans, and this made choice of by the Merchant; partly by reaſon of the Immunities of the place, but principally in regard of the convenient ſituation betwixt Europe and Aſia. It continued in great Wealth and Power till Mithridates laid it wait; and at laſt, on the ceasing of the Oracles, was utterly forſaken, both Town and Iſland are now called Sdiles. By which name alſo Rhene, an adjoining Iſland (before mentioned) is at this day known; chained to the other by Polyrates the Tyrant of Samos, and now united to it, at the leaſt in name. This Iſland is but ſmall, not exceeding five or ſix miles in compaſs, but twice as long as broad; low, rocky and barren, now totally deſolate, and called Zdeli. The Learned Wheler has given a large Account of the Ruins of this Iſland, from Page 53 to 62. Coronelli ſaith, this Iſland having been taken from the Venetians by Barberaſſe, a Venous Turkiſh Admiral: In the laſt Century Francis Alereſini reduced it under the Venetians again the year 1674.

2. TE N O S, by Ariſtotele called Hyleſia, by ſome Ophiola, by the Moderns Ten. The chief Town of it is of the ſame name, ſo called from one Ten the Builder of it, and giving name to the Iſland: Memorable for a Fountain called Daphnus, of which Ariſtotele and Plutarchus doth both aſſure, that the Waters will not mix with Wine: the only Iſland of this Sea which remaineth under the power of the State of Venice, the reſt being ſubject to the Turks; deſerving therefore the firſt place in our Deſcription of thoſe Iſlands that incompaſs Delos, tho' anciently. This Iſland is about 70 miles in compaſs, and is the highſt Land in thoſe Seas: The Turks made ſeveral Attempts to reduce it in 1658. There is about 30 Villages, and 20000 Souls, moſt of them Latinized Greeks. Randolph. It is in effect a large heap of Marble Rocks, though in many places covered with a fruitful Soil. All the Villages can in time of neceſſity repair to the Caſtle which ſtands on the highſt Rock in the middle of the Iſle. The Inhabitants, which are many, work their own Silks, but they are no great Artills. Wheler, Page 51.

3. ANDROS, (prima inter Cyclades) was reckoned chief amongſt the Cyclades, or firſt at leaſt in order, becauſe next to Delos: originally called Carnos, afterwards Antandros, and at laſt Andros; from Andros the Son of Eurymachus, who founded the chief Town of it, of the ſame name alſo. Memorable for a pleasant Fountain mentioned by Pliny, the waters whereof on the Nones of January yearly had the taste of Wine. It still retains the name of Andro, or Andri. It has a good large Town to the North East, there are about 3000 Inhabitants in this Island, who are subject to the Turks, who pay a Tax of 10000 Dollars, they have Corn and Wine in abundance, but their best Commodity is their Silk. Randolph.

4. NAXOS, now Nigsta, one of the biggest of the Pack, as being about 80 Miles in compass. In ancient times it was called Veneris Insula, or the Island of Venus; afterwards Dionysia, by reason of its abundance of Wine, and the goodness of those Wines together, consecrated to Bacchus, whom the Greeks call Dionysius. From its wonderful plenty of Wheat called by some Sicilia minor, or the Lesser Sicily; but at last Naxos, from one Naxus, who had the Conduct of a Colony of Carians hither. But notwithstanding this new name, Bacchus did still retain the honour to be worshipped in it, in regard of his love unto the place; marrying here Ariadne (as the Poets fable) whom Theseus had left upon the Rocks: whose Coronet or Chaplet, being by his means made one of the Heavenly Constellations, is by Columella called Ardor Naxius; by the name of the Island; though commonly by Astronomers Corona Ariadnes, from the name of the Lady. The Women of this Island are said by Pliny to be delivered generally in the eighth month, as Bacchus was born within that term. But it is most certainly famous in true Story for the Beauty and Fertility of it, and for a kind of excellent Marble called Ophites or Serpentinus; the ground whereof is green, diapered with blew or purple Spots, in much esteem amongst the Romans. When these Islands fell to the Venetians, they conferred this on one John Quirino, a Patrician or Gentleman of that City (as they did divers of the rest on other undertakers) from whom it came to the Noble Family of the Crispo's, who held it till the year 1572, when James the last of that House lost it to Selymus the second. Most part of it is very high Land, yet it hath a great many pleasant and fruitful Valleys: the best Town is to the North West. It has an Archbishop who lives very well, and has his City and Country House. And the Inhabitants, which exceed not 5000, are very rich and happy, paying their Tribute at Constantinople; the Jesuits have great Revenues in the Isle, and some Genoese Gentlemen live there. Randolph.

5. GYAROS, a little Island, into which the Romans used to banish Delinquents. Hence that of Juvenal, cited by G. Sandys.

Aude aliquid brevibus Gyaris vel carcere dignum, Si vis esse aliquid: Probitas laudatur, & alget.

If thou intend'st to thrive, do what deserves Short Gyaros or Gyves: prais'd Virtue starves.

6. PAROS, now Paro, by some of the Ancients called Parya, by others Minoa; but it obtained this new name from Parus, a Son of Jason: Memorable for Quarries of the whitest Marble, of which commonly the Statues of the Gods were made, called from hence Marmor Parium by the Latines. It is in compass about 50 Miles, running in a long Plain from East to West, having once a Town of the same name seated in the North, once famous, but now utterly ruined. The Inhabitants hereof were noted to be very careless of keeping their Promises, and Contracts: whence ἀπαρσις grew into a By-word; applied to those who made no reck'ning of their Promises. There is now a Town in it called Cephala, but it is of no great note; now called Bazo by the Turks, is 50 Miles in compass, miserably poor, but of the Greek Religion. Randolph.

7. SCYROS, opposite to Magnesia in Asia minor, famous for the Birth of Neoptolemus or Pyrrhus, and that it was the Lurking-place of Achilles. For his Mother Thetis, being forewarned by an Oracle that he should be slain in the Trojan War, sent him to Lycomedes King of this Island, where he was brought up in Woman's Attire amongst the King's Daughters and deemed a Virgin; till by getting Pyrrhus on Deidamia the King's Daughter it was proved to be otherwise. Others relate that Ulysses discovered him by a Wile, who, coming thither like a Pedler or Petti-merchant with Arms and other Ware, to avoid distrust, exposed his Merchandise to the view of the Damozels: When the other Ladies falling on the Tires and Laces, Achilles took into his hand the Spear and Shield. Which when Ulysses had observed, he made him leave that Company, and away for Troy. The hand-somness of the Fraud take from Ovid; thus:

*Conscia venturi Genitrix Nereia Fati
Diffimulat Cultu Natum; & decipiat omnes
(In quibus Ajacem) sumptu fallacia Vestis.
Arma ego foemineis animum motura virilem
Mercibus inferui, &c.*

Thus Englished by G. Sandys in his Translation of the Metamorphoses.

The whole Design in order to relate:

Thetis, foreknowing great Achilles Fate;
Disguis'd her Son, so like a Virgin drest,
That all mistook, and Ajax with the rest.
When Arms with Womens Trifles, which might blind Suspect, I brought to tempt a manly Mind.
Yet was the Hero Virgin-like array'd;
Who taking up the Shield and Spear, I said,
O Goddess-born, for thee the Fate of Troy
Her Fall reserves: why doubtst thou to destroy Great Pergamus? then made him d'off those Weeds.
And sent the Mighty unto mighty Deeds.

There is another of this name betwixt Negropont and Lesbos, which Ortelius conceives to be the Scene of this Action: but the general opinion is for this (though that be the greater Isle) to which the situation of it amongst the rest of those Islands where reigned so many of the Greek Kings interested in the War of Troy seems to give good countenance; the name and power of Greece not reaching in those days so much towards the North. It lies to the North of Negropont, is large, and has several very large Harbors, and one great and populous Town, with a small Castle to defend them from the troublesome Pyrates. Randolph.

8. MELOS, situate betwixt Crete and Peloponnesus, and equally distant from them both; the Promontories of Scylla in the one, and that of Dittynna in the other, shooting out against it. Inhabited in former times by a Colony of Phoenicians, who coming out of Byblus, a Town of that Country, gave that name unto it: Being called Melos afterwards by the Greeks, from its abundance of Honey. The Birth-place of Diagoras the Philosopher, hence surnamed Melinus, but more properly Asclepiades or the Atheist, the first who in those dark times of Ignorance absolutely denied there was a God. Protagoras Deos in dubium vocavit, Diagoras exclusit, saith Lactantius of him. It is now called Milo, round in form, and containing 80 miles in compass. The Soil is sufficiently fruitful in Corn and Oil, but defective in Wine. Here is great plenty of Marble curiously bespotted, and no small store of Mill-stones; as also great quantities of Pitch and Brimstone, and some Sulphury or hot Springs good for many Diseases. The chief Town of it is called Milo also. The Turks call it Digirmenlick. It has but one Town which stands in a fine Plain; the Inhabitants are thought to be 5000. The Pyrats are a great plague to it, but the Turks come rarely there, their Tribute being paid by them at Scio.

9. SERIPHUS, Twenty miles from Delos, memorable of old for the Education of Perseus the Son of Danae. It is reported of this Island, that the Frogs bred there are naturally mute; but such as are brought from other places keep their natural tone: from whence, Proverbially, silent and sullen Persons were called Rana Serphica. It is now called Saxfine or Serphone, a stony and rocky Island, and hath a Town of the same name.

10. CIA, by some called CEOS, and now Zea, opposite to the Promontory of Achaia called Smium, in compass about 50 miles; made towards the West, in fashion of a Crescent or half Moon; mountainous and hilly, except towards the North; by Pliny said to have been torn from Eubœa, by a sudden violence of the Sea, many men perishing in the waters. Of old times it was beautified with three fair Towns; 1. Fulis, 2. Carthea, and 3. Careffus: of which there is nothing now remaining.

Others there are whose names occur amongst the Ancients: as 11. Miconus, now called Micole; 12. Cythus, now Cairo; 13. Siphnus, now Siphano; 14. Therapsia, now Santorini; 15. Cimolis, called formerly Echinusa, but now Polino; 16. Oliarus, now Quinimino, 17. Sicenus, now Sicino; 18. Pelyagos, now Falconara; 19. Amorgos, now Morgo, one of the biggest of them all, but not else observable.

9. The SPORADES are so called from σπάρω, spargo, eo quod in Mari sparsa sunt, & non in Circulum coactæ, because they lie dispersed and scattered, not formed into a Circle, as the Cyclades are. They are in number twelve. viz. 1. Anaphe, so called by the Argonauts, ἐπὶ τῆς ἀναφανείας Κροτομῶνις, because the Moon did suddenly, and beyond her natural course, appear unto them, then grievously distressed by Tempest. Apollo worshipped here is hence called Anapheus. It is now usually called Namfio. 2. Astypalea, now Stampalia, in compass 88 miles, by some of the Ancients called Theon Trapeza, or the Table of the Gods. In Astypale, the chief Town of it, was Apollo worshipped, from hence sometimes called Astypaleus. 3. Helene, so called from that fair Greek Dame, whom Paris is here said to have first deflowered; now called Macronisi. 4. Los, fifteen miles from Naxos, where Homer is said to have been buried: But others find his Grave at Naxos, and some at Chios; the difference being almost as great about the place of his Burial as the place of his Birth. Then are 5. Lagusa, 6. Phocusa, 7. Phacasia, 8. Philocandros, 9. Schinusa, 10. Strybia, of little note either in Poetry or Story. And finally, 11. Thera, not far from Ægina, before mentioned, formerly called Caliste; but named thus by Theras a Theban Gentleman, the Son of Antefion, conducting hither a Colony of Spartans and Mynians, (these last of Thessaly) cast out of Lemnos by Pelasgus: in memory of whom, as the Founder of their Name and Nation, the Islanders used to celebrate an annual Feast. A Sedition after happening amongst this People, the weaker Party, under the Conduct of one Battus, admonished so to do by the Oracle of Apollo, passed over into Africk, and there built Cyrene. The Birth-place of the Poet Callimachus, who ascribes his Original to this Island, as himself thus witnesseth.

Καλλίμῳ προπάροιθε, τὸ δ' ὕστερον ἔνομα Θῆσιν
Μήτηρ δόπλε πατρίδ' ὅ-ημεῖσιν.

That is to say,

Caliste, which men Thera now do call,
Of my dear Country the Original.

10. CYTHERA, now called Cerigo, lieth in the bottom of the Sea, not above five miles distant from Capo Malio in Peloponnesus; formerly called Porphyris, from the abundance of Marble, whereof the Island yields good plenty. It is in compass about 60 miles, enriched with a delightful Soil, and having many Havens, but those small and unsafe, and very difficult of entrance. It is environed on all sides with Rocks, of themselves inaccessible, by which it is defended from the Turks, who hitherto have suffered the Venetians to enjoy it, to whom it fell in the division of the Spoil amongst the Latines, so often spoken of before. It had a Town of the same name: some two furlongs from the Haven stood the Temple of Venus, (the ancientest dedicated to that Goddess which the Grecians had) and therein her Statua in compleat Armour, like another Pallas. Out of this Temple (the Ruines whereof are still to be seen) was Helen, the Wife of Menelaus, willingly ravished by Paris, the Son of Priam, but not enjoyed by him, till he had brought her to a small Island of the Sporades by her name called Helene, as before is said. From the Devotions of this People paid so duely to her, did Venus get the Adjunct of Cytherea, by which she is often called in the Poets. Thus, for one, in Virgil.

*Parce metu, Cytherea, magnæ mentis tuorum
Fata tibi*—

Drive Fear, fair Cytherea, from thy mind;

Thou thy Son's Fate immovable shalt find.

Mr. Wheler assures us this Island is Barren, Rocky, Mountainous, Ill-peopled, but it has Game and Fowl in plenty. The chief Town lies on the South side, and it is still under the Venetians. It has a River which in Summer time seems dry, but preserves it self 3 Foot under ground. page 47. Coronelli. In his History of the Moræa, saith it is seated in the Gulph of Laconica on the South of the Moræa, and that it has many Harbours upon its Shoars, one of which call'd the Dragoniers, on the East of the Island it has good Anchorage, and will secure a Numerous Fleet, it being by Nature so formed that it may be shut up with a Chain, and yet will hold 40 Gallies. Selim Emperor of the Turks attempted the Conquest of this Island by Hali, but found so stout a Resistance, that he gave over the Design. The Lacedæmonians of old, were no less Jealous of the Preservation of this Island, than the Venetians now are, because it was their Rampart, and secured the Trade of Egypt; and when the Athenians took it in the 8th year of the Peloponnesian War from them, they soon found the worth of it by the want, their Country from thence forward being exposed to the Inroads of their Enemies, if they had not forthwith Fortified and Garrisoned the opposite Shoars.

And so I pass from the Ægean to the Cretan Sea, observing this only by the way, that most of the 60 Kings which accompanied Agamemnon in the War of Troy were Kings only of these small Islands; or else of other places as inconsiderable for wealth and Potency: every small Town and Territory having in those early times amongst the Grecians (when Ambition had not taught the Great ones to devour the less) a peculiar King.

9. The Islands of the C R E T A N Sea.

THE CRETAN Sea is properly that part of the Ægean or Ionian Sea which lyeth about the Shores of Crete, and formerly was under the Command and power thereof: as in those times, the Sea about Carpathus, another Isle of the Ægean had the name of Carpathian; and that about Icaria, the name of Icarian; tho' situate in the Ægean also. The Isles hereof are, 1. Crete, 2. Claude, 3. Dia, and 4. Licon; for Melos and Cimolis, named by Ptolomy against the Islands which adjoin on Crete, having been already spoken of amongst the Cyclades, in the account whereof they pass by consent of Writers.

1. CRETA, now Candia, hath on the East the Carpathian Sea, on the West the Ionian, on the North the Ægean, on the South the African or Lilyck. In form it extendeth East and West with three Points or Promontories: whereof that towards the East, called anciently Samonium, is now called Capo di Salmone; that on the South-west, looking towards Africk, formerly named Hermæa, is now Capo Giabrassè; and finally, that on the North-west towards Peloponnesus, of old called Camarus, is now called Capo Chessin. This last is directly opposite to Malea, a Promontory of Laconia; the Sea betwixt them being so troublesome and tempestuous, especially on Laconia side, that at last it grew into an ordinary Caveat, Maleam prætervectus obliuiscatur que sunt domi, viz. that he which was to Sail by the point of Malea, should lay aside the care of all other matters, and attend his present Safety only.

It hath in several Ages and in several Authors obtained several names. By Homer and Auslathius it is called Hecatompolis, from the number of an 100 Cities then contained in it: by Pliny and Solinus, Macaros, and Macaronesos, that is to say, the happy Island from the goodness of the Soil and Temper of the Air: by Stephanus, Idea, from Ida a famous Mountain of it: by Gwaldus, Telebina, from the Telebini, the Priests of Cybele, who was here had in great request. At the present it is called Candia, either a Candore, from the whiteness of the Rocks wherewith it is environed; or from Candia the Metropolis or chief Town thereof. But the general name which hath prevailed most in all sorts of Writers is that of Crete, so called quasi Creta, by a Syncope or Abbreviation, from the Curtes, the first Inhabitants hereof; who together with the Corybantes and Telchini, were the Priests of Cybele the principal Goddess of this Island: and they so called σὺ τῆς κεφαλῆς, from their Tonsure or Shaving of the Head. A Custom much in use amongst the Priests of some of the Pagan Deities, and possibly enough from them transmitted to the Church of Rome. And to this Etymology I do rather incline, than either to derive the name from Cretes, the Son of Jupiter and the Nymph Ida, or from Crete the Daughter of Hesperus, though both these have their Authors also. Nor dare I to reject the Conceit of Bochartus, who fetching the Etymons of most people from the Punick Language or Original, will have the Cretans to be descended from the Cerethites, a Nation of the Philistins, well known in Scripture; the word Cereth being abbreviated into Creth, from which into Crete and Cretans is no difficult passage. But in my mind his Conjecture is better than his Proof. For though it may be granted without inconvenience that the chief Arms of the Philistins were their Bow and Arrows, as appears 1 Sam. 31. 3. and that the Cretans anciently were expert at those Weapons also: yet this concludes no more than the Cretans are of the Race of the Philistins, than that almost all Nations else had the same Original; the Bow and Arrows being the ordinary Weapons of most People formerly, till Custom and Experience trained them up to others of a later date; as he himself acknowledgeth in many places of his excellent and elaborate Tractates.

In reference to the Heavenly Bodies it is situate under the beginning of the fourth Climate, so that the longest Day in Summer is no more than 14 hours and a quarter, and in relation to the Earth, set in the middle of the Sea, at so even a distance from Europe, Asia, and Africk, as if naturally designed to be what Aristotle hath pleased to call it, the Lady and Mistress of the Sea. For it is distant from Peloponnesus an hundred miles, as many from Asia the Less, and not above 150 from the Shores of Africk: so verifying that of Virgil, Creta Jovis magni medio jacet Insula Ponto.

Jove's Birth-place Crete, a fruitful Land,
In the middle of the Sea doth stand.

It is in length 270, in breadth 50 miles, in compass about 590. The Soil is very fruitful, especially of Wines which we call Muscadells, of which they transport yearly 12000 Butts, together with Sugar-Candy, Gums, Honey, Sugar, Olives, Dates, Apples, Oranges, Limons, Raisins, Melons, Citorns, Pomegranates. Yet, as other Countries of the like hot-nature, it is not a little deficient in Corn, the most or greatest part of which is yearly brought hither from Peloponnesus.

The Island is very populous, insomuch that it is thought that upon any sudden occasion the Seignioury of Venice can raise in it 60000 men able to bear Arms. The People have formerly been good Sea-faring men, a Vertue commaculated with many Vices, which they yet retain, as Envy, Malice, and Lying; to which last they are so infinitely addicted, that an horrible Lie was called proverbially Cretense mendacium. This fault was aimed at by the Poet Epimenides, a Native of this Island, whose words are thus cited by S. Paul to Titus, Chap. 1. v. 12.

Κρήτες ἀὶὶ ψευδοί, καὶὶ θύβια, γὰρ γεγενησάμενοι.

The Cretans always Liers are,
Unruly Beasts of Labour spare.

To which this Proverb may be added, viz. Τρία Κόρρα καὶὶ καὶὶ, that is to say, There are three Nations whose names begin with the letter K, worse then any other, viz. Κόρραδοι, Κρήτες, Κίλικες, the Cappadocians, Cretans, and Cilicians: though some, I know, apply this Proverb to the Cities of Corinth, Capua, and Carthage, beginning all with the same Letter, and all conceived to be very dangerous to the State of Rome. At this day they are sick of their old Diseases, as great Liars and as Idle as ever formerly; Covetous withal, and very subtle, impatient of Labour, and not caring to learn any Science perfectly: only well practised in Shooting, to which they are accustomed from their youth, and therein thought more expert than the Turks themselves.

The Language generally spoken is the Greek Tongue, though the Gentlemen and Merchant, by reason of their Dependance on the State of Venice, speak Italian also. Both Languages are used also in Divine Offices: the people being generally of the Communion of the Church of Greece; but the Latine Service is used also in many places, since the Subjection of this Island to the Venetians. They were converted first unto the Faith by S. Paul the Apostle, who having planted the Gospel of Life amongst them, left the watering of it unto Titus, whom he made Bishop of this Isle; recommending unto him the Care of the Churches there: with power of Ordination and Ecclesiastical Censure: as appears clearly by the Text. Which power that it belonged to Titus as Bishop, and not as their Evangelist only, is affirmed expressly not only by the Subscription of the said Epistle, where he is plainly called ἐκ κληρονομίας πατρὸς ἐπίσκοπος, the first Bishop of the Church of the Cretans, but by the concurrent Testimonies of Euseb. Eccl. Hist. l. 3. c. 4. S. Ambr. in Prefat. ad Tit. S. Hierom. in Tit. c. 1. v. 5. and in his Tract de Scripter. Ecclesiasticis, Theodoret, cited by Oecumen. in Prefat. ad Ep. Tit. Oecumenius himself in Tit. 1. and finally by Theophylact in his Preface to the same Epistle. All which in plain terms call him Bishop, and the Bishop of Crete; according to that sense and meaning of the word Episcopus, as it was used in their times, distinct from Presbyter. The Church hereof, whilst wholly under the Greek Patriarchs, was governed by four Arch-bishops and 21 Bishops. But since the Subjection of this Island to the State of Venice, there is but one Archbishop, which is he of Candia, the chief City, and eight Bishops only; besides the Titular Patriarch of Constantinople, who hath there his Residence; some Prelate of the Latin Church having been always honoured with that empty Title ever since the Recovery of that City from the Western Christians.

Famous was this Island amongst the Ancients for many things memorized both by the Poets and old Historians. For here reigned Saturn in the first Ages of the World, Father of Jupiter, who was born here, and secretly nursed in the Hill called Ida. For seeing that, by the Compact betwixt Saturn and his Brother Titan, Saturn was to enjoy the Kingdom for his own Life only, but all his Male-children to be murdered as soon as born; Jupiter, by the care of his Mother Cybele, was conveyed away, and secretly nursed in Mount Ida, as before was said: the Crying of the Infant being drowned by the noise of loud-sounding Cymbals, purposely used by his Rockers to avoid Discovery. Whence afterwards the Corybantes, or Priests of Cybele, used in her Sacrifices the like musical Instruments, continually sounding, and withal shaking of their Heads, (like Fiddlers) in an antick and ridiculous manner. Alluding whereunto thus the Poet Claudian;

Non te progenitum Cybeleius Arc camoro
Lustravit Corybas.

That is to say,

No Cybeleian Corybas that day

That thou was born did on his Cymbal play.

Here also lived Minos and Rhadamanthus, whose Laws were imitated in the prime Cities of Greece, and who, for their Equity on Earth, are feigned by the Poets to be (together with Alcus) the Judges in Hell. In this Island also lived the lewdly-lustful Pasiphae, Wife of Minos, who is fabled by the Poets (if it be a Fable) to have doated on a white Bull, who, they say, begat on her the Minotaur. Dadalus having framed for her an artificial Cow, into which she conveyed her self, and by that means obtained her desire. The Fable is thus expounded, that Pasiphae was in love with Taurus, one of Minos's Secretaries:

raries : whose company by the Pandarism of Dædalus she enjoying, was delivered of two Sons, one called Minos, the other Taurus. And whereas it is said that the Minotaur was slain by Theseus; like enough that the annual Tribute of 7 Children, which the Athenians paid to Minos, was laid up in some Prison, Minos and Taurus being the Keepers or Gaolers. As for the action of Pasiphaë, I think it not altogether impossible to be true, considering how Domitian, to verifie the old relation, exhibited the like beastly Spectacle in his Amphitheatre at Rome : for thus saith Martial,

*Junctam Pasiphaen Dictæo, credite Tauro
Vidimus; accepit Fabula prisca fidem.
Nec se miratur (Cæsar) longæva Vetustas :
Quicquid Fama canit, donat Arena tibi.
The Fable's prov'd a truth, our eyes did see
The Cretan Bull sport with Pasiphaë.
What cause hath then Antiquity to glory?
We saw it done, she only heard the Story.*

Finally, here was the so-much-celebrated Labyrinth, made by Dædalus for the including and safe keeping of the Minotaur; so full of various Windings and Turnings, that when any one was got to the end thereof, it was impossible for him to come out but by the help of a Clew of thread. By this Minotaur (half a Man, half a Bull) the Children of the Athenians, paid yearly to Minos in way of Tribute, are said to be murdered, till he was killed by Theseus, Son of Agæus King of Athens, with whom Ariadne the daughter of Minos falling in love, taught him a means to kill the Monster, and gave him the Clew of thread, before spoken of, to conduct him out again : the Moral or History whereof hath been shewn before. Nor must it be forgotten, that Strabo the Geographer, who flourished in the time of Tiberius Cæsar, was of Cretan Parents, (though born in the City of Amasia in the Realm of Pontus;) which adds unto this Island as much true Renown as any of the Fictions or Stories (be which they will) of former times.

Things most observable at the present are these that follow. 1. That it breeds no Serpents, no venomous Worm or ravenous or hurtful creature; so that their sheep graze very securely without any Shepherd. 2. If a Woman bite a Man any thing hard, he will hardly be cured of it: which if true, then the last part of the Privilege foregoing (of breeding no hurtful creature) must needs be false. 3. They have an Herb called Alimos, which if one chew in his mouth he shall feel no Hunger for that day, if Quade may be believed, who speaks it. 4. Here is (besides many other medicinal Herbs) that called Dictamnus, or Dictamnus, of special virtue against Poison, either by way of Prevention or present Cure, peculiar only to this Island : it affordeth great store of Laudanum, a Juice or Gum forced with incredible labour out of a certain Tree called Cistus, of which the Mountains yield abundance; good to cause Sleep, if moderately or carefully taken; but if not very well prepared and taken with moderation it brings the last Sleep upon a man, out of which he is not to be awakened till the Sound of the last Trumpet raise him.

Chief Mountains of it are, 1. Ida, now Psfioriti, situate in the midst of the Island, begirt about with many fair and pleasant Villages, sheltered by it from the violence of Wind and Sun; the Hill being so high, that from the Top hereof both sides of the Island may be easily seen. Here Jupiter is said to have been secretly nursed, from hence called Idæus. And at the bottom of it the Cretans use to shew some tracts of the ancient Labyrinth, being indeed no other then the Ruins of some larger Quarry : the Labyrinth made by Dædalus being so defaced in the time of Pliny, that he knew not where to find any Ruins of it. 2. Diste, now called Sethia, in some places Lasthi, so high, that all the Winter long it is covered with Snow, yet all the sides thereof are garnished with Cypress-trees, a Mountain of such fame, that the whole Island sometimes had the name of Dictæa, the City Dictynna, the Promontory Dictynneum, and the Herb Dictamnus, all seeming to take name from hence. 3. Louti, a long Chain of Hills, so named from the Whiteness of them; now called di Medaria, and by some La Spahia.

Rivers of any eminence here are few or none. The principal of those that be, are, 1. Alphion, 2. Sarfinus, 3. Epicidnus, and, 4. Dicæon, towards the North. 5. Populiar, towards the East; and 6. Idæon, towards the West : none of them navigable, or capable of Ships of Burthen, scarce of little Barrels. But the coast is supplied by the neighbouring Sea, which affordeth many Creeks and Bays, some capacious Havens, and great store of Fish, among which a Kind of bearded Mullet, reckoned among the Delicacies of the ancient Romans. By the convenience of which Harbours, their Fish-trade, and the situation of it in the midst of the Sea, the people anciently were esteemed so good Sea-faring men, that when the people of those times did tax a man with any incredible report, they used to say, Cretensis nescit Pelagus, meaning thereby the matter to be as improbable as for one of Crete to be no Sailor.

In former times there were reckoned in this Island an hundred Cities, whence it was called Hecatompolis; of which about 40 were remaining in the time of Ptolomy, for so many of their names he gives us. Those of most note were, 1. Gnosus, the Seat-Royal or Court of Minos, whence Ariadne the Daughter of Minos had the name of Gnosia; in former times called Ceratus, from a little River of that name running not far off. 2. Cydon or Cydonia, a midland City, (as the former) memorable for an excellent kind of Apples, which the Latines called Poma Cydonia, amongst them they were in great request, as they are at this day (though by the name of Adam's Apples) amongst the Turks : the most ancient of all the Cities of Crete, many of which were at first Colonies of this : for which reason it was called commonly Mater urbium. 3. Eleuthera, as Ptolomy; Erythraea, as the printed Copies of Florus corruptly call it; one of the first Cities taken here by the Romans. 4. Mileum, mentioned by Strabo, though omitted by Ptolomy; the place in which S. Paul left Trophimus sick, as it is mentioned 2. Tim. 4. 20, which happened when the Apostle hovered over that Coast, as it is said Acts 27. 7, 8. &c. For that it could not be that Mileum to which he congregated the Elders of Ephesus, appeareth by his being at Hierusalem, Acts 21. 17. and other circumstances of the Story. 5. Gortyna, nigh to which stood the Labyrinth made by Dædalus : memorable also for a Reed, growing on the River Lenus, (near to which it stood) of which they made their strongest Arrows, by Virgil's Æneid. 11. called Spicula Gortynia; as for a light Garment much used by Hunters, which Claudius calls Gortyniam vestem, apparelling Diana the great Hunters with it. 6. Dictamnus, as Ptolomy, or Dictynna, as Pliny calls it, so named from the Hill Dictæ, near to which it is situate : one of the chief Cities of the North part of this Island; as 7. Ampelus, so named from its plenty of Vines, was upon the South. 8. Minea, a Port-town, (now Altemara) so named from Minos, in the East; and 9. Coryem, on a Promontory of the same name, in the West side of it.

But these, and almost all the rest spoken of by Ptolomy, being so destroyed by Time and Wars that the ruins of them are hardly visible, we must behold it in the present condition and estate thereof; divided into four parts or Provinces, according to the names and number of the four chief Cities; that is to say, 1. Sittia, 2. Candia, 3. Retimo, and 4. Canca.

The Reader will find the History of the Conquest of this Island, at the foot of the account given by Heylin, where I thought it was best to place it. The present State of the principal places I have intermixed, from one Mr. Randolph, who for some time lived in it about the year 1675, and saw all the great Cities.

In the first part, called SITTIA, living towards the East, are 74 Villages, and but 17 Parishes, of which six only are of the Church of Rome, the residue holding the Communion of the Church of Greece. The principal whereof whereof are, 1. Sittia, or Cytia, conceived by some to be the Cytaum of Ptolomy; a small Town but populous, and very well fortified. The City of Sittia, stands at the North East part of the Island, on a Bay, the Castle stood on the North West of the Town, on a rising ground, and was built of a course Marble Stone. This Town and Castle was blown up and deserted by the Venetians upon the Landing of the Turks in 1645, after which they retired to Candia. 2. Gierapetra, betwixt Sittia and Candia, seated on the Sea-side, on a lofty Rock, at the bottom whereof is said to be a dangerous Whirl-pit, supposed to be the Panormus of Ptolomy. This Town lies on the South side of the Island, and has an un-secure Port. Though the Town is wall'd and has a small Castle and a Garrison of 200 Janisaries. The Houses are well built of good Stone, and the Rooms lofty though but two Stories high; besides the Garrison they can Arm 300 Turks, yet in the year 1675, a famous Privateer called Crevellier with 500 men surprized this Town, and carried 200 into Slavery, and got away safe when he had done. 3. St. Macor, the dwelling-place of one of the Bishops of the Latines.

2. The second part hereof, called the Territory of Candia, lying directly West of Sittia, are reckoned 465 Towns and Villages, making up amongst them 99 Parish-Churches; whereof 77 are of the Communion of the Church of Greece, the other 22 only of the Church of Rome. Of these the principal are, 1. Candia, an Archbishop's See, the Metropolis or Head City of the Island, which takes name from hence. It is situate on the North coast hereof towards the Aegean, beautified with a safe and commodious Haven, and fortified so strongly, that it seems impregnable; affirmed by some to be the Martium of the Ancients; but I find no such place in Ptolomy, or in Ortelius his Theſaurus. The City is fair and large, built for the most part of Free-stone, with low Roofs, after the manner of Italy, the Streets broad and spacious, from whence a fair and pleasant plain leadeth to a place called the Cave of Minos, reported by the common people to be the Sepulchre of Jupiter. This City stands almost at an equal distance from Canca and Sittia, on a pleasant Bay, having also an artificial Haven secured from the North Wind by a Mole of 200 yards, with a large strong Castle at the head of it which has 20 Cannons. It is secured on the East, by a point of Land, the entrance of it not exceeding 30 yards; upon this point of Land, the Turks have built a covered way, with a very thick Wall which leads to a small Fort, with four great Guns, both strongly Arched to hinder the force of Bombes, and over against the Mouth of the Harbour, another Fort with four great Guns planted low, and eight smaller above them. The City is not repaired towards the Land, where the Walls were so shaken by the Siege, that the Turks will not be at the charge of repairing them. The Walls and out-works are 6 miles circumference. About an eighth part of the Houses are now inhabited, the rest are desolate. The number of the Inhabitants at present is thought to be 10000, and there is a Garrison of 2000 Janisaries always in it. Randolph. 2. Malvisin, 3. Themene, 4. Castel Novo, 5. Bonifacio, 6. Belvedere, 7. Mirabello; of which little memorable.

3. In the third part, being the Territory of Retimo, formerly Rhithymna, lying North-west of the Territory of Candia, are accounted 265 Towns and Villages, making up 44 Parishes, whereof 36 are Gracians, and but 8 of the Latins. The chief of which are, 1. Retimo, on the Shore of the Northern Sea, as Candia is, well fortified, and a Bishop's See; but not else observable. Retimo stands on a point of Land very pleasantly, having a port to the East, but almost choked up with sand, towards the Sea are no Walls. This was the first place the Turks took, saith my Author, putting all to the Sword they found in it. They have built three Forts towards the Sea, and a Wall with a dry Ditch to the Land-ward, and it is chiefly inhabited by Turks. 2. Milopotamo, an Episcopal See also, so called of the River Milopotamus, on which it is seated, 3. Agistiman, 4. Mandras, 5. Iappa; hardly worth the naming.

4. In the fourth and last part hereof, being the Territory of Canca, taking up all the West of the Island, are contained 240 Towns and Villages, distributed into 47 Parishes; of which 33 are of the Greek Church and the 14 remaining of the Church of Rome. Those of most note are 1. Canca, built by a Colony or Plantation of Venetian Gentlemen, on the North coast also, supposed to stand in the same place where once Cydon did; second to none but Candia for Wealth and Beauty, but far before it for the commodiousness of the Port, commonly called Porto della Suda, capable of more than a thousand good Gallies at a time; and therefore strongly fortified with two Cittadels or Castles, on each side of the Haven one, as the Door and Entrance of the Country. Canca is seated in a fine plain about 3 miles from the bottom of the Bay of Suda; having a very fair safe Harbour, which the Turks have much fortified. The Houses are well built, and not much Damnified by the War. And the Walls are in good repair, and have a dry Dike thirty yards broad, and six deep about them, and the Walls are about thirty foot high, and have the Earth on the inside 10 foot higher then they are. The City is about three miles in circumference, and much better inhabited than Candia, and better Traded. Randolph, who saw this Island and lived in it. 2. Chisamo, in Latin called Cisamus, old and decayed, the Walls thereof only holding good against the Ruines of time; situate in a low Moorish place towards the Aegean. 3. Selino, built upon a Hill on the Sea-side, opposite to Chisamo. 4. Sfachia, or Spachia, situate at the foot of the Mountains of old called Leuci, now della Spachia, from this Town: unwall'd, but fortified with a Castle; built for a place of Refuge against the Incursions of such Pirates as annoyed the Coasts, in which the Governour for this part hath his chief Abode. By which account it will appear that in the whole Island are no more than 1044 Towns and Villages, and 207 Parish-Churches; of which there be but 48 which are accounted Members of the Church of Rome, the Residue, 159 in number, retaining their Communion with the Church of Greece.

As for the Story of this Island, we can ascend as high as the times of Saturn, for his Antiquity affirmed to be the Son of Uranus and Vesta, or of Heaven and Earth; who bettered favoured by his Mother obtained the Kingdom of Crete, his elder Brother Titan being quite excluded. Hereupon Wars arising betwixt the Brethren, it was ordered thus, That Saturn for his own Life should enjoy the Kingdom, which after his decease should return to the Titans: and for the performance of this Contract, the Sons of Saturn were to be strangled as soon as born. But Cybele the Wife of Saturn unawares to her Husband, preserved first Jupiter, and after other of her Sons; which coming to the knowledge of Titan and his Sons, they made War against Saturn, but in conclusion were subdued by the Aid of Jupiter: whence grew the Fable of the Titans warring against the Gods, Saturn and Jupiter his Son being after reckoned in that number. The Titans being vanquished, a new War arose betwixt Saturn and Jupiter, occasioned only (as many unnatural Wars since these times have been) by Fears and Jealousies: which ending at the last in the Flight of Saturn, Jupiter became sole King of Crete, reigning there in great power and honour till the time of his death, and dying was interred at Gnossus, with this Inscription or Epitaph in old Greek Letters, ὁ Ζεὺς τοῦ Κρήνου, that is to say Jupiter the Son of Saturn. After his death he was worshipped by the blind Gentiles as the chief of their Gods, and honoured frequently with the Title of Πατὴρ ἀνθρώπων τε θεῶν τε the Father both of Gods and Men: though most incongruously and absurdly, as Lactantius noteth, there being many thousands living in and before the times of Saturn, when Jupiter was yet unborn. But to proceed; he being dead, Minos, begotten by him on Europa, succeeded here, who, wisely taking the advantage which the convenient venient situation of the Island gave him, made himself Master of the Seas, and afterwards enlarged his Dominions by the Conquest of the Megarenses and Athenians, upon which last he imposed, amongst other hard Conditions, a Tribute of seven Male Children yearly to be kept as Hostages; which determined after three years by the Valour and good Fortune of Theseus. But Minos being slain in Sicily; and his Posterity extinct, the Cretans would no longer admit of Kings, but governed themselves after the manner of a Common-wealth or Free State: The Laws and Ordinances whereof, first devised by Minos, were of such esteem that they were much imitated by Lycurgus, and are at large described by Aristotle in the 2. Book of his Politicks, ch. 8. Under the Government it continued till the Romans, having taken in all the rest of Greece, picked a Quarrel with them. For though it was pretended that they had been aiding unto Mithridates in his War against them; yet Florus states the matter rightly, affirming that the War was undertaken on no other ground, but sola nobilem Insulam vincendi cupiditate, out of a covetous desire only of subduing such a wealthy Island. And to this War they went with so proud a Confidence, that M. Anthony, who commanded in it, carried more Chains with him to bring home his Prisoners than Arms to conquer them. An Insolence which he paid right dear for, his Navy being vanquished by the Cretans, the bodies of his slain Souldiers hanged upon the Masts, and himself perishing in the Action by a fit of Sickness. Metellus, who succeeded him in that charge, went on more successfully, first taking Gnassus, Eleuthera, or (Erythraea, as Florus calls it) and Cydon, their principal Cities, and not long after all the Island; using the vanquished Islanders with such Inhumanity, that most of them poisoned themselves to avoid his Cruelty: rewarded with no other Honour for so great a Victory, than that he got the fir-name of Creticus; his Triumph being denied by the Faction of Pompey, against whose will he had put himself upon that Service. This being added to the Roman Empire, it was after united unto Cyrenaica by Augustus Caesar, both making up one Province only, governed by a Proconsul till the death of Nero; afterwards separated from it, but the time I find not. During the Reign of Constantine, in 36 years together there fell no Rain, so that this Island was in a manner wholly desolated. But Helena, the Mother of Constantine, having obtained Rain for it by her prayers to God, it was again new peopled by several Colonies brought out of Egypt, Syria, Greece, and the parts adjoining. By Constantine made a Province of the Diocesis of Macedonia, it continued a Member of the Eastern Empire till the time of Michael Balbus, when it was subdued by the Sarazens from them recovered by the more fortunate conduct of Nicephorus Phocas, who came unto the Empire, Anno 963. In the division of the Spoil amongst the Latins, it was first given to Boniface Marquis of Montferrat, by him surrendered willingly to the State of Venice, in 1194, or as others in 1294, who had a mind to be possessed of all the Islands of that Empire: he being recompenced with the Kingdom of Thessaly, the fair and wealthy City of Thessalonica, and many Towns and Territories in Peloponnesus. Under that State it still continueth, in vain attempted by Selimus the second in the year 1571, at what time he invaded and conquered Cyprus; and gallantly defended for this year last past against all the Forces of Ibrahim the late Grand Seignior. What the Success of this War will be, we shall see hereafter.

For the Defence hereof against the Insurrections of the Inhabitants, who did at first ill brook the Venetian Government, there are some standing Forces kept in constant pay; besides such as are maintain'd in several Garrisons, the City of Canca having in it no fewer than six Companies of Soldiers, Candia 2000 Soldiers, and the lesser Cities proportionably: over which there is set so strong a Guard, that a Natural Cretan is not permitted to enter weaponed into any of them. And for the preservation of their Interest in it from foreign Power, they have furnished the Island with 70 or 80 Gallies for the defence of the Shores; and having exceedingly fortified the Haven of Suda with two strong Castles, this Haven being capable of more than 1000 Vessels, and therefore meritoriously reputed the Door and entry into the Country. It is reported that the King of Spain, Philip the second, did offer unto the Venetians for this Haven more than enough; but it could not be accepted. For though the Spaniards seemed only to intend the Retreat and relief of his own Navy when he should undertake any Expedition against the Turk; yet the Wise Venetians saw, that by this Haven he might at all times awe, and when he listed surprize, the whole Country. The Venetians purchased this Island the 12th of April 1294, of Boniface of Montferrat, but the Inhabitants refusing this Sale, put the Venetians to the trouble of a Conquest; whereupon the Island was divided between the Noble Venetians or Chavalry, the Noble Cantors or Colony which were the Venetian Infantry, and the Greeks or Natives who did not Rebel, but took part with the Venetians. The first two are of the Latin Church and speak Italian, the third are of the Greek Language and Religion. In the year 1645, the Turks began a furious War upon this Island, for having only secured a Mulatta-Fleet, which had beaten and taken a Rich Eunuch, who was going to Egypt with his Wealth, the year before in April. This Turkish-Fleet which consisted of 81 Gallies, one Gallion, 12 Turkish and 10 English and Dutch Ships, and 300 Saiks, having on Board 7000 Janisaries, 14000 Spahees, 50000 Timariots, and 3000 Pioniers set Sail for Candia, and Landed the 23th of June at Gogna about 18 miles from Canca, and overthrew the few Christians that afterwards opposed them, the Venetians who expected no War, being in no capacity to oppose them: they took Canca the second City of the Island, with much slaughter of the Christians the first year. The year following they attack'd Retimo, the Venetians having no success at Sea in 1647. The Turkish Fleet Landed 40000 Fighting Men more, the Venetian Fleet looking on, tho' equal in number, and better appointed; and thereupon they began the Siege of Candia, the principal City, but were forced to rise with great loss. In 1650, they began another Siege, from hence forward the War was managed with great variety, the Turks being generally the loofers, though they could never be expell'd out of the Island, till at last in the year 1669, the 27th of September this City was surrendered into the hands of the the Prince Visier, when but five of the Inhabitants staid behind, and a few Decrepit Jews and Greeks to the number of 30: yet was the taking this City the best news Mahomet the 4th ever heard. These 30 Acres of Ground having cost him an inestimable expence of blood and Treasure. And in all appearance having laid the Foundation of the Ruin and utter Subversion of this Empire, which has never Thriven since this War. When the Turks entred this Island, there were above a Million of Souls in it, but they are now not thought to exceed 80000, of which not above 30000 are Turks. And all the Churches which belonged to the Latins are now wall'd up and no Christian Service allowed but the Greek. In the beginning of this year 1688, there was a strong report that the Venetians had recovered this Island, and that it was sold them by the Turkish Garrisons, which though contradicted for the present, yet it is certain the Turkish affairs are here in a very low condition, and they might easily be driven out, if the Venetians would turn their Arms against them, the Candiors being well disposed to shake off the Turkish Yoke, and joyn with their old Masters against the Turks, though they are better Treated than any other people who are subject to the Port.

II. The other Islands of this Sea, as of lesser note, will be pass'd over in few words. The first of which is called Claude, mentioned Acts 27. 16. situate on the South west of Crete, by Mela called Caudon; where Seneca Plays time was a Town or City named Gaudos, now called Goza, with the Island. 2. Lia, now Standia, a very small Island, and of little note. 3. Leton, on the South-east of Crete, now called Christina. And 4. Ægilia, or Ægiali, by Pliny Ægila, more in the Sea towards Peloponnesus; now called Ceccrigo by Sophianus. Of which and others of less note (if less may be) there is no more to be said, but that they have always followed the Fortunes of Crete, on which they seem to have their principal Dependence.

10. The Islands of the IONIAN Sea.

THE IONIAN Sea is so called either from Ionius, the Son of Dyrrhachius, who Hercules having ignorantly killed threw into this Sea, giving that name unto it to preserve his memory, as Dydymus is of opinion, or from Ionis a Region in the Extremity of Calabria, as Solinus; or from Io, the Daughter of Inachus, as Lycophron the Poet hath it. It containeth all that part of the Mediterranean which lyeth from the Ægean or Cretan Seas unto the Adriatick from which it is parted about Epidamnus, (otherwise called Dyrrhachium, now Durazzo as is said by Ptolomy; or rather at the shooting out of the Acroceraunian Hills, as is affirmed by Pliny and other Writers; and so along the shores of the two Calabrias to the Isle of Sicily. Chief Isles whereof which pass in the account of Greece (for of those lying on the Coast of Italy we have spoken elsewhere) are, 1. the Strophades, 2. Zacynthus, 3. the Echinades, 4. Cephalania, 5. Corcyra, and 6. Ithaca.

1. The Strophades are two small Islands, now called Strivali, lying against Messene in Peloponnesus; famous for nothing but the Harpyes, ravenous Birds, affirmed to have the faces of Women, but the Talons of Vultures, sent by the offended Gods (as the Fable goeth) for the punishment of Phineas King of Arcadia, who had put out the Eyes of his Sons by a former Wife at the instigation of their Stepdame: For which he was so plagued by these Harpyes, that he could set no Meat on his Table wheresoever he was, but these ravenous creatures first devoured it, and then bewrayed the Dishes in which it was. Much pitied by the Argonauts, whom he had courteously entertained, they sent Zethes and Calais, the winged Issue of Boreas and Orithya, who drave them thence, and having pursued them to those Islands, turned back again: whence the name of Strophades. Under which Fable was contained the sad condition of ignorant or unhappy Princes, devoured by Flatterers, Informers, and false Accusers, by whom their name and Government was made distastful; till by good Council they had purged their Courts of such ugly Monsters: concerning which Alphonfus King of Naples was used to say, that these Harpyes had left the Strophades and dwelt at Rome. They are inhabited only by some few Greek Friars: and in one of them there is a Spring of Fresh Water, which hath his Fountain in Peloponnesus, and passing under the Sea riseth here. The Greek Priests are called Calories, quasi καλοὶ ἱερεῖς boni Sacerdotes; about 30 in number. They wear long Hair, never eat Flesh, and but seldom Fish; feeding usually on Herbs, Olives, Oyl, and the like. They never go out of the Islands, neither do they on any occasion permit Women to come amongst them. They all labour for their Sustenance, some in Tillage, some in Vineyards, some in Fishing; so that among very many of them, three or four only can read. But of these somewhat hath been said elsewhere already.

2. Zacynthus, or Zant, is 60 miles in compass, and distant from Peloponnesus 20 miles; so called of Zacynthus, Son to Dardanius. The Country is wonderfully stored with Oyl, Wines and Currants: of which last they made yearly 150000 Zecchines for their own Coffers and 48000 Dollars which they pay for Custom to the Seignoury of Venice. They were a very poor people when the English used to Traffick there first; but now they grow rich and proud. At our Merchants first frequenting the Country, they much marvelled to what end they bought so many Currants: and demanded whether they used to dye Cloaths or fat Hogs with them, for so they themselves did: but now they have learned a more profitable use of them. Here are also very good Salt-pits, Fresh-water plenty, but little or no Wood, and less Corn: their ground being Husbanded, as the case stands with them, to their better advantage; but so that many times they are ready to starve, if either the Wind or the Sea prove cross unto them, and hinder them from fetching their Provisions both of Flesh and Corn out of Peloponnesus, in which respect they are fain to hold fair Quarter with the Turks; considering how easie it is for him to distress them for want of Victual. The Island is much troubled with Earthquakes, commonly once a week; in regard whereof they build their Houses very low; and when they perceive them coming, the Priests are to ring the Bells, to stir the people to Prayers. They have a Custom here at Weddings to invite many young men, whom they call Compeers, of which every one giveth the Bride a Ring: which done, it is accounted as detestable a Sin as Incest for them to accompany her in any carnal kind: and therefore they chuse such to be their Compeers who have formerly been suspected of too much Familiarity with her.

The Island is very populous and well inhabited, but the people of a spiteful and vindictive nature, not to be reconciled, if angred. It containeth in it 48 Towns and Villages, the chief whereof, which passeth by the name of a City, is called also Zant, stretched out about the length of a mile on the foot of a mountain, but in breadth not answerable; beautified with a fair and convenient Haven opening towards Greece, safe from the danger of Pirates, though not of Winds; capable of great fleets of shipping both for bulk and number, and so frequented from all parts, that he who hath a mind to go out of it need not stay for a passage. Yet, notwithstanding this great Concourse and resort of Strangers, the Town is rather rich than well-built or beautiful; the Streets hereof being uneven and rugged, and the Buildings by reason of the often Earthquakes, very low. On the East side of it, on a round steep Mountain, standeth a very strong Castle, a little City of it self, well garrisoned; impreguably fortified, and of a very difficult Entrance: which commandeth not the City and Harbour only, but a great part of the Sea adjoyning. Upon the Wall thereof continually stands a Watchman to descry what Shipping is at hand, and hangeth out as many Flags as he discovereth Vessels. And over the Door of the Town-Hall (the better to instruct the Magistrates in their publick Duty) it is said these Verses are inscribed:

Hic locus 1. odit, 2. amat, 3. punit, 4. conservat,
5. honorat,
1. Nequitiam, 2. Pacem, 3. Crimina, 4. Jura,
5. Probos.

Thus Englished by George Sandys, whence I had the Latine,

This place doth 1. hate, 2. love, 3. punish, 4. keep,
5. requite,
1. Voluptuous Riot, 2. Peace, 3. Crimes, 4. Laws, 5. the Upright.

In matter of Religion, the people, being generally Greeks both in Birth and Language, are for the most part of that Church also; but some adhere unto the Latine, each party having their own Bishop: of which the Greek Bishop hath his Cathedral in the Church of Saint Nicolas, near unto the Haven which it giveth name to, and therein a Monallery of Caloires, or Monks of Basil; the Latin Bishop hath his Residence and Cathedral within the Castle, and therein a Convent of Franciscans. The Jews have in this Town their Synagogue also;

also: but there are not many of them, if not lately en-created. In Civil matters they are subject to the State of Venice, the Governour hereof (whom they call the Provedore) having his Residence in the Castle, assisted by a Chancellour and two Counsellors, (all Gentlemen of Venice) whom they change every third year. The Fortunes of this Island in former times, and by what means it fell to the Venetians, we shall shew anon. Mr. Wheler tells us, this Island lies in 36. 30. Latitude, 30 miles from the Morcia to the West, it is little but very fruitful and pleasant. The Town and Island are very populous. The People of this Isle are much Latinized in their Doctrine, and yet hath the Church of Rome as much as ever. The Currants of this Island grow not on Buttes as we suppose, but on Vines, and are a small black Grape with out Stones. They have this Name from Corinth, where they first grew, though there are none now. They are gathered in August, and spread thin on the Ground till they are Dry. The rest of his Account, and his Map of the Island, may be found page the 35th.

3. The Echinades are certain little Islands, or rather great Rocks, now called Curzolari, famous for nothing but the great Battle of Lepanto, fought nigh them betwixt the Venetians and the Turks; the Turks having in their Navy 207 sail of Ships, the Venetians and their Confederates but 145 of all sorts. But it pleased God to give the Victory to the weakest: the Issue of it being such, that the Turks lost 29000 men who were killed in the Fight, 39000 more which were taken Prisoners 140 of their Gallies, 400 pieces of Ordnance, and 200 Christian Captives which were then redeemed: the Christians buying this great Victory with the death of 7656 men or thereabouts; too great a price, could it have been purchased with a less. A Victory obtained not far from the point of Aetium, wherein Augustus overcame the Navy of Marcus Antonius, and thereby got the Empire to himself alone, of which before he was but Joint-tenant with his Adversary. So that this place seems to be marked out for a Stage of eminent Actions; and that this latter Naval fight was but the second part of the first.

But to return unto these Islands. They stand just against the Mouth of the River Achelous; of which thus the Poet,

Turbidas obsequi Achelous Echinadas exit.

Fierce Achelous with the Sea is mixt,
Where the Echinades (great Rocks) are fixt.

These Islands are in number five, feigned by the Poets to be so many Naiades or Sea Nymphs, whom Achelous the River-God upon some displeasure metamorphosed into these Rocky Islands. But the truth is, that they were caused by the Dirt and Mud which this River carried with it into the Sea, where at last is settled to firm Ground. Of which himself saith thus in Ovid,

Fluctus nostrique marisque
Continuum deducit humum, partemque revellit,
In totidem mediis quot cernis Echinadas undis.

The fury of the Sea-waves and mine own Continual heaps of Mud and Earth drew down,
Which, parted by the inter-running Seas,
Made, as thou seest, these five Echinades.

5. Cephalenia, the most populous Island of this Sea, is situate over against Acarnania, part of the Province of Epirus; having on the South east Zant, on the Northwest Corcyra or Corfu; in length containing 80 miles, 40 in breadth, the whole compais being reckoned at 160.
Once called Tetrapolis, from the number of four Cities in it; but three of them were decayed in the time of Prolomy, who takes notice of no more but one, and that of the same name with the Island. It is woody and mountainous in most places, but the Macedonians intermixt with Valleys and the Woods with Campan - plentiful in Wheat, Honey, Currants, Maron, Oyl incompuble, though no long living, Murelets, as also in Cheese, Wool, Turkeys, and Powder for the Dying of Scarlets. So destitute of Water, as having no River, and not many Fountains, that when their Corn would drink, they gape both morning and evening, to receive the Dew distilling intently from the Clouds.

The People are for the most part Greeks; some few Italians, natives of the Seignoury of Io, being in-termixt: the whole number of the Inhabitants computed at 6000 Families, the number of the Towns and Villages to 200 or thereabouts. The principal whereof are,
1. Cephalenia, now Cetadonia, fortified with good Walls and a very strong Castle. 2. L. A. A. A., a Haven-Town, distant six miles from Cephalonia: the Port whereof is capable of a sufficient Navy. 3. S. I., another Port-Town also, lying towards the South. Mr. Wheler page 35, has given a short account of this Island, Cetadonia saith it is situate in 37. 38. Latitude, and 46. Longitude, and is 170 miles in Circuit; that it was sold by Robert Prince of Taranto to the State of Venice in the year 1350, and that it was sack'd by the Turks in the year 1571.

As for the Fortunes of this Island, it was first called Mcclonia, after Teleboe: and being known by that name was made subject to Thebes, by the Valour and good Conduct of Amphitryo, the Theban General, by whom Pericles, the King hereof was slain in Battle. During which War, and the stay of Amphitryo in this Island, it happened that Cephalus, a noble Athenian, having by mis-adventure killed his Wife Procris with an Arrow which he shot at a Deer, not daring to abide in his own Country, fled unto Amphitryo his old Friend, then newly victorious over the Teleboians; who pitying his case, made him the Governour of this Island, since, from his name, called Cephalenia. Having continued for some time in the power of the Thebans, it passed, together with Zant and some other Islands, into the hands of the Macedonians; from whom, in the declining of their Affairs, the Acheans got the Isle of Zant, and the Aetolians Cephalenia. But long they had not held them when the Romans began to look towards Greece, who under colour of setting the Continent at liberty, made themselves Masters of both the Islands, that so they might at leisure possess the whole, as in fine they did. In the Division of the Empire they fell, as parts of Greece to the Constan-tinopolitans; and on the taking of that City by the western Christians, they fell, with almost all the rest of the Islands, to the State of Venice, the Governours whereof, retaining Corfu and some other of the most importance in the hands of the Seignior, permitted these (as many other of less note) unto private Adventurers. At the conclusion of the Peace betwixt Alphonse the Great and the State of Venice, these two, with Neritos, or Leucas, (spoken of in Epirus) were seized on by that Tyrant in despight of that Treaty or Conclusion, as belonging unto private persons, not to the Republick: but were recovered afterwards by the Venetians in the Reign of Baptist the second, in the name of the State, and as parts thereof are still governed and defended by them.
Coronelli acquaints us that in the year 1224, this Island was out of Pure Generosity given to the State of Venice by one Gains who was Lord of it. That in 1479, it was Ravish'd from a Petty Prince who then had it by an Ottoman Fleet. That in 1499, the Spanish and Venetian Fleets joyned in the Conquest of it, and took the principal Fort in it by Escalado, their Batteries making small Impressions on its Walls. The principal Fortress now in it is Daffo, built by the Venetians in the year 1595, in a time of War, towards the South-West part of the Island.

5. Corcyra, (now Corfu) more anciently was called Phacaria; but took this latter name from a Nymph so called, whom Neptune is reported to have here de-

flowered. It is situate over against Epirus, from thence 12 miles distant, stretched out from East to West in the form of a Bow, the length thereof being 54 miles, 24 the breadth; and so it is the biggest of these Seas. Commodiously seated for the Trade and Estate of Venice, as the Centre of their Dominion and Command by Sea.

The Southern parts hereof are mountainous and defective in Water, much subject to be blasted with Southernly Winds; and therefore they sow little Corn, and plant less Fruits. The Northern parts are level and delightful, adorned with whole Groves of Limons, Oranges, Fig-trees, Olives, and Pomegranates; enriched with plenty of Grain, abundance of Wines, great store of Oyl and Olives, and most excellent Honey; blest with a very temperate and healthful Air, made odoriferous by most pleasant and sweet-smelling Fruits, which grow most plentifully in each part hereof. Alcinous, who so courteously entertained Ulysses after his Shipwreck, was once King of this Island; whose Gardens, answerable to the natural Delights and Sweetness of it, are so much celebrated by the Poets. One of which thus:

Qui nunquam vacui prodistis in athera Rami?*

Which may be Englisht in these words.

Why should I name Alcinous fertile Ground,
And Trees which never without Fruit are found?

Towns of most note and strength herein are, 1. Pagionoli, 2. Castello S. Angelo, of good esteem in respect of many others, but far short of 3. Corfu, the chief and strongest of the Island, which the Turks have found by their frequent Repulses to be impregnable. For it is situate at the foot of a Mountain, on the top of which are built two inaccessible Fortresses, as being strongly fenced with a natural Rock; the one called the old Fortress, and the other the New: justly esteemed the chief Bulwarks of Venice, whose Trade and Power would soon decay should these Forts be lost. For which cause the two Governours (for each Fort hath one) are sworn before the State of Venice, never to hold Intelligence with one another by word or writing; lest by the Treachery of the one, the other might be wrought also from his Faith and Duty. Neither is their Command here for more than two years; their Commission then terminating, and new Successors being sent them. The Town is inhabited for the most part by Grecians, as is all the residue of the Island; beautified with one of the most commodious Havens in all the Adriatick, and the Residence of an Archbishop. A Town of such publick Concernment, in regard of the Strength and Situation, that it is accounted of as the Key of Venice, and one of the strongest Bulwarks of Christendom against the Encroachment of the Turks. The Story of it since dismembred from the Eastern Empire, at the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, we have had before. Coronelli affirms this Island to be 70 miles from East to West, and 20 broad, and in circuit 120. It lies from the Cape of Otranto 60 miles from Venice, 700 from Epirus; at one end 1 mile, at the other 20; Latitude 31.41. Longitude 44.45. Its Principal Town is seated on the side next Epirus in the middle of the Island. It was first subject to the Kings of Naples, from whom it was purchased by the Venetians in the year 1322, and entered upon the 9th of June 1327, others place it the 20th of May 1386. In the year 1401, they obtained a confirmation from Ladislaus King of Naples for a good Sum of Money. In the year 1537, Barberousse a Turk besieged the principal City with an Army of 25000 Turks, and 30 pieces of Canon, but he was repulsed with great loss and shame. Thus far he. Our Learned Country Man Mr. Wheler saith, the Principal City about 100 years since, was nothing but an old Castle, but it is now a large City, and well fortified with Works on the South. It would be almost impregnable were it not for a Rock that stands to the West, and commands the next Fort, and great part of the Town. Mr. Wheler has given a very large account of this Island which begins page 29. I am forced to cite the page, because there is no Index to that excellent discourse which abates very much of its value and use.

6. Ithaca, now called Val de Compare, lieth on the North-east of Cephalenia, being in compass fifty miles: most famous for the Birth of Ulysses, the Son of Laertes, of which thus the Poet;

Effugimus Scopulos Ithacæ Laertia Regna, Et terram altricem savi exsecramur Ulyssis.

From the Ithacan Rocks Laertes Realm we fled,
And curs'd the Land which dire Ulysses bred.

It was also called Dulichium, or else there was some other Island of that name, not far from Ithaca whereof Ulysses was also King, who is hence called Dulichius Heros among the Poets: and in this Taunt of Ajax to him, Dulichius vertex signifieth the Head of Ulysses.

Sed neque Dulichius sub Achilles casside, Vertex Pondera tanta jerat.

Achilles Helm's too great a weight, I trow,
For weak Ulysses head to undergo.

But as weak a man as Ajax thought him, he was the Master-Wit of Greece for the times he lived in, and one that did as good Service in the War of Troy as the best Sword-man of them all. A War to which he went somewhat unwillingly, as fearing the sad Consequences and events thereof; insomuch that he feigned himself mad, ploughing the Shore, and sowing Salt instead of Corn. But Palamedes, to make trial whether this was real, or but counterfeit only, cast young Telemachus, the Son of Ulysses, before the Plough, which he observing, either drove the Plough besides him, or lifted it over him, Discovered by this means, and engaging with the rest in the Trojan War, he found out the Design of Thetis, and brought Achilles to it also: in the course whereof by his Wit and Courage, he did very good Service; associated with Diomedes in the action against Rhesus King of Thrace, and with Palamedes in foraging the Country for Provisions. By his Policy was the Palladium stoln out of Troy, and consequently the City taken and destroyed, whose Fate depended on the preservation of that fatal Relick. After the ending of the War, which held out ten years, he was withheld from Ithaca ten years longer by Winds and Tempests and the Displeasure of the Gods which favoured Troy: in which he saved himself from the Inchantments of the Sirens, the Allurements of Circe, the Cruelty of Polyphemus, and after many Dangers came home in safety. A man of so compleat a Vertue, that Homer maketh him the Pattern of a Temperate and Prudent man in the Books called Odysses, (by his name, as the Greeks pronounce it;) as he doth Achilles, in his Iliads, of a compleat and perfect Soldier.

The Country is generally very rocky and barren, exceeding plenty of Goats, but no Hares live in it; inhabited for the most part by Pirates and Exiles, men banished out of civil Society, and willingly acknowledging no Superior over them; but subject, if to any, to the State of Venice, which hitherto hath maintained these Islands against the Turks, though many times attempted by them in the most prosperous times of their Arms and Victories. For the Venetians being gratified at the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, with almost most all the Islands of the Ægean and Ionian Seas, (as being a People strong in Shipping, and so most able to preserve the Possession of them) some of the greatest and most considerable, either for their Riches or Commodiousness of Situation, were furnished with convenient Garrisons in the name of the State. The rest they did bestow on the better sort of Citizens, to be defended and made good at their own Cost and Charges; who accordingly possessed themselves of one, two or more of them, as were of ability to set out their Gallies for the keeping of them; the Seignoury having nevertheless a Care of all, and to that end keeping a Fleet at Sea continually under one of their Admirals; whereby they did not only preserve those Seas from the Genova Pirates, but for a long time defended all their Islands also, as well against the Greeks as the Turkish Emperors. But all the Isles of the Ægean being lost to the Turk, except Cythera and Tenos on the European, and Carpathos or Scarpanto on the Asian side; they have now only Crete with the Isles adjoining, and those of the Ionian Sea under their Command, and these (but specially the Isle Crete) endangered at the present by the Turkish Tyrant. And after taken from them in 1669. The Learned Dr. Edward Brown, having Travailed over a great part of Greece, makes this general remark upon it. The Græcian Countries which I passed are extremely altered from that State whereof we read in Ancient History; as having suffered spoiling Incursions from many Nations, and a fatal Conquest by the Turks; who utterly destroyed many Towns and Famous places, and changed the Names of most, not leaving the old Appellations to the Rivers which most lastingly maintain their Ancient Names. I passed most of the Great Rivers of Macedonia, the Axios, Erigonus, and Aliarmon, which have Names of no affinity to them. The River Peneus, so famous in the Old Poets, hath lost its Name with Apidanus, Enipius, and others that run into it. The Turks call Larissa, Jeni-Sahar, and Thessaly Comenolitari.

Thus having taken a view of the several Provinces and Isles which belong to Greece, according to the ancient and present state of each particular: let us next take a view of the Græcian Emperors, who have had here their principal Residence, and possessed the whole (though for a while their Empire was extended over all the East) as they here follow in this ensuing Catalogue of

The CONSTANTINOPOLITAN,
GRÆCIAN, or Eastern Emperors.

A. Ch.

- 331 1. Constantine, surnamed the Great, having reigned twelve years in Rome, translated his Imperial Seat to Constantinople, which himself had founded.
- 341 2. Constantius, the second Son of Constantine, in the Division of the Empire, had for his Partage Thrace, Constantinople, and all the Provinces of the East. After the Death of his two Brethren he remained sole Emperor, but resided for the most part in the East; a great Patron of the Arians, and as great a Persecutor of the Orthodox Christians.
- 366 3. Julian, surnamed the Apostate, Son of Constantius, the Brother of Constantine the Great, at first a Christian, afterwards a professed Enemy of the Gospel: fortunate in his Wars against the Almans, Franks, and other Transalpine Nations, whilst he was a Christian; prodigiously slain in the Persian War, when become a Persecutor.
- 368 4. Jovian, or Jovinian, chosen by the Army, a Religious Prince, made Peace with the Persian, and settled the Affairs of the Christian Church: who being dead, Valentinian, one of mean birth, but great Abilitie in War was elected Emperor.

- 369 5. Valens, the Brother of Valentinian, made Partner in the Empire with him, ruled in Constantinople and the East, Valentinian taking more delight in Rome and the Western parts. A great Patron of the Arian Faction, and the first who brought in the Goths on this side of the Danubius, whom he placed in the desert parts of Thrace, to the Destruction of the Empire, and himself to Boot.
- 382 6. Gratian, the eldest Son of Valentinian, succeeded his Father in the West, and his Uncle Valens in the East, after whose death he left Italy and the West to Valentinian his younger Brother. Distressed by the Goths, he made Theodosius Partner in the Empire with him, and was treacherously murdered by Andragathius, at the appointment and command of the Tyrant Maximus.
- 383 7. Theodosius, a Spaniard born, revenged the death of Gratian on the Tyrant Maximus, and of Valentinian the second, on the Traitor Eugenius. He vanquished the Goths, utterly suppressed the Pagan Superstitions, which till his time continued even in Rome itself, and strengthened the Church of Christ with good Laws and Ordinances.
- 399 8. Arcadius, the eldest Son of Theodosius, succeeded his Father in the East, as his Brother Honorius did in the West: the Roman Empire after this last Division of it being so distracted and torn in pieces, that it was never since united.
- 412 9. Theodosius II. Son of Arcadius; made Peace with the Goths, whom he employed against the Huns and Persians; his more dangerous Enemies, and caused the Ephefine Council to be called against Nestorius.
- 454 10. Martianus, Lieutenant to Theodosius, succeeded his Master, and Married with Pulcheria his Masters Sister. He called the Council of Chalcedon against Dioscorus.
- 461 11. Leo, a Thracian born, elected by the joyned consent of the Senate and Soldiery, sitting in the Council of Chalcedon; the Acts whereof he approved and ratified.
- 478 12. Zeno, the Son-in-Law and Lieutenant of Leo, sent Theodorick and the Goths into Italy against Odoacer. A Tyrant and a great Drinker: in one of his Drunken Fits buried quick by his Empress. In his time Constantinople was almost wholly destroyed by Fire; in which perished, amongst other things, 120000 Volumes of good Manuscripts.
- 497 13. Anastasius, a mean Officer of the Court, by the power and favour of the Empress created Emperor; a great Patron of Eunuchs, yet fortunate in his Wars against the Persians and Arabians. In his time Constantinople, besieged by the Scythians, was likely to have fallen into great Distress, if Proclus, a famous Mathematician, like another Archimedes, had not fired their Gallies.
- 521 14. Justin, the Son of a Thracian Shepherd, and Captain of the Guard unto Anastasius; a Catholick Prince, and Patron of the Orthodox Clergy, whom he called from Banishment.
- 528 15. Justinian, the Siller's Son of Justin, with whom he was at first Consort in the Empire, recovered Asiatick from the Vandals by Belisarius, and Italy from the Goths by Narses: and finally reduced the Laws of Rome into form and method.

- 566 16. Justin II. Nephew of Justinian, instituted the Exarchate of Ravenna, and lost a great part of Italy to the Lombards. Unable of himself to oppose the Persian, he chose
- 577 17. Tiberius, one of his chief Commanders, to be Consort with him, who afterwards succeeded in the sole Command.
- 584 18. Maurice, a Cappadocian born, fortunate in his Wars against the Persians, from whom he recovered Mesopotamia in the time of Tiberius, by whom at his return he was married to Constantina his Daughter, and declared his Successor. Refusing to ransom some of his Soldiers, taken Prisoners by Cajanus King of the Avars, he lost the Affections of his Army.
- 604 19. Phocas, a common Soldier, in a military Tumult chosen Emperor, murdered the Emperor Mauritius, with his Wife and Children, and made Pope Boniface Supreme Bishop or Head of the Church: slain in a popular Tumult by the Common people for his Lusts and Cruelties.
- 611 20. Heraclius, a Nobleman of Constantinople, chosen by the general consent, repaired the Ruines of the Empire, vanquished the Persians, recovered Hierusalem out of their hands, and brought home the Cross unto Constantinople in triumphant manner; whence the Feast called Exaltatio Crucis, September 14. In his time Mahomet began to disperse his Dotages.
- 641 21. Constans, or Constantine II. Son of Heraclius, unfortunate in his Wars against the Saracens, who prevailed in all places. Picking a Quarrel with the Romans, he defaced Rome, robbing it of all the choicest Ornaments which the Goths and other barbarous people had left; and ransacking the Isle of Sicily, was there slain by the Women.
- 670 22. Constantinus III. Son of the former Constantine, from his long or early Beard surnamed Pogonatus, repulsed the Saracens from Constantinople, but could not hinder the Bulgarians from passing over the Danow.
- 687 23. Justinian II. Son of Constantine the 3. subdued Mesopotamia, Armenia, and some part of Persia, forcing the Saracens to sue for Peace, and become his Tributaries. Against whom Leontius on the one side, and Abdimarus, on the other, severally taking Arms; were declared Emperors. Justinian, taken by Leontius, hath his Nose cut off, and his person committed to Custody: but making an Escape, by means of Trebellein King of the Bulgarians, recovered his Imperial Dignity; and being too violent in the pursuit of his Revenge, was finally murdered at the Altar by the command of
- 713 24. Philippus Bardanes, Admiral of his Navy, elected Emperor by the Soldiers, a great Enemy of Images, which he caused to be cast out of the Church, thereby incurring the displeasure of
- 715 25. Anastasius II. called also Artemias, his principal Secretary, who thrust himself into the Empire; forced to relinquish it by that Army which he had raised against the Saracens: in which Tumult the City of Constantinople was sacked and spoiled.
- 717 26. Theodosius III. made Emperor in this Tumult by the Soldiers, hearing of the approach of Leo, Commander of the Eastern Armies, resigned the Empire and took Orders to preserve his Life.
- 718 27. Leo Isaurus, in whose time Caliph Zuleiman besieged Constantinople the space of three years, and when by Cold and Famine 300000 of the Saracens were destroyed, they desisted. At this Siege was that Fire invented which we, for the violence of it, call Wild-Fire; and the Latines, because the Greeks were the Authors of it, Græcus ignis: by which the Saracens Ships were not a little molested. He was also a great Enemy to Images, and for this cause hated by the Pope and Clergy of Rome, who gave him thereupon the Nick-name of Iconomachus.
- 741 28. Constantinus IV. Son of Leo, surnamed Copronymus, for that when he was baptized he bewrayed the Font, followed his Father's Zeal in removing Images, which created him much Trouble, one Artabardus being chosen Emperor against him, but at last defeated:
- 777 29. Leo III. Son of Constantine Copronymus, honoured with the Adjunct of Porphyrogenitus, but commonly called Leo the 4. (Leontius the Usurper (as I conjecture) being reckoned for one;) an enemy to Images, and fortunate in his Wars against the Saracens.
- 782 30. Constantine V. the Son of Leo and Irene, first governed the Empire with his Mother, by whom at last supplanted, and deprived of Sight, he died of Melancholy.
- 798 31. Irene, Wife of Leo the 3. first Consort with Constantine her Son, and afterwards sole Empress of Constantinople: for her better support in which Estate she sided with the Popes of Rome, and called the second Council of Nice for defence of Images. In her time Charles, surnamed the great, was by the Pope and People of Rome created Emperor of the West, for the Popes knowing their own Greatness to grow out of the Ruines of the Temporal Power, committed the Empire of the West unto the French Princes: whereby the Greek Emperors became much weakened; and the French, being the Pope's Creatures, were in tract of time brought to their Devotion. In following times, when Frederick, Barbarossa was by Pope Alexander the 3. pronounced non-Emperor, Emanuel of Constantinople sued for a Re-union of the Empires: but the crafty Pope returned this Answer, Non licere illi conjungere quæ majores ejus de industria disjunxerunt: Let no man presume to joyn what the God of Rome, the Pope, hath put asunder.
- 803 32. Nicephorus a Patrician, made Emperour by the Soldiers, perswaded that Irene had made choice of him to be her Successor: slain in a pitch Field against the Bulgarians.
- 812 33. Michael, surnamed Curopolates, from his Office, (the Mayor of the Palace, as it were) Husband to Procopia, the Daughter of Nicephorus, assumed the Empire, which, finding his own weakness, he did soon relinquish, and betook himself unto a Monastery.
- 814 34. Leo V. surnamed Armenius, from his Country, General of the Horse to Michael, demolished the Images which his Predecessors had set up. He was slain in the Church during the time of Divine Service.
- 821 35. Michael II. surnamed Balbus, having murdered Leo, assumed the Empire; unfortunate in his Government, and died of Madnels.
- 830 36. Theophilus, the Son of Michael Balbus, an Enemy of Images, like his Father, and as unfortunate as he; losing many Battels to the Saracens, at last he died of Melancholy.

- 842 37. Michael III. Son of Theophilus, first ruling with his Mother Theodora, who took unto herself the supreme Command; and after of himself sole Emperor, his Mother being made a Nun.
- 866 38. Basilus, surnamed Macedo, from the place of his Birth, made Confort in the Empire by Michael the Son of Theophilus, whom he basely and treacherously murdered; killed casually by a Stag.
- 886 39. Leo VI. for his Learning surnamed Philosophus, the Son of Basilus, a vigilant and provident Prince: most of his time, with variable Success, was spent against the Bulgarians.
- 912 40. Constantine VI. commonly called the VII. Son of Leo Philosophus, first under his Uncle Alexander, next under Zoe his Mother, and after under Romanus Lacopenus, governed the Empire; by which last he was so miserably depressed that he was fain to get his livelihood by Painting. But Lacopenus being deposed and turned into a Monastery by his own Sons, Constantine at last obtained his Rights, and restored Learning unto Greece.
- 961 41. Romanus, the Son of Constantine.
- 963 42. Nicephorus, surnamed Phocas, first Governour or Protector of the young Emperour Romanus; after whose death, created Emperor by the Army, he recovered Antioch, Cilicia, and the greatest part of Asia minor from the power of the Saracens: slain in the night by John Zimisces, his Wife Theophania being privy to it.
- 971 43. John Zimisces, Emperor in the place of Nicephorus Phocas, governed the Empire better than he did obtain it, vanquishing the Bulgarians, Rosses, and others of the barbarous Nations; and left it at his death to the Sons of Romanus.
- 977 44. Basilus II. surnamed Porphyrogenitus, as many of the Emperors had been before him, in regard that at their Births they were wrapped in Purple, (which the Greeks call Porphyrie) the Imperial Colour: he subdued the Bulgarians, and made them Homagers to the Empire.
- 1027 45. Constantine VII. or VIII. Brother of Basilus, and with him Partner in the Empire: after whose death he governed three years by himself, but did nothing memorable.
- 1030 46. Romanus II. for his Prodigality surnamed Argyropolis, Husband of Zoe, the Daughter of Constantine the 8th. drowned in a Bath by the Treason of his Wife and her Adulterer.
- 1035 47. Michael IV. surnamed Paphlago, from his Country, first the Adulterer and afterwards the Husband of Zoe; but died very penitent.
- 1042 48. Michael V. surnamed Calaphates, a man of obscure Birth, adopted by Zoe, whom he deposed from the Government, and turned into a Monastery. Out of which being again taken in a popular Tumult, she put out the Eyes of Calaphates, and being then 60 years of age, bestowed both the Empire and her self upon
- 1043 49. Constantine IX. surnamed Nonomachus, formerly the Husband to a Niece of Romanus the second.
- 1055 50. Theodora, Sister unto Zoe, after the death of Constantine, managed for two years the Affairs of the Empire with great Contentment of all people. But grown in age she surrendered it to
- 1057 51. Michael VI. surnamed Stratioticus, an old, but military man, deposed within three years by
- 1060 52. Isaaci, of the noble Family of the Comneni, valiant, of great Courage, and diligent in his Affairs: which having managed for two years, he left it at his death, with consent of the Senate and people, to
- 1063 53. Constantine X. surnamed Ducas, a great Justiciar and very devout, but exceeding covetous, whereby he became hated of his Subjects and contemned by his Enemies.
- 1071 54. Romanus III. surnamed Diogenes, married Eudoxia, the Wife of Constantinus Ducas, and with her the Empire. Taken Prisoner by the Turks, and sent home again, he found a Faction made against him; by which Eudoxia was expelled, himself at his return deposed, and so died in Exile.
- 1075 55. Michael VII. the Son of Constantinus Ducas, surnamed Parapinatus, by reason of the Famine which in his time happened, made Emperor in the aforesaid Tumult. But being found unable for so great an Honour, (the Turks prevailing in all places) he was deposed again, and put into a Monastery.
- 1081 56. Nicephorus II. surnamed Betonites, of the House of Phocas, succeeded in the place of Parapinace; deposed within three years by the Comneni.
- 1084 57. Alexius Comnenus, Son of the Emperor Isaacius Comnenus, obtained the Empire: in whose time the Western Christians with great Forces prepared for the Recovery of the Holy-Land; of whose purposes being very jealous he denied them passage through his Country; but was in the end forced to find them Victuals and other Necessaries.
- 1113 58. Calo-Joannes, the Son of Alexius, had a good hand against the Turks, from whom he took Laodicea and some other places of Importance. He also vanquished the Scythians or Tartars passing over the Ister, most of which he either slew in Battel, or sold as Captives; permitting the remainder to abide on this side that River. He also conquered the Servians and Bulgarians, transporting many of them into Bithynia.
- 1142 59. Manuel, or Emanuel, the younger Son of Calo-Joannes, an under-hand enemy to the Western Christians, and an open enemy to the Turks; by whom being intrapped in the dangerous Streights of Cilicia, and his Army miserably cut off, he was on honourable terms permitted to return again.
- 1180 60. Alexius II. Son of Manuel, deposed and barbarously murdered by Andronicus, the Cousin-german of his Father, with his Wife and Mother.
- 1183 61. Andronicus Comnenus, confined by Manuel to Oenon in Paphlagonia, by reason of his dangerous and ambitious practices, after his death, pretending to reform the State, came unto Constantinople: first made Protector, afterwards Confort in the Empire with young Alexius: whom having barbarously slain and got the Empire to himself, he was not long after cruelly torn in pieces in a popular Tumult.
- 1185 62. Isaaci Angelus, a Nobleman of Constantinople, and of the same Comnenian Race, disigned to death by Andronicus, was in a popular Election proclaimed his Successor; deposed by Alexius his own Brother and his Eyes put out.

1195 63. Alexius Angelus, deprived his Brother, and excluded his Nephew from the Empire; but it held not long.

64. Alexius Angelus II. Son of Isaac Angelus, who being unjustly thrust out of his Empire by his Uncle Alexius, had recourse to Philip the Western Emperor, whose Daughter Mary he had married, who so prevailed with Pope Innocent the 3. (upon a promise for subjecting the Church of Greece to the See of Rome (that the Army prepared for the Holy Land was employed to restore him. On the approach whereof Alexius the Usurper fled; Alexius the young Emperor is seated in his Father's Throne, and not long after slain by Alexius Ducas. In revenge whereof the Latines assault and win Constantinople, make themselves Masters of the Empire, and divided it amongst themselves: allotting to the Venetians Candia, many good Towns of Peloponnesus, and most of the Islands; to Boniface Marquis of Montferrat the Kingdom of Thessaly; to the others of the Adventurers other liberal Shares; and finally to Baldwin Earl of Flanders, the main Body of the Empire, with the Title of Emperor. The Seat of the Empire of the Greeks being transferred unto Nice, a City of Bythinia in the lesser Asia, by Theodorus Lascaris, Son-in-Law to Alexius, the Usurper, continued there till the reigning of Constantinople by the Greeks again, after it had been 60 years possessed by the Western Christians.

Emperors of the LATINES in CONSTANTINOPLE.

1200 65. Baldwin, Earl of Flanders, first Emperor of the Latines reigning in Constantinople, taken in fight by John King of Bulgaria, coming to aid the Greeks, and sent Prisoner to Ternova, where he was cruelly put to death.

1202 66. Henry, the Brother of Baldwin, repulsed the Bulgarians out of Greece, and died a Conqueror.

1215 67. Peter, Count of Auxerre in France, the Son of Peter, youngest Son to Lewis the Gros of France, and Husband of Yoland the Daughter of Henry, succeeded in the Empire after his decease. He was cunningly entrapped by Theodorus Angelus, a great Prince in Epirus, whom he had besieged in Dyrrhachium: but of an Enemy being persuaded to become his Guest, was there murdered by him.

1220 68. Robert, the Son of Peter, having seen the miserable usage of his beautiful Empress, whom a young Burgundian, formerly contracted to her, had most despirefully mangled, cutting off both her Nose and Ears, died of Hearts grief as he was coming back from Rome, whether his Melancholly had carried him to consult the Pope in his Affairs.

1227 69. Baldwin II. Son of Robert by a former Wife, under the Protection of John de Brenne, the titular King of Jerusalem, succeeded in his Fathers Throne: which having held for the space of thirty three years, he was forced to leave the City of Constantinople, being regained by the Greeks, and the poor Prince compelled to sue in vain for succours to the French, Venetians, and other Princes of the West. And though both Philip the Son of this Baldwin, and Charles of Valois, Father of Philip de Valois the French King; in right of Catherine his Wife, Daughter of that Philip, did sometimes please themselves with the Title of Emperors of Constantinople, yet neither of the two had ever any footing or possession there.

The Empire restored unto the GREEKS.

1260 70. Michael VIII. surnamed Palaeologus, extracted from the Comnenian Emperor, Emperor of the Greeks in the City of Nice, most fortunately recovered Constantinople; the Town being taken by a party of fifty men secretly put into it by some Country-Labourers under the Ruines of a Mine. Present in person at the Council of Lions, at the perswasion of the Pope he admitted the Latine Ceremonies into the Churches of Greece; for which he was greatly hated by his Subjects, and denied the honour of Christian Burial.

1283 71. Andronicus II. vexed with unnatural Wars by his Nephew Andronicus, who rebelled against him.

1328 72. Andronicus III. first Partner with his Grandfather, afterwards Sole Emperor.

1341 73. John Palaeologus, Son of Andronicus the 3. In whose Minority Contacuzenus his Protector usurped the Empire, and held it sometimes from him, and sometimes with him, till the year 1357, and then retired into a Monastery leaving the Empire unto John, during whose Reign the Turks first planted themselves in Europe.

1384 74. Andronicus IV. the Son of Joannes Palaeologus.

1387 75. Emanuel Palaeologus, the Son of the said John, and Brother of Andronicus the 4. In whose time Bajazet the sixth King of the Turks did besiege Constantinople; but found such notable Resistance, that he could not force it.

1417 76. John II. Son of Andronicus the 4.

1420 77. John III. Son of Emanuel Palaeologus, in person at the Council of Florence for reconciling of the Churches in hopes thereby to get some Aid from the Western Christians, but it would not be.

1444 78. Constantinus Palaeologus, the Brother of John the 3. In whose time the famous City of Constantinople was taken by Mahomet the Great in 1452, the miserable Emperor, who had in vain gone from door to door to beg or borrow money to pay his Soldiers, (which the Turks found in great abundance when they took the City) being lamentably trod to death in the Throng. Now concerning this Empire of the Greeks, we may observe some fatal Contrarieties in one and the same name. As first, that Philip the Father of Alexander laid the first Foundation of the Macedonian Monarchy, and Phillip the Father of Perseus ruined it. Secondly, that Baldwin was the first, and Baldwin the last Emperor of the Latines in Constantinople. Thirdly, that this Town was built by a Constantine, the Son of Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch; and was lost by a Constantine, the Son of a Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch also. And fourthly, the Turks have a Prophecy, that as it was won by a Mahomet, so shall it be lost by a Mahomet. So Augustus was the first established Emperour of Rome, and Augustulus the last, Darius the Son of Hystaspes, the Restorer; and Darius the Son of Arfamis, the Overthrower of the Persian Monarchy. A like note I shall hereafter tell you of Jerusalem. In the mean time I will present you with a fatal Observation of the letter H, as I find it thus verified in Albion's England.

Not

Not superstitiously I speak, but H this letter still Hath been observed ominous to England's Good or Ill.
First Hercules, Hesione and Helen were the cause
Of War to Troy; Aeneas Seed becoming so Outlaws.
Humber the Hun with foreign Arms did first the Brutes invade:

Helen to Rome's Imperial Throne the British Crown con-vey'd.

Hengist and Horfus first did plant the Saxons in this Isle:
Hungar and Hubba first brought Danes, that sway'd here long while.

At Harold had the Saxon end, at Hardie-Cnute the Dane, Henries the first and second did restore the English Reign.

Fourth Henry first for Lancaster did England's Crown obtain.

Seventh Henry jarring, Lancaster and York unites in Peace.

Henry the eighth did happily Rome's Irreligion cease.

A strange and ominous Letter, every Mutation in our State being as it were usher'd by it.

What were the Revenues of this Empire since the Division of it into the East and West, I could never yet learn.

That they were exceeding great may appear by three circumstances. 1. Zonaras reporteth that the Empero Basilias had in his Treasury 200000 Talents of Gold, besides infinite Heaps of Silver and other Moneys. 2.
Lipsius relateth, how Benjamin a Jew in his discourse of Europe saith, that the Custom due to the Emperors out of the Victuals and Merchandize sold at Constantinople only did amount to 20000 Crowns daily. 3. We find that at the Sack of Constantinople there was found an invaluable Mass of Gold, Silver, Plate, and Jewels, besides that which was hid in the Earth. For so the covetous Citizens chose rather to employ their Wealth, then afford any part of it to the Emperor, who with Tears in his Eyes went from door to door to beg and borrow Money, wherewith he might wage more Soldiers for the defence of the Town.

The Arms of the Empire were Mars, a Cross Sol between 4 Greek Beta's of the second; the 4 Beta's signifying (as Bedin saith) βασιλεὺς, βασιλέων, βασιλῶν, βασιλευσι.

It may perchance be expected that we should here make an additional Catalogue of those Turkish Emperors who have reigned in Constantinople since the taking of it; and being they are possessed of Greece, and do now inhabit it, that we should here also speak of the Turks themselves, their Customs, Forces, Policies, Original, and Proceedings. But the discourse of those things we intend to reserve for Turcomania, a Province of Asia, from whence they made their first Inundation into Persia, and afterwards into other parts of the World now subject to them, the only Province which retains any thing of their name. And though the Peninsula called anciently Taurica Chersonesus (now part of Tartaria Precopensis) be within the Bounds of Europe also; yet we will defer the description and story of it till we come to the Affairs of the Tartars, and will here conclude our Discourse of Europe, and prepare for Asia.

And so much for G R E E C E, the last of the Provinces of E U R O P E.

ASIA,

AND ALL

The Principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Isles thereof.

Of ASIA.

ASIA is bounded on the West with the Mediterranean, and Ægean Seas, the Hellespont, Propontis, Thracian Bosphorus, and the Euxine Sea, the Palus Macotis, the Rivers Tanais and Duina, a Line being drawn from the first of the two said Rivers unto the other, by all which parted from Europe; on the North, it hath the main Seytbick Ocean; on the East, the Straits of Anian (if such there be;) the Indian Ocean, and Mare del Zur, by which separated from America; on the South, the Mediterranean, or that part of it which is called the Carpathian Sea, washing the Shores of Anatolia, and the main Southern Ocean, passing along the Indian, Persian, and Arabian Coasts: and finally, on the South-West, the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Africk. Environed on all sides with the Sea, or some Sea-like Rivers, except a narrow Isthmus in the South-West, which joyns it to Africk, and the space of Ground (whatsoever it be) betwixt Duina and Tanais, on the North-West, which unites it to Europe. The best of our latter Accounts stretch it from 55 degrees of Longitude, to 200, and from 71 to the Line, (Nova Zembla lying more to the North) and some Islands also beyond the Equator: So then its Length is 10450 Miles, and its Breadth 3960 Miles. Cluverius saith it is in Length from the Hellespont, to the Cape of Malacca, 1300 German Miles; and in Breadth from the Cape of Tabin in Arabia, to the Streights of Anian 1220 of the same.

It took this Name, as some will have it, from Asia, the Daughter of Oceanus and Thetis, the Wife of Japetus, and (by him) Mother to Prometheus: As others say, from Asius the Son of Atis, a King of Lydia, from whence that Country first, afterwards all Anatolia, or Asia minor, and finally, the whole Continent had the name of Asia. Others, again, (but more improbably) derive the Name from Asius the Philosopher, who gave the Paladium unto the Trojans; in Memory whereof that Country first, and after the whole Continent did receive this Name: But these Originations being very uncertain, Bochartus (out of his great Affection to the Punick, or Phœnician Language) will have it called so from Asia, a Phœnician Word, signifying Medium, or the middle; because Anatolia, or the lesser Asia, which gives Name (as he conceiveth) to the Greater also, lieth in the middle, as it were, betwixt some parts of Europe and Africa. And so far the Conjecture doth find Countenance from some ancient Writers, that Asia is said by Pliny to be inter Africam & Europam, to be betwixt Africa and Europe; by Mela, medium nostris æquoribus excipit, to be embraced in the middle of the two Seas (he meaneth Pontus Euxinus, and the Mediterranean); and finally, by Eustathius, (conceive them all of Anatolia, or the Lesser Asia) μέστω ἀμφοῖν ἔχειν διάθεσιν, to have a middle Situation betwixt Europe and Africa. But by what Name, and on what Grounds soever it be called by the Greeks and Latins, it is otherwise, and with better Reason called in Holy Scriptures by the name of Semia; as being that Portion of the World, wherein the whole Posterity of Sem had their Seats and Dwellings, if the observation of Maginus be of any weight.

It is Situate East and West, from the 52 to the 169 degree of Longitude, and North and South, from the 82 degree of Latitude, to the very Equator; some only of the Islands lying on the South of that Circle: So that the longest Summers day in the Southern parts, is but twelve Hours only; but in the most Northern parts hereof, for almost four whole Months together no Night at all. And for a measurement by Miles, it stretches in Length 5200, and in Breadth 4560 Miles. Cluverius in his Geography bounds Asia to the West, with the River Ob instead of the Duina, neither of which Rivers were known to the ancient Geographers; nor, indeed, the Bounds of Asia to the North West, the Countries being then inhabited by barbarous Nations, and unpassable; but by the Travellers and Trade driven in Muscovy, now much better known than formerly.

As to the Streights of Anian, mention'd above, they could never yet be found out, though many have attempted tempted to find them by the North-East; but yet it is probable there is such a Passage, because it is constantly averr'd, that Whales wounded on the Coast of Greenland, have been found dead with the harping Irons in them, on the Coasts of China and Japan, by our and the Dutch East-India Merchant Ships.

This Country hath heretofore been had in especial Honour. 1. For the Creation of Man, who had his first making in this part of the World. 2dly, Because in this part of it stood the Garden of Eden, which he had for the first place of his Habitation. 3dly, Because here flourished the four first great Monarchies of the Affyrans, Babylonians, Medes, and Persians. 4thly, Because it was the Scene of almost all the memorable Actions, which are recorded by the Pen-men of the Scriptures. 5thly, Because that here our Saviour CHRIST was Born, he wrought the most divine Miracles, and here accomplished the great Work of our Redemption. 6thly, and finally, Because from hence all Nations of the World had their first beginning on the Dispersion which was made by the Sons of Noah, after their vain attempt of Babel.

The chief Mountains of this great Continent, not limited within the Bounds of any one Province, (for of those we are to speak in their several places) are, 1. Mount Taurus, which having its beginning in Lybia, a Province of Anatolia, passeth directly Eastward to the Indian Ocean, and reckoning in its several windings and turnings, with its Spurs and Branches every way, is said to be 625 Miles long, and 357 Miles broad. This Mountain, or rather Ridge of Hills, divideth the Greater Asia, as the Aequator doth the World, into North and South: memorable for three difficult Passages from the one to the other. The first out of the rest of Anatolia into Cilicia, called Pylæ Ciliciæ; the second out of Scythia, or Tartary, into Turcomania, called Caucasic Portæ; and the third out of Scythia into Persia, called Portæ Caspiæ. Of which, and of the whole Course of this Mountain, more at large hereafter. 2. Imaus, which beginning near the Shores of the Northern Ocean, runneth directly towards the South, dividing the Greater Asia (as the Meridian doth the World) into East and West, and crossing Mount Taurus in right Angles, in or about the Longitude of 140. This on the North of Taurus had no other Name among the Latines, than Imaus only; and by that Name divideth Scythia, into Scythia intra Imaum, and Scythia extra Imaum: But by the Tartars is called Alay, by some Writers Belgian. And on the Southside of that Mountain is known in Ptolemy by the name of Euge, extending from Mount Caucasus, or some other Branch of the Taurus, to the Cape of Comari, in the Southern Ocean; supposed by some to be Mount Sephar, mentioned, Gen. 10. 30. of which we shall say more also when we come into India.

The Estate of Christianity in this vast Continent is in ill Condition, discountenanced and oppressed, though not quite extinguished. For all the great Princes and Commanders of it being either Alchometans or Pagans, the most that can be hoped for of the Christian Faith, is a toleratio or connivance, and that not found but with an intermixture of such Afflictions, as commonly attend discountenanced and disgraced Religion. Yet is not Christianity so over-powered either by Mahometism, or Paganism, but that in Asia the Leffer, Syria, Palestine, and Chimæna, a great part of the Inhabitants do retain the Gospel, under their several Patriarchs and Metropolitans, differing in some few Points from one another; but in many from the Church of Rome, with which they hold neither Correspondency nor Communion. Nor want there many Christian Churches in the Empire of Persia, nor in those of Tartary, China, and the Indis, anciently planted in those Countries; besides the late increase thereof in the Eastern Islands by the diligent preaching of the Jesuits, and some late Pastories there settled by the English and Hollanders: Of all which I shall write in place convenient.

In reference to the Roman Empire, whose Dominion did not often extend beyond the River Danubius, this Continent contained only three Dioceses, or Imperial Circuits; that is to say, the Diocese of Pontus, Asia properly so called, and the Oriental; which with the Dioceses of Thrace and Egypt, were under the Command of the Præfæctus Prætorii Orientis, the greatest Officer of Power and Jurisdiction, next to the Emperor himself, in the Roman Monarchy. And these three Dioceses contained in them to the number of 11; seven Provinces, viz. The Provinces of Babynia. 2. Indicopontus. 3. Pontus Polemoniacus. 4. Galatia prima. 5. Galatia Salutaris. 6. Iconius. 7. Paphlagonia. 8. Cappadocia prima. 9. Cappadocia secunda. 10. Armenia prima, and 11. Armenia secunda, contained in the Diocese of Pontus, and governed by the Legatus, or Lieutenant thereof. II. The Provinces of ramphylia. 2. Lycia. 3. Caria. 4. Pyssidia. 5. Lycæna. 6. Lydia. 7. Phrygia Pacatiana. 8. Phrygia Salutaris. 9. Asia, specially so called. 10. Hellespont, and 11. the Isles of Anatolia, making up the Diocese of Asia; whereof the three last were governed by a peculiar Officer, called the Proconsul of Asia; the others by the ordinary Lieutenant, or Vicarius. III. The Provinces of Isauria. 2. Cilicia prima. 3. Cilicia secunda. 4. Cyprus. 5. Phœnices. 6. Phœnices Libani. 7. Syria. 8. Syria Salutaris. 9. Palestina prima. 10. Palestina secunda. 11. Palestina Salutaris. 12. Euphratenis. 13. Ojroune. 14. Mesopotamia, and 15. Arabia, constituting the Diocese of the Orient, under the Comes Orientis. The rest of Asia subject unto the Partium or Persian Kings, besides those of India, (and of many Regions and Countries not then discovered) was never conquered by the Romans; and therefore not within the compass of this Distribution.

At this time Asia stands divided amongst six great Monarchies; that is to say, the Turk, commanding all those Parts and Provinces, which anciently belonged to the Roman Empire. 2dly, The Persian, ruling in all the Provinces beyond Euphrates, possessed by the Persian Kings in the time of Alexander the Great, or the Asacids, or Partians in the times of the Romans. 3dly, The Great Khan of Tartary, commanding over all the North parts of Asia, anciently known by the name of Scythia. 4thly, The King of China, governing in that large and populous Country. 5thly, The King of Barnia, whose Dominion comprehendeth all, or the greatest part of India beyond the River Ganges. And 6thly, The Great Magor, whose Empire is extended over all India on this side of that River. And some there be who in the Descriptions of this great Country, follow this Division. But for our parts, for the better understanding of the Greek, and the Roman Stories, and the Estate of the Affyrans, Babylonians, and Persian Monarchies, to which the holy Scriptures do so much relate; we shall consider it as divided into the Regions of, 1. Anatolia, or Asia Minor. 2. Cyprus. 3. Syria. 4. Palestine. 5. Arabia. 6. Chaldea. 7. Affyria. 8. Mesopotamia. 9. Turcomania. 10. Media. 11. Persia. 12. Tartaria. 13. China. 14. India; and 15. The Oriental Islands.

Monsieur Tavernier, a French Gentleman, who travell'd this part of the World six times in forty Years, informs us thus of the present State of it. A Man cannot travel in Asia, as they do in Europe; nor at the same Hours, nor with the same Ease. There are no Weekly Coaches, or Wagons, from Town to Town; and besides, the Soil of the Countries is of several Natures. In Asia you shall meet with several Regions untill'd, and un-peopled, either through the badness of the Climate or Soil, or the sloth of the Inhabitants, who rather chuse to live Miserably, than to Work. There are vast Deserts to cross, and very dangerous both for want of Water, and by reason of the Robberies that the Arabs daily commit in those places. There are no certain certain Inns, or Inns, to entertain Travellers. The best Inns, especially in Turkey, are the Tents which you can find in the Country, and your Servants that attend you, and your Horses which you have bought in the Country, are more frequent in the Country, than in the City, in which the Persons that furnish you with Provisions for your Journey: But then Turkey wants not only this Convenience, but is also full of Thieves, who keep in Troops together, and Way-lay the Merchants upon the Roads; and if they be not very well Guarded, will certainly Rob them, nay, many times Murder them. A Mischief prevented in Perfia, by the well ordered Convenience which is provided for Travellers. To avoid these Inconveniences, you are obliged to pay for Caravans, that go for Perfia, or the Indies, which never set out but at certain times, and from certain places, viz. Constantinople, Rusfa, Smyrna, and Alyssa.

I have transcribed this long Passage, to shew my Reader, not only the present State of Asia, but also the very true Reason why the present State of the Inland Towns and Cities of Asia are so little known, and so seldom travel'd; for he that travels with a Caravan, has neither Time nor Means to observe a Country exactly, or to inform himself of those places which lie out of his Road. So that this is one of the principal Reasons why the Geography of Asia is so obscure and imperfect.

Monsieur Tremble saith, the Method the Turks use to secure their Roads from Robberies, is by paying certain Duties on the Road to the Governor, who is obliged to secure the Merchants, or to Indemnifie them for every Robbery committed, so that you need not keep with the Caravan, except you please, p. 18.

ANATOLIA, or ASIA MINOR.

Anatolia, or Asia minor, is bounded on the East with the River Euphrates, by which parted from the greater Asia; on the West, with the Thracian Bosphorus, Propontis, Hellepont, and the Aegean Sea, by which parted from Europe; on the North, with Pontus Euxinus, called also the Black Sea, and Mare Maggione; and on the South, by the Euboean, Lydian, and Pamphylian Seas, several parts of the Mediterranean. So that it is a denuded Island, or Peninsula, environed on all sides with Waters, excepting a small Isthmus, or neck of Land extending from the head of Euphrates to the Euxine Sea, by which joyned to the rest of Asia.

It was anciently called Asia minor, to difference it from the residue of this great Continent; afterwards Anatolia, Ἀνατολία, from the more Eastward Situation of it, in respect of Greece; and now Natolia by the Turks, with little deviation from the former Name. But here is to be observed, that as this Lesser Asia was a part of the greater; and the Diocese of Asia, a part of Asia the Lesser; so was Asia properly and specially so called, but a part only of the Asian Diocese; the Lydian Asia, a part of Asia properly so called; and the Proconsular Asia, but a part of that. The limits of Asia the Lesser, and the several Provinces contained in the Asian Diocese, have been shewn already. And as for that part hereof which had the Name of Asia properly and specially so called, it containeth only the two Phrygias, both the Myssias, Asolis, Ionia, Lydia, and Caria, which falling unto the Romans, by the last Will and Testament of Attalus, the last King of Perpamus, were by them made into one Province, and called Asia, after the Name of the whole Continent, this being as it were the Earnest Penny, to make sure the rest. So witnesseth Strabo, where he saith, Παρὰ τοῖς ἑσπερίαις ἀποδείξαι τὴν ἑσπερίαν Ἀσίαν περιουσίαν οὐρανίου, ὑμῶν μὲν τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ, Lib. 13. The Romans call'd the Province belonging to them, Asia, which was the Name of that Continent. And for the Lydian Asia, that contained only so much of the Roman, or proper Asia, as anciently did belong to Lydia; that is to say, Lydia it self, together with Asolis, and Ionia, and some parts of the Greater Asia adjoining to it. Vallis a Valley originally the Name of Asia, from Ἀσία a City of Lydia near the foot of Mount Taurus, viz. Asolis, Ionia, and the Proconsular Asia have taken names of before that Name came to be communicated to the Greater Asia. So it remained that Name to it self, and not both from the Greater, and the Proconsular Asia; as also from the Proconsular Asia, and some of the ancient Writers. And of this Asia the Scriptures speak, both in the Books of the Old Testament, and the Revelation; the seven Churches mentioned in the Revelation being found in this Lydian Asia, and the passages in the Old Testament concerning Asia, not to be understood of any, but of this alone. For whereas it is said, Gen. 10. 3. That when they had gone throughout Asia, and the Region of Chanaan, and were forbidden of the Hebrews, to preach the Word in Asia; after they were come to Chanaan, they stayed to go into Byblos, and came down to Tyre. Most clear it is, that neither Byblos, nor Tyre, though Regions of the Phoenicia, nor Chanaan, or Thias, all Regions of the Proconsular Asia, were out of that Asia which the Scripture speaks of. So also where it is affirmed, that upon St. Paul's preaching and disputing for two Years in Ephesus, all they which dwell in Asia, heard the Word of the Lord, Acts 19. 10. It is not to be meant of any but the Lydian Asia, whereof Ephesus at that time was the principal City. So also Acts 19. 22, 26, 31. and Chap. 20. 18. Finally, for the Proconsular Asia, which together with Ilelpon, and the Iles, made up a Government apart, exempt from the Command of the Vicarius, or Lieutenant of the Asian Diocese, it contained only Asolis, and Ionia, with the South part of Lydia, or the Counties lying about Thybeus. So witnesseth St. Hieron from the Christian Writers, where he affirms, That although all the whole Peninsula have the name of the Lesser Asia, Specialiter ubi Ephesus Civitas est, Asia vocatur; yet more particularly the parts adjoining unto Ephesus have the name of Asia. And this appeareth by the Distribution of the Provinces before laid down, where Lydia is reckoned for a Province of the Asian Diocese, distinct from the Proconsular Asia, which we now insist on.

So having cleared our way in regard of the Name, proceed we next unto the Region, or place thus named, according to the Notion in the largest Latitude, extending from the Hellepont, to the River Euphrates, and from the Euxine Sea to the Mediterranean. By which Account it reacheth from the 5, to the 72 degree of Longitude, and from the 36 to the 45 degree of Latitude: the length hereof from the Hellepont, to the River Euphrates, being estimated at 630 Miles; the breadth from Sinus Issus in Cilicia, to the City of Thabecand, 210. As for the Situation of it, in reference to the Heavenly Bodies, it lieth almost in the same Position with Italy, extending from the middle Parallel of the fourth Climate, to the middle Parallel of the sixth. So that the longest Summers-day in the Southern parts, is about fourteen Hours and a half, and one Hour longer in those parts which lie most towards the North.

The temperature of the Air is exceeding good, and the Soil generally exceeding fruitful, and the most excellent Pastures, which breed most excellent Horses, of very good service in the War, as well as with Turkish Riders; it being a by-word among the Turks, That the Horses of Asia, and the Horses of Europe are of greatest Action. It was indeed, very plentiful of all Fruits, both for Use and Pleasure, as still it would be, were it cultivated as in former times. Once very Populous, and replenished with goodly Cities, now in a manner waste, and desolate, lamenting the Destruction of 400 Towns; some of them destroyed by Earthquakes, (the Falling-tickness of most great Cities in the East) but most by War, and have little now to boast of but the Commodiousness of the Havens, which are very many; though most of them but meanly Traded, as in a Country ill Manured, and of little Manufactures.

The People anciently, specially those of Greek Original, and the Nations bordering on the Euxine, were very Warlike and Industrious: The rest, specially the Lydians, and those of the greater Phrygia, as idle and effeminate, wholly addicted to their Pleasures. All of them at this time affected with the same Disease; insomuch, that the Turks, (unless compelled thereunto by extream Necessities) never enrol their Children in the number of Fanizaries. The greatest part of them generally profess the Christian Faith, but overpowered by Mahometanism, which is here most prevalent: All followers of the Church of Greece, and subject all (except those of Iauria and Cilicia) to the Patriarch of Constantinople. And as they are of the Communion of that Church, so they retain the Greek Liturgies for Sacred Offices; not so well understood amongst them, as in former times, when it was more generally spoken there than it is at the present; now over-topped in most places by the Turkish and Sclavonian Tongues. And though in former times, by reason of the many Greek Colonies planted in this Country, the Conquest of it by Alexander the Great, and the subjection of it to the Syrian Kings of the Macedon Race, that Language became generally understood amongst them; insomuch, as three of the Greek Dialects, viz. The Dorick, the Ionian, and the Aeolick, were spoken here; yet did it never so prevail, as to become the Vulgar Language of the People, or to extinguish any of the Vulgar Tongues. For it is said of Mitridates King of Pontus, that he understood two and twenty Languages, without any Interpreter, which were no other than the Languages of so many Nations subject to himself, whose Dominion was contained for the most part within Asia Minor.

Principal Mountains of this Country, are Hermione in Pontus, Argæus in Cappadocia, Ida, in the Lesser Phrygia, Olympus in Mysia, Imolus in Lydia, Amamus in Cilicia, and finally, Antetaurus and Scordiscus in Armenia Minor: Out of which, for the most part, flow the chief Rivers hereof; that is to say, 1. Iris, (now Casimach.) 2. Thermodon. 3. Hallis, (now Otteman-gruch.) 4. Parthenius (now Dilop.) 5. Sangarius, (now Sangry.) All of them falling into the Euxine Sea. 6. Ascanius. 7. Ryndacus. 8. Asapus, and 9. Granicus, passing into the Propontis. 10. Simocis. 11. Scamander, called also Xanthus, ending their short course in the Hellepont. 12. Caicus. 13. Hermus. 14. Caystrus; and 15. Meander, losing themselves in the Aegæan. 16. Calbis. 17. Xanthus, called also Lycus. 18. Limicus. 19. Cataractes, dischannelling into the Mediterranean; and 20. Melas, adding to the Waters of the great River Euphrates. Of most which we shall speak more particularly in their several places.

In reference to the State of Rome, it contained the whole Diocese of Pontus, except Armenia the Greater, the Asian Diocese intirely, without any exception; and the peculiar Jurisdiction of the Proconsul of Asia, together with the Provinces of Iauria, and Cilicia, parts of the Diocese of the East. But because the Names of many of those Provinces were of new Invention, and some of them of as short continuance, we will consider it according as it stood divided anciently, and before the Romans had made any Conquests in it, into the Provinces of, 1. Bythinia. 2. Pontus. 3. Paphlagonia. 4. Galatia. 5. Cappadocia. 6. Armenia Minor; which (together with Armenia Major) made up, though in other Names, the Pontick Diocese. 7. Phrygia Minor. 8. Phrygia Major. 9. Mysia, the greater, and the lesser. 10. Asia, specially so called, comprehending Aeolis and Ionis. 11. Lydia. 12. Caria. 13. Lycia. 14. Lycæonia. 15. Pisidia. 16. Pamphylia. 17. The Province of the Rhodes, all comprehended under the command of the Vicarius and Proconsul of Asia. 18. Iauria. 19. Cilicia, parts of the Diocese of the East, as before was said.

1. BYTHINIA.

Bythinia is bounded on the East with Pontus, and the River Sangarius; on the West, with part of the Euxine, and Thracian Bosphorus, and part of the Propontis; on the North, wholly with the Euxine; and on the South with Mysia, and Phrygia Minor: Formerly called Bebrycia, afterwards Mygdonia, and at last Bythinia, and that as some say from Bythinus, once a King hereof, more probably from the Thyni, a People of Thrace, who passed over the Bosphorus, and subdued it, called therefore by some Writers, Thracia Asiatica. So witnesseth the Poet Claudian, saying:

Thyni Thraces erant, quæ nunc Bithynia fertur.

By Justin the Historian it is called by the Name of Metapontus, by reason of its neighbouring to the Euxine, and the Pontick Regions.

The Country naturally Rich, and in those parts hereof which lie next the Bosphorus, opposite to Constantinople, so plentifully enriched with fruitful Hills, and pleasant Orchards, when kept by the more curious Christian, that it was thought not to be inferiour to the so much celebrated Tempe: Now robbed of all those former Beauties, by the carelessness of the Turks, who affect neither Art, nor Sumptuousness, in their Retirements and Delights; but desire to seem poor.

Chief Rivers hereof are, 1. Phillis. 2. Sangarius, now called Sangri, both falling into the Euxine Sea; this last arising from Mount Dindymus, in the furthest parts of Phrygia Major; and making two long reaches in his Journey hither. 3. Ascanius, which rising also in Phrygia Major, but more near the Borders of this Country, falleth into the Propontis, making the Bay, called Sinus Ascanius; which with a Lake in the same Country, called Lacus Ascanius, doth plainly manifest, that the Bythinians are derived from Askenaz, the Son of Gomer, and Grand-son of Japhet.

The principal Towns hereof are, 1. Scutari, over-against the Haven of Constantinople, called anciently Chrysopolis, for that there the Persians received their Tribute from the other Cities of all these parts of Asia Minor. An ample Town, well Garrison'd within, and surrounded round about with most pleasant Orchards, and honoured with the neighbourhood of a Royal Seraglio. Not far off is a Tower, called the Maiden-Tower, serving both for a Fort, and Watch-Tower; and being furnished for defence with 20 Pieces of Ordnance. 2. Chalcedon, on the same Shoar also, a Colony of the Megarenses, called Blind by the Oracle, for neglecting Byzantium, and chusing the less convenient place for their Habitation. And yet did Constantine the Great resolve upon the same place also for his Regal City; but changed his Resolutions on a kind of Miracle: It being observed, that when his Workmen began to draw the Platform, some Eagles conveyed away their Lines to the other side of the Bosphorus, and let them fall directly upon Byzantium. Memorable after that for the fourth General Council there assembled, by command of the Emperor Martianus, in the Year 451, for representing the Heresie of Nestorius; in which were 530 Bishops: Now so decayed, that it can only shew some few of the Ruins of it Scutari being risen on the fall thereof. It is now call'd by the Turks, Cadiquei, as Mr. Wheler assures us, p. 209. 3. Nicomedia, so called from Nicomedes, King of Bythinia, (the Son of Zises, and Grand-child to that Bythinian King, who so valiantly defended his own, and his Countries Liberty against Calanus, one of Great Alexander's Captains) by whom founded: Situate on the top of an Hill environed environed with a pleasant and delightful Plain, honoured with the Seat and Residence of many of the Roman Emperors. when their Affairs called them into the East, before the building of Constantinople; on that occasion made the Throne on which many of God's Saints received the Crown of Martyrdom, especially in the Persecution under Dioclesian. In those times Wealthy, and of Fame now much decayed; but notwithstanding well inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, for the Commodiousness of the fresh Springs which are thereabouts. This City is now by the Turks call'd Isnigimid, and for shortness, Isnia. Busbequius, who saw this place, saith, there was nothing to be found in it worth the seeing, but Ruins and shattered Marbles, the Testimonies of its ancient Splendor and Glory; but the Castle which is built on an Hill, is yet more intire, and less injur'd. 4. Libussa, betwixt Nicomedia, and the River Ascanius, now call'd Gebisa, memorable for the Death and Sepulture of the famous Annibal, who to prevent his being made Prisoner to the Romans, when Prusus King of Bythina intended unworthily to betray him, here made away himself by Poyson. 5. Prusa, founded by another Prusus, whose Name it beareth; a large and wealthy City as most in Asia: Honoured for a long time with the Residence of the Turkish Kings, till the removal of their Seat to Adrianople, by Mahomet the First; and still ennobled with the Sepulture of the Princes of the Ottoman Race, except the Emperors themselves. By the Turks called Bursa. This City, saith Mr. Wheeler, who saw it, is seated on the Ascent of an Hill, with a pleasant fruitful Plain before it, and a Mountain behind it to the East, both covered with Trees, and is now fair, large, and populous in Turks, Jews, Armenians, and Greeks. It was taken by Ottoman, the Founder of the Turkish Empire, in the Year 1326, with the loss of 100000 of its Inhabitants, in the Siege, and vast Numbers more in the Sack. Its Walls were spared, but the Inhabitants pay a double Caratach, or Tribute to this Day, in revenge of the Resistance of their Ancestors; and the Christians are not suffer'd to live within the Walls. It is said to have 40000 Turks, 12000 Jews, and somewhat fewer Christians. But then Philadar, a large Town four Miles thence, has none but Christians in it. It has about 20 Mosques, and 2 Seraglios. It has no River, but great numbers of Springs from the Mountain behind it, and it has a reasonable good Trade; the Caravans from Aleppo and Persia passing this way to Constantinople, and Smyrna. The Turks live here in more Splendor than in other places, and have nobler Houses, and better Furnished. Our Author saith, Orchanes took it, which may be true, but it was in the Life of his Father, to whom Orchanes succeeded in the Year 1328. This City is within three days Journey of Constantinople, and sends every two Months a Caravan to Persia. Tavernier, p. 3. 6. Nica, or Nicæa, by the Turks called Neichia, but most commonly Isnichs, situate near the Fens of the River Ascanius, occasioned by the frequent overflowings of that River; by some affirmed to be the Metropolis of Bythina; but I think Nicomedia hath more right to claim that Honour. First, named Antigonia, from Antigonus the Founder of it; and afterwards Nicaea, by the name of Nica, Wife unto Lysimachus; both of them Captains of the Great Alexander, which last had the happiness to survive the overthrow of the former, and was the longest liver of those great Commanders. Sufficiently famous both in Ecclesiastical and Civil Story, for the first General Council there holden by the appointment of Constantine the Great, An. 325. for settling the Peace of the Church, then miserably distracted by the Arian Heresie. The number of Bishops there assembled, no more than 318. yet of such high esteem for Learning and Piety, that never Council hath been held in so great an Honour. Here was also held the Council by the Empress Irene, for establishing the Veneration of Images; that passing by the name of the Nicene Council, the Acts thereof might be of greater Reputation amongst ignorant Men. In which it was decreed by such doubty Arguments, as Let us make Man after our own Image, once mainly insisted on by a Legate of the Eastern Churches, that they should be revered and adored in as ample and religious manner, as the blessed Trinity itself. In the Year 1098, this City was taken with a vast Expence of Blood and Treasure, from the Saracens, by Franks then going to the Holy War, and restored to Alexius, Emperor of the East, who in the Year 1105, restored it to them again. When the Greeks recover'd it, I cannot find. This City was also the Imperial City of the Greek Emperors, after the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, and there continued till the expulsion of the Latins, under these

Emperors of the GREEKS residing at NICE.

A. Ch.

1200. 1. Theodorus Iascaris, Son in-law to Alexius Angelus the Usurper, upon the taking of Constantinople by the Latins, passed over into Asia, and fortifying the City of Nice, made it the head City of this Kingdom, containing Bythina, both the Phrygias, both the Myssias, Lydia, Æolis, and Ionis.
1223. 2. John, surnamed Ducas, the Husband of Irene, Daughter of Theodore Iascaris, succeeded his Father-in-law in the Empire; to which he added Pontus, most of the Isles of the Ægean, and not a few places of Importance in Thrace itself.
1256. 3. Theodorus II. the Son of Ducas.
1259. 4. John II. the Son of Theodore the Second, an Infant of about six Years old, supplanted first, and after cruelly deposed and deprived of sight.
1259. 5. Michael Palæologus, descended from the Imperial Family of the Comneni, first took upon him as Protector of the Infant Emperor, and afterwards as his Associate in the Empire; in which confirmed by many fortunate Successes, as well against the Latins, as some Greek Usurpers in Thessaly and Peloponnesus, especially the taking of Constantinople, he deprived the young Emperor of his Sight, made himself sole Emperor, and left it unto his Posterity, who held it with a great deal of trouble and continual Disquiets, till the Year 1452. when conquer'd by Mahomet the Great, as before was said. But this Recovery of Constantinople was the loss of Nice, taken not long after the removal of the Imperial Seat, by Sultan Orchanes, Anno 1330. who presently thereupon took on himself the Style of King, from which before he had abstain'd. Busbequius, who saw it, saith, it is seated on the Banks of the Lake Ascanius, and that its Gates and Walls are tolerably perfect; of the latter it hath only four, which may all be seen in the Center of the Market-place; they have all of them Latin Inscriptions, which mention Antoninus for their Founder. Whilst he was there, the Turks found a Statue in a Military Habit, which was almost perfect, but they fell presently to break it: Busbequius appearing concern'd so ancient and fine a Statue should be destroyed: the Turk asked him, if he would have had it preserv'd to worship it, as your manner is; which, considering the place where it happen'd is worth observing. Of the number of Inhabitants he saith nothing. One part of the City is built upon the Descent of a Hill, the other upon a Plain that reaches to the Sea, and forms the Gulf of Isnich, which has an Haven make by two Moles of Freestone. It has three Arsenals full of large Timber, for Gallies; and in the highest part of the Town Amurath built a Seraglio. The Jews inhabit the greatest part of the Town, and Trade mostly in Timber and Corn.

Corn. Taciturn. p. 3. 7. Chakanagi, a small Town built upon the side of a Lake, Chaban Gigul, which is ten Leagues in compass, and full of Fish. In this Town are two Caravanferas, or Inns, and a plenty of Fish.

As for the Fortunes of Bythinia it self, I look upon the Bythinian as a Thracian People, whom both Strabo and Herodotus speak of, as the Founders of the Name and Nation. Of such a King of theirs as Bythinus, I find some mention in my Authors; and possibly it may be he who had the leading of the Töymt, or Bythin in this Expedition, that being the Name rather of this Nation than his proper Family. But for the Line of Kings which held out till the flourishing of the Roman Greatness, they began to reign here some few Generations, before the time of Philip, and Alexander, the Macedonians: By which last, having other Employment, and lying out of the Road towards Persia, they were little troubled. Calantus, one of Alexander's Captains, made an Expedition into their Country, and was vanquished by them; and afterwards they had to do with one of the Lieutenants of Antigonus, (one of Alexander's greatest Princes) who though he humbled them for the present, yet got he neither Title nor Possession by it. And thus they held it out till the time of Perseus, so shuffling with the Macedonian and Syrian Kings, that betwixt both they still preserved their own Estates. This Perseus, when the Romans became so considerable, as that no danger need be feared from Greece, or Syria, pieced himself with them; and having aided them in their Wars against Philip and Antiochus both, and most unworthily promised to deliver Annibal (who had fled to him for Succour) unto their Ambassadors, made all sure to this Side. His Son, and Successor Nicomedes, being outed of his Kingdom by Mithridates King of Pontus, and restored again unto it by the power of the Romans, held it as their Feudatory, as did Nicomedes his next Successor, surnamed Philometor: Who dying without Issue in the time of Augustus, gave his whole Kingdom to the Romans. By them, with the addition of that part of Pontus which lay next unto it, it was made a Province of their Empire, by the name of Pontus and Bythinia, continuing so till the division of that Empire into the Eastern and Western; when falling to the share of the Constantinopolitans, and with them to the Power of the Turkish Tyrants, in the Year 1630, who do still possess it.

2. PONTUS.

PONTUS is bounded on the East with Colchis, and Armenia; on the West with Bythinia, and the River Sangarius; on the North with the Euxine Sea; and on the South with Phrygia Major, Paphlagonia, Galatia, and Cappadocia. So that it taketh up the whole length of Anatolia, or Asia Minor, from Bythinia to the River Euphrates, which parts it from Armenia Major, but not of answerable breadth; and gives Name to the Sea adjoining, à Ponto regione illi adjacentē ita appellari, as Ortelius hath it, called from hence Pontus, by the Latins; the adjunct of Euxinus coming on another occasion, which we have spoken of before. A Country of a large extent, and therefore divided by the Romans (when Masters of it) into these four parts, viz. Metapontus or Pontus, specially so called. 2. Pontus Galaticus. 3. Polemoniacus; and 4. Pontus Cappadocius.

Pontus, especially so called, or Metapontus, bordering on Bythinia, and bounded on the East with the River Parthumini, which divided it from Paphlagonia, had for the chief Cities thereof, 1. Clauropolis, so called in Honour of Claudius, the Roman Emperor; as 2. Flavio-polis, in honour of Flavius Vespasianus; and 3. Julio-polis, in honour of the Julian Family; all midland Towns. 4. Diospolis, on the Euxine Sea, so called from a Temple consecrated to Jupiter, of great resort. 5. Heraclea, a Colony of the Phocians, call'd for distinction lake (there being many of that Name) Heraclea Pontica, memorable of late times for being the Seat and Residence of a branch of the Imperial Family of the Comneni; when at the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, David and Alexius Comneni fled into these parts: The first fixing here his Royal Residence, commanded over this part of Pontus, and Paphlagonia; the other possessing himself of Cappadocia and Galatia, made Trabezond his Regal or Imperial City. But these two Empires, though of the same date, were of different Destinies; that of Heraclea and Pontus, being partly conquered by the Greek Emperors residing at Nice, and partly seized on by the Turks in the beginning and first Fortunes of the Ottoman Family; the other keeping up the Majesty and State of an Empire, till the Year 1461. when subdued by Mahomet the Great. (This City is now call'd Penderachi by the Turks, and stands 140 Miles from the Bosphorus to the East on the Euxine Sea.) 6. Phylium, at the Mouth, or Influx of the River Phyllis, upon which it is seated. 7. Amastus, the farthest Town of this part towards the East, on the Seaside also, once of great Strength; but taken by Lucullus, together with Heraclea, Synope, Zmisus, and other Towns, in the War against Mithridates the great King of Pontus.

2. Eastward of Pontus, specially so called, or Metapontus, as Justin the Historian calls it, lieth Pontus Galaticus, so named, because added to Galatia in the time of the Romans. The chief Cities whereof were, 1. Synope, pleasantly seated on a long Point, or Promontory, shooting into the Main, remarkable in ancient Story for the Birth and Sepulture of Mithridates, before mention'd; and in the latter times for being the chief Seat of the Isfendiars, a noble Family of the Turks, who had taken it with the rest of his Tract from the Comneni, and held it till the same Year in which the Empire of Trabezond was subdued by Mahomet. First built by the Milesians, and continuing in a free Estate, till taken by Pharnaces, a King of Pontus, and made the Metropolis of that Kingdom. This City is now call'd Sinabe by the Turks, as Leunclavius saith, and has had the good Fortune to preserve it self in a tolerable Estate under the depopulating Turks; but in the Year 1616, it fell into the Hands of the Cossacks, to its great Misery. This City, as Sir Paul Ricaut saith, is still a place of considerable Traffick, and made Rich by the Fishery; out of which, and the Customs the Pascha receives yearly, 734850 Aspers, and has 14 Castles under him, to secure his Government. Turkish Max. p. 25. 2. Castamona, the head City of the Principality of the Isfendiars before-mention'd; prefer'd by them for Strength and Conveniency of Situation before Heraclea, or Synope. It stands in the borders of Cappadocia and Paphlagonia, as Cinnamus saith, who mentions it, because taken by John Comnenus, Emperor of the East, from the Persians, and soon after re-taken by them again, though not without great Difficulty and Slaughter of the Inhabitants. This War was in or about the Years of Christ 1121, and 1122. And he calls the Persian Prince Tanisman, King of Cappadocia, who soon after died, and was succeeded by Mahomet his Son, from whom this Prince retook it, and maintain'd it, though often attempted by them. It fell finally into the Hands of Mahomet the Great, in the Year 1461, with Trebisonde. 3. Themisocyra, now call'd Panagoria, or Lurio, seated on a spacious Plain near unto the Sea, and anciently giving Name to the Province adjoining. 4. Amasia, the Birth-place of Strabo the Geographer, remarkable in the Ecclesiastical Histories for the Martyrdom of St. Theodorus, and of late times for being the Residence of the eldest Sons of the Grand Seignor, sent hither as soon as Circumcised, never returning back again till the Death of their Father. Accounted now amongst the Cities of Cappadocia, and the chief of that Province, a midland Town. Amasia, saith Busbequius, is almost the Principality of Cappadocia, and the Seat of a Turks Prefect, or Governor.

It stands on both sides of the River Ius, and is flanked on both sides again by Hills, on which it is so built, that it appeareth like a Theatre divided by a River; the Hill beyond it so enclosed it on all sides, that there is but one Passage to it passable for Carts or Wagons. It is seated upon the Euxine Sea, and has a Harbour, and a strong Castle; but the Streets, or Houses, had nothing worth the seeing, except some broken Fragments of Antiquities which yet shew this was the Seat of the Kings of Cappadocia; though now imploy'd in mean and nasty beggarly Cottages. The Turks, as he observeth, thought this City very unfortunate on the account of Mustapha, who was here put to Death by the order of his Father, in the Year 1553. He observeth also, that the Inhabitants were more inclin'd to the Persians than Turks, who sometimes made Inroads to this place. 5. Cabira, call'd afterward Diospolis, memorable for the great Defeat which Lucullus gave there unto Mithridates, more for the trick which Mithridates there put upon Lucullus. For being well acquainted with the covetousness of the Romans, he saw no better way to save himself and the rest of his Forces after the Defeat, than to scatter his Treasures in the way which he was to take; that by that means his Enemies might slacken the Pursuit, to collect the Spoils, and he preserve himself to another day; and so accordingly it proved. 6. Comana, toldifference it from another of that name, call'd Comana Pontica; to which other, being of Cappadocia, or Armenia Minor, Mithridates came in safety by the trick aforesaid, and thence escaped unto Tigranes the Armenian King, with 2000 Horse.

3. Eastward of Pontus Galaticus lies Polemoniaca, so call'd by the Romans either from Polemonium, a chief Town of this Tract, or from Polemo, the last King hereof, after whose Death this Kingdom came unto the Romans. Places of most importance in it, 1. Polemonium on the Seaside, spoken of before. 2. Hermanassa, a Sea-Town also. More in the Land. 3. Neo-Cæsarea (now Nixaria) the Metropolis of Polemoniaca, when made a Province of it self. This City is famous for two Synods here held, the first in the Year 261. under Gregory Bishop of this place; and the other in the Year 313. it is now in a tolerable good Estate, and is the usual Residence of a Turkish Sangiac. 4. Zela, enlarged by Pompey, and call'd Megalopolis; by Constantine laid unto the Province of Helenopontus. 5. Sebastia, so call'd in honour of Augustus, whom the Greeks call'd Sebastos, a place of great Strength, and one of the first Towns in the Lesser Asia, which held out against Tamerlane; in revenge whereof, when he had took it, he caused 12000 Men, Women, and Children, to be most cruelly buried alive in some hollow Pits which he had digged for that purpose. Nigh to this City is Mount Stella, where Pompey gave Mithridates his fatal overthrow; where also Tamerlane with an Army of 800000 of his Tartars, encountred with Bajazet the Turk, coming to the relief of Sebastia, with an Army of 500000 fighting Men. The issue of which fight was this, that Bajazet having lost 200000 of his Soldiers, was himself taken prisoner, and carried by the insolent Conqueror in an iron Cage, against the Bars whereof he beat out his Brains. Now the Seat of a Beglierbeg who has six Sangiacs under him, and is call'd by them Savas. 6. Barbiniſſa. 7. Megalossus. 8. Gozalvia, &c. not much observable in Story.

In this part of Pontus is the rise and fall of the River Thermodon, on the Banks whereof the Amazons, a sort of warlike Women are said to dwell; so called either quasi ἀμαζας, because they used to cut off their right Paps, that they might not be an Impediment to their Shooting; or from α and μαζα, sine pane, because they used not to eat Bread; or from αμαζιν, because they used to live together. They were originally of Scythia, and accompanied their Husbands to these parts, about the time of the Scy- thians first irruptions into Asia, in the time of Sesostris King of Aegypt. The Leaders of this People into Cappadocia were Plinus and Scolopitlus, two young Men of a great House, whom a contrary Faction had banished. They held a great Hand over the Tamircus, who inhabited this Region, and the Nations round about them. At last they were by Treachery all murder'd: But their Wives now doubly vexed, both with Exile and Widowhood, and extremity of Grief and Fear producing its usual effect, Desperateness, they set upon the Conquerors under the conduct of Lampedo and Marphesia; and not only overthrew them, but also infinitely enlarged their Dominions, and for some time continued in great Reputation: The Names of whom, or of so many of them at least as occur in Story, we shall here subjoyn.

The Amazon Queens.

1. { Lampedo, } First Queens of the Amazons in these parts.
 { Marphesia, }
2. Ortara.
3. Antiopa, whose Sisters Hippolite and Menalippe, challenged Hercules and Theseus to single Combat, and were at last hardly vanquished, to their eternal Credits.
4. Penthesilea, who came with a Troop of brave Virago's, to the aid of Priamus King of Troy; she invented the Battle-Axe, and was at last slain by Pyrhus, Son to Achilles. Long after her Death reigned Thalestris, who came to Alexander, being in Hyrcania, and plainly told him, that she came to be his Bedfellow; which done, she returned; and at last by little and little this female Nation was extinct. They used in matters of Copulation to go to their neighbouring Men thrice in a Year; if they brought forth Males, they sent them to their Fathers; if Females, they kept them, and trained them up in all Discipline of War and Courage. Of these more elsewhere.

4 The most Eastern part of Pontus, call'd Cappadocius, for that it bordered on that Province, and for a time was added to it by the Romans; extended from Polemoniaca to Colchis, and the River Euphrates, the utmost boundaries of this Country. Places of most consideration in it, 1. Pharnacia, built by Pharnaces, a King of Pontus. 2. Cerasus, by Constantine laid unto the Province of Polemoniaca, from whence Cheerins were brought first to Rome, An. U. C. 680. call'd therefore Cerasa by the Latins; first brought into Italy by Lucullus, at the end of his War with Mithridates, no less deserving for that Service to be made a God (as wittily Tertullian scoffs it) than Bacchus was for his transplanting of the Vine from the Eastern Countries. 3. Icopolis, on the Euxine Sea, as the others are. And so is also 4. Trapezus, now Trabzon, the Imperial City of the Comneni here reigning over Cappadocia, Galatia, and these parts of Pontus. An Empire founded first by Alexius Comnenus, (Nephew of the great Tyrant Andronicus Comnenus by his Son Emanuel) who at the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, fled into these parts, which willingly submitted unto his command, An. 1200. Here his Posterity flourished in great prosperity, preserving the Majesty of the Empire in a better measure, than the Constantinopolitans themselves, till the time of David the last Emperor; in whose Reign the City of Trabzon, and therewith all the whole Dominion belonging to it, was taken by Mahomet the Great, in the Year 1461. the poor Emperor led prisoner unto Greece, and there cruelly murder'd. A famous Empory, and specially for the Trade of Fish, caught by the People on the shores of the Euxine Sea: here salted, and from hence transported in great quantities to Constantinople, Cassa, and other places. And for the better help herein, it is said that there is a Mountain not far from this City, affording a black Stone, which being beaten in a Mortar, serves instead of Salt wherewith they season the Fish which they send abroad. A City honoured heretofore with the Residence of the Lord Deputies, or Lieutenants of the Græcian Emperor, for defence of the out-parts of the Euxine against the Persians; and now the Station of such Gallies as are maintain'd by the Grand Seigneur, to scour the Coasts of the Black-Sea, and secure their Trade. This City was taken and sack'd by the Cossacks in the Year 1616. It is still a place of considerable Trade, made rich by Fishing, and a sort of Linen-Crape here made; the Pascha hath 734850 Aspers of Revenue, with 14 Castles to defend the City. More in the Land stand, 5. Zephiriæ. 6. Aza. 7. Cocalis. 8. Cordyle; and many others named in Ptolomy, but not observable.

Emperors of TRABEZOND.

1204. 1. Alexius Comnenus, surnamed the Great, who being Governour of Trabezond, under the Emperor, when Constantinople was taken by the Franks, in the Year 1204. took upon him the Sovereignty of that City by the Title of Duke only, or Lord of Trabezond.
2. N. Comnenus, Duke and Prince of Trabezond, Son of Alexius.
3. N. Comnenus, whose Parents are not known, but he was certainly descended of Alexius.
1274. 4. Joannes Comnenus, who was the first of these Princes that assumed the Name of Emperor of Trabezond, in opposition to Michael Paleologus, who had imbraced the Latin Rites in the Council of Lyons; he Married Eudocia, Daughter of this Michael, in the Year 1276. and died Anno 1295.
1320. 6. Basilus Comnenus, Son of Alexius, Pope John 22. wrote to this Prince in the Year 1329.
7. Basilus Comnenus II. call'd by Nicephorus, Gregora the younger, who was murder'd by his Wife in 1339.
1339. 8. N. Comnenus III. Son of Basilus the II.
9. Alexius Comnenus III. when he began his Reign is not known, nor whether he were Son, or Brother of his Predecessor.
1449. 10. Joannes Comnenus II. call'd Calojannes, or the Beautiful; he slew his Father, to attain the Empire, which he defended with great difficulty against the Turks, and at last was forced to pay 3000 Crowns in Gold to Amurath, Son of Mahomet II.
11. David Comnenus, Brother of John, who was conquer'd by Mahomet the Great, in the Year 1461. when he had reigned but a short time. His 7 Sons were all slain by the Conqueror, because they would not renounce the Christian Religion, and turn Mahometans; so ended this Noble Family.

Transcrib'd from Du Fresne de familiis Bizantinis, cap. 29.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were call'd Leucosyræ, or White Syrians, govern'd by a race of Kings descended from the Royal House of Archemenes King of Persia. The first of them call'd Mithridates, one of the seven Competitors for the Persian Kingdom on the death of Cambyses. But that Honour falling on Darius, (of which more hereafter) he seated himself in these remote parts of Asia Minor; the Ancestor of many great and puissant Princes, but none more memorable than one of his own Name, Regum Orientis post Alexandrum, Magnum Maximus, the most potent King of all the East since the time of Alexander the Great, as my Author hath it. A Prince of great Abilities both in War and Counsel, and one who longer held it out against the Romans, than Pyrrhus, Annibal, and the great Kings of Macedon and Syria had done together. This was that famous Mithridates, who being once a friend and confederate of the Romans, took their part against Antiochus; who would not consent to the admission of the Romans unto Pergamus, according to the Will of Attalus. Afterwards conceiving an ambitious hope to obtain the Monarchy of Asia, in one night he plotted and effected the death of all the Roman Citizens dispersed in Anatolia, being in number 150000: In like manner, as in after times the English, taught perhaps by this Example, murder'd all the Danes then resident in England; and the Sicilians massacred all the French inhabiting Sicily, as we have formerly declar'd. He dispossessed Nicomedes, Son to Prusias, King of Bythia; Ariobarzanes King of Cappadocia, and Philumenes King of Paphlagonia, of their Estates; because they persisted faithful to his Enemies of Rome. He excited the Grecians to rebel, possess'd himself of Athens, and divers places of Importance in Greece, Thrace, and Asia, and allured all the Isles, except Rhodes, from their Obedience to the Romans. And finally, having disturbed their Victories, and much shaken their Estate, for the space of 40 Years, he was with much ado vanquished by the Valour and Felicity of L. Sylla, Lucullus, and Pompey the Great; three of the greatest Soldiers that ever the Roman Empire knew. Yet did not the Roman Puissance so much pluck down his proud Heart, as the Rebellion of his Son Pharnaces against him; which he no sooner heard, but he would have poyson'd himself; but having formerly so used his Body to a kind of poyson allayed, (which from his inventing of it, we now call Mithridate) that the Venom could not work upon him, he slew himself. He is said to have been an excellent Scholar, and to have spoken perfectly the Languages of 22 Nations; the Languages of so many Nations, which were subject to him. But neither his Learning nor his Courage could preserve him from those common Miseries which ordinarily attend a falling greatness. And so ended this long and tedious War, exceeding troublesome to the Romans, but withal very beneficial. For under colour of having given aid to Mithridates, they took in Crete, Galatia, Colchis, Iberia, and both Armenia's: Insomuch, as it is said truly by L. Flor. Totum penè Orientem & Septentrionem involvit, that in his Ruins he involved both the East and North. But to proceed, after his Death the Kingdom continued unto his Posterity, but Tributaries to the Romans, till the time of Nero: When Polemo the last King hereof dying without Issue, it was cantoned and divided into many parts, and laid unto the Provinces of Bythia, Galatia, and Cappadocia; only that part of it which was call'd Polemoniacus, retaining the dignity of a Province, distinct and separate. And so it remained till the Reign of Constantine the Great, who changing the Names, lessening the Bounds, and increasing the number of the Provinces, left only the Province of Pontus and Bythia in the state he found it. And for the rest, he cast it into two new Provinces, that towards the East, retaining the Name, but not the Bounds of the old Polemoniacus, wherein were the Cities of Trapezus, Neo-Cæsarea, Cerasus, Comana, Ponticu, Palemonium, and Petræorum Civitas, call'd afterwards Justiniana, of which Neo-Cæsarea was the Metropolis. That towards the East, separated from the Province of Pontus and Bythia, by the River Parthemius, he caused to be call'd Helienopontus, by the name of Helena his Mother; and thereunto assign'd the Cities of Amasia the Metropolis of it, Ibora, Euchaita, Zela, Andrapus, Algeum, Climacus, Synopo, Amisus, and Leontopolis. But this Division held not long, both being united into one, and call'd Helienopontus by Justinian; continuing after that a Member of the Roman Empire, till the coming of David and Alexius Comneni, from Constantinople, in the Year 1200. whereof the one reigned in Heraclea, and the other in Trabezond, as before is said. But their Estates being overthrown, thrown, it remains wholly to the Turks, who do now possess it, ever since the Year 1461.

The Arms of the Emperors of Trabzon, the greatest Princes of these parts, till the Turks subdued them, were Or, and Eagle volant Gules.

3. PAPHLAGONIA.

Paphlagonia is bounded on the East with the River Halys, by which parted from Cappadocia; on the West by the River Parthemi, which parteth it from the Province of Pontus and Bythia; on the North with that part of the Kingdom of Pontus which was named Galaticus; and on the South with Phrygia Major and Galatia. So called of Paphlago the Son of Ibicus, established in it by his Father, who had newly conquered it.

The Country was but small, and of little power, and consequently the Cities were not very many, and of no great note. The principal of such as were, were, 1. Gangra, observable for a Council holden there in the Primitive times, Anno 327. commonly call'd Synodus Gangrensis. 2. Conica, or Contata, of so convenient a Situation, that it was entrenched and fortified by Mitridates, when he was Master of this Country. To this place was Discorus the Eutychian banished by Martian the Emperor, in the Year 451. and Timotheus Alurus, a Monk of that Faction, by Leo his Successor in the Empire in the Year 457. It was then an Arch-Bishop See, and at this day is call'd Cangria by the Greeks and Kienpara by the Turks. 3. Amisopolis, raised out of the Foundation of some lesser Town by Pompey the Great and thence named. 4. Germanopolis. 5. Amma. 6. Amudava, called afterward Nova Claudopolis, to distinguish it from another City of that Name in Pontus.

This Province, though but small in Circuit, was heretofore the Seat of four different Nations, viz. 1. The Tibareni, of whom it is said that they never waged War on any Enemy, but they faithfully certified them before-hand of the time and place of their Fight. 2. The Heptacometae. 3. The Moynæci, both which were a People so beastly and shameless, that they used to perform the work of Generation in Publick; not knowing that Multa sunt beneficia facta, quæ sunt turpia visa. And 4. The Heneti, to whom the Venetians, as we have already said, do owe their first Original. The Kings which ruled in this Country, derived themselves from Philomenes, who assisted Priamus King of Troy in his defence against the Greeks: In memory of whom, this Region for a while was call'd Philemema. Applying themselves unto the Times, they were always favourable to the strongest, serving the Persians, and submitting to Alexander as he passed that way; and so maintained their Estate without much molestation, till the time of Mitridates King of Pontus; who finding them firm unto the Romans, then growing to great Power in the Lesser Asia, depriving Philomenes, then King hereof, and took the Kingdom to himself, fortifying the chief Towns and places of it. Restored again unto his Kingdom by the Power of the Romans, he gave it to them at his Death. But the Country being very much wasted, and most of the Cities of it destroyed, and desolate in the course of that War, it was not thought worthy a particular care, and therefore laid unto Galatia. Not reckoned a distinct Province in the time of St. Peter, who writing to the Jews, dispersed in Pontus, Cappadocia, Galatia, Asia, and Bythia, takes no notice of this Paphlagonia; nor was it otherwise esteemed than as a Member of Galatia in the time of Ptolemy. Afterwards it was joyned to Pontus by the Emperor Constantine; part of it after that, with some parts of Pontus and Bythia, being made into a new Province by the Emperor Theodosius, and call'd Honorius, in the honour of his Son Honorius, whereof Claudiopolis, a City of Pontus properly so call'd, was made the Metropolis. But by Justinian, the name of Honorius being abolished, and that of Paphla- gonia revived again, the whole Country, as before limited, was govern'd by an Imperial Officer, whom he call'd Prætor Justinianus; continuing under the Command of the Constantinopolitans, till the taking of that City by the Lans. After which made a Member of the Empire of Trabzon, till the conquest of it by the Turks in 1461. by whom call'd Rom.

4. GALATIA.

Galatia is bounded on the East with Cappadocia; on the West with the River Sangarius, and some part of Pontus specially so call'd, or Alatene; on the North with Paphlagonia; on the South with Lycia. So called from the Galli, who having ranged over Greece, passed into Asia, and brought a great part of it under their Command: But being broken by Antiochus King of Pergamus, and drove out of Asia and the Lesser Phrygia, were at last confined to this Country. It was also call'd Gallo Græcia, from that mixture of Galls and Greeks, who uniting into one Body, when they came for Asia, were commonly call'd Gallo Græci. By Suidas Græco Galli, and the Country said to be Græco Gallia. Which mixture of Græci notwithstanding, the Galls (being both the greater and prevailing Party) not only preserved their own Language, but in short time made it the common Language of the whole Country, as it continued so till St. Paul's time, as he sheweth in the Preface to his Commentaries on St. Paul's Epistles to this People, that it was Similima Troasempe, as like to that of the Troas, or People of Troas, as Troas and certain Argument of their first Original.

The Country very plentiful of all manner of Food, even unto Voluptuousness; and providently provided of the Stone call'd the Amulet, which is said to preserve from Drunkenness the Man that weareth it. The Name doth signifie as much, derived from a privium, and μέθυς, ebrius, which cometh from μέθυ, signifying Wine.

The People had a custom in their publick Funerals, to cast Letters fairly written into that last and fatal Fire, wherein the dead Body was to be burned, supposing that their Friends should read them in the other World. Much given to Sacrifices, in the number and frequency whereof they excell'd all Nations; insomuch, that Athanasius telleth us of one Artemus, a rich Galatian, that he feasted the whole Nation for a Year together with the Sacrifices of Bulls, Sheep, Swine, and other Provisions, hoyle in great Chaldrons made for that purpose, and distributed amongst them in Tents and Booths erected for that Entertainment. A brave flash of vain-glorious Hospitality.

Rivers of note here are not any, but what are common unto them with their neighbouring Nations, as Halys, Sangarius, and some others. The Towns of most consideration in it were, 1. Amisopolis, on the Banks of the River Sangarius, the chief City of the Tectosages, a Gallick Nation, and the Metropolis of the whole Country; memorable in Church Story for a Synod held here in the Primitive times, Anno 399. call'd Synodus Zeyrana; but of most note at the present for the making of Chambers: now call'd Zingari. Sir Paul Ricaut calls it Zeyran, and saith it is the Seat of a Turkish Saracen. 2. Oluntis. 3. Agri-namas, Cities of the same People also. 4. Tarum, or Tanium, (for I find both Names) the chief City of the Trocmi, or Trogmi, where was a brazen Statue of Jupiter, whose Temple there was a privileged Sanctuary. 5. Androsia. 6. Phabarena, Cities of that Nation also. 7. Thermae, a Roman Colony, so called of the hot Baths there; the chief City of the Tolistobogii, as Ptolemy, or Tolistobogi, as Strabo nameth them. 8. Talchibecora, belonging also to that People.

Besides the Nations above nam'd, here dwelt also the Byceni and Proclimmæ, who had also their peculiar Cities, mention'd by Name in Ptolemy, but of little or no observation in the course of Story. Of all which Nations, only the Trojan were of the Gallick Original; who with others of their Country-men, under the Conduct of Belgus and Brennus, having ransacked Pannonia and Illyricum, fell at last into Macedon, where having tyrannized a while, and laid waste the Country, they were at last vanquished and expelled by Antigonus Gonatas. After this overthrow, under the Conduct of Lamproius, and Lutorius, they ferried over the Hellepont, and subdued almost all Asia Minor on this side the Taurus, employed thereby those petty Kings and States against one another: Their Reputation grown so great, that no Prince thought himself secure without their Alliance, or able to make War without their Assistance. The very Switzers of that Age, as mercenary, but more faithful unto those that hired them. But being over-rigorous, in compelling their neighbouring Princes to become their Tributaries, and too severe in the exacting of their Tributes, they enforced Attalus, King of Pergamus, by whose favour they had settled about the Hellepont, to become their Enemy. Vanquished by him, they were constrain'd to contain themselves within the bounds of this Province, which from them in the following times was call'd Gallatia, and Gallo-Græcia. Here for a while they kept their ancient Courage and Estimation, molesting many times their Neighbours, and sometimes setting themselves to hire in the Wars of others; but in the end they lost both Courage and Esteem, and were Gauls only in Name, retaining little in them of their Ancestors Valour. For as most Plants and Trees lose much of their Virtue, being transplanted into another Soil; so these Men lost their native Courage, Strength, and Hardiness, being weakned by the Asian Pleasures and Delicates. And as Tully saith, for a Man to be good in other places, is no Mastery; but in Asia to lead a temperate Life, is indeed Praise-worthy: So might one have said to the Gauls, that to be courageous and patient of travel amongst the Mountains, was no whit to be admir'd, but to have continued so amidst the delights of Asia, had been indeed meritorious in them. But these Men were so far from assailing the Romans in the Capitol, that they lost their own Country to Manlius, a Roman General. A War which Manlius undertook for no other Cause, but that they had been aiding to Antiochus against the Romans; nor was there any memorable Act performed herein; but that of Chiomena the King's Wife, who being ravished by one of the Roman Captains, took her advantage whilst he busied himself in telling the Money agreed on for her Ransom, to cut off his Head, which she presented to her Husband. But Manlius got little Honour by his Success, not being welcomed with a Triumph at his coming Home, according to the Roman custom, because he undertook the War of his own accord, without Commission from the Senate. And yet the Senate was content to enjoy the Fruits of it, keeping the Galatians as their Subjects, and the Kings their Vassalories. This happen'd An. V. C. 564. After which time I find Deiotarus, by consent of the Romans, to reign here as King; who siding with Pompey in his War against Cæsar, incur'd the anger of the Victor; and had died for it, had not Tully pleaded his Cause, and obtained his Pardon. But he being dead, his Country in the time of Augustus was made a Province of the Empire; Lolius Paulinus being the first President or Governor of it; enlarged afterwards with the addition of Paphlagonia, and some part of Pontus, from whence called Galatienus. Reduced to its first bounds by the Emperor Constantine, and divided into two Provinces by Theodosius, the one call'd Galatia Prima, the other Salutaris from its medicinal Waters. Of both which Antiochia remained the Metropolis. In the falling of the Eastern Empire, it was partly seized on by the Turks; not totally come into their Hands, till the subverting of the Empire of Trabzon, upon which it depended. By the Turks at this day called Chiangar; and is under the Government of a Sanguak, who is one of the 14 Deputies of the Beglerbeg of Anatolia.

5. CAPPADOCIA.

Cappadocia is bounded on the East with Armenia Major, and some part of Armenia Minor; on the West with Galatia; on the North with Pontus Euxinensis, and Cappadocius; and on the South with Lycaonia, and the rest of Armenia Minor. So called of the River, as Pliny telleth us, which runneth betwixt it and Galatia.

The Country very plentiful of Wine, and most kind of Fruits, rich in Mines of Silver, Brass, Iron, and Allom; affording also besides a mean sort of Alabastrer, good store of Crystal, Jasper, and the Onyx stone: But the greatest Wealth hereof is their breed of Horses, infinite almost in numbers, and fit for any Service they can be put to. And this is universal in all parts of the Country, but not the other; there being some parts of it mountainous and very barren, especially about the Spurs and Branches of the Antitaurus, which is a chain of Hills, thrusting out of the Taurus, and bending themselves unto the North, upon the edges of this Country, and the two Armenias. Here is also in this Country the Mountain Sargisus, said to be of so great an height, that from one of the summits, or tops thereof, a Man of perspicuous Eyes may discern the Euxine on the one hand, and the Mediterranean on the other.

The People of this Country in the time of the Romans were of ill report, so vicious and lewd of Life, so monstrously addicted to all kind of Wickedness, that besides the share they had in the old Greek Proverb, of Τεινιστὴν καὶ ῥάϊον, they had some Proverbs to themselves, Καππαδοκίαν and Καππαδοκίον τέρας, that is to say, a Man of Cappadocia, and a Cappadocian Monster, being used proverbially, to signify a Man most extremely wicked. The words so used by Gregory Nazianzen, speaking of Gregory, or George, the Arian Patriarch of Alexandria, if either Suidas or Erasmus, two right learned Critics, understand him rightly. And they made good the Proverb in the times of the Gospel. Gregory that bloody Butcher of Alexandria, Auxentius, Asterius, Eustathius, principal Patrons of the Arians, and that Arch Heretick Euzoimus, being all of this Country. Yet such is the influence of Christianity, where once entertain'd, that this lewd disposition of the Cappadocians was so corrected and restrained by it, that this Country afforded as many godly Prelates, and courageous Martyrs, as any other whatsoever. Highly commended for it by Jerome, before remembred, who with Gregory Nyssen, and St. Basil, all learned and religious Bishops, were all Cappadocians. And amongst many Martyrs of great Faith and Constancy, St. George, a noble Cappadocian, Colonel or Tribune of Soldiers under Dioclesian, more celebrated in the Churches both East and West, than any other Saint in the Calendar, the blessed Apostles and Evangelists excepted only, and for that reason made Patron of the Order of the Garter by Edward the Third. Finally, it is reported of these Cappadocians, that they were not only morally wicked, but naturally venomous also; insomuch, that if a Serpent did bite any of them, the Man's Blood was a poyson to the Snake, and killed him.

Principal Rivers of this Country, were, 1. Halys, spoken of before, which had here its Fountain and Original; the end of Cæsar's Empire both in site and fate, the utmost bounds of his Dominions on that side; which purposing to pass over in his way to Media, which he intended to invade, he was encountred with, and vanquished by Cyrus the great King of Persia. 2. Issus, which ariseth in this Country also, and passing through it, and a part of Pontus, dischannelleth it self, as the other doth, in the Euxine Sea.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Antiochia, beautified and enlarged by the Emperor Tiberius, after the uniting of this Province to the Roman Empire; and in honour of Augustus Cæsar, by him call'd Caesarea, the Metropolis

Metropolis of Cappadocia, and the Episcopal See of renowned St. Basil. Now call'd Caesar by the Greeks, and Tocat by the Turks. Tavernier, who saw it, saith it is at this day a good fair City, built round about a large Rock; on the top of which is a Castle well Garrison'd. It is also well inhabited by Turks, Greeks, Armenians, and Jews: The Christians have in it 12 Churches, and an Arch-Bishop; two Monasteries for Men, and two for Women. Very near it runs a fair River, over which there is a beautiful Stone-bridge. To the North of it lies a fruitful Plain full of Villages, which is two or three days Journey over it. Here all the Caravans from the East meet, and disperse themselves afterwards into their several Countries. From this place the whole Province of Cappadocia is now call'd Tocat by the Turks, and is under a Sangiac who is subje& to the Biglerbeg of Caramania. 2. Nyssa, the See of Gregory, surnamed Nyssenus, the Brother of Basil. 3. Nazianzum, the Episcopal See of another Gregory, surnamed Nazianzenus; three Men, which as for the Piety of their Conversation they were not equalled in those times; so for their admirable Abilities in all kind of Learning, nothing more interior to the most eminent of the ancient Greeks. 4. Tyana the Metropolis of Cappadocia secunda, after the sub-division of it by the Emperor Valens. 5. Archelais in the Præfecture of Isauria, so called from Archelaus a Cappadocian King, the Founder or Repairer of it. 6. Comana, for distinctions sake call'd Comana Cappadocia, to difference it from another of that Name in Pontus, by Ptolomy placed. I know not why, in Armenia Minor, as is also Nyssa before-mention'd. Memorable in old times for a Temple consecrated to Bellona, whose Priests and other inferior Officers of both Sexes amounted in the time of Strabo to 6000 and upward; for maintenance of whom the Priests receiv'd the Revenue of the Region next adjoyning to it; in honour next unto the King, and commonly of the same kindred also. 7. Dio-Cæsarea, call'd formerly Cabira, as we find in Strabo. 8. Faustopolis, so call'd in honour of Faustina, Wife of the Emperor Antoninus. 9. Andraca. 10. Phura. 11. Salambria. 12. Campæ, spoken of by Ptolomy with many others as obscure, and not worth the naming. Of more note, though not found in the ancient Writers, is, 13. Ereburum, situate on the very confines of the Greater Armenia, for that cause made the Rendezvous or place of meeting for the Turkish Soldiers when there is any Expedition in hand against the Persians; at which place also after the ending of the War for the present Year, they are disbanded and sent home to their several Quarters. This is one of the Frontier Cities between the Turks and Persians, seated on the Banks of the Euphrates, (which is yet but small) on the Southside, ten German Miles from Trebezond to the S. E. upon the edge of a large Plain, environed with Mountains, and beautified with fair Villages. The Houses in it are all built with Timber; but then it has a large Castle built with Stone, in which a Turkish Basha resides. This City was once more beautiful than now it is. The Air is very cold about this place, and the Country produceth no Wine; but it being a place of great Thorowfare for the Eastern Caravans, and seated near Trebezond, the Turks have made it their Magazin for their Persian Wars. And 14. Pterium, not named in Ptolomy, but memorable for the great Battle fought in sight thereof, between Craesus King of Lydia, and Cyrus of Persia; in which Craesus having lost the Field, and with it his Kingdom, found the Oracle true, (tho' not in the sense that he expected) that Craesus passing over the River Halys, should overthrow a great Estate, as indeed he did; but it was his own, and not the Persians.

That the Cappadocians are derived from Togarma, the Son of Gomer, hath been so fully proved already in our General Preface, that we shall not trouble our selves to repeat it here; nor shall we need to say more in confuting of their Opinion, who would fetch Cappadocia out of Egypt from the rest of his Brethren, to plant him in this Country, than hath there been said. Their Fortunes in the former times I find little of; subjected by the Persians, with the rest of Asia Minor, after the overthrow of Cyrus, who before had given the Law unto it, as to the Lygians, Parthians, Bythinians, Armenians, and others of the neighbouring Nations. By Cyrus given, together with Argis his Sister, to Pompeus a Noble Persian, who had saved him from the fury of a ravenous Lion running upon him with fell Mouth, as he was Hunting. A noble Loyalty, and nobly royally rewarded. From him descended Antiochus King hereof in the time of Alexander the Great, continuing steadfast in his Duty to the Crown of Persia, when almost all the rest of the Kings of Asia yielded to the Enemy. Nor did Alexander call him to account in his march for Persia. But after his decease, Pompeus having the command of the Army, set upon him, vanquished him, and most cruelly crucified him, together with as many of his kindred as could be found. One of his Sons, who fortunately had escaped this slaughter, spying his time when the Macedonians were at Wars amongst themselves recovered his Estate again, and passed it over to his Offspring: continuing in his Line, without any subjection, till the time of that Antiochus, who by Mithridates was deprived of his Dominion, as was told before. Restored again unto his Kingdom by the power of the Romans, he became their Homager, holding, as did his Successors, by their courtesy only: Continuing yet in state of Kings, till the Death of Archelaus the last King hereof; who having angered Tiberius for not attending on him when he lived at Rhodes, during the life-time of Augustus, as did others of the Tributary States and Princes, was by him then possessed of the Empire, cited unto Rome under colour of projecting somewhat against the State. Where the old Prince, even spent with Age, the Gout, and some other Diseases, had without question been condemned by the servile Senate, but that one of the Witnesses deposed, that he had said, That if ever he went back into Cappadocia, Tiberius should find, quales nervi sibi essent, what a man he was. Which moved such a laughter in the Senate, the old King being neither able to sit nor stand, that he was dismissed; Tiberius thinking that he could not punish him more effectually, than to let him live. A favour which the old King construed to the best, and in the way of gratitude bequeathed his Kingdom at his Death to the Empire of Rome. Being added to the Roman Empire, it was exceedingly enlarged by the addition of the greatest part of the Kingdom of Pontus; and so it stood in the time of Ptolomy, who reckoneth Pontus Galaticus, Cappadocius, and Polemoniæus, as parts and Members of this Province. Divided besides those, into these eight Præfectures, that is to say, Clavianensis, Sargaranensis, Gardicretæ, Cilicæ, Tyanidis, Lycæoniæ, Antiochiæ, and Cataonia. But Pontus, Lycæonia, and Antiochiæ (he means Pisidia, as I take it) being made Provinces of themselves, by the Emperor Constantine, it returned unto its natural bounds, and made one Province of the Empire, of which Cæsaria, as is said before, was the Metropolitan; and so remained, till the Emperor Valens, a great Patron of the Arian Faction, of purpose to despight St. Basil, who opposed that Heresie, created another Province out of it, call'd Cappadocia secunda, whereof the Metropolis was Tyana. After this it continued part of the Eastern Empire, till the erecting of the new Empire of Trebezond, together with which it fell unto the Hands of the Turks; by whom the whole Province, with the addition of Pontus, is now call'd Amasia, after the name of that City, which the Beyleg of Anatolia honoureth with his Residence, and is said to yield yearly to the Grand Seigneur 60000 Ducats. This Country is now call'd by the Turks Tocat.

ARMENIA MINOR.

Arménia Minor is bounded on the East with Euphrates, which parteth it from Arménia Major; on the South with Mount Taurus, which separates it from Cilicia; on the West, and North, with a long chain of Hills, call'd Mons Scordicus, by some call'd Mons Amanus, by others, Anti-Taurus, according to the change of places; by which divided from Cappadocia. Of the reason of the name hereafter.

The Country of the same nature with Cappadocia, before described; in some parts overgrown with Mountains, by which, and by the River Euphrates so inclosed and fenced, that it is difficult of entrance; in others pleasant and delightful, well watered with sweet Streams, and some fair Rivers issuing out of the Mountains; the principal whereof is Melinus, so called from the blackness of the water thereof, which falleth into the Euphrates.

Divided in the time of the Romans into these four Regions; that is to say, Laviana, Arzania, Melitene, lying on the Euphrates, Atariana; more within the Land towards Cappadocia, each of which had their several Cities, whose Names are to be found in Strabo. The principal, 1. Melitene, the chief City of the Region so call'd, and the Metropolis of the lesser Arménia, call'd afterwards Ataxia, and now Sura; the Territory thereof abounding in Oyl and Wine, not inferior to the best of Greece. The City said by Onuphrius to be a Colony of the Romans, much spoken of by Lucianus, and other Writers of Ecclesiastical Story, for the Piety of the Christians there inhabiting in the fiery times of Persecution. 2. Nicopolis, and 3. Oromandus in the Mountain Countries; the former built by Pompey, in memory of his Victory there obtained against the Forces of Tigranes, King of Syria, and both Arménia's. 4. Garnace, a well fortified Town, mentioned by Tacitus in the twelfth Book of his Annals, and by him called Gerneas. 5. Cuculum, and 6. Strabylus, memorable for the Exile of St. Chrysostom, Patriarch of Constantinople, confined unto these places by the power and malice of the Empress Eudexia, by whom hated for his Orthodoxy in points of Faith; who dying afterwards at Comana of Cappadocia, was there interr'd.

This Country was once part of Cappadocia, till the Armenians by their Incursions and Colonies possess'd themselves of it, and gave unto it the name of Arménia Minor; continuing part of their Estate till the War of Antiochus against the Romans; who being discomfited by Lucullus, fled with two thousand Horse to the Court of Tigranes the Armenian, who had married his Daughter. By whom at first neglected, and not suffer'd to come into his Presence; but afterwards on the apprehension of the common danger, more esteemed and set by; insomuch that his royal Entertainment there, and the refusal of Tigranes to yield him up when required by the Romans, occasion'd Lucullus to bring his Forces into these parts, subduing all before him to the Banks of Euphrates. His Victories being seconded by Pompey, and confirmed by Augustus, this Country was made a Province of the Roman Empire: the greater Arménia lying on the other side of that River, though conquered also in that War, not being taken into the account of the Roman Provinces, till the time of Trajan Augustus, thinking it an high point of Wisdom (as no doubt it was) not to extend the Empire beyond those Banks. After this it continued Roman, till the declining times of the Eastern Empire; when wasted by the Persians, and subdued by the Turks; by whom call'd Genech, or as some say, Pegia.

And so much of the Provinces of the Pontick Diocese, lying within Anatolia, or Asia Minor; converted to the Christian Faith by the two great Apostles of the Jews and Gentiles, as appeareth by St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, and St. Peter's to the Strangers dispersed in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bythmia.

This Country, as Tavernier and Mr. Chardin assures us, is one of the most beautiful and rich Countries in the World, and is divided between the Turks and Persians, who have had dreadful Wars for it. It is divided at this day into the Lesser, and the Greater. The lesser Arménia is bounded by the greater to the East, Syria to the South, the Black-Sea to the West, and Cappadocia to the North.

The greater Arménia lies between Mesopotamia to the South; the lesser to the West; Georgia to the North, and Media to the East. This part is the more beautiful of the two, and is water'd by seven large Rivers. The principal Cities in this Country at this day are, 1. Erivan, or Ivan, under the Persians. 2. Nekhsivan. 3. Zulpha; and 4. Van, now under the Turks; of which four Cities large accounts are given by our later Travellers above named.

The Armenians have of late years by their Trade made themselves known over all parts of the World, and are worthily commended for their great constancy to the Christian Religion, their Gravity, Temperance, and Sobriety; which yet have made them very odious to their Neighbours the Georgians. Tavernier has given a very exact and large account of their Religion and Manners in his fourth Book, from the 9th to the 14th Chapters.

The lesser Armenia, and a great part of the greater, is now under the Turks; the rest is under the Persians, who preserve this Country with much Art and Expence; the Wars having depopulated much of it.

7. ASIA PROPRIA.

Come we now to the Asian Diocese, and first to that part thereof which Ptolomy and others (for the reasons spoken of before) call Asia propria. Anciently the most rich and flourishing part of all this Peninsula; and so affirmed to be by Tully, who telleth us, That the Tributes which the Romans had from other places, hardly sufficed to defray the publick Charges for defence thereof, Asia vero tam opima est & fertilis, ut & ubertate agrorum, & varietate fructuum, & magnitudine pastionis, & multitudine eorum rerum quae exportantur, facile omnibus terris intecallat. But as for Asia, (saith he) it is so fertile, and so rich, that for the fruitfulness of the Fields, variety of Fruits, largeness of Pasture-Grounds, and quantity of Commodities which were brought from thence, it very easily excelled all other Countries. The Fortunes of the several Provinces we shall see anon. Brought under the command of the Persians, they continued subject to that Crown for some Generations; but at last taken from them by the Greeks, under the prosperous Ensigns of victorious Alexander. After whose decease, the Empire being divided amongst his Captains, Asia fell to the share of Antigonus, whose Son Demetrius seiz'd on the Kingdom of Macedonia, and left Asia to Selucus Nicator, King of Syria and the East, being also one of Alexander's Heirs. The sixth from this Selucus, was Antiochus, call'd the Great, who waging War with young Ptolomy Philopater, King of Egypt, committed by his Father to the protection of the Romans, and otherwise practising against their Estate, provoked the Senate of Rome to send Scipio (Surnamed from his Asian Victories) Asiaticus, against him; who compell'd him to forsake Asia, which the Romans presently took into their Possession. But finding it agreeable to the present Estate of their Affairs (the Kingdom of Macedonia standing in their way) to make further use of Eumenes King of Pergamus, and the people of Rhodes, who had been aiding to them in the former War, they gave unto Eumenes, the Provinces of Lycania, Phrygia, Assia, Ionis, Lydia; Lycia and Caria, to the Rhodians; knowing full well, that they could easily take them back again when they saw occasion. More hereof in the Story of the Kings of Pergamus, on the decease of Attalus the last King thereof; these Provinces returning fully to the power of the Romans. It

It contained only after the account of Cicero, the Provinces of Phrygia, Myſia, Caria, Lydia, as he reckoneth them up in his Oration for Flaccus: computing the two Phrygiæ for one Province only, and comprehending Æolis and Ionis, under that of Lydia. But for our more punctual and particular proceeding in it, we will conſider it as divided into 1. Phrygia Minor. 2. Phrygia Major. 3. Myſia. 4. Æolis and Ionis, or Aſia more eſpecially ſo call'd. 5. Lydia; and 6. Caria.

1. PHRYGIA MINOR.

Phrygia Minor is bounded on the Eaſt with Myſia, interpoſing betwixt it and the Greater Phrygia on the Weſt, with the Hellespont; on the North with the Propontis; on the South with the Ægean Sea; call'd Phrygia from Phryx, a River in the Greater Phrygia; or as ſome ſay, from Phryxus, the Son of Athamas King of Thebes, who flying from the treacherous Snares of his Mother-in law, did here ſeat himſelf. Minor was added to it to diſtinguiſh it from the other Phrygia, which being the bigger of the two had the name of Major. It was alſo call'd Phrygia Hellespontica, from its ſituation on that Streight; and Troas, from Troas the chief City of it, by which Name it occurreth in the Book of the Acts. It was call'd alſo Epiſtetus, but the reaſon of the Name I find not, except it came from the Epiſteti, a People dwelling on the Eaſt parts of Bythunia, and conſequently near this place. It is now call'd Becſangil by the Turks.

Chief Rivers of it Scamander, on whoſe Banks ſtood the renowned City of Troy, honoured by Hæſiod with the Title of Divine Scamander: in which the Virgins of this Country a little before they were to be married, uſed to bathe themſelves, and to ſay theſe Words Ἄδ'ε τλὼ μὲς Σκαμάνδρε παρδρίαν, that is to ſay, Take, O Scamander, my Virginity. Which opportunity Cimon an Athenian taking, clapped a Coronet of Reeds upon his Head, like a River God, and ſo deſlowred Callirrhoe a noble Virgin, then betrothed to another, occaſioning thereby the leaving off of this fooliſh Cuſtom. It was alſo call'd Xanthus by the Poets, Xanthumque bibiſſent, as in Virgil, and watered a little Region call'd Lycia, whence Ovid in his firſt Epistle uſeth Lyciam baſtant, (Sanguine Tlepolemus Lyciam tepeſecrat baſtam) to ſignifie a Trojan Spear. But of this more anon in the greater Lycia. 2. Æſopus, parting this little Region from the Leſſer Myſia, the boundary of it on the North, as the Promontory call'd Leſtium, is the furtheſt point of it towards the South. 3. Simoeis, now call'd Simores, falling into the Hellespont, not far from the Promontory call'd Rhæteum, (memorable for the Statue and Sepulchre of Ajax) but riſing out of Mount Ida, an Hill of this Region, on which Paris (being by his Father expoſed to the fury of wild Beaſts) judged the controverſie of the golden Ball in favour of Venus; reſpecting neither the great Riches of Juno, nor the divine Wiſdom of Pallas, but tranſported with a ſenſual Delight, fatal in the end to the whole Country.

Cities of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Dardanium, or Dardania, the Town and Patrimony of Æneas. 2. Aſſos, mention'd, Acts 20. 13. by Pliny call'd Apollonia; who telleth us, that the Earth about it is of ſuch a nature, that it will conſume a dead body in forty days. 3. Trajanopolis, whoſe name declareth its Founder. 4. Lyrneſſus, on the Seaside, oppoſite to the Iſle of Lesbos, deſtroyed by Achilles and the Greeks in the firſt beginnings of the Trojan War, who brought thence amongſt other Captives the Lady Briſeis, reſerved by Achilles to himſelf for his part of the Booty, and after taken from him by Agamemnon, which cauſed ſuch a deep diſpleaſure in him, that he would not go into the Field till ſhe was reſtored. 5. Sigæum, the Port-Town to Troy, near a noted Promontory of the ſame Name. 6. Troy, ſituate on the River Scamander, the Beauty and Glory of the Eaſt, call'd Ilium, and Pergamus, for the reaſon to be ſhewn anon. A famous Town, from the People whereof, all Nations deſire to fetch their Original. The beauty of it may be (as ſome write) yet ſeen in the Ruins, which with a kind of Maſteſty entertain the beholder; the Walls of large Circuit, conſiſting of a black hard Stone cut four-square; ſome remnants of the Turrets which ſtood on the Walls, and the Fragments of great Marble Tombs, and Monuments of curious Workmanſhip. But certainly theſe are not the Ruins of that Ilium which was deſtroy'd by the Græcians; but 7. Troas, or New Troy, built ſome four Miles from the ſituation of the old by Lyſimachus, one of Alexander's Captains, who peopled it from the neighbouring Cities, and call'd it Alexandria, or Troas Alexandri, in honour of Alexander the Great, who begun the Work, but lived not to bring it to any perfection. In following times call'd Troas only, and by that name mention'd, Acts 20. 6. then the Metropolis of this Province, now a ruin only; but every day more ruinous than other by the Turks, who carry daily the Stones and Pillars of it to Conſtantinople, to adorn the Houſes of the Baſſa's. 7. Scamandria, a ſtrong place, but of later Foundation, cunningly ſurpriſed by Ottoman the firſt King of the Turks, in the time of a Funeral. Now concerning old Ilium, the Buildings, Glories, and fall of it, take this Story with you.

The Kings of TROY.

A. M.

2487. 1. Dardanus, Son to Corinthus King of Corinth, having killed his Brother Jafus, fled into this Country, where he built this City, calling it Dardania; according to that Verſe of Virgil, Dardanus Iliacæ primus pater urbis, & autor. Both of Troy Town. and Trojan Race, Dardanus the firſt Founder was.
2518. 2. Erichthonius, of whom little memorable. 75.
2593. 3. Tros, the Son of Erichthonius, who ſo much beautified and enlarged the City of Dardania, that from thenceforth it was called Troja, and the People Troes. By ſupporting the unnatural malice of Saturn againſt his Son Jupiter, he loſt his own Son Ganymedes; who being taken priſoner by Jupiter, who carried the Eagle for his Enſign, is by the Poets ſaid to have been ſnatched up to Heaven by an Eagle. 60.
2653. 4. Ilus, the Son of Tros, who built the Regal Palace, call'd Ilium; and did withal ſo enlarge the City, and added ſo much Ornament and Beauty to it, that it is frequently call'd Ilium, and the People Iliaci. The many Towers and Turrets of it, were of his Erection, which being by the Greeks call'd Πύργοι and ſometimes Πύργαμα occaſion'd the whole City to be call'd Pergamus. 54.
2707. 5. Laomedon, who new built Troy, which afterwards Hercules and the Græcians (juſtly conceiving diſpleaſure againſt the treacherous King) twice took and defaced; Laomedon himſelf being ſlain the latter time. 36.
2743. 6. Priamus who re-edified Troy; but giving leave to his Son Paris to raviſh Helena Wife to Meneleus King of Sparta, forced the Greeks to renew their ancient Quarrel: who, after a ten Years Siege, forced the Town, having loſt of their own Men 860000. and killed 666000. of the Trojans, and their Associates, A. M. 2783. ſo as that of Ovid was moſt true.

Fam ſeges eſt ubi Troja fuit reſecandaque falce, Luxuriat Phrygio ſanguine pinguis humus.

Corn

Corn fit for Scythes now grows where Troy once stood,
And the Soil's fatt'd with the Phrygian Blood.

Concerning the taking of this Town, two things are to be consider'd. First, whether the Grecians in these ten Years lay continually before it; and it seems they did not; but rather that they did beat up and down, wasting the Country, and robbing the Seas for the first nine Years; and in the tenth only laid a formal Siege. This is the more probable, because that in the tenth Year of the War, Priam is recorded by Homer in the third of his Iliads, to have sat on a high Tower, and to have learned of Helen the Names and Qualities of the Greek Commanders; which he could not be thought ignorant of, if they had so long together lain in Eye-reach. Secondly, by what means the Town was taken; and here we find a difference. For some Historians tell us, that Aeneas and Antenor, being either weary of the War, or discontented that it was not managed by their sole Advice, or otherwise corrupted by the Grecians, betray'd it to the Enemy: but this Virgil could not brook, as prejudicial to his Aeneas, whom he intended to make the Pattern of a compleat Prince. He therefore telleth of a Wooden-Horse, wherein divers of the Greek Princes lay hidden, which by Sidon, one of the Grecians, was brought to Troy Gates; and that the People desirous of that Monument of the Enemies flight, made a breach in their Walls, the Gate not being high enough to receive it. And that this fiction of Virgil might be grounded on History, it is thought by some, that over the Scaean Gate where the Greeks enter'd, was the Portraiture of a large and stately Horse; and by others, that the Walls were batter'd by a wooden Engine, call'd an Horse, as the Romans in after Ages used a like Engine call'd a Ram. Neither of which is much improbable; but with me perswade not the integrity of Antenor, or Aeneas, for whose sake the Fable of the Wooden-Horse was first invented.

The City being thus destroy'd, the Trojans who remained in the Country, when Aeneas and Antenor had forsaken it, began to think of some other place for their Habitation, which having often shifted, they fixed at last by advice of an Oracle, some four Miles from the former, giving it the name of Ilium. A poor and sorry Village when Alexander came thither, who in the Temple of Minerva, (the only one they had, and a mean one too) offer'd up his own Shield, and took down another, which he used after in his Fights against the Persians, honouring it with Gifts, and promising the People to rebuild and enlarge their City. But what he lived not to make good, was perform'd by Lysimachus, who gave it the name of Alexandria, next call'd the Alexandrian Troas, at last Troas simply. A free City it continued till the War of Mithridates against the Romans; and in the course whereof Fimbria, a Roman Quæstor, having seditionously slain the Consul Valerius Flaccus in Bythinia, and made himself Master of the Army, being refused entrance here, as a Thief and a Rebel, besieged the City, and in the space of eleven days took it. And when he boasted that he had done as much in eleven days as Agamemnon and the Greeks could do in as many years, one of the Ilians tartly answer'd, That they wanted an Hector to defend them. Afterwards Julius Cæsar, emulous of Alexander's attempts, and descended from Julius of Trojan race, restored them to their Liberty, and enlarged their Territories: A Colony, and an University of the Romans of no mean esteem. But Time and War, and the barbarity of the Turks, have brought it unto Rubbish, as before was said.

In the distributing of the Provinces of the Roman Empire, this little Region, with that of Mysia, Hellepontica adjoining to it, made up the Province call'd by the name of Hellepontus, subject with Æolis, Ionis, and the Asian Isles, to the exempt Jurisdiction of the Proconsul of Asia. Following the Fortunes of Constantinople, till the taking of that City by the Latins, it became then subject to the Greek Emperors residing at Nice; conquer'd not long after by the Turks of the Selzussian Family. In the division of whose Empire on the death of the second Aladine, the whole Province of Hellepont, with part of the greater Mysia and Æolis adjoining to them, and some part of Lydia, were seized upon by Carafus, a Man of great power amongst the Turks, who here erected a small Kingdom, call'd from him Carassia, or Carasi-illi; long since swallowed up by the Ottoman Race, in the time of Orchanes, Son of Ottoman, and the second King of that House.

Phrygia Major is bounded on the East with Galatia; on the West with Mysia, interposed betwixt it and the Lesser Phrygia; on the North with Metapontus, or Pontus specially so call'd; on the South with Lydia, call'd Phrygia for the Reasons before laid down; the word Major being added for Distinctions sake, because the greater of the two.

The People of this Country were anciently more superstitious than the other Asians, as appeareth by the Rites used in the Sacrifices of Cybele, and some other Goddesses; said to be also the Inventors of Augury, and other kinds of Divination. And yet for the most part Men of after-wits, and all for bad-I-wist; whence the Proverb, Serò sapiunt Phryges, apply'd to those who wanted forecast, and knew better to lament Misfortunes, than to keep them off; and used not to bethink themselves of what would follow, till it was too late. A People noted for Effeminacy, and lightness of Conversation; and for fear they should not of themselves be wanton enough, their very Musick was so fitted as to dispose them to Lasciviousness. Where, by the way, I find three sorts of Musick spoken of amongst the Ancients: The first, that which Aristotle calleth ἡδονικὴ, because it settled and composed the Affections; and Boetius, the Lydian Musick, because much used by that People, before corrupted by long Ease, and ill Example. It consisted principally of long Notes, or Spondees, such as is that supposed to be which Elisha call'd for, 1 Kings 3. 15. to invite the Spirit of Prophecie to him; and was play'd by David before Saul, to drive away the ill Spirit from him. And of this sort was the Church-Musick of the Primitive times, fitted to calm Mens Passions, and raise their Devotions, Ut per oblectamenta aurium (as St. Augustin hath it) assurgat animus ad pietatis affectum, that by the pleasure of the Ears the Passions might be calm'd, and the Soul inflam'd with pious and devout Affections. The second sort is that which Aristotle calleth δαρμονικὴ, or αἰσθητική, (as the other ἡδονικὴ, or moral) commending it before the other in the Education of Youth, because more stirring them to Action; consisting of Dactyles, or one long Note, and two short ones, by him and Boetius both call'd Dorian, as most peculiar to that People: The third and last by the Philosopher call'd ἐκδυομαστικὴ, or ravishing, because it unhingereth the Affections, and stirreth Men to lascivious Gestures, and wanton Thoughts; consisting of short Notes, or Tribrachies. Boetius terms it Phrygian, as most in use amongst this loose and ungovern'd Nation; such as the French-Musick in our Age. A sort of Musick forbidden to be used by Aristotle, but upon the Theatre, for contentation of the rude and unpollish'd People, by reason of that influence which it had upon mens Behaviours. Mutatâ Musicâ (saith the Orator) mutantur & mores; Curandum itaque ut Musica quàm gravissima & sedatissima retineatur; that is to say, the change of Musick maketh an alteration of Manners; Care therefore is to be taken in the Commonwealth, that the Musick be composed and grave; and such only used. But see how this sidling Humour hath led me out of the way. I return again.

The

The Country very rich and pleasant, well watered with the Rivers Sangarius and Marſyas. Of which the former hath its Spring or Fountain in this Country, but his fall in the Euxine; on the Banks whereof standeth the City Gordium, and many others of good note. The latter was so call'd from one Marſyas, who striving with Apollo for Preheminence in Musick, was by him head, which Fact (say the Poets) was so lamented, that from the Tears of the Mourners grew this River. The chief Towns, 1. Gordion, the Seat of Gordius, who from a Plowman being raised and chosen King of this Kingdom, placed the furniture of his Wain and Oxen in the Temple of Apollo, tied in such a Knot, that the Monarchy of the World was promised to him that could untie it; which when Alexander had tried, and could not undo it, he cut it with his Sword. 2. Midaum, the Seat of Midas, Son to this Gordius, who being not a little covetous, intreated of Bacchus, that whatever he touched should be turned into Gold; which Petition granted, he was almost starved, his very Victuals turned into Gold, till he had repealed his Wish; and afterward for preferring Pan's Pipe before Apollo's Harp, his Head was adorn'd with a comely pair of Asses Ears. 3. Colosse, where dwelt the Colossians, to whom St. Paul writ one of his Epistles. 4. Pefinus, where the Goddess Cybele being worshipped, was call'd Dea Pefinnica. The Romans were once told by an Oracle, that they should be Lords of the World, if they could get this Goddess into their Possession. Hereupon they send to the Phrygians to demand it. The Phrygians willing to please a potent Neighbour, especially the Romans, being their Country-men, as descended from Æneas and his Trojans, granted their Requests, and the Goddess is ship'd away for Rome. But behold the unluckiness of Fortune: The Ship, Goddess, and all, made a stand in Tiber; neither could it be advanced forwards by Force or Art. It hapen'd that one of the Vestal Virgins, nam'd Claudia, being suspected of unchastity, resolv'd to put her self upon this Experiment; and fastening her Girdle to the Ship, prayed to the Goddess, that if she were causelessly suspected, the Ship might be suffer'd to go forward, which was no sooner heard than granted, Claudia drawing the Ship up the Water to Rome; where I leave the People wondring at the Miracle, as well they might. But to return unto the City, it stands in the borders of Galatia, and is by some made to be the City of Gordius, and the Gordian Knot placed in it also; but neither rightly. Not far off stood the Mountain Dindyme, overlooking the City, in which the Priests of Cybele had their usual Residence, thence call'd Dindymene. 5. Apamea, situate not far from the Banks of Meander, anciently a most flourishing Empory, and the Metropolis of the whole Country, till Constantine divided it into the two Provinces of Salutaris, and Pacatiana; making, 6. Symada the Metropolis of the first. 7. Hierapolis; and 8. Laodicea, two noted Cities in those times, the principal of the other Province. 9. Jalsopolis, and 10. Tiberiopolis, so call'd from the Emperor to whose Honour dedicated. 11. Doryleum, &c. Not known unto the ancient Writers, but of more note in modern Stories; are 1. Sagua, the Habitation of Etrogul, Father of Ottoman the first King of the Turks. 2. Chara-chisar, by the Grecians call'd Mcampyrus, or the Black Tower. 3. Cilleuxga. 4. Einegiol, places of Consequence and Importance, taken by the said Ottoman from the Christians in the first rise of his Fortunes.

As for the Phrygians, they descended (as was shewn before) from Gomer, the eldest Son of Japhet, and Askenaz, the eldest Son of Gomer; of which Gomer first placed himself in the mountainous Countries of Albania, and afterwards in the more pleasant Plains of the Greater Phrygia, where the City of Cimmeris (the Posterity of Gomer being generally call'd Cimmerians) did preserve his Memory. And as for Askenaz, he first took up his Dwelling in the Lesser Phrygia, and the Banks of the Hellespont; where was anciently a City and Territory call'd Ascania, some Isles adjoyning call'd Isule Ascanæ, the name of Ascanus also very frequent in Troy itself. An ancient People they were doubtless, esteem'd the ancientest of the World by Psammiticus King of Egypt, upon this Experiment. Desirous to inform himself to what Nation the privilege of greatest Antiquity did of right belong, he caused two Children to be kept in a Fold, where they were suckled by Goats: All mankind being prohibited, upon very great Penalties, to have recourse to them. All the Language which the Children learned from their speechless Nurses, was no more than Bec, which in the Libertine Language, significth Bread; and being of no signification at all in any other which was then known to the Phrygians, gave up the Verdict on their side: But other Nations of the World not yielding to this Sentence, by a Word of Error, or an Ad melius inquirendum, impenn'd a new Jury; wherein it was pronounced on the Seythians side, Seythiæ gens semper antiquissima. Where, by the way, Strabo Becanus makes the like use of this Experiment to prove the High Dutch to be the Original, or Mother-tongue of the World; because Becker in that Language significth, as with us, a Baker, or a maker of Bread. In this Country reigned Nube, who preferring her self before Latona, the Mother of Phœbus and Diana, had her Children slain before her Face by an unseen Means, and was her self turned into a Stone, as the Poet's Fable. Here also reigned Tantalus, who being rich, and wanting Wisdom to make use of it, is feigned to stand in Hell up to the Chin in Water; and that too under a Tree, whose Fruit toucheth his Lips: yet both the one and the other fly from him, when he offereth at them. Of which thus Ovid:

— Tibi Tantalæ nullæ

Deprenduntur aquæ; quæque imminct, effugi

In English thus:

Thou canst not, Tantalus, those Waters taste;
The Tree just at thy Lips, flies off as fast.

But this race of Kings being worn out by the Tyranny of time, or War, the Phrygians were made subject to the Kings of Lydia; continuing under their Command till the Conquest of Lydia by the Persians, with which they fell together to the Crown thereof, not made the stronger by the accession of effeminate Subjects. Gained from them by the Sword of Alexander, they fell unto Antigonus, one of his great Captains, and on his overthrow at the Battle of Issus, to Selucus the Conqueror, the first King of that Race; following the same fortune after that with the rest of Asia, till they came to be possessed by the Romans, and made a Province of that Empire. But Constantine laying to it the Greater Mysia, made two Provinces of it; the one call'd Salutaris, from some miraculous Cures there wrought by the Arch-Angel Michael, as was then generally believed; the other call'd Pacatiana, from Pacatianus, who in the time of the said Constantine was Præfict for the Prætorium of the East, and divers years before had begun his honours with the *Lieutenants*hip of Britain. In the declining of the Constantinopolitans, it became a Prey unto the Turks of the Selzuccian Family; possessed by them till the death of Aladine, the last King of that Race: When seized upon, together with the Greater Mysia, and those parts of Lydia which lay next unto it, by Aidm, a great Turkish Prince, and made a peculiar Kingdom, call'd by his Name Aidinia, or Aidinilli; extorted shortly from his Heirs by the House of Ottoman.

9. MY S I A.

Interposed betwixt the two Phrygias lieth the Country of Mysia, bounded on the East with Phrygia Major; on the West with Phrygia Minor, and the Aegean Sea; on the North with parts of Bythia, Propontis, and the Hellepont; and on the South, with part of Lydia, Aolis, and the Aegean. So call'd from the Mysians, the Inhabitants of it.

Whether these Mysians were originally a Phrygian Nation, or some interlopers which thrust in afterwards amongst them, I find not determin'd. Most probable it is, they were natural Phrygians, being as superstitious in the worship of their several Deities, as any Phrygian of them all; and that they had this Name given them by the Lydians from the abundance of Beech-Trees which grow amongst them, by them call'd Mysia. A people of so bale and contemptible Quality, that it grew into a common Proverb to call a fellow of no worth, Mysurum postremum.

The principal Mountain of this Country is that call'd Olympus, situate in the North parts hereof bordering towards Bythia; which as it is call'd Olympus Mysius, to difference it from Olympus in Greece; so the people of the Greater Mysia, where this Mountain is, are call'd Olympen, to difference them from the Mysia or Mæsi of Europe. And as for Rivers, those of most note besides Esopus, parting it from Troas, or the Lesser Phrygia, are, 1. Caeus, on whose Banks stands the City of Pergamus, and from thence passeth into the Aegean Sea, at the Bay of Elae; and 2. the famous River of Granicus, which hath his Fountain in Mysia Major, and passing through Mysia Minor, falleth into the Propontis. A River memorable for the Victory which Alexander obtained on the Banks hereof in his first essay against the Persians. By whom, upon the first noise of his Preparations he was so slighted, that Darius King of Persia gave command to his Lieutenants residing in Asia Minor, that they should take him alive, whip him with Rods, and so convey him to his presence. A notable example of the pride and folly of the Persians. But Alexander soon taught them another Lesson. For though the Persians were possessed of the higher Banks of the River, with an intent to stop his passage; yet he resolved to charge them in the face of their strength; knowing full well, that if he could beat them on a place of so great advantage, he should not only lessen them in point of Reputation, but beget an opinion of himself, that he was invincible. And so accordingly it proved, the Persians being vanquished by him and all the Kingdoms and Provinces of this Asia submitting to him on the noise of the Victory (as an enemy not to be resisted upon equal terms) some few Towns excepted. And therefore it was wisely advised by Machiavel, that he who takes upon him to defend a passage, should with his ablest Forces oppose the Assailant, because in all Invasions where the Nations invaded have been beaten upon a great advantage of place, as defence of Rivers, Streights, and Mountains, they do not only dishearten their Soldiers from dealing afterwards on even ground with that Enemy, but leave no hope unto their fellows and partakers of being succoured and defended by such weak Protectors. Which caution, if the Persian Commanders had observed either here, or at Pylæ Cilicia, spoken of hereafter, Alexander had not so easily subverted the Persian Monarchy. But the fatal period of it was now drawing on, and the Men either naturally Cowards, or else prodigiously besotted.

It is divided commonly into Mysia Minor, or the Lesser Mysia, which lying on the West towards Troas, and the Hellepont, is call'd sometimes Mysia Hellepontica; and joyned unto Troas by the Emperor Constantine, made up that Province which he call'd the Consular Hellepont; and Mysia Major, call'd from Olympus which was in it, Mysia Olympina, and the Inhabitants Olympen; which joyned by that Emperor to the Western parts of Phrygia Major, made up that Province which he caused to be call'd Phrygia Salutaris, for the reason formerly delivered.

Places of most observation in the Lesser Mysia, were, 1. Abydus, standing on the narrowest of the Hellepont, opposite unto Sestos in Thrace; first built by the Milissians with the consent of Gyges King in Lydia, to whom the Country then belonged; memorable both in the ancient and modern Stories. In ancient Story for the famous resolution of the Inhabitants, when besieged by Philip the Father of Perseus King of Macedon. For being brought by him into some Distress, and hopeless of good Conditions from him, the young Men of the Town who had bound themselves by Oath to die, rather than fall into his Hands, set fire thereon, and barbarously slew themselves, with as many of the Women and Children as could be met with. Which News being brought to Philip, moved so little compassion, that he said he would give the Abydeni three days leisure to die; and therefore would not suffer any of his Soldiers to enter the Town, then set open to him, either to take the Spoil thereof, or hinder this bloody Execution, till the three days end. In modern Story no less memorable for the taking of it by the Turks, in the Reign of Orchanes the Son of Ottoman, through the Treason of the Governor's Daughter: who bewitched with the person and valour of Abderachmen, a young Turkish Gallant, whom she had beheld from the Towers of the Castle, threw a Letter to him as he drew near the Wall, wherein she manifested her Affection, and promised to make him Master of that Fortrefs, if he would perswade his General to raise the Siege, and come with a strong Party in the dead time of the night to receive it from her, which was done accordingly. The Town continuing ever since in the power of the Turks, well fortified, and one of the two Castles, call'd the old Dardanel, spoken of before, which defend Constantinople on that side from all force by Sea. 2. Cyzicus, seated in the Propontis, in an Island of the same name also, but so near the Continent, that it joyned to it by two Bridges. The Metropolis of the Consular Hellepont, by consequence an Archbishop's See in the prosperous times of Christianity; as were all other Cities in the Roman Empire, which were the Mother Cities, or Metropoles of their several Provinces. A Town of wonderful Strength and Beauty, when first known to the Romans, call'd therefore by L. Florus, the Rome of Asia, who gives this Character also of it, Cyzicum nobilis civitas, arce, mœnibus, portu, turribusque marmoreis Asiaticæ plagæ littora illustrat, that is to say, that the noble City of Cyzicum, by the excellency of the Walls, Bulwarks, Haven, and Towers of Marble, doth beautifie and illustrate the Shores of Asia. Honoured amongst many other goodly and magnificent Buildings, with a glorious Temple, the Pillars whereof being four Cubits thick, and fifty Cubits high, were each of one entire Stone only; the whole Fabrick all of polished Marble, every Stone joyned unto the other with a line of Gold. In vain besieged by Mitridates in the time of his War, who lost before it by the Sword, Pestilence, and Famine, no fewer than 300000 Men, and yet could not force it. Afterwards ruined by an Earthquake, the Falling-sickness of the East, as before is said, it could never be restored to its former lustre; the very ruins of it daily made more ruinous, by transporting the Stones and Marbles to Constantinople, for the embellishing of that City. 3. Lampsacus on the same Propontis, in which the beastly God Priapus was worshipped, in as beastly a figure: Quem non denudo (as wittily Lactantius scoffeth it) ne quid appareat risu dignum, supposed to be the same with the Syrian, or Phœnician Baal, so often mention'd in the Scriptures. For this, and on some other reasons, Alexander had conceived against it such an high displeasure when he was in Asia, that he resolved to raze it to the very ground. And seeing Anaximenes coming to him as an Ambassador from the Town, to obtain his Favour, commanding him to hold his peace;

peace; and sware, as by way of prevention, that he would deny whatsoever he requested of him: whereupon Anaximene entreated him to destroy the City, which now for his Oath's sake he could not do; and so this wicked City at that time escaped. 4. Parium, so call'd, as some say, from Parus the Son of Jafon, a Colony at first of the Mylefians, of the Romans afterwards: Troas and this, the only two Roman Colonies in all the Province. By Homer call'd Adraftia; as Lampiscus in the same Author, is call'd Pnyssa. More in the Land, are 5. Scepsis. 6. Hiragerme, both mention'd by Ptolomy, but of more Antiquity than Fame.

Chief Cities in Mysia Major, or Olympica, are 1. Dainia, in the North parts, not far from Olympus. 2. Apollonia, near a large Lake sacred to Apollo, in the same parts also: 3. Pala Scepsis, or Scepsis Vetus, on a Bay of the Aegean Sea, joyning upon Troas, or the Lesser Phrygia. 4. Adramyttium, mention'd Acts 27. where St. Paul took Ship to go to Rome. 5. Antandarus, on the same Sea also, now call'd St. Dimitri; named at first Cimmeris from the Gomerites or Cimmerians here inhabiting (which sheweth that Mysia anciently was a part of Phrygia) afterward Edonis, and at last Antandrus, and that either because built, or repaired rather by the Men of Andros, an Island of the Aegean, spoken of before, amongst the Cyclades; or because the Grecians having taken Polydorus the Son of Priam, from the King of Thrace, received this City for his Ransom, or rather in exchange for him, as the word doth intimate. 6. Proteselene, on the same Coast also. More in the Land. 7. Præpemiſſus. 8. Præjanopolis. 9. Alydda, of which little memorable. 10. Pergamus, the Regal City of this Tract, situate in a goodly Plain, on the Banks of the River Caycus; of a small Town or Fortrefs, made a stately City by the Kings hereof, and beautified with an excellent Library containing 200000 Volumes; for the writing, or transcribing whereof, Parchment was here first invented, which from hence to this day is call'd Pergamenum. Here also were those costly Hangings first invented, which we now call Tapestry; by the Romans call'd first Aulea, from Aula, signifying a Hall; the Hall of Attalus King hereof, (by whom invented) being the first Room furnished and adorned herewith. Here was born Galen the famous Physician living very healthfully to the Age of 140. Years: His Health preserved to so great Age, by these means especially. 1. Never eating or drinking his fill. 2dly, Never eating any thing that was raw. 3dly, Always carrying about him some sweet Perfumes. Finally, this was one of the seven Churches to which St. John writ his Revelation. For though it were Originally a City of Mysia, yet being near unto the borders of Lydia, it was reckoned as a City of Lydian Asia; within the limits whereof those seven Churches were all comprehended.

As for the Kings hereof, which flourished here for some Ages in such Wealth and Splendor, they came but from a poor and obscure Original. The first of them one Philetærus, an Eunuch, belonging to Antigonus, one of the Great Alexander's greatest Captains; and after his Death, to Lyſimachus King of Thrace, by whom trusted with his Money and Accompts. Fearing the fury of his Master, then grown old and tyrannous, he seized on the Castle of Pergamus, and therein on 90000 Talents, which he offered with his Service unto Seleucus, the first King of Syria. But both Lyſimachus and Seleucus dying shortly after, he kept the Money to himself, and reigned in this City as an absolute King; leaving the Kingdom at his Death to his Brother Eumenes, no better Man than a poor Carter, till raised by the Fortunes of this Eunuch. Eumenes furnished with Money, though of no great Terriority, was able by the Gauls and other Mercenaries, not only to preserve himself against the Syrian Kings, who laid claim to his City, but also to enlarge his Bounds as he saw occasion. But the main improvement of this Kingdom hapned in the days of Eumenes the Second, the Son of Attalus, the Brother and Succellor of this Eumenes:

who being useful to the Romans in their Wars against Philip of Macædon, and Antiochus the Great, King of Syria, was liberally rewarded by them with the Provinces of Lydia, Phrygia, Caria, Ionia, Troas, and both the Mysias, which they had taken from Antiochus in the end of that War. The rest of the Affairs hereof, till it fell in fine unto the Romans, take here in this short Catalogue of

The Kings of P E R G A M U S.

- A. M.
3668. 1. Philetærus, the first King of Pergamus, of whom before, 2.
3688. 2. Eumenes, Brother, or as some say, the Brother's Son of Philetærus, vanquished Antiochus, surnamed Herax, in a fight near Sardis, and awed Seleucus Calinicus, both Kings of Syria, 22.
3710. 3. Attalus, Brother of Eumenes; restored Archæus the Cappadocian to his Kingdom, and discomfited the Gauls, compelling them to keep themselves within the Country since named Galatia. A Confederate of the Romans, and by them much courted.
3754. 4. Eumenes II. Son of Attalus, gratified by the Romans with the Spoils of Antiochus. He was an hereditary Enemy to the Kingdom of Macædon, which he laboured with the Romans to destroy, as in fine they did; and thereby finding no more use of these Pergamon Kings, began to grow to less liking with them.
3782. 5. Attalus II. Brother of Eumenes, to whom the Kingdom was offered by the Romans in the Life of his Brother, then less gracious with them; but he most gallantly refused it, to the great indignation of the Roman Senate.
3792. 6. Eumenes III. Brother of Attalus the Second, and Tutor, or Protector to his Nephew Attalus, in whose minority he govern'd the Estate as King.
3813. 7. Attalus III. Son of Attalus the Second, succeeded on the Death of his Uncle Eumenes, and having held the Kingdom but five years only, deceased without Issue, and bequeath'd it by his last Will unto the Romans. But before the Romans had possession of so great a Legacy, Antiochus, the base Son of Eumenes, made himself Master of Atindus, Colophon, Samos, and many other Towns and Estates hereof. Against whom the Romans making War, were aided by the greatest part of the Asian Kings; not seeing their own danger and destruction to draw near unto them, by letting such a potent Neighbour come amongst them to undo them all. But the Romans got little by this War, though they had the better of it. For being now made Masters of the Riches and Sweets of Asia, they took with them their Vices also; growing thereby to great Riot, and unparalleled Luxury; which overcame the rigour and severity of their former Discipline, and made them apt for Faction, and those bloody Quarrels, which proved the ruin of their State. So truly was it said by Justin, See Asia facta Romanorum, cum opibus suis vitia quoque sua Romanam transmissit. This Kingdom, taking it in the largest extent thereof, being thus subdued and settled as a Roman Province, had the name of Asia, according to the name of the Greater Continent; by Ptolomy, and others, call'd Asia Propria; continuing under the subjection of the Roman Emperors, till the translating of the Imperial Seat unto Constantinople; as after that unto the Emperors of the East, till conquered piece-meal by the Turks of the Seluccian Family. Which being ended in the person of Mahomet the Second, those parts hereof which lay next Troas, made up the Kingdom of Carajon, or Carajonia; as those which had been laid to the Greater Lydia, made up the Lydian; both of them swallowed up long since by the Ottoman Kings, the Accessaries running the same Fortune as the Principals did.

10. ASIA SPECIALIUS DICTA.

BESIDES the Propria Asia spoken of before, containing all the Provinces of the Pergamon Kingdom, there was one part hereof which anciently had the name of Asia, before it was communicated to the greater Continent, or this whole Peninsula. This for Distinctions sake the Romans call'd the Proconsular Asia; because committed to the government of one of their Pro-consuls, (who had his Residence in Ephesus, the principal City of this Province) together with the Consular Hellespont, and the Province of the Isles of Asia. This we have spoken of before, as also how the Country lying about Ephesus, had more specially the name of Asia, than any other: so specially, that Erasmus thereupon inferreth, that by Asia in the New Testament, (but more particularly in the Acts) is meant that part of Asia only in which Ephesus standeth.

This being agreed on for the Name, we shall bound it on the East with Lydia, whereof it was anciently a part; on the West with the Ægean Sea; on the North with Myfia; and on the South with Caria. And having so bounded it, we shall divide it into the two Regions of Æolis and Ionia; that of Æolis lying on the North toward Myfia, as Ionia doth upon the South towards Caria; possessed both of them by Greek Nations, and of them so named.

Principal Towns in Æolis are 1. Acarnea, over-against the Ill. of Lesbos, the Royal Seat sometimes of the Tyrant Hermias; who being once a Scholar of Aristotle's, but unworthy of so good a Master, seized on this City, and here committed so great Cruelties, that at last he was taken by the People, sewed in an Ox's Hide, and so baited to death. 2. Pitane, on a little River so named, falling into Caicus, not far from the influx or fall thereof into the Ægean; in which Town they had an Art of making Bricks which would swim on the Water. 3. Elæa on the Mouth of Caicus, the Port-Town to Pergamus. 4. Myrina, afterwards in honour of Augustus, call'd Sebastopolis. 5. Cene, by Strabo call'd Cane, by Mela, Cannæ, not far from a Promontory of the same Name. 6. Cuma, the principal and greatest all Æolis, the Birth-place of Ephorus, a learned Man of elder times; and the Habitation of Sibylla, surnamed Cumana, to difference her from Sibylla Cumæa, so named from Cumæ, a City of the Realm of Naples. 7. Phocæa, a Colony of the Athenians, so named from the multitudes of Sea-Calves (the Greeks call them Phocæ) which thrust themselves ashore at the building of it. The People hereof overburthened by the Persians, and impatient of so great servitude as was laid upon them, forsook their Country, binding themselves by a fearful Oath, never more to return unto it; and after many and long Wandrings, came at last into Gaul, where they founded the famous City of Marseilles.

The Inhabitants of this little Region are by Josephus said to be descended of Elisha, the Son of Javan, who therefore call'd them by the name of Elisæi. And it is possible enough that so it was, Elisha being planted in Greece, where he gave name to Elis, one of the Provinces of Peloponnesus; from whence some of his Race in succeeding times might pass over into Asia, and possess those Coasts. For that they were a Greek people, is confessed by all; the Æolick Dialect, or Phrase of Speech, taking name from hence. Not otherwise much mention'd in the course of Story, than as partakers of the same Fortunes with the rest of their Asian Neighbours before related, and so not necessary to be now repeated.

Ionia, as a larger Tract, requires a more particular and punctual Description. For here the River Iyenus falleth into the Meander, and here Meander and Caystrus, two of the most famous Rivers of Asia Minor (of which more hereafter) fall into the Ægean. Here is the renowned City of Ephesus, honoured with one of the Worlds seven Wonders, the long abode of St. Paul, and the Death and Sepulture of St. John; the Promontory Trogylum, with a little Isle adjoyning of the same name, mention'd Acts 20. 15.

Principal Cities of this Tract, are 1. Myas, on an Arm of the Sea, assigned by Artaxerxes, together with Lampsacus, and Magnesia, to Themistocles; when being banished his own Country, he fled to his greatest Enemy for Entertainment; and there met with more safety than Athens would, and more Honour than it could afford him; so that he might well say (as he often did) Periissem nisi periissem. And on the other side, the King was so overjoy'd at his coming to him, (as having now on his side the Man who had most hindred him in the Conquest of Greece) that many times in his sleep he was heard to clap his Hands, and say, Habeo Themistoclem Atheniensem. In after-times, the Water drawing further off, the Soil brought forth such an innumerable number of Fleas, that the Inhabitants were fain to forsake the City, and with their Bag and Baggage to retire to Miletus: Nothing hereof being left, but the Name and Memory in the time of Pausanias. 2. Erythra, memorable for the Habitation of one of the Sibyls, from hence call'd Sibylla Erythraea; of which Prophetesses we shall speak more when we come to Africk. 3. Lebedus, of most note in the elder times, for those publick Plays which were here annually held in the honour of Bacchus. 4. Clazomene, situate on a small Ilet, near unto the Shore, of much esteem amongst the Romans for the Wines there growing; and no less honoured by the Asians for a beautiful Temple of Apollo seated near unto it. 5. Priene, the Birth-place of Bias, one of the seven Wise-men of Greece. 6. Ipsus, renowned for the great Battle betwixt Antigonus and Seleucus, two of Alexander's chief Commanders; the Victory wherein falling to Seleucus, with the death of his Adversary, established him in all the Conquests of his Master, except Ægypt, only. 7. Teos, the Birth-place of Anacreon, that lascivious and drunken Poet, hence surnamed Tenus; the Ovid of the Grecians, both for Wit and Wantonness; of both which it may well be doubted, whether the smoothness of the Verse, or the wantonness of their Expressions, be the more predominant. 8. Smyrna, a fair and ancient City, on a Bay, thence named the Bay of Smyrna; the greatest part whereof lay towards the Sea, but the fairest on the side of an Hill overlooking the Waters. Destroyed by the Lydians, it was re-edified by Antiochus and Lyfimachus, two of Alexander's great Commanders; of good account in the time of the Romans, and one of the seven Asian Churches, to which St. John inscribed his Revelation. Much traded and frequented to this very day, especially for Camlets, Grograins, and such Stuffs; made for the most part at Ancyra, the chief Town of Galatia, and here vended to the foreign Merchant. For government of the Trade whereof, and of other Commodities of these parts, the English Merchants have an Officer, call'd the Consul of Smyrna. In old time there was in it, amongst us, a goodly Temple dedicated unto Homer, said to be born in this City, and to have writ his Poems in a Cave hard by. This City is of that Antiquity, that it is one of the Seven which lays claim to the Birth of Homer. In the Year 1344. it was taken from the Turks by the Venetians, and continued in their Hands till 1428. Mr. Wheeler, our Country-man, who saw it, p. 240. gives us a representation of the Haven and City, and saith, it has been six times ruin'd by Earthquakes; and that the Inhabitants expect a 7th. that shall be its utter ruin, never to be repaired. Tavernier saith it was one of the most celebrated Cities of the Levant, wonderfully traded to, and very rich, and built like an Amphitheatre upon the descent of an Hill, which opens to the S. W. and having a Castle which commands the Gulf two Leagues Leagues from the City to the N. W. and that it contain'd then about 90000 Souls; but on the 30th of June, 1688. between 11 and 12 at Noon, the long-expected 7th. dreadful Earthquake happen'd; which in a minute threw down the most part of the Houses, and shattered all the rest. About 4 hours after a Fire broke out of the Ruins, which consumed all that was left standing but a few scattered Houses; about 5000 Persons perishing in the Calamity, and the Castle being swallowed by a Chafin that opened under it. Since that, the foreign Nations have left it, and are retired to Sio an Island: And whether the latter part of the Prediction will not be verified, time must shew. 9. Colophon, most memorable for the Inhabitants of it, so skilled in Horsemanship, that the side on which they served in War was sure of Victory; whereupon Colophonem addere, to put a good end to any business, grew into a Proverb. It was also another of those Cities, which so ambitiously contended for the Birth of Homer; of which there were seven in all, as the old Verses tell us, saying,

Smyrna, Rhodis, Colophon, Salamis, Chios, Argos, Athenæ.*

Whether Homer purposely concealed his Country, that all places might challenge him for theirs, I am not able to say; but sure I am, that Paterculus speaketh it in the commendation of Hesiodus, (the next Greek Poet after him in course of time) that he had specified his Birth place: Qui ut id vitaret in quod Homerus incidit, patriam & parentes testatus est. 10. Ephesus, the Metropolis of the Roman Asia, and the Seat of the Primate of the Asian Diocese; memorable in the purest times of Christianity, for being the Episcopal See of Timothy the Evangelist, the first Bishop thereof. 2dly. In that St. Paul directed to the people of it one of his Epistles; and 3dly, for the burial of St. John the Apostle, who by some learned Men of the elder times, is said to have gone alive into his Grave, and that he is not dead, but sleeping; building that thought upon that saying which went abroad among the Brethren, That that disciple should not die, Joh. 21. 23. And no less memorable amongst the Gentiles for that sumptuous and magnificent Temple here consecrated to Diana; which for the largeness, furniture, and workmanship of it, was accounted one of the Wonders of the World. The length thereof said to be 425 Foot, 220 Foot in breadth; supported with 127 Pillars of Marble, seventy Foot in height; of which twenty seven were most curiously engraven, and all the rest of Marble polished. The Model of it contrived by one Ctesiphon, and that with so much Art and curiosity of Architecture, that it took up two hundred years before it was finished. When finished, it was fired seven times, the last time by Erostratus, only to get himself a Name, which happening on the same night in which Alexander the Great was born, gave occasion to that weighty but witty Scoff, that Diana (she was counted one of the Goddesses of Midwifery) could not attend the preservation of her Temple, being then busied at the Birth of so great a Prince. The situation of this City is very like that of Smyrna, it having a fine Haven and a Rivolet before it, and seems by the Gates, Walls, and Towers, to have been very large, but then there is now not one House standing in the Ara of the old City, and never a Christian Inhabitant that belongs to it; nor any other than about 40 or 50 Families of Turks living in a knot on the Southside of the Castle. The Temple of Diana stood at the bottom of the Hill near one of the Gates, and the great Portal, and the Vaults under the Arches are still intire. It has one Mosque built at first for a Christian Church, out of the Ruins of this Temple, by the Christians, and since converted to this impious use of the Turks. The Turks call this City Ajasalouc, and Sabuck.

As for those Iones, or Ionians, they were, no doubt, the descendants of Javan, the fourth Son of Japhet, as hath been shewn before in our general Preface; but whether they came higher out of Græcia, or passed from hence into that Country, hath been made a Question. The Athenians boasting of themselves to be Aborigenes, Men growing as it were out of the Soil it self, without any Ancestors, report that those Ionians were a Colony of their Plantation. But Hecataeus in Strabo doth affirm the contrary, saying, That the Athenians or Iones of Greece, came from those of Asia; for that Attica was anciently call'd Ionis; Plutarch in the Life of Themistocles doth declare expressly. Most probable it is, that Hecataeus was in the right; these parts of Asia lying so directly in the way from the Valley of Eden into Greece, that Javan may very well be thought to leave some of his company here, when he ferried the rest over to the opposite Continent. I know Pausanias, ignorant of their true Antiquity, deriveth them from Ion, the Son of Xuthus, and Grandchild of Deucalion: wherein he came so near the Truth, tho' he missed the Men, that it was the Grandson of that Man who escaped the Flood, from whom both the Athenians and those Iones had their true Original. In regard of which relations betwixt the Nations, the Athenians gave aid to those Ionians against the Persians; who on the overthrow given to Cæsus, pretended to the Lordship, or Dominion of Asia, and conquered them in the time of Cyrus, the first Persian Monarch. Upon which ground, and the sending of fresh aid to them upon their revolt in the time of Darius, that King first undertook the invasion of Greece: Xerxes and the succeeding Kings pursuing that first quarrel with great Animosities. After this, yielding to the times, they followed the fortune of the strongest, subject successively to the Persians, Macedonians, Romans, Constantinopolitans, and Turks, till the death of Aladine, before-mention'd; when both Æolis and Ionis got a new Name, and are now call'd Saracens, from Saracens a Turkish Captain, who on the death of that Aladine, seized upon this Country, and erected here a petit Kingdom long since subdued by those of the Race of Ottoman.

II. LYDIA.

LYDIA is bounded on the East with Thyrgia Major, and some part of Pisidia, from which separated by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the West with Æolis and Ionis, or Asia specially so call'd; on the North with the Greater Mysia; on the South with Caria. So call'd from Lud, the Son of Sem, by some of whose Posterity it was first inhabited. In the full Latitude and extent thereof, as anciently, comprehending Æolis and Ionis, the adjoining Provinces, it made the Lydian Asia, spoken of before, within the verge whereof all the seven Churches were contained, mention'd by St. John in the Revelation.

The People of this Country are said to have been the first Coyners of Money; the first Hucksters and Pedlers, and the first inventors of Dice, Ball, Chess, and the like Games: Necessity and Hunger thereunto enforcing them, according to that of Persius, Artis Magister, ingenique largitor venter. For being sorely vext with Famine, in the time of Atis, one of the Progenitors of Omphale, they devised these Games; and every second day playing at them, beguiled their hungry Bellies. Thus for 22 years they continued playing and eating by turns; but then seeing that themselves were more fruitful in getting and bearing Children, than the Soil at that time in bringing forth Sustenance to maintain them, they sent a Colony into Italy, under the conduct of Tyrrhenus, the Son of Atis, who planted in that Country, call'd at first Tyrrhenia, and afterward Tuscany.

This Country was also call'd Mæonia, and was thought to have been the native Soil of Homer, in regard that Colophon and Smyrna, two of the seven contending Cities, and those which seem to have most colour for their their Claim, were anciently accounted as parts of Lydia, as was said before. Hence Homer hath the name of Mæonides and Mæonius Vates; And in some Authors Carmen Mæonium is used for Homer's Poetical Abilities, as Carmine Mæonio confurgere, in Ovid. Bacchus is also call'd sometimes by the name of Mæonius; but for a very different reason, viz. because anciently there were no Trees in all this Country, but the Vine only.

Principal Mountains of this Country are 1. Sipylus, and 2. Imolus, this last of most account in regard of the great fruitfulness of it, covered over with Vines, and yielding abundance of the best Saffron. Chief Rivers of it are 1. Hermus, which rising out of Phrygia Major, passeth only by the skirts hereof, and so falleth into a fair Bay of the Ægean, opening towards the Isle of Clazomene. 2. Pactolus, which rising at the foot of Mount Imolus, falleth not long after into Hermus; famous amongst the Poets for its golden Sands. 3. Caystrus, no less notable for the abundance of Swans which swim thereon, whose Fountain is in Phrygia Major also, near the borders hereof; and his fall into the Ægean also overagainst the Isle of Samos. 4. Mæander, which rising out of a branch of the Taurus, in the furthest parts of the said Phrygia, towards Lycaonia, passeth by Magnesia, and endeth his course in the same Sea, near the City of Ephesus. A River famous for its many turnings in and out, 600 at the least, as Priscus counted them. Of which in general thus the Poet:

*Mæander toties qui terris errat in iisdem,
Et lapsas in se, sæpe retorquet æquas.*

That is to say:

Mæander wandring in the self-same Soil,
Whose waters meeting do as oft recoil.

And in another Passage, thus:

Quique recurvatis ludit Mæander in undis.

Mæander plays his watry Pranks,
In his so many winding Banks.

The Country by reason of these Rivers was exceeding fruitful, abounding in all sorts both of Wealth and Pleasures, well cultivated and manured above Ground, and underneath enriched with prodigal Veins of Gold and Silver, and some precious Gems. Which made the People, after their overthrow by Cyrus, to become more sensual and voluptuous, and less fit for Action, than any Plot of their new Masters could have brought them to, had not the natural delicacies of the Soil it self contributed to the advancement of their Design. And yet before, they were sufficiently infamous for their Luxury, and excess of Riot, when best seen in Wars; so that it is a marvel they were able to prevail on the neighbour Nations, and bring them under their Command; as in the times of some of Cræsus's Predecessors it is said they did. Unless perhaps they did participate of the temper of Mæcenæ, the great Favourite of Augustus Cæsar, of whom Paterculus hath left this Character: Ubi res vigiliam exigeret, erat sanè insonnis, providens, & agendi scens; simulac aliquid ex negotio remitti possit, otio ac molitie penè ultra sæminam fluens: No man more vigilant than he in times of business; nor Woman more effeminate in his times of leisure.

Principal Cities of this Country were, 1. Sardis, on both sides of Pactolus, the Seat-Royal of Cræsus, and the Kings of Lydia, till the conquest of Lydia by the Persians. After which time, being taken by the Grecians, it so startled Xerxes, that he commanded one of his attendants to say aloud every day whilst he was at Dinner, That the Grecians had taken Sardis, continuing that Memento till it was recovered. Which course (I note this only by the way) was commonly observed in the Parliaments of France, as long as Calice did remain in the hands of the English; and might be profitably revived, till again recover'd from the French. Overthrown by a most terrible Earthquake, to which Disease most of the Asian Cities had been very much subject) it was re-edified again at the cost of Tiberius; continuing long after the Metropolis of this Province, and one of the seven Churches of the Lydian Asia, of which the Holy Spirit took such special Notice. The others (besides Pergamus already mention'd in the Greater Mysia; and Ephesus, and Smyrna in the Proper Asia) were 2. Philadelphia, near, or on the Banks of the River Caystrus, the second City in account next to Sardis it self and honoured with the dignity of a Metropolitan, as appeareth by the Acts of the Constantinopolitan Council, where Eustatius, Bishop hereof doth subscribe himself, Ἐπίσκοπος τῆς Φιλαδελφίας Μελεπιάδης, Bishop of the Metropolis of Philadelphia, in the Province of Lydia. The Turks have a Tradition, that Tamerlane took and ruin'd this City after a Siege of six years; but whatever the truth of this Story is, Mr. Wheeler assureth us, the Inhabitants are reduced to a very small number, and live by their Labour; the Turks, who are their Masters, being worse than Beggars, and having neither Mosque nor Priest. The old City stood on the Northside of the Imolus, on the edge of a spacious fruitful Plain, and shews yet many Marks of its Antiquity and Magnificence, Wheeler, p. 263. Tavernier, p. 37. 3. Thyatira, honoured with the same privilege also, as appears by the constant Order, observed as well in the Civil as Ecclesiastical Catalogues of the Cities belonging to this Province. The reason whereof (for otherwise it was contrary to the practice both of Church and State, to have in one Province more than one Metropolis) was the respect had to those several Churches in regard of their Primitive Antiquity, and the Foundation of them by St. John the Apostle, as it was generally believed. It is seated in the Confines of Mysia, and was a Colony of the Macedonians, built in a delightful Plain. Christianity is almost wholly extinguished now in it, there being not above ten Christians in it, and those destitute both of Church and Priest, but then it has about 5000 Turkish Inhabitants. All its ancient Marble Structures are now buried in their own Ruins, the present Houses being built of Earth dried in the Sun; but then it has some Inscriptions which have revived the memory of it, which the Greek had wholly lost, till the European Merchants sought it out, and found it by those Reminders, Wheeler, p. 229. 4. Laodicea, by Ptolomy placed amongst the Cities of this Province, as it stood in his time, and before; but afterwards laid by Constantine to the Greater Phrygia, and made the Metropolis thereof (which Honour Hierapolis had before enjoyed) it being well observ'd by Strabo, that the Romans did not dispose of their Provinces according to Nations, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἕτερον τρόπον διατάξαι τὰς διοικήσεις, ἐν αἷς τὰς ποικίλας διαμενομένας, but according to those Districts, or Circuits, in which they kept their Courts of Justice. This ancient City is now utterly destroyed and desolate, being an Habitation for Wolves, Foxes, and Chacats, a Den of Dragons, Snakes, and Vipers; yet the Ruins shew it to have been a very great City, situate upon six or seven Hills, encompassing a large space of Ground in a Plain, watered by the River Lycus. It has yet three Theatres of white Marble, as beautiful and intire, as if they were but lately built, and a stately Circus. Next unto these, there were of especial consideration. 5. Magnesia ad Maandrum, so call'd, because situate on that River, to difference it from 6. Magnesia penes Sipylum montem, another of the same name near the Hill Sipylus. The first assigned over to Thermistocles, together with Mysus and Lamiscus, as was said before. The other memorable for the great Battle fought near unto it betwixt Antiochus and the Romans; the loss whereof falling unto Antiochus, occasioned the loss of all his Asian Province

Provinces on this side of Taurus, and the payment of 150000 Talents for the charge of the War, besides some other hard Conditions then imposed upon him. This is now a large wall'd Town, with handsome Gates, well built within, and adorned with several Mosques; it being maintain'd by the Trade of Cotton-Yarn, sent hence to Smyrna, and is call'd by the Turks Guzel-Hiffer, and lies about twelve Miles from Ephesus to the S. E. upon the Meander; there yet remains in it several Pillars and Monuments of its Antiquity, Wheeler, p. 279.

7. Alabanda, opposite to Magnesia, on the other side of Meander, the People whereof, immediately on the overthrow of Antiochus, not only sent Ambassadors to Rome to congratulate with them, as many other Nations did, but built a Temple to it, and appointed Anniversary Games to be celebrated in the honour of that new-made Goddess. A thing more to be wondred at in the Roman Senate for receiving, than in this poor people for bestowing on their City so divine an honour.

8. Trallis, on the banks of Caystrus, to the Inhabitants whereof, Ignatius that Reverend Bishop, and Godly Martyr, writ the Epistle ad Trallenses.

That the Lydians were derived from Lud the Son of Sem, is testified by the general consent of such ancient Writers, as treat of the dispersions of the Sons of Noah, to which Opinions the nearness of the Names of Lud, Ludin, and Lydi (or Λυδοι, as the Grecians call them) seems to give good Countenance. Nor shall I here dispute it further, as a point unquestion'd: The Tale of Lydius, I know not what Nobleman that should name this Country, being taken up amongst the Greeks for want of more certain Truths. Once settled here, they grew up suddenly to a Kingdom, amongst the ancient Kings whereof are numbred Manes as the first, Cotus and Atis, and then Asias, (from whom Lydia first, and after, all the Continent, had the name of Asia) as his immediate Successors. After them I find mention of one Cambletes, said by Athenæus to be so great a Gormondizer, that in his sleep he eat his Wife, and finding her Hand in his Mouth next Morning, slew himself for shame; and of another named Andramytes, as infamous for his filthy Lusts, as Cambletes for his Gluttony. But the Race of these Kings ending in Omphale, the Mistress of Hercules, who made that valiant Champion spin amongst her Damsels, the Heracidae, or Posterity of Hercules succeeded next; of whom there is no constant and continued Succession till the time of Ardissus, the nineteenth in order of that Line, who began his Reign not long before the building of the City of Rome. Under his Successors the Affairs hereof so exceedingly prospered, especially under Halyates, the Father of Cræsus, that Phrygia, Bythmia, Paphlagonia, Mysia, Caria, Æolis, Doris, and Ionia, acknowledged themselves Vassals to this Crown: Conceived both in Wealth and Power to be equal to the Egyptian, Babylonian, or Median Kingdoms, till the Conquest of Syria and Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar gave him the preheminance. But being come unto the height, it received a fall in the Person of Cræsus, the Successor of him who so much advanced it. The Kings hereof, from the time of the said Ardissus, take in order following.

The Kings of LYDIA.

A. M.

3190. 1. Ardissus. 36.
3226. 2. Halyates. 14.
3240. 3. Melo, who overcame the people of Sardis. 12.
3252. 4. Candaules, who shewing his Wife naked to Gyges, was by him slain; who marrying his Wife succeeded him in his Kingdom. The whole Story is this: Candaules had to Wife, a Woman of unparallel'd Beauty, and supposing the greatness of his Happiness not to consist so much in his own Fruition, as the notice which others might take of it, intended to shew her in Nature's bravery to Gyges the Master of his Herds. Gyges at first dissuaded him from an attempt so foolish; but seeing no persuasion could prevail, he condescended. When he had seen the naked Queen, and was ready to depart, Candaules cried to him, Esto fidelis Gyges: Which words the Queen marking, and seeing the back of Gyges as he left the Chamber, the next Morning sent for him: When holding a Ponyard in her Hand, she gave him his choice either presently to be slain, or else to kill the King, and take her to Wife, with the Kingdom of Lydia for her Dower. Of which two Evils he made choice of that which he thought the least, and so kill'd Candaules.

5. Gyges, the first of this new Line, added Ionia to his other Dominions. A Prince of so great Wisdom, for the time he lived in, that all other Kings, his Neighbours, fate (as it were) in the light to him; and he as in the dark to them; occasioning thereby the fiction of a Ring he had, by which made invisible, when, and as often as he pleased.

3305. 6. Ardus II. the Son of Gyges. 37.

3342. 7. Sardiattes. 15.

3357. 8. Halyattes II. of whom before.

3406. 9. Cræsus, the last King of Lydia, subdued Doris and Æolis; after which Victories he was overcome by Cyrus King of Persia; in which Battle, a Son of Cræsus who had been dumb from his Cradle, seeing a Soldier ready to kill his Father, suddenly broke out into these words, Rex est, cave ne occidas. After his overthrow, and the Captivity of Cræsus, (one of the richest Kings that ever was of old) Lydia was made a Persian Province, A. M. 3420.

The Lydians after this rebelled, but being again subdued, Cyrus bereaved them of all their Horses of Service, dispoiled them of all their Armour, and trained them up in all manner of loose and effeminate living; weakening by this means a powerful Nation, which before that time had not only maintained its own liberty, but awed all the Provinces adjoining. After this they continued Persian till the Conquest of Asia by the Macedonians, in the division of whose Spoils they fell to the Portion of Seleucus, and the Kings of Syria; following the common fortune of the rest of this Asia, till they came under the power of the Romans. Made by them one of the Provinces of their Empire, it had the Lower Mysia, or Mysia Olympena annexed unto it; by means whereof the limits of each became so confounded, that the Towns and Cities of the one are many times ascribed to the other. In the falling of the Eastern Empire it was made (as all the rest of Anatolia) a prey to the Turks: that part of it which lieth next to Æolis, subject to the Carausian Family; as the other parts towards Phrygia Major were to the Aidinian.

12. CARIA.

C*aria* is bounded on the East with Lycia; on the North with Lydia and Ionia; on the West with the Icarian, or Ægean Sea; and on the South with the Carpathian. So call'd from Cares, the Son of Phoroneus King of Argos, once the Lord hereof, who is said to have invented the Science of Divination by the flying of Birds, call'd Augury; Though others ascribe it to the Phrygians, and others unto other Nations, all alike uncertain.

In this Country is the Hill call'd Latmus, the dwelling, or rather retiring-place of Endymion, who being much addicted to the study of Astronomy, found out the changes and courses of the Moon, and is therefore by the Poets feigned to have been her Paramour. Others add, add, that Jupiter hid him in a Cave under this Hill, and cast him into a deep sleep; (which, notwithstanding she descended sometimes to kiss him) whence came the old By-word, of Endymionis somnum dormit. Here is also in this Country the River Salmacis, said to infeeble all such as either drink of it, or bathe in it; from whence the Poets raise the fiction of Salmacis, and Hermaphroditus; described by Ovid; and the Proverb of Salmacida spolia sine sanguine & sudore, mention'd by Tully in his Book of Offices, and there used for effeminate and wanton Exercises.

Places of most note in it, 1. Miletus, not far from the Hill Latmus, the Birth-place of Thales, one of the seven Wise-men of Greece, from hence call'd Milesius; and the Mother of no fewer than 75 (or as Pliny saith) of 80 Colonies, dispersed in several places of Greece and Asia; anciently honoured with the Oracle of Apollo, Sirnamed Didymæus, whose Temple being burnt by Xerxes, was again rebuilt by the Mylefians, to so vast a greatness, that it remained without Roof; compassed about with a Grove, and dwelling Houses, and sumptuously set out with costly Workmanship. This is that Miletus mention'd, Acts 20. to which St. Paul call'd together the Bishops of Ephesus, and of other the adjoining Cities, Ab Epheso & reliquis proximis Civitatibus, saith St. Irenæus, the renowned Bishop of Lions, lib. 3. cap. 14. Anciently it was call'd Legis and Anactoria. There is at this day vast Ruins of this City to be seen, which are call'd by the Turks Palatjha, but it has only a few Cottages inhabited by the Shepherds, who understand none of its ancient Inscriptions, Wheeler, 269. 2. Mindus, which being but a small Town, had so great Gates, that Dio-genes the Cynick cried out, and said, Ye Men of Mindus, take heed that your City run not out at your Gates. 3. Hera-clea ad Latmum, so call'd because situate at the foot of that Mountain, to difference it from many others of that Name. 4. Borgylia, or Borgylus, as Pliny calleth it, where anciently Diana had another Temple, though not to be compared with that of Ephesus. 5. Milasa, in old times famous for two Temples sacred unto Jupiter; the way to which for 60 Furlongs was paved with Stone for the easier travelling of Pilgrims, and the better ordering of Processions; the principal of the Citizens serving there as Priests, which Office they held unto their Death. 7. Primassus, memorable for the Stratagem by which it was taken by Philip of Macedon, the Father of Perseus; who meaning to force it by Mines, and finding the Earth so stony, that it would not work, commanded the Pioneers notwithstanding to make a noise under the Ground, and caused great Mounts of Rubbish to be raised secretly in the night, at the mouth of the Mine, as if the Work went very well forwards; at last he sent word unto the Townsmen, that two parts of the Wall stood only upon wooden Props, to which if he gave Fire, they should find no Mercy; which heard, the Citizens yielded up the Town unto him. So useful in the Art of War, is a piece of Wit, that it prevails sometimes more than Mines or Batteries.

In the South West of the Province, thrusting it self into the Sea like a spacious Promontory, stands the Country of Doris, so call'd of the Dores, a Greek people, who there inhabited. The principal Cities whereof were 1. Cnidus, not far from a Foreland or Promontory of the same Name, famous of old times for the Marble Image of Venus, call'd hence Dea Cnidia. 2. Cressa, a noted Haven Town in the time of Ptolomy. 3. Halicarnassus, (now call'd Nest) the Birth-place of Hierodotus and Dionysius, named hence Halicarnassæus, two famous Historians, and the Seat-Royal of Artemesia Queen of the Carians, (call'd from hence sometimes the Queen of Halicarnassus) who in the Honour of her Husband Mausolus, built a stately Monument, accounted one of the World's seven Wonders; of which thus Martial, speaking of the Roman Amphitheatre erected by Domitian:

Laudibus immodicis Cares ad astra ferant.*

That is to say,

*Mausolus's Tomb filling the empty Air,
Let not the Carians praise beyond compare.*

But whatever it was in ancient time, it is now an uninhabited heap of Ruins, in which that once stately Mausolus is buried. Wheeler, p. 275.

That the Carians were so call'd from Cares, the Son of Phoroneus, King of Argos, hath been said before. But Bochartus will rather have them so call'd from Car, which in the Phœnician Language signifieth a Sheep, or a Ram; with numerous Flocks whereof they did once abound. And this may seem more probable, in regard that the Ionians, next Neighbours to Caria, borrowing this word from the Phœnicians, call'd Sheep by the name of Cara, Καρεύειν τὸ ἀεικέτα, saith Hesychius, the old Grammarian. From whomsoever they had their Name, certain it is, they were a very warlike people. Eo armorum pugnaque amantes, (saith Pomponius Mela) ut aliena etiam bella appetere, who when they had no Wars at Home, would seek out for Action. A little before the time of Xerxes, Mausolus reigned here, whose Wife Artemesia (lately mention'd) aided that King in his Undertakings against Greece. Afterwards, in the time of Alexander the Great, we met with Ada, Queen hereof, who aided him against the Persians; adopting him for her Son and Successor; Subject after her decease to the Macedonians, it followed the same Fortune with the rest of these Provinces, till the defeat of Antiochus near Magnesia: In the division of whose Spoils it was given to the Rhodians, incorporated not long after to the State of Rome, and made a Province of the Empire. Wrested from the Eastern Emperors by the Turks of the Selzuccian Family; the greatest part hereof, on the death of Aladine II. was raised unto a petit Kingdom by the name of Mentesia, so call'd from Mendos, (or Mindus) the chief City of it; the residue being laid to the Caraman Kingdom, both long ago subdued by the Ottoman Family: That of Mentesia, by Mahomet, Sirnamed the Great, who dispossessed Elias the last Prince thereof, An. 1451.

Lycia is bounded on the East with Pamphylia; on the West with Caria; on the North with parts of Lydia, and Phrygia Major; on the South with the Mediterranean Sea. Environed on three sides with the Mountain Taurus, which part it from the Countries above-mention'd; by consequence naturally strong, and not very accessible: The Sea for the space of twenty Miles shutting up the fourth. And here is to be observ'd, that besides this, there was a little Region of the same name not far from Troy, not much observ'd by our Geographers, either old or new, but mention'd sometimes by the Poets; as in Virgil, Aeneid. 4. Qualis ubi hyberniam Lyciam Xanthique fluentis Describit, &c. which is meant plainly of the Phrygian, or Trojan Lycia; the word Hyberna being added, because of its Northern situation in respect of this. Of this somewhat hath been said before in Phrygia Minor. In which also that there was a River call'd Xanthus, appears not only by those words of Virgil which are cited there, but by two passages in Oenones's Epistles unto Paris no less evident.

The people hereof were sometimes call'd Xanthi from Xanthus the chief River hereof, which rising in two Springs from the root of Mount Cadmus, passeth by a Town call'd Xanthus also, and falleth into the Sea. But generally they were call'd Lycii, and the Country Lycia, from Lycus the Son of Pandion King of Athens; who either ther conquered them, or did some memorable Act amongst them, which deserved that honour.

The principal Mountain of this Country, and indeed of Asia, is the Mountain Taurus, which hath its beginning in this Province, extending Eastward to the great Oriental Ocean; of which somewhat hath been said already, and more is to be said hereafter, when these Hills are grown unto the greatest.

One of the Branches of it, and the most notable in this Country, is that call'd Chimera, vomiting flames of Fire like Stieilian Etna; the bottom whereof was infested with Serpents, the middle parts grazed upon by Goats, and the higher parts made dangerous by the Dens of Lions. Hence by the Poets made a Monster, having the Head of a Lion, the Body of a Goat, and the Tail of a Serpent; according unto that of Ovid in his Metamorphosis:

Quoque Chimæra jago molis in partibus Hercum, Pectus & ora Leo, caudam Serpentis habebat.

In English thus:

Chimera from a Goat her mid-part takes,
From Lions Head and Breast, her Tail from Snakes.

This dangerous Mountain was first planted and made habitable by the care of Bellerophon, a noble Grecian, who is therefore fabled by the Poets to have killed this Monster; employed upon this business by Tetares, the King of Lycia, to whom he had been sent by Proetus, King of Argos, who was jealous of him, and sent his Letters to require that King to kill him. Whence came the saying, Bellerophonis literas portare; applied to those, who were unawares employed to carry Letters tending to their own destruction; such as those carried by Uriah to Joab the General, by command of David.

This Country was so populous, that anciently there was reckoned three score Cities in it, of which six and thirty remained in the time of St. Paul, now nothing left of them but the Names and Ruins. Those of chief note were, 1. Myra, the Metropolis of Lycia, when a Roman Province; by consequence an Archbishops See, when Christian. St. Nicolas, one of the Bishops hereof, in the Primitive times, is said to have been a great Patron of Scholars: His Festival annually holden on the sixth of December, is celebrated in the Church of Rome with several Pastimes; and still in some Schools here in England, (as in that of Burford in the County of Oxon, where I had my Breeding, and my Birth) for a Feast, and a Play-day. Of this City there is mention, Acts 27. 5. 2. Telmessus, the Inhabitants whereof are famous for South-saying, and accounted the first Interpreters of Dreams. 3. Patara, or Patras, (formerly call'd Sataros) beautified with a fair Haven, and many Temples; one of them dedicated to Apollo, with an Oracle in it, for Wealth and Credit equal unto that of Delphos. 4. Phaselis on the Seaside also, a Nest of Pirates in the times of the Roman greatness, by whom then haunted and enriched, as Algir is now; but taken by Servilius, a Roman Captain, at such time as Pompey scoured the Seas. And unto the Pirates of this Town the former Ages were indebted for the first invention of those swift Vessels, which the Romans call'd a Phaselus, by the name of the Town; we may render it a Brigantine. 5. Cognus, with the Mountain of the same name, thrusting out eight Points, or Promontories near to the Chimæra. 6. Rhodia, or Rhodiopolis, as Pliny calleth it, most probably of the Foundation of the neighbouring Rhodians. 7. Solyria, on the borders hereof towards Pisidia, the people of which were conquer'd and added unto Lycia by the Sword of Bellerophon whom Jobanus with a mind to kill him, according to the request of Proetus, employed in that Service. 8. Corydalla, near the Mountain call'd Maffigrum, the Maffijetes of Pliny. 9. Podalen, the chief Town of Myra; as Podalunda is of Orbitania, two little Regions in this Country.

The Lycians were in former times a puissant People, extending their Power upon the Seas, as far as Italy. Subjected to the Persians not without great difficulty; the People with such obstinacy defending their Liberty, that some of them being brought by Hugon, Lieutenant unto Cyrus, the first Persian Monarch, they first burnt their Wives, Children, Servants, and Rides, in a common fire; and then made a furious fall upon the Enemy, by whom put all unto the Sword. To Alexander in his march this way towards Persia, they submitted without any resistance. After whose death they fell with the rest of these parts into the hand of Seleucus. On the defeat of Antiochus at the Battle of Magnesia, it was given to the Rhodians for their assistance of that War; but govern'd as a free Estate by a Common-Council of 14 Senators, elected out in their principal Cities: Over whom was one chief President, or Prince of the Senate, whom they call'd by the name of Lyciarchus. In these remained the sole power of imposing Taxes, making War and Peace, appointing Justitaries and inferior Magistrates, and all things appertaining to the publick Government. A shadow of which power they retained when brought under the Romans, and a shadow only; the Supreme power being no longer in the Senate of Lycia, but in that of Rome. Nor had their Lyciarchus any thing but an empty Name, and the vain privilege of ordering and disposing the publick Games, wherein by his Office he presided. When made a Province of the Empire, it had the same fortune as the others had, till it fell into the power of the Turks. After the death of the second Seleucus made a part of the Kingdom of Caramania; of which more anon.

14. LYCAONIA.

Lycæonia is bounded on the East with Armenia Minor, from which parted by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the West with the Greater Phrygia; on the North with Cappadocia; and on the South with Pisidia. So call'd from the Lycæones, a People of Lycia, or from the Lycæonians, Inhabitants of Lycæonia, a Town of Phrygia Major; who enlarging themselves into these parts, gave this Name unto it. Either of which I should prefer before their Conceit, who derive it from Lycæon, King of Arcadia, dispossessed by Jupiter of that Kingdom; or think that Lycæon was a King of this Country, and not of that.

Places of note herein, 1. Iconium (now Cogni) the Metropolis hereof when a Roman Province; a place of great Strength and Consequence, situated advantageously in the Mountains, for Defence and Safety, and therefore chosen for the Seat of the Turkish Kings in Lesser Asia, at such time as they were most distressed by the Western Christians; who under the command and presence of the Emperar Conrade, did in vain besiege it, forced to depart thence with great loss both of Men and Honour. Afterwards made the Seat Royal of the Aladin Kings, the former Race being extinguished by the Tartars; and finally, of the Kings of the House of Caraman, whose Kingdom, call'd the Kingdom of Caramania, contained all the South part of the Lesser Asia; that is to say, part of the Province of Caria, all Lycia, Pamphylia, Lamia, Calicia, Pisidia, and this Lycæonia. It is still the Seat of a Turkish Basha, and of a Christian Arch-Bishop, great, and well peopl'd, and the capital City of Caramania. In the Year 1658. a Turkish Basha who was in Rebellion against the Port, was defeated near this place, which lies overagainst the Western Point of Cyprus, and is now call'd Cogni by the Turks. 2. Iyllra, the Birth-place of Timothe the Evangelist; where Paul and Barnabas, having miraculously healed a Cripple, were adored as Gods; and not long after, on the instigation of some Jews which came down from Antioch and Paul, most despitely treated; Paul being stoned into the bargain, though it pleased God to raise him to life again. Act. 14. verse 19. 2. Such was the Divine pleasure of Almighty God, that he that did consent to the stoning of St. Stephen the Protomartyr, and took charge of the Cloaths of his Executioners, should suffer in the same kind wise as he had trespass'd, and feel some smart remembrance of his former Actions. 3. Dobe, honoured by the preaching of the said Apostle. 4. Laranda, so call'd by Procomy, and still preserving its old Name, the second place for Reputation next unto Iconium. 5. Adossus. 6. Paralus. 7. Cannus. 8. Caratha, with others named by Procomy; but not else observable.

Nor indeed were the Lycornians themselves, from whomsoever they descended, of any great note or observation in the former times; subject to Cappadocia when it was a Kingdom, and reckoned as part of it in the time of Procomy, when made a Province of the Empire. Dismembred from it by some of the following Emperors, either to create new Offices and Preferments for some Court-Favourite, or to satisfy the Ambition of some Prelates, aspiring to the dignity of a Metropolitan, it was made a Province of its self. Torn from the Empire by the Turks, it was at first a member of the Selzuccian Kingdom, as afterwards of the Caramanian. Which last founded by Caraman, a great Prince of the Turks, on the death of Aladine the Second, the last King of the Selzuccian Family, was a great Eye-sore unto those of the House of Ottoman, from the time of Amurath the First, who first warred upon it, to the Reign of Bajazet the Second, who in fine subverted it, An. 1486. as shall be shewn hereafter, when we come to Cilicia, the last of the Provinces of that Kingdom, in the course of this Work.

The Turks began their Incursions into that part of Asia which bordereth on Cappadocia, and Lycania, under the Reign of Romanus Diogenes, Emperor of C. P. about the Year 1072. when that Empire was involved in destructive Civil Wars. Diogenes, the Emperor, attempting to put a stop to this furious Torrent, being this Year overcome in Battle, and taken Prisoner, which Victory gave a beginning to this Kingdom.

A. C.

1072. 1. Cutlumefes the first Sultan, Uncle by the Father's side to Tangrolipix, first Sultan-General to the Turks, and the Conqueror of the greater part of the Grecian Asiatick Provinces. This Prince had before this time possess'd himself of Iconium, and upon this Victory he endeavour'd to get into his Power all the Countries which his Nephew had conquer'd; but the Caliph interposing Axan, retained the upper Provinces, and Cutlumefes was to enjoy what he could conquer in the Lesser Asia. He left behind him two Sons, Solyman, and Mazkurius.

2. Solyman the Elder succeeded him, and pushed on his Father's Conquests; he took in the greatest part of Bythmia, and the City of Nice, which he made ever after the Seat of his Kingdom, and after it Antioch; and in the Year 1084. he overthrew Serfold, Sultan of Aleppo, but the Year after was overthrown and slain by his Successor.

1085. 3. Apelchafem, Solyman's Governor, or General, upon the Death of his Master, usurped all his Dominions, but was soon after taken and slain.

4. Chitziasthan, or Chitziesthan, or Ker-Astan, the eldest Son of Solyman, next succeeded, and inherited the War with the Greeks, which he compos'd, and fell upon Tzicba another Turk, who had taken Smyrna, Ibessa, under the Reign of Alexius Comnenus, whom he treacherously slew. Alexius hereupon restor'd Nice to the Sultan in the Year 1115. which had been taken by the Christians in their passage to the Holy Land with much difficulty, in the Year 1107. Chitziasthan resigned this City to his Brother, with Lycania, and settled at Iconium.

5. Chitziasthan II. Son of the former, succeeded his Father, and settled also at Iconium. He was slain by Almut his Ballard-Brother.

1116. 6. Almut, a Ballard of Chitziasthan the First, by the Forces of Grass, Prince of Turcomania, obtain'd the Sultan of Iconium. He fought Tartiman, Sultan of Cappadocia, and Nouman of Syria, and John and Emmanuel Comneni; from all which was he come off a gainer.

7. Chitziasthan III. Son of Almut, and Sultan of Iconium. In the Year 1176. he gave Emmanuel Comnenus so great an overthrow, that he never joyed after it. Towards his latter End he became a Christian, as Abul-Fazl, and other Writers say.

1182. 8. Chitziasthan the eldest Son of the former, succeeded; his Mother was a Christian, and the Daughter of the Count of Tolice; he fought Frederick I. in his passage to the Holy Land, and was beaten out of his Country by that Prince, 1188. and 1189. who obtained three Victories in that Passage; after this he had with Alexius Angelus, Emperor of C. P. whom he afterwards visited at C. P. He had a Son call'd Kutepes, or Melec, but was succeeded by 1200. 9. Rucratin, or Rucnodin, his Brother, who in Conjunction with Alexius, invaded his Territories. He did not long continue in his Friendship to the Greeks, pretending they had suborn'd Assassins to murder him; however, his Reign was not long, for he died in the Year 1204.

1204. 10. Chitziasthan hereupon returned, and regain'd his lost Kingdom. After this he retok Nice, and took Attalia from Theodorus, Luscaris, Constantinople, being then in the Hands of the Franks, or Latins; and the Eastern Emperors not able to defend themselves against the Turks, and Pilgrims, and yet at last Theodorus the Emperor slew this Sultan in Battle with his own Hands.

1207. 11. Kutepes, or Melec, succeeded, and is call'd also Ezzadinus Caccam. He died during the Siege of Damata, in 1219. and is reported to have been a Well wisher to the Christians, but warr'd against them by the Procurement of Saladin, his Father-in-law.

1219. 12. Azatimus, or Alatimus, or Aladin Caccabidus, Brother of Melec, succeeded him, his Children being all too young to be trust'd in such a beset Kingdom. He was a Prince of great Prudence and Valour, and restor'd the State of the Turks which was then very low. In the Year 1235. he by a Letter sent to Pope Gregory IX. shew'd a great inclination to embrace the Christian Religion. The next year after he died before Satalia, a Town of Armenia; others say in 1238.

1235. 13. Gatafadinus, Japhatius, Jathatinus, Azatimus, or Gathodin, Caccabidus, according to the various ways of Writing, was the only Son, and Successor of Azatim, by the help of Franks, who served him and his Father as Mercenaries;

Mercenaries; who persuaded him to put his Father's Widow and his two Brothers to Death, that he might establish himself. He that gave this Counsel, design'd afterwards to murder Gaiasadin himself too; but in this he was prevented, and perished with the rest. During the Reign of this Prince, in the Years 1292. and 1293. the Tartars invaded his Country, took his Cities, and rifled his Provinces. Upon their going off, one Coterin, a Turk, endeavoured to usurp his Kingdom, but was slain by the Lord of Lambron. Gaiasadin died at Attalia, or Sattalia, in Octob. 1245. He had three Sons, Azadin, Raconad, and Altadin.

1245. 14. Raconad, or Rasnaddin, succeeded him in the Sultany of Iconium; being set up by Selasadin, a person of great Power and Interest; he was then about eleven years of Age, and was born of a Greek Mother, who was then living. Lofyn, the General of the Turkish Forces under his Father, opposed him, and slew Selasadin in his Quarrel, but he maintained his Post, and made a Peace with the Tartars; In the Year 1254. the Tartars again renewed the War against him; and the next year took him Prisoner.

1255. 15. Azadin, the eldest Son of Gaiasadin, ascended his Father's Throne, Raconad being carried into Captivity by the Tartars. This Prince is call'd in the Turkish Annals Aladin. In the Year 1260. upon an Invasion of the Tartars, he was forced with his Wife and Children to fly to the Emperor Michael Palaeologus to C. P. he endeavoured after this to have recovered his Government, but died in the Attempt, leaving his Wife and Children in the Hands of the Emperor, who kept them Prisoners.

1261. 16. Melec, the eldest Son of Azadin, was rather the Heir of his Father's Calamity than Kingdom, which he endeavoured to regain, but was opposed by Amur, the principal of the Nobility, who getting together a great Army, drove Melec into Exile. And hereupon the Turkish Affairs fell into an Anarchy, and that gave occasion to the Rise of the Ottoman Family. The time of this Prince's Death is not expressed by my Author, he saith he was proclaim'd Sultan, but did never quietly enjoy it, being soon after overthrown by Haly, the Son of Amur.

Pisidia hath on the East Armenia Minor; on the West some part of Lycia and Phrygia Major; on the North Lycania; on the South Pamphylia, and some part of Cilicia; from which parted by the main body of Mount Taurus. So call'd from the Pisidæ, the Inhabitants of it; but the reason of their Name I find not amongst my Authors.

The Country small, but furnished with great plenty of all Provisions, as appeareth by that passage of Livy, where speaking of the Expedition of Manlius into these parts, he telleth us that he came into the Fields of Sagalassa, (one of the Cities hereof) being of a rich Soil, and plentiful of all manner of Fruit, Inde ventum est (saith he) in agrum Sagalassarum, uberem fertilisque omni genere frugum: But this is to be understood only of the Plains and Champian, the Mountainous parts hereof being (like others of that nature) poor and barren.

Towns of most observation in it. 1. Antioch, the Metropolis hereof, when a Province of the Roman Empire, call'd for distinction sake Antiochia Pisidiæ; mention of which is made Acts 4. and of the Jews Synagogue therein, honoured by St. Paul's preaching, the sum of whose divine Sermon is there repeated. Built by Seleucus, the first King of Syria of the Macedon Race, and by him so call'd in honour of his Father Antiochus. 2. Seleucia, the foundation of the same Seleucus, call'd also, to distinguish it from others of that Name, Seleucia Pisidiæ. 3. Lysimachus, on the borders hereof towards Phrygia. 4. Silge, a Colony of the Lacedæmonians. 5. Sagalassa, situate in the most fruitful part of all this Country, as appears by that of Livy before mention'd. 6. Cremna, which only had the honour of a Roman Colony. 7. Termessus, strongly situate in the Strights of the Mounts, the hilly Country about which hath the name of Alieus. 8. Olaia. 9. Phanassa, of which little memorable.

As for these Pisidæ, they were originally descended of the Solyms, Inhabitants of the Borders of Lyca. A valiant People, and so affirmed to be by Livy, who calleth them longè multimos bello. Nor did he speak it without cause, this small Nation holding out against the Persians, and not conquered by them, when their great Neighbours were subdued. Against these, Cyrus, the Brother of Artaxerxes Mnemon, King of Persia, did pretend a Quarrel, as if they had trespassed on the borders of his Province. Which though perhaps they had not done, yet this gave him good occasion to levy an Army, pretending revenge on them, but intending to dispossess his Brother of the Persian Monarchy: But Tisaphernes Lieutenant to the King in Asia, seeing greater Preparations than were sufficient to oppose the weak Pisidians, made the King acquainted with his Suspicions, who accordingly provided for Resistance. The Army of Cyrus consisting of 12000 Grecians, and 100000 Persians. The Kings Forces were no fewer than 90000 fighting Men. They met at Cunaxa, not far from Babylon, where Cyrus lost both the Victory and his Life. The Grecians who had made their side good, and stood in honourable terms of Composition, being by Tisaphernes betrayed, lost the best of their Company. The rest under the conduct of Xenophon, made safe retreat home in despite of 200000 Men which followed at their Heels. This Xenophon was an Agent in, and the Hellenian of this Expedition; by whose Example the Spartans first, and after them the Macedonians were encouraged to attempt the Conquest of Persia. But to return to these Pisidians, they fell, with others of their Neighbours, under the power of the Macedonians, and were made part of the Dominion of Seleucus. Abandoned by Antiochus to the will of the Romans, and settled in Obedience by the Military progress of Manlius, spoken of before; they were in Ptolemy's time annexed to Pamphylia, as a part thereof. Afterwards made a distinct Province of it self, and so continued till those parts of the Eastern Empire were subdued by the Turks: First part of the Selucian and Aladinian Kingdoms, after of the Kingdom of Caramania; whereof more anon.

Pamphylia is bounded on the East with Isauria and Cilicia; on the West with Lycia, from which parted by a branch of the Taurus; on the North with Pisidia, separated from it by the main Body of that Mountain; and on the South with the Mediterranean Sea, which in those parts which lie next to it, is call'd Mare Pamphylum. The reason of the Name I find not, unless we think with Metaphrastes, that it was so named, quod ex omnibus gentibus constata esset, because inhabited by a mixture of many Nations; for so Pamphylia in the Greek Tongue doth expressly signifie. And probable enough it is, that lying near unto the Sea, with an open Shore, opposite to Asiatick, near Syria, and not far from Greece, several Nations from those parts might repair unto it; and from thence the Name.

The Country for the most part is very Mountainous, over-run with the Branches of Mount Taurus; but these Branches feed great store of Goats, of whose Hair are made abundance of Chamlets and Grograins, not inferior unto Silks for fineness. Towards the Sea, which for the space of an hundred and fifty Miles Coasts along this Shore, more pleasant, populous, and fruitful; well watered, and as well planted. The principal Rivers hereof, being 1. Cataractus. 2. Cestrus; and 3. Eurimedon; nigh to which last, Simon the Son of Miltiades, Captain-General of the Athenian Army, overthrew in one day both the Sea and Land Forces of the Persians. The manner thus: Having by plain force broke their Navy, of which he took and sunk no fewer than forty Ships, and three thousand Gallies, he stowed the Persian Vessels with his best Men, attired in the Habit, and wearing the Colours of the Persians in the tops of their Ships. In their approach the Camp was opened, and all prepared to entertain their victorious Countrymen, but the Greeks once in, suddenly put them to the Sword, and took twenty thousand of them Prisoners.

Principal Cities of it, 1. Attalia, founded by Ptolomy Philadelphus King of Egypt, and for long time the greatest and most flourishing City of all this Province; well fenced, and seated very commodiously for Trade, on a very fair Bay, now call'd Golfo di Sattalia, by the name of the Town, but little altered. And though the Romans did confer the Honour of the Metropolitan City upon Aspendus, yet still Attalia had the start in point of Riches, and is to this day a wealthy and well-traded Empory, the wealthier for the fair Tapestries which are herein made. Of this Town there is mention, Acts 14. ver. 25. 2. Perga, famous in old times for a Temple of Diana, and the yearly Festivals there held in honour of her, from whence call'd Diana Pergæa; more famous in the fulness of time, for St. Paul's Preaching in it, mention'd Acts 14. ver. 25. 3. Syde, renowned in times of Gentilism, for a Temple of Pallas. 4. Magydus, on the Seaside, not far from Syde. 5. Aspendus, an in-land Town, but strongly situate; made the Metropolis of the Province in the time of the Romans; remarkable for the Fiddlers, or Musicians of it, who with one Hand both held their Harp, and plaid upon them, keeping the other free for more gainful uses; whence the Proverb of Aspendus, Citharista, an Aspendian Harper, by which they signified a Thief. The Town first founded by the Argives, the Colony sent thither being led by Mopsus, from whom the Country hereabouts had the name of Mopsia. 6. Olbia, not far from Attalia. 7. Caracensium; and 8. Colobrassus, two of the Towns of that part hereof which had the name of Cilicia Aspera; as 9. Cretopolis, and 10. Menedemium, of that part which was call'd Carbalia.

Of these Pamphylians there is little to be said in point of Story, but that they were for the most part on the suffering hand; subject from time to time to those mightier Princes, who would not let their Neighbours rest in quiet by them. Being on the same side of Taurus, and of easie Access, they became first Vassals to the Syrian, and after to the Persian Kings. When Alexander passed that way, in his March towards Persia, he took all the Sea-Towns of it: The whole brought under with the rest of the Asian Provinces, by Antigonus first, after by Seleucus the great King of Syria. In the expiration of whose Line, this People and their Neighbours of Cilicia, being left to themselves, and tempted by Mithridates to his Faction, began to be troublesome on the Seas, and proved notable Pirates, and were the first Authors or Inventors of those Gallies of an hundred and forty, or an hundred and sixty Oars apiece; which the Italians call from hence by the name of Pamphyli. But forced to leave this Trade at last, being Warred upon by the Romans with great Forces both by Sea and Land (a fuller Narrative whereof we shall have in Cilicia) in the conclusion of that War, they lost that liberty which so small a time they had enjoyed, and were made Vassals unto Rome. Afterwards made a Province of the Asian Diocese, they ran the same Fortune with the rest, till subdued by the Turks; and at the death of Aladine, were seized on by Caraman, and so became a part of his Kingdom; of which we shall hear more when we come to Cilicia. And so much for the Provinces of the Asian Diocese (the Provinces of the Isles excepted, whereof more anon) converted to the Christian Faith by three great Apostles; but most especially by St. Paul, of whose Travels through most Cities and Regions of it, there is such pregnant Evidence in the Book of Acts. And that St. Peter and St. John had also their parts herein, appears by the Revelation of the one, and the first Epistle of the other: Paul planting, John and Peter watering, but God himself giving the Increase. Pass we on next unto Isauria and Cilicia, which though Provinces of the Diocese of the Orient, were parts of the Caramanian Kingdom; of which having taken a Survey, and so cleared our selves of this Peninsula, we will then sail about such Islands as make up the remainder of the Asian Diocese.

17. IS A U R I A. 18. C I L I C I A.

These two, though distinct Provinces, I have joyned together, because the first was only a part of the last; Cilicia anciently comprehending both: The Fortunes of both being the same also in point of Story, which makes the Conjunction the more natural.

Isauria, a mountainous and hilly Province, seated on both sides of Taurus, hath on the East and South the rest of Cilicia, whereof anciently it was a part; on the North Pisidia; on the West Pamphylia. So call'd from Isaurus, the chief City of it, when first made known unto the Romans; which being taken by Servilius the Proconsul, impoyed by Pompey in that Service, reduced the conquered Country under the Command of Rome, and gave unto the Conqueror the Surname of Isauricus.

The quality of the Soil, and whole Estate of this small Province, take thus from Ammianus Marcellinus, who had seen these Countries. Ciliciæ lateri dextro annexa Isauria, uberi palmite viret, & frugibus multis; quam mediam, flumen navigabile Calicadnus intersecundit, &c. i. e. "On the right Hand of Cilicia lieth Isauria, a Province of a wealthy Soil, plentiful of Vines, and much other Fruits, which the River Calicadnus parteth in the very midst. Beautified, besides many Towns, with two principal Cities. 1. Seleucia, founded by Seleucus; and 2. Claudiopolis, into which Claudius the Emperor brought a Roman Colony. For as touching 3. Isaurus, heretofore a walled City, and of most esteem, it hath been long ago destroyed, as yielding too secure a Refuge to the neighbouring Rebels; inso-much, that now there are scarce any visible Tracts of its former greatness. And not much after, hæ duæ Provincie bello quendam Piratico catarvis mixtæ Prædonum, à Servilio Proconsule missæ sub jugum, factæ sunt veltigales. i. e. "These Provinces (Cilicia and this) heretofore in the Piratical War joyning with those Robbers, were brought under by Servilius the Proconsul, and made subject to the State of Rome. And here we have in brief the nature of the Country, the names of the chief Rivers, and the principal Cities, with so much of the Story as relates to the first subjugation of it. What further doth concern it we shall hear in Cilicia, upon the which it did depend.

2. Cilicia is bounded on the East with Syria, or rather that part thereof which is call'd Comagena, separated from which part by a Branch of the Mountain Taurus, call'd Amanus; on the West with Pamphylia; on the North with Isauria, and Armenia Minor; on the South with the Mediterranean, and Syria, specially so call'd. It was thus named, as the old Tradition was, from Cilix, the Brother of Cadmus the Phœnician, a near near Neighbour to it: But as Bochartus (of whose Humour I have told you often) from Calistikm, a Phœnician word, signifying Stones, quia lapidea est Regio, because in some parts, especially in that which is call'd Cilicia Thracæa, or Cilicia Aspera, it was very stony. It is now call'd Caramania, as the last Province of the Caramanian Kingdom, which held out for those falling Princes, when the rest was conquer'd by the Turks of the Ottoman Race.

The Country said by Marcellinus to be Terra dives omnibus bonis, wealthy and fruitful of all Necessaries. Which Character holdeth good, chiefly in the Eastern parts, which heretofore had the name of Cilicia Campestris; the Western parts lying towards Pamphylia, formerly call'd Cilicia Aspera, being rough and stony. But generally where the Lands lie in several, and are duly cultivated, it answereth to the former Character; being also very well water'd, and having a fair and large Sea-coast for the space of three hundred Miles and upwards. Which notwithstanding it is not much traded, and but meanly inhabited; a great part of the Country lying in large and common Fields, to which none can lay any proper Claim, and therefore planted only with Goats and Sheep: Out of which the Commoners on all sides raise good profit by Cheese and Butter, by their Fleeces chiefly. Here is also a good breed of Horses, of which six hundred yearly are culled out for the special Service of the Grand Seigneur. But as they have some profitable and useful Creatures, so they have others as dangerous and hurtful to them; especially those which the vulgar Grecians call the Squilachi, of a mixt making betwixt a Dog and a Wolf; which go in Troops, and are so bold, and thievish withal, as they use to set upon a Man as he is asleep, and leave him neither Hat, Cloak, nor Fardel, nor any thing they can conveniently get from him.

Chief Rivers hercof are, 1. Pyramus, now call'd Malmistra, which rising on the Northside of the Taurus, and forcing his Passage through that Mountain, makes such a noise in falling down the Precipices and Rocks thereof, as resemblanceth at a great distance a Clap of Thunder. 2. Orymagdus. 3. Calicadnus, spoken of before. 4. Cidnus, which riseth in the Anti-Taurus; a River of a violent Course, and so cold a Water, that as Pliny writes, it cureth the Gout: The Waters of which proved very dangerous to Alexander the Great, the coldness of them striking violently into his Stomach; and deadly to Frederick the first Emperor of the Germans, as he here bathed himself, the violence of the Stream tripping up his Heels, and he not able to recover, was presently drowned.

Of their chief Hills I need add nothing, having already said that the Country is parted by Amanus from Syria, and by Taurus it self from Pisidia and Armenia Minor; not easie of entrance by the first, but very difficult by the last: The Streights thereof call'd Pilæ Ciliciæ, or the Ports of Cilicia, being indeed so streight, and almost impassable, that had they been guarded, or regarded by the Persians, as they should have been, the Progress of Alexander's Victories might have ended there. But Arsenes, who had the charge of them, durst not stand his ground, and so left them open to the Enemy, whom by those Ports he put into the possession of the Kingdom of Persia. With better Faith, though no better Fortune, did the Soldiers of Pescennius niger make good these Streights against the Emperor Severus; the Monarchy of the World lying the second time at the Stake, and to be tried for in this Cock-pit. For the Nigrians possessed of these Streights and Entrances, courageously withstood the Severian Party; till at last a sudden Tempest of Rain and Thunder continually darning in their Faces, (as if the very Heavens had been armed against them) they were fain to leave the Passage, and therewith the Victory to the adverse Faction, having sold that at the loss of 20000 of their own Lives, which Alexander had the happiness, or the hap, to buy for nothing.

In the borders of this Country, towards Pamphylia, lived a Tribe, or Nation call'd the Soli, originally of Attica: But in long tract of time disused from converse and communication with their Countrymen, they speak that Language so corruptly, that from their barbarous manner of Pronunciation, and as rude Expression, came the word Solecismus. Yet amongst these were born three Men of eminent Note; that is to say, Chrysippus the Philosopher, Philemon and Aratus the Poets; out of the Writings of which last, St. Paul vouchsafed to use this Passage, ὡς ὁ θεὸς ἐξουὶαν ἰ. ε. For we are all of his Offspring, Acts 17. ver. 28. That blessed Apostle thought himself never the worse Preacher, for being brought up in humane Learning, at the Feet of Gamaliel, nor held it any disparagement to the influences of the Holy Ghost, to make use of it in his Sermons and divine Discourses; and therefore to prevent those Cavils which Ignorance, or Misprision might chance to make in times succeeding, hath thrice vouchsafed the Words and Testimony of Heathen Writers, viz. of Epimenides, Tit. 1. ver. 12. of Menander, 1 Cor. 15. ver. 33. and that of Aratus before-mention'd. So lawful is it in this kind, for those of the Spiritual Israel, to rob the Egyptians; and to make this Hagar serviceable to her Mistress Sarah.

Principal Cities of this Province, 1. Solz, the Habitation of the Soli, before remembred; by some said to be built by Solon the Athenian; but generally affirmed to have been planted by those of Rhodes and Attica; mistakingly call'd Heliopolis, by Qu. Curtius, which is as much in Latine as Solis Civitas, or the City of the Sun. On the site hereof then decayed and ruinous, (the Town having been destroyed by Tigranes the Armenian King, in his late Wars against the Romans) did Pompey build his City of Pompeiopolis after his Victory over the Pirates; who not only Lorded it over the Seas, and consequently obstructed Trade and Merchandize, but wasted and spoiled the Villages of Italy it self. Pompey being Victor, and having inflicted exemplary Punishment on the Ring-leaders, with the rest, peopled this new Town, and the Country adjoyning, allowing them competent possessions, lest Want and Necessity should again enforce them to the like courses. An action truly commendable, and worthy so great a Captain, rather to take an occasion of offending from the People, than after Offence done, to punish them. Hythlodæus in the Utopia, somewhat bitterly though perhaps not unjustly, inveigheth against the Laws of England, for ordaining Death to be the Punishment of Theft. Cum multo potius providendum fuerit, uti aliquis esset proventus vitæ; ne cuiquam sit tam dira furandi primum deinde pereundi necessitas. Whereas (saith he) the Laws ought to make provision for putting Men into some orderly course of Life, and not let them run upon the necessity of Stealing first, and then being hanged for it. 2. Tarsus, the Birth-place of St. Paul the Apostle; for that sufficiently famous, were there nothing else to commend it to consideration: But it was a Town withal of great Note and Consequence, the Metropolis first of all Cilicia, and after the division of Cilicia Prima. The Inhabitants whereof had the privilege of Roman Citizens. Situate in a goodly Plain on the Banks of the Cydus, and by some said to be the work of Sardanapalus the last King of Assyria, it being engraven on a Monument erected to him, that in one day he had built this Tarsus. And 3. Anchiala, another City of this Country, near the Seaside, and not far from the Promontory Zephyrium. Of the same date, (if the said Monument speak truth) but neither of the same Fortune nor Countenance, that being utterly decayed, but Tarsus still remaining of great Wealth and Strength. Much spoken of in the Wars of the Holy Land, and in the Stories of the Caramanian and Ottoman Kings. And though the Tarsians to ingratiate themselves with Julius Cæsar, would needs have their Country call'd Julopolis, yet the old Name survived the new,

new, and it is to this day call'd Tersia, or Teraſſa by the vulgar Grecians; but Hamſia by the Turks; as Bellonius telleth us. 4. Adena, the Adana of Ptolomy, a large Town, but unwall'd, instead whereof defended by a very strong Castle. Situate in a fruitful Soil, both for Wine and Corn, wherewith the Town is always furnished for the use of those that are to travel over the Taurus, who commonly take in here three days Provision. 5. Epiphania, the Birth-place of George the Arian, Bishop of Alexandria; thrust on the World of late by some learned Men, (but of more Industry than Judgment) for George the Cappadocian Martyr. 6. Mopſueſtia, as famous, or infamous rather, for giving Title to Theodorus Mopſueſtenus, Bishop hereof, and a great Patron of the Nestorian Heresies, in the time of St. Chryſoſtom. The City otherwise of good Note, and of great Consequence, in the course of the Roman Wars, described at large by Ammianus Marcellinus. 7. Iſſus, upon a spacious Bay, call'd hence Sinus Iſſicus, near the borders of Syria; memorable for the great Battle here fought betwixt Alexander and an handful (in comparison) of his Macedonians, and that vast Army of Darius, (himself there in person) consisting of 600000 undisciplin'd Asians; whereof so many lost their Lives, that the dead Bodies seemed to have buried the Ground; for, partly by the unskilfulness of the Commanders, who chose so ill a place to fight in, that they could make no use of their mighty Numbers; and partly by the effeminateness of the Asian Soldiers, unable to endure the Charge, there fell that day no fewer than 200000 of the Persians, 40000 of them being taken Prisoners, amongst them the Wives and Daughters of Darius, and not above 100 of the Alexandrians, if Qu. Curtius be not partial in relating the Story. A Victory which assured Alexander of his former Purchases, and opened a way unto the rest: The Persians not being able to make head again, till he had pierced into the Bowels of their Empire, and added Syria, and Egypt to his former Conquests. Of so great Consequence is one full Victory to the losing and getting of a Kingdom. This Town it self now call'd Aiazzo, and the great Bay on which it standeth, Golfo di Aiazzo. 8. Alexandria, built by Command of the Conqueror near the place of Battle, commodiously for Trade, as upon the Sea, but otherwise in a Fenny and Boggy Soil, which makes the Air thereto be very unwholsom to Men not used to it: little now remaining, but a few Houses on the Sea-shore built of Straw and Mud, hardly affording it the Reputation of a sorry Village, and would not long continue such, but that it is the nearest Haven to the Town of Alippo, (whereof more in Syria) which draweth unto it the resort of some Christian Factors, whose Houses are of Clay and Timber; but of them not many. The Town at first call'd Alexandria, as before was said, diminished first to Alexandretta, now call'd Scanderone. 9. Neapolis, another of Alexander's Foundations, so named in memory of his great Victory before mention'd. 10. Amavetia, a City of great Antiquity in the time of Strabo, and the Metropolis of the Province of Cilicia Secunda. 11. Heraclea, mention'd by Bellonius, and by him placed in a fruitful and well-cultivated Plain, at the Foot of Mount Taurus; a fair and large Town, as he reporteth it, and distant from Adana towards the Northwest about three days Journey. But I find no such Town in Strabo, or Ptolomy, or any other of the Ancients. 12. Scandoloro, a City of Cilicia Aspera, or that part of Cilicia which lyeth towards Pamphylia, heretofore with the adjoining Territory govern'd as a State distinct, when all the rest of this Country was under the Kings of Caramania; against whom the Prince hereof, being a Mabometan, had preserved his Liberties, by the assistance of the Knights of Rhodes, and the Kings of Cyprus. And when the Caramanian Kingdom was subdued by Bajazet, he made so good Conditions for himself, that he had other Lands and Estates in the Lesser Asia assigned to him in exchange for this; and so surrender'd this to the Will of the Conqueror.

The first Inhabitants of this Country were of the Progeny of Tarshish, the Son of Javan, by whom, or some of his Posterity, to preserve his Memory, the City of Tarsus was first built. Increased in tract of time by some new Colonies out of the neighbouring parts of Syria, it followed for the most part the Fortunes of it; successively together subject to the Assyrians, Persians, and Macedonians. In the declining Fortunes of the House of Seleucus they began to stand upon their own Legs; and might have continued longer in so good a posture, had they not hearkened to ill Councils. Tempted by Mitridates to joyn with him against the Romans, of whose Greatness all the Eastern States were grown very jealous; and being naturally good Sea-faring Men, they began, together with the Pamphylians, to infest the Seas. At first they ventured no further than the Shores adjoining. But after emboldned with Success, and finding that the Romans were sufficiently embroiled in Domestick troubles, and a sharp War with Mitridates, fell upon the Coasts of Greece, and in fine, of Italy it self; Publius Servilius, the Proconsul, first employed against them, gave them an overthrow at Sea; and following his good Fortune, set upon them in their Harbours and retiring-places. In which pursuit he not only took from them Phaselis, a strong Town in Lycia, one of their Retreats, and others of their best and strongest Receptacles; but wasting the whole Country of Cilicia, fell upon Isaurus, the most defensible Town thereof, which he took and ransacked. No sooner was Servilius departed home, but they broke out more violently than before; filling all the Creeks and Ports of the Eastern Seas with their Frigots, Brigantines, and other light Navatical Vessels, insomuch that Pompey himself thought it to be an Action not unbecoming his Greatness to undertake the War against them. And he pursued it to such purpose, that having Armed 500 Sail of all sorts, and stored his Ships with 130000 Men, he set upon them all at once; and in the space of one sole Month made an end of the War. An Action not sufficiently to be wondred at, if we consider either the speediness of it, done in so little time as a Month; or the cheapness of the Victory, purchased without the loss of one Roman Vessel; or finally, the importance and consequence of it, the Pirates from that time not daring to infest the Seas; and all Cilicia subjected to the State of Rome. How they were afterwards disposed of, hath been shewn already. After this they did very good Service unto Pompey in his War against Cæsar; of whom thus Lucan, reckoning up his Allies and Aid.

Atque Cilix justa, nunc non Pirata, carinâ

And the reformed Cilician now
No Pirate, in his Fleet did row.

Nor were they pliant unto him only, as unto their Conqueror; but generally so tame and tractable in the time of Cicero, one of the first Proconsuls, or Lord Deputies which were sent to govern them; that he writ merrily to Rome, that he found all quiet in his Province; save that the Pantbers (some of which, one of his Friends had prayed him to send to Rome, for the adorning of his Triumph) were for fear of him fled into Pamphylia. At the first Conquest by the Romans, it was divided only into Campeſtrem and Trachæam, as was said before; of which Campeſtris was reduced immediately to the form of a Province. Aspera, or Trachæa was a while continued under the Government of Kings, till the time of Vespasian, and then made a Province as the other. By the succeeding Emperors, on some reasons of State (if not those intimated in Lycania) the number of Provinces being encreased, (though the Bounds of the Empire were no larger than they had been formerly) the whole had been divided into three; that is to say, Cilicia prima, taking up all Campeſtris wholly; Cilicia secunda, cunda, containing the Maritime parts of Cilicia Aspera; and Isauria taking up the Mountainous part of this last Division. Laid by the Emperor Constantine to the Dioecese of the Orient; and consequently subject in spiritual matters to the Patriarch of Antioch, where the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis had his usual Residence. In the falling of the Eastern Empire, it was conquer'd by the Saracens in the time of Mahomet, or Muavi the sixth Caliph. Continuing under their Command till their Declination, it was recover'd by the Greek, or Eastern Emperors, and from them conquer'd by the Turks in the course of their Victories. But the first race of Turkish Kings being worn out by the Tartars, and the Aladinian Kings ending in Aladine the Second, it was part of the new Kingdom of the Caramanians, continuing therein till the destruction of that Line by Bajazet the Second Anno 1486, by whom incorporated with the rest of the Ottoman Empire.

Thus having made our Progress over all the Provinces of the Lesser Asia, and shewn how every one of them was made subject to the Turkish Tyranny: We must next draw down the Succession of such Turkish Kings as have reigned herein, till it was wholly conquer'd by the Princes of the House of Ottoman. Concerning which we are to know in the way of Preamble, that the Turks having made themselves Masters of the Kingdom of Persia, and following their Successes into Syria also, fell to a breach amongst themselves. For making up whereof it was condescended unto by Axan, the then Persian Sultan, that Meloch and Ducat, two of his discontented Kinsmen, should be infeoffed in the Cities of Alippo and Damascus, and their several Territories, with whatsoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Egypt, possessed at that time of most part of Syria, Cilicia, and some of the adjoining Provinces. It was also then agreed upon, that a third, but nearer Kinsman, call'd Cultu Moses, another of the Leaders of the opposite Faction, should have leave to conquer for himself, whatsoever he could win from the Christian Princes: And he accordingly being furnished with a competent Army, subdued the Provinces of Media and Armenia in the Greater Asia, with Cappadocia, Pontus, and Bythynia in Asia Minor. Which, and the rest of their Affairs, take here in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor of the Selzuccian Family.

1075. 1. Cultu Moses, Nephew to Tangrolisix, the first Persian Sultan of the Turks, won Media, part of Armenia Major, Cappadocia, Pontus, and Bythynia.
2. Solyman, Son of Cultu Moses, for a while dispossessed of most of his Estates by the Western Christians, in their first passage towards the Holy Land, An. 1097; the Northern parts of which by those Christians were restored to the Grecian Empire, never recovered afterwards by the Kings of this House.
3. Mahomet, the Son of Solyman, recover'd some part of his Estates in the Lesser Asia; but outed of them, and subdued by
4. Musat, Sultan, or Lord Deputy of Iconium, for the Kings of Damascus; but of the same Selzuccian Family, who was thereby possessed of all the Turkish Provinces in the Lesser Asia.
5. Calisastlan, the Son of Musat, (to whom his Father left Iconium, with the adjacent Provinces) wrested Amasia, and Ancyra, from his Brother Jagupasan; Sebastia, and Cæsaria, from his Brother Dodune; which with their several Territories were bequeathed unto them by the Will of their Father. He overthrew the Emperor Emanuel Comnenus, and united Phrygia to his Kingdom.
6. Reucratime, the third Son of Calisastlan, having dispossessed his three Brothers, Muavi, Caicozobac, of the Phates left them by her Father, became sole Monarch of all the Turkish Provinces in the Lesser Asia. In the latter end of whose Reign, the Tartarian Cham, having driven the Turks out of Asia, many of them under the conduct of Aladin, a Prince of the same Selzuccian Family, joined themselves to their Country men here, with whose assistance Aladin from the Grecian Emperors, who in the Reign of Calo Johannes, (the Turk being then embroiled with the Western Christians) had not long before regaled him; and after the decease of Reucratime, advanced him to the whole Estate.

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor, of the Race of Aladine.

7. Aladine, descended in a direct Line from Cullares, the last of Turkish Sultan in Asia, having with many of his Nation feared himself in Cilicia, first made Iconium, one of the Cities thereof, his chief Seat or Residence; which, after the Death of Reucratime, he removed to Iconium, as the ancient Royal City of the former Kings.
8. Aladin, by some call'd Aladin, eldest Son of Aladine, waited the most part of his Reign in Wars with his Brother Jatharine, whom at last he forced into Exile.
9. Jatharine, on the Death of his Brother, possessed the Kingdom, slain afterwards in single Combat by Theodore Lascaris, Emperor of the Greeks at Nice.
10. Jatharine II. Son of the former, driven out of his Kingdom by the Tartars, and died in Exile; the Turks becoming Tributaries and Vassals unto the Tartars.
11. Majur, and Cer-cubades, of the same Selzuccian Family (but whether the Sons of the second Jatharine, I am not able to say) substituted in his place, as Tributaries to the conquering Tartars.
12. Aladine II. Son of Cer-cubades, succeeded his Father in the Kingdom, but as Vassal and Leigeman to the Tartars. After whose Death, leaving no Issue of his Body, the great Princes of his Family, divided amongst them his Dominions. To Sarachan fell Æolis, Ionia, and part of Lydia, from him named Sarachan, Sarachan, or Saracha-Illi; to Aidin the rest of Lydia, Phrygia Major, and the greatest part of the Greater Mysia, from him call'd Aidin, or Aidin-Illi; to Caratius, the Lesser Phrygia, with the rest of Mysia, from him denominated Caratius, or Carat-Ili; to the Family of the Isendians, the Cities of Heraclea, Sinope, and that part of Pontus which lieth next to Bythynia. There were also lesser Toparchies, or Subdivisions, from whence we find a Prince of Smyrna, a second of Amasia, a third of Amisus, a fourth of Scanderoon, besides many others. But the main Body of the Estate was seized by Caratius, who for his share had the whole Provinces of Lycaonia, Pisidia, Pamphylia, Isauria, Cilicia, with the Royal City of Iconium, the greatest part of Caria, (the rest of it appertaining to the Prince of Alentia) with part of Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor, and some Towns in Phrygia, continuing in his Family for as many Descents (as either of the former had held before) in great Power and Lustre, under

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor, of the House of Caraman.

13. Caraman, the first raiser of this Family, Contemporary with Ottoman the first King of that Race.
14. Aladine Son of Caraman, and Son-in law of Amurat, the first of the House of Ottoman, by whom subdued, but pardoned, and restored red unto his Estate, on the humble intreaties of his Wife.

15. Aladine II. Son of the former, subdued by Bajazet the First, and hanged by Tertumases, one of Bajazet's great Commanders.

16. Mahomet, Son of Aladine the Second, recovered his Kingdom on the Death of Bajazet, vanquished and led Captive by the mighty Tamerlane. Afterwards warred upon, and vanquished by Mahomet the Son of Bajazet, redeemed his Peace, by yielding up unto him many of his principal Towns; and was finally slain at the Siege of Attalia.

17. Ibrahim, the Son of Mahomet, and Son-in-law of Amurath the Second, against whom unadvisedly raising War, he was forced to submit, and become his Tributary: After whose Death, rebelling against Mahomet the Great, he was then also vanquished, and a Reconciliation made betwixt them.

18. Ibrahim II. by some call'd Pyramus, the Son of Ibrahim the First, supported Zemes, Brother of Bajazet the Second in his War against him; for which Bajazet having settled his Affairs, invaded and subdued the Kingdom of Caramania, killed the unfortunate King in Battle, and so united that State unto the rest of the Dominions of the House of Ottoman in 1396. The strange Successes of which House, from the first rising of it to these present times, shall be deferred till we come unto Turcomania; from whence this Nation first attempted and achieved the Conquest of Persia, and which only of all their large Possessions doth retain any thing of their Name. In the mean time we will survey the Islands of this Lesser Asia, and so proceed to their Possessions in the Greater, as they lie before us.

19. The Province of the ASIAN ISLES.

The Province of the Asian Isles comprehendeth all the Islands in Asia Minor, from the Mouth of the Hellepont to the Rhodes, reckoning that for one; united first into a Province by the Emperor Vespasian, next reckoned as a part of the Asian Diocese; and afterwards together with the Province of the Hellepont, and that of Asia properly and specially so call'd, making up the peculiar or exempt Jurisdiction of the Proconsul of Asia. Those of most consideration are, 1. Tenedos. 2. Lesbos. 3. Chios. 4. Samos. 5. Coos. 6. Icaria. 7. Patmos. 8. Claros. 9. Carpalhos. 10. Rhodes. Others of less Note having nothing memorable but their Names, are scarce worth the naming.

1. Tenedos, is situate at the Mouth of the Hellepont, over-against the noted Promontory call'd of old Sigeum, (but now Cape Janizarie) a Promontory of Troas, or the Lesser Phrygia, from which distant not above five Miles, the Isle it self in Circuit no more than Ten, swelling with a round Mountain towards the North, in other parts level; in both producing as good Wines as the best of Greece. It took name, as the general Tradition was, from Tenes the Son of Cycnus, King of a little City in the Lesser Phrygia, who being falsely accused by his Stepdame, for soliciting her to that incestuous mixture which she had violently importuned, and he as piously refused, was by the Command of his Father put into a Chest, exposed to the mercy of the Sea, and here miraculously preserved. Here for a time he is said to Reign, with great Commendation for his Justice; and afterwards going to the aid of the Trojans, to have been slain by the Hand of Achilles; of whom therefore it was not lawful to make mention in any of the Sacrifices offered in the Temples thereof. But Bochartus casting off all this as an old Wives Fable, will have it so call'd from Tim-edum a Phœnician word, signifying Red-clay, which the Porters made use of in their Earthen Vessels. A Town it had of the same name with the Island, in which a Temple sacred to Apollo Smintheus; and another call'd Asterion, situate near a little River well stored with Crab-Fish, whose Shells were made in the form of an Axe, or Hatchet. From which Town, as the Islanders have in some Authors the name of Astern; so from the other Circumstance, they are said to have the stamp of an Hatchet on their Coin, or Money. Memorable for an old Custom observed amongst them, which was, That at the back of the Judge there always stood a Man with an Axe advanced, as well to terrifie the Witnesses from giving false Evidence to the Judge, as the Judge from pronouncing a false Sentence upon the Evidence: Whence the Proverb, Tenedia securis. More memorable for the final destruction of Troy which was plotted here; the Grecians withdrawing their Forces hither as if gone in earnest; but from hence setting Sail again to surprize the Town, when they saw their Plot had took effect. And so I leave it with that Character which the Poet gives it:

Insula, dives opum Priami dum Regna manebant:
Nunc tantum sinus, & statio male-fida carinis.*

In English thus:

In sight of Troy an Island stands, well known,
Call'd Tenedos; Rich, and of great Renown,
Whilst Priam's Kingdom flourish'd; now (they say) Grown a poor Road, for Ships an unsafe Bay.

This Island being taken by the Venetians in the War of Candy, and fortify'd, very much incommoded the Trade of Constantinople for some years; but in the Year 1657, the Turks recover'd it again.

2. Lesbos, the largest of the Asian Isles, is distant from the main Land of Troas about seven Miles, 168 in compass; reckon'd the Seventh in bigness of the Mediterranean, which Aristotle in his Book de Mundo, ranketh in this order following, Τὴν ἦν αἱ καὶ ἀξιόλογοι, Σικελία, καὶ Σαρδοί, καὶ Κύπρος, καὶ Κρήνη, καὶ Ἐμβόρια, καὶ Κύπρος, καὶ Λέσβος. That is to say, The most considerable of these, are Sicilie, Sardinia, Corfica, Crete, Eubœa, Cyprus, and Lesbos. And though both Scylax in his Periplus, a nameless Poet in Eustathius, Diodorus Siculus, Strabo, and others of the Ancients, vary in ordering of the rest, according as their Information, or Phancies let them; yet Lesbos comes in the seventh place constantly, without change at all. Upon which ground Bochartus will have it call'd Lesbos, from Esbus, a Phœnician word, signifying Seven; contracted first to Esbu, by leaving out the last Syllable of it; and then by changing bu to bos, and prefixing L to the beginning. Far enough fetch'd, and were it but as dearly bought, would be good for Ladies; this Island being reckoned in the seventh place for no other reason, but because it lay further off, and most North from Sicilie, from whence they ordered their Account, and not any Mystery in the name thereof.

It had then the name from Lesbos the chief City of it, as that from Lesbus the Son of Lapythus, who married Met hymna, the Daughter of Macarius, Prince hereof; from which Macarius, it had sometimes the name of Macaria; as that of Mitylene, by which it is now commonly call'd from Mitylene, another of the Daughters of the said Macarius. And that the memory of the whole Family might be preserved in this Island, Met hymna also had a City call'd by her name, one of the principal of the Country.

The Country towards the West and South, reported to be mountainous and somewhat barren; the rest level and fruitful. Plentiful of excellent Corn, and abounding ing in delicious Wines, compared by Athenæus to Ambrosia, the Liquor of the gods, as the Poets Fable; affording also plenty of Sheep, and store of Horses, these last courageous and strong, though but low of Stature. More memorable for the eminent Persons which it hath produced, as 1. Sappho, an Heroick Woman, whose Invention was the Sapphick Verse; and therefore call'd the Tenth Muse. 2. Pittacus, one of the seven Wisemen of Greece. 3. Theophrastus, that notable Physician and Philosopher. 4. Alcaeus, the successor of Orpheus in the excellency of Lyrical Poësie; and 5. Arion, the Musician, who was so perfect on his Harp, that being cast into the Sea playing on that Instrument, a Dolphin took him on his Back, and wafted him safe as far as Corinth, where he related the whole Story unto Periander, attested by the Mariners who had thrown him overboard. And though this be by some rejected as a Poetical Fiction; yet past all doubt, the Man was not only an excellent Musician, but an eminent Poet, the first inventor of Tragedies, a chief Lyrick, and the Author of the Verse call'd Dithyrambick.

Principal Towns herein, 1. Lesbos, ἀφ' ἧς ὄλεν. νῆσος Ἀἰσβῶ ἐλέγετο, from whom (saith Stephanus) the whole Island had the name of Lesbos. 2. Metbymna, so named from Mithymna, one of the Daughters of Macarius, spoken of before. 3. Mitylene, so nam'd from the other Daughter, and Wife of Lesbus, now the chief City of the Island; seated on a Peninsula, looking towards the main Land, strong by Nature, and fortified by Art; enjoying on either side a commodious Haven, that on the South most fit for Gallies, the other capable of Ships of burden. Beautified heretofore with magnificent Buildings, and sweetned with variety of Delights and Pleasures. Little now left of it since subdued by the Turks, but a strong Castle manned with an able Garrison, and a well-stored Arsenal for Gallies, kept here in readiness to preserve those Seas from Pirates, with which much infested. (From this Town the Island is now call'd Metellina.) But the two first long since decayed, and grown out of knowledge; those of most note next Mitylene are, 4. Vesilica. 5. Theodori. 6. Castel-Gera; all of late days, and therefore of no observation in point of Story. This Island payeth 18000 Pieces of Eight yearly to the Port for its Carraeth, or Tribute.

The Island was first inhabited by the Pelasgians, conducted hither by Zantus, the Son of Triopus, whence nam'd Pelasgia: Afterwards by some Ionians, and People of sundry Nations, planted here by Macarius, (the Father of Mitylene and Metbymna) who by his Prudence, and the Reputation of his Justice, obtained a kind of Sovereignty over the neighbouring Islands. Lesbus, the Son of Lapythus, arriving here with his Family, married Metbymna, and had the Island for her Dower; though Mitylene had the hap to have the predominant City, and the Island consequently call'd by her name. Made subject to the State of Athens, in the time of the Peloponnesian War (when almost all Greece banded against that City) they revolted from it, and were so straightly besieged by Paches, an Athenian Captain, that they submitted unto Mercy. The General sends to Athens to know what should be done with the Mitylenians: Answer was sent, That he should put them to the Sword. But the Senate on the morrow after, repenting of that cruel Decree, sent a Countermand. These latter Messengers made no stay; but eating with one Hand, and rowing with the other, came to Mitylene just as Paches was reading the former Order, by this speed prevented. So near were these miserable People to a fatal destruction. Subdued by the Romans with the rest of Greece, they fell together with it to the Constantinopolitan Emperors; from whom taken, with Chios, Samos, Andros, and some other of these Isles, Anno 1124, by the State of Venice, upon a Quarrel betwixt them and the Grecian Emperor. Confirmed unto that Signeury by the Emperor Baldwin, and all the rest of the Egean added to their Portion; those above-nam'd were again recover'd by the valour and good fortune of John Ducas, the Greek Emperor then residing at Nice. Afterwards in the year 1235, the Emperor Calo Johannes gave it to Franciscus Catalusius, a noble Gentleman of Genoa, with one of his Sisters, for her Dower. By whose Posterity enjoyed, till the year 1462, when Mahomet the Great incensed against Dominicus Catalusius the then Lord hereof, for the murder of his elder Brother, a Vassal and Tributary of his Empire, (those Princes paying to the Turk an Annual Tribute of 4000 Ducats) but more for harbouring the Pirates of Spain and Italy, besieges him in Mitylene his principal City, which in 27 days (for so long it held) he constrained to submit unto him, and therewith all the Island also. Some of the chief Families being removed unto Constantinople, upon some reasons of State, the main Body of the People were permitted to remain here to Till the Land, and so continue to this day, with some few Turks, inconsiderable for their Strength or Numbers, intermixed among them.

3. Chios, the next to Lesbos, both in site and bigness, lieth opposite to the Shore of Ionia, from which distant not above four Leagues, is in compass about 126 Miles. So call'd, as some say, from Chione, a fair Nymph hereof, much sought after by many Suters; as others say, from χιων a Greek word signifying Snow, wherewith the Mountains of it are sometimes cover'd. And some again will have it take name from Chios the chief City of it, which being built in the form of the Greek Letter χ first got that name unto it self, and afterwards did communicate it to the whole Island. Isidore in his Origines gives another reason, and will have it call'd so from a Syrack word signifying Mastick, whereof there is plenty in this Isle. Chios Insula (saith he) Syrâ linguâ appellatur, eo quod ibi Mastyx gignitur; Syri enim Mastichen Chion vocant. And were it so, that Chios in the Syrack did signifie Mastick, there could no better reason be assigned for the Name; this Island being more furnished with that Commodity, than any place in the World besides. A Gum it is, growing out of the Lentusk Tree, which in the Months of July and August the Inhabitants force out of those Trees, by making with sharp Instruments a deep incision into the Bark of them; out of which the Juice dropping, is afterwards hardned like a Gum, and in the September following gathered. A Commodity which yieldeth yearly to the Inhabitants 18000 Sultanies, every Sultan being valued at the rate of a Zechine of Venice: and therefore the felling of the Lentusk-Tree, at the time of the distilling of this precious Juice, interdicted, on the Penalty of losing the right Hand of him that doth it.

Other Commodities of this Island are Corn and Oil in indifferent plenty, some Quarries of most excellent Marble, a certain green Earth like the rust of Brass; some Silks and Cotton-wool, but short in worth to those of Smyrna, and other places; Honey as good as any the World affordeth, and a vein of most delicious Vines, those specially which grow on the Mountain Arvus, now call'd Amista. Of which Pliny gives this Commendation, In summa gloria fuerit Thasium, Chiumque, ex Chio, quod Arvium vocant. Of all Wines (saith he) those of Thassus, and Chios, are of best esteem; and of those of Chios, the Arvian. Strabo extolleth them in the superlative Degree, and calleth the Wine hereof, οἶνον αἰσθητὸν ὅσῃ ἔλλωμιον, incomparably the best of Greece. And Plutarch, speaking of an Epicurean or voluptuous Liver, affirms, That he conceiv'd it the supreme Felicity, ναὶ ὅς οὐ γὰρ οὐδὲν, ὡς μὲν ἔστιν ἀνάγκη, τοῖς οὖν τοῖς Λαῖς, and drink these Arvian Wines. Here are also infinite store of Partridges, of a red colour, kept tame, and fed in Flocks like Geese, in the Streets and Greenwards of their Villages; some little Boys or Girl driving them to Field, and calling them home again with a Whistle, when the Night comes on.

The Island divided commonly into two parts, the Higher, call'd Apanomera, lying towards the North and West, hilly and rough, but intermixt with fruitful Vales and pleasant Rivers: The Lower, opposite unto it, call'd Catamorea, swelled here and there with gentle Hills, on which groweth the Lentisk. The whole inhabited by Greeks intermixt with Genoese, and (since their Conquest by that People) some few Turks amongst them. Which mixture with the Genoese, tempereth the levity of the Greeks with Italian gravity; the better sort of People both in Apparel and Manners coming near the Genoese, once the Lords of this Island; the common sort continuing their old Greek humour of Mirth and Jollity (not sensible of the Turkish Thralldom under which they suffer) with as much licentiousness as ever. And though this intermixture hath so corrupted their Language, that neither the Greek nor the Italian be here rightly spoken, but a compound Tongue made up of both; yet keep they their Religions still distinct and separate, as if they had never known another.

Here are reckoned in it six and thirty Towns and Villages; the principal whereof are, 1. St. Elier, in the North. 2. Pigrine, in the midst hereof; and 3. Chios it self, now call'd Sio (as is all the Island) one of the seven Cities contending for the Birth of Homer, whose Sepulchre they pretend to shew in an old Castle near the Mount and Town of St. Elier, (which, were it his, would be a better Argument for his Burial here, than it is for his Birth.) The Town situate in the most pleasant and fruitful part of the Country, to which both Industry and Art have given great Advantage; there being few Houses without Orchards of excellent Fruits, as Oranges, Lemmons, Pomegranats, Citrons, and a kind of Fig, much praised for their quickness of taste, by the ancient Romans. It standeth on the Eastside, opposite to the Shores of Asia; stretched along the bottom of the Haven, and on the Westside backed with a rocky Mountain, upon which it formerly did stand. The Buildings ordinary, the Streets narrow, and the Haven every day decaying; though otherwise secure, once entered; and for directing of the entrance, a Lanthorn advanced by the Genoese, (when Lords hereof) to give Light by Night, and serve for a Land-Mark in the Day. Fortified on the Northside by a large and strong Castle, environed with deep Ditches, well furnished with Munition, and a Turkish Garison. And because the Island is on all parts accessible, not naturally fortified with Rocks and dangerous Precipices as many others, besides this Castle, they have all along the Coast small Watch-Towers, which with Smoak by day, and Fire by Night give notice unto one another of such Vessels as they see approaching: The Guards about the Castle being so intent also about their Charge, that every minute of the Night there goeth a word about the Walls, to declare their vigilancy.

The Chians were at first a Free People, governing themselves as a Commonwealth; and by reason of their many Harbours, able to furnish out a Navy of 80 Sail which gave them the Lordship of those Seas, till eclipsed by the Rhodians. Belieged by Philip the Father of Perseus, with his utmost Power; who when he could not get it by force, proclaimed freedom to the Slaves (of which here were many) and liberty to marry with their Masters Wives, if they would rebel against their Masters. And when this Policy would not do it, the Town being held out with greater heat of Indignation, he gave over the Siege. At last they became subject to the Romans with the rest of Greece, and followed punctually the same change of Fortunes, as did those of Lesbos, which we have spoken of before; till given by Andronicus Palaeologus, one of the last Greek Emperors, to the Justinian, a noble Genoese Family, assistant to him in his Wars. Under them it continued as Tributary to the Turks (after the Turks had made themselves Masters of Constantinople) to whom they annually paid Eighteen thousand Ducats, till the Year 1566. When Soliman the Magnificent, picking a Quarrel with them for some suspected Correspondency with the Knights of Malta, commanded Pial, one of his greatest Bassa's, to seize the Island. And he accordingly presenting himself before the City with a strong Fleet of eighty Gallies, did so astonish and amaze the Inhabitants of it, that without any other summons than the sight of the Navy, they surrendered themselves unto his disposing, upon Easter-Day, being the same day he came before it. Since that time it hath continued Turkish, all save their Religion, enjoyed by them with like liberty, as in former times. This Island pays 18000 Pieces of Eight to the Grand Signior yearly for its Tribute. In the Year 1688, after Smyrna was ruin'd by an Earthquake, the English Factory removed to Sio. The Inhabitants of this Island enjoy greater Privileges than any Greeks in the Grand Signior's Dominions, both as to their Religion and Civil Liberties. The chief City is well built after the Genoese manner, and is above two Miles in Circumference, and to the North stands a very strong Castle. On each side of the City are many pleasant Gardens, abounding with all sorts of Fruit. The Houses also are well built, and the Inhabitants mostly Greeks, (but of the Roman Communion) who have several good Churches belonging to the Jesuits, Dominicans, and Capuchins. All the Mastick is now taken up for the Grand Signior; and what is not used by the Court, is sold by his Officers to Merchants. Ber. Randolph in the present State of the Islands of the Archipelago.

4. Samos is on the South-East of Chios, distant above five Miles from the Shores of Ionis, about eighty, or eighty-seven in compass; environed for the most part, especially in the North-West, with inaccessible Rocks, but beautified with a fair and capacious Haven; of little use by reason of Pirates which infested those Seas. The Soil sufficiently enriched with most kinds of Fruits, abundantly plentiful of Oyl and Olives, but of Vines altogether unfurnished; which is the more to be admir'd, in regard all the Islands and Shores about it, produce them in so great a plenty. It stretcheth from the East to the West; and on the South part of it stood the City of Samia, near unto the Haven before spoken of. In former times populous, and well inhabited, as was the rest of the Island, now wholly desolate in a manner, because of the Pirates, and in most places very much overgrown with Woods; becoming thereby very useful to those publick Enemies, who find here Timber enough for Shipping, and can upon the sudden put a Ship to Sea, for pursuit of their Robberies. The chief Commodity it affordeth besides those above, is a Medicinal Earth, useful for Chirurgery and Physick; of which in former times were those Vessels made, call'd Vasa Samia, in great request amongst the Romans.

Anciently it had the names of Dryusa, Anathemusa, Melamphylas, and Cyparissa; out-worn by that of Samos, which it still retaineth. Memorable in old times for the Birth of Juno, of one of the Sybil's, hence call'd Samia; and finally, of the wise Man Pythagoras (a wiser than any of the seven wise Masters so renown'd amongst them) who first brought Philosophy into Greece, and from thence into Italy. Once a free Commonwealth of no small esteem, the Institutes whereof are mention'd by Heraclides, in his Books of the several Commonwealths then being; afterwards made subject to the Tyrant Polycrates, a Man so fortunate, that for a long time he never fell into any mischance. Fearing lest such a long calm would bring on a tempest, he let fall into the Sea a most precious Ring, by him deservedly esteemed, that so it might be said he had some Misfortunes. Which after he had found again in the belly of a Fish, brought accidentally to his Table, he was overcome by Orontes a Persian, and brought to a miserable Death. Leaving a notable Example, that Fortune is certain in nothing but uncertainties; and like a Bee with a sharp Sting, hath always some misery misery following in the train of a long concatenation of Felicity. From this time forwards it ran the same Fortune with the rest of these Islands; subject successively to the great Monarchies in former times, as of late times to the Venetians, Greeks, and Turks, who do now enjoy it.

5. Icarus (now call'd Nicea, Nicaria) lyeth not far from Samos, to the Westward of it, narrow, but extended out in length from East to West; the whole compass seven and thirty Miles; Neighbour'd by two great Rocks, or little Islands, of old call'd Atelantkii, now the Hernaces; formidable at all times to Mariners, in the night especially. Meanly inhabited at the present, tho' abounding in Pasturage, and yielding sufficiency of Corn; Havenless, and therefore the less frequented, yet that defect supply'd by commodious Roads. In former times call'd D.liche, then Maeris, after Ischiasia; which Name it held till the flight of Dædalus out of Crete, who justly fearing the anger of Minos, for being Pandar to his Wife in her loves with Taurus, secretly with Icarus his Son, fled out of that Island. And because he would be sure to outstrip the Rowers who pursued him, he added Sails unto his Boat, which it is said he first invented. But Icarus coming after in another Bark, delighted with the new Device, clapped on too much Canvass, and bearing too great a Sail, was here cast away. Hence the new Name both to this Island, and the Seas adjoyning to it, and the occasion of the Fable of Dædalus putting Wings upon his shoulders when he fled from Crete; and of his flying too high, whereby the Wax melted which his Wings were fastned with, and so he perished in the Water. Of which thus Ovid:

Icarus, Icaris nomina fecit aquis.*

In English thus:

Whilst Icarus weak Wings too high did soar,
He fell, and gave Name to th' Icarian Shore.

Nicaria lies 25 Miles South of Sio, and is in compass 70 Miles; it is Barren, Mountainous, and Rocky, and has not one Harbour for Ships, and so not capable of any Trade; the Inhabitants are so poor, that neither the Turks nor Pirates can get any thing that is considerable from them; yet they have excellent Winter Grapes, some Wine, but not good, and plenty of Goats, which is their chief Food. Randolph.

6. Patmos, now call'd Palmosa, is situate on the South of the other two; a little Island not above 30 Miles in compass. Mountainous, but indifferently fruitful, especially of Wheat and Pulse; of other Commodities, and Fruits not so well provided. On one of these Mountains stands a Town of the same name with the Island; having on the top thereof a Monastery of Greek Calloires; and on the bottom a fair Haven, (I mean in reference to the Island). Forty sail of Ships are said to belong unto it; by the trading whereof they bring in those provisions which the Soil afforderh not: The Soil about the Town being so incomparably barren, that nothing groweth on, or near it, but on such Earth as is brought thither from other places. Unto this Island (as to others in other parts of the World) did the Roman Emperors use to confine Offenders. A Punishment laid by Domitian, on St. John the Divine, who in this place writ his Revelation to the Churches of Asia. So much the Text affirms for certain, as to the writing of it in this Island. And the Inhabitants by Tradition point unto an House on the Northside of the Town, in which it was written, and not far off the Cave where it was revealed. Both places equally honoured by the Greeks and Latins. They also shew a dead Man's Hand, which they affirm to be his, the Nails whereof grow again as oft as cut. But the Turks (saith Maginus) claim it for the Hand of one of their Prophets. In the War of Constantine the whole Constantian Fleet did usually Winter in this Island, it having many and good Ports, by which means the Inhabitants grew Rich; but since the Turks and Pirates have reduced them to the same state of Poverty with their Neighbours. Randolph.

7. Claros, another Island not far off, containing about 40 Miles in compass, well stored with commodious Harbours, but very Mountainous; some of those Hills of such an height, that from the tops thereof, the City of Ephesus in Ionia, (though distant at least eighty Miles) may be easily seen. It is now call'd Calamo. Neighbour'd by Lero, (of old call'd Liron) a little Island not above eighteen Miles in Circuit, but very populous, inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, and furnishing the neighbouring Countries with some store of Wines. Sacred in former times was Claros to Apollo; reckon'd by him amongst his Honours, in his brags to Daphne; where he declares,

— — — Mibi Delphica tellus Et Claros, & Tenedos, Pataraeque Regia feruit.

That is to say,

The Folk of Delphes, Tenedos, and Clare,
And Royal Patara, my Vassals are.

8. Coos, Cos, or Cous, for by all these Names it was call'd of old, is situate over-against Caria, in the very bottom of the Aegæon; that is to say, in that part thereof which is call'd Mare Myrteum, the Myrtum Sea. A Sea so call'd, as some say, from one Myrtus, Coachman, or Charioter of OEnomaus, who having betrayed his Race with Pelops, and importunate for his Reward, was by Pelops precipitated into this Sea. Pliny lets probably conceived that it took name from Myrtos, a little Island not far from Eubæa, a little too far off to extend its Name to the Shores of Caria. And therefore considering that Lydia anciently was call'd Myrtus, and that in those times Aeolis and Ionia, lying on this Sea, were accounted but as parts thereof, I think we may resolve with more probability, that it derived this Name from that Lydian Myrtus.

In this Sea stands the Isle of Coos, now call'd Lange, affording Sailers as they pass by a most beautiful Prospect, lying for the most part flat and level, but swelling towards the East with some graceful Mountains, out of which issue many sweet and pleasant Springs to refresh the Island which maketh it more than ordinary fruitful. Productive of Cypress-Trees, Turpentine, and sundry other, both delightful and Medicinal; but most especially celebrated for those rich Wines, which the good Fellows of Rome so much loved to quaff, call'd Vinum Cos. It is in compass 70 Miles, having a Town of the same Name, in the Suburbs whereof stood anciently the Temple of Æsculapius, famous and rich with the offering of those, who having by his Assistance (as they supposed) recovered Health, came hither to make payment of their Vows, and express their Gratitude. It is now fortified with a strong Castle, held by a Garrison of Turks; and besides this, two Villages only in the Island, and both inhabited by Greeks. This Island exceeds Rhodes as much in Beauty, as it is in Quantity inferior to it; there are in it Woods of Cyprian-Trees, which the Turks will not suffer to be cut down. It has one large Town with a Castle near the Haven, which is secured with a good Mole kept well in Repair by the Turks, it being the place where all Ships passing between Constantinople and Egypt usually touch, and so carefully guarded by Gallies, that no Pirate dares come near it. The Turks call this Island and Town Stancoi; the Greeks Stincos. Randolph.

In elder times it had the name of Merope, Caria, and Nymphæa, and at last Coos. Memorable in being the Country of many famous Men who were here born, viz. of Hippocrates, the Reviver of Physick, then almost decayed, who is hence call'd Hippocrates Coos. 2. Sinius, a Physician also. 3. Ariston, a Peripatetick Philosopher. 4. Philetas, as good an Orator as a Poet. 5. Nicias, who for a time oppress'd the liberty of this People; and 6. of Apelles the famous Painter; who to express his Art in the Picture of Venus, (rising naked out of the Sea) assembled together all the most beautiful Women of this Island, uniting in that piece their divided Perfections. Which famous piece being afterwards hang'd up in the Temple of Stomalimne, one of the principal of this Island, was thence conveyed to Rome by Augustus, and there dedicated to Cæsar, as the Mother of the Julian Family: The Coans in regard hereof, being eas'd of a great part of their annual Tributes. Not much less memorable for that fine thin Stuff (such as now call'd Tiffanies) so much in use amongst the chief Ladies of Rome; which at once shew'd them cloathed and naked. Perlucidâ utuntur veste, ita, ut nude conspici possint, as my Author hath it. These they call'd Vestimenta Coa, and Vestes Coas, so often mention'd by the Poets, especially in their Amatoria; as Coa puellis vestis, in Tibullus; Indue me Cois, in Propertius; Sive erit in Cois, saith the Poet Ovid. So in others also, too many, and too long to be added here. I pass to

9. Carpathos, situate on the South of Caria, in the Mediterranean, from this Island, call'd hereabouts the Carpathian Sea. A rugged and unpleasing Soil, full of difficult Mountains, but those Mountains stored with Quarries of most excellent Marble. In Circuit about 60 Miles, extending more in length than breadth. Heretofore beautified with four Cities, and thence named Tetrapolis. But three of the four Cities are long since perished, that of Carpathos being still remaining, and still the principal of the Island; but now call'd Scarpanto. Some other Towns it hath all along the Shore, and every one of them furnished with some Port or Haven; but small, and for the most part very unsafe. Situate in the middle as it were betwixt Crete and Rhodes. It hath continued hitherto in the possession of the State of Venice, (if not taken from them very lately) to whom being given with other of the Islands of these Grecian Seas, at the taking of Constantinople by the Western Forces, it had the fortune or felicity to continue theirs, when almost all the residue were subdued by the Turks. The People Greek, of the Communion of that Church, notwithstanding their subjection to a state of Italy. Randolph saith it is 80 Miles in compass, and has no secure Harbour except to the East, where the Town stands; the Island is not above a fourth part of it inhabited, and the People of it very poor, being much expos'd to the Insults of the Pirates, which is a great sign it is now under the Turks, as Brandrand saith, though I cannot find when it was reduced.

10. Rhodes, situate in the Rhodian, or Carpathian Sea, lieth over-against the Coast of Lycia in Asia Minor, from which distant 20 Miles. Formerly call'd Ophiussa, Asteria, Ethraea, Trinachia, Pæssa, Corymbia, Atabyria, and at last Macaria; it settled finally, and fortunately, in the name of Rhodes. So named by the Grecians from the abundance of Roses, which the Soil produceth, Rhodes in that Language signifying a Rose, the Isle of Roses, as it were; but, as the Poets say, of Rhoda, a Nymph of these Seas, here desloured by Apollo; or rather of Rhoda, one of the Daughters of Apollo begot on Venus; for so one them thus declareth:

Insula Dicta Rhodos, de Sole & Cypride nata est.

Rhoda, from whom this Isle took name,
Of Venus and Apollo came.

The Island 140 Miles in compass, enriched with a most temperate Air, and fertile Soil, producing Fruits in very great plenty, full of excellent Pastures, adorned with Trees which always do continue green: And in a word, so blest with the gifts of Nature, that it gave occasion to the Fable of those Golden Showers, which were once said to have fallen upon it. The Wines hereof so excellent, and so rich of Taste, that by the Romans they were used in their second Courses, or reserved for the Sacrifices of the Gods, as too good for Mortals, as affirmed by Virgil in the Georgicks. The cause of which perpetual flourishing, and continual spring, is to be ascribed to the powerful influences of the Sun, so dearly cherishing this Island, or so much in love with it, that it is constantly affirmed, that no day passeth wherein he shineth not clearly on it, be the Air in all other places never so much overcast with Clouds, or obscured by Mists. Feigned for that cause to have been naturally a meer Marsh, altogether uninhabitable, if not covered with Waters; till loved by Phæbus, and erected above the Waves by his vigorous influences.

Of the People we shall speak anon; look we in the mean time on the places of most observation. 1. Lindun, (now Linde, a petty Town, but formerly of more esteem) of note in those times for the Temple consecrated to Minerva, by Danaus King of Egypt, landing here when he fled out of that Kingdom. As also for the Birth of Chares, the Architect of the huge Colossus, whereof more presently; but specially for the Nativity of Cleobulus, one of the seven Wise-men of Greece; the other six being Solon of Athens, Periander of Corinth, Chilon of Sparta, Bias of Priene, Thales of Melitum, and Pythagoras of Mitylene, seven Men of whom the Grecians most immensely bragged, as if the World could neither afford them equals, or an equal number; for which derided handsomly by Lactantius, an old Christian Writer, who scoffs their Paucity, and calleth it a miserable and calamitous Age, In quo septem soli fuerunt qui hominum vocabula mererentur; in which there were no more than seven who deserved to be accounted Men. 2. Rhodes, anciently, as now the chief City of it, the Island from hence taking name, and formerly, as well as in latter times, depending on the Fortunes and Strength hereof. No place in elder times held superior to it, for the conveniency of the Haven, magnificent Buildings, delightful Orchards, and other Excellencies. Situate on the East part of the Isle, on the declining of an Hill, and near the Sea, where it enjoyeth a safe and common Haven; treble walled, fortified with thirteen Turrets, and five strong Bulwarks, besides divers Sconces, and other Out-works; this Town, and Famagusta in the Isle of Cyprus, being conceived to be the two strongest Holds in the Turkish Empire. In former times, one of the principal Universities of the Roman Empire; this Rhodes, Marseilles, Tarsus, Athens, and Alexandria, being reckon'd the old Academies of that Monarchy. And to this Town, as a most noted place of Study, Tiberius (afterwards Emperor) did withdraw himself, when Augustus had declared his two Nephews Lucius and Caius, for his Heirs; pretending only a desire to improve himself in the ways of Literature; whereas the true cause was his Envy at their Preferment. Honoured in those times with that huge Colossus, one of the seven Wonders of the World, made by Chares of Lindum before-mention'd. Composed of Brass, in height seventy Cubits, every Finger of it being as great as an ordinary Man; and consecrated to the Sun, as the proper Deity of the Island. Twelve years in making, and having stood but 66 years, was pull'd down in an instant by an Earthquake, which terribly shook the whole Island. The Rhodians being forbid by an Oracle, to erect it again, (or possibly pretending such an Oracle to save that charge) yet held the Brass and other Materials of it (in a manner) sacred. Not medled with, nor sacrilegiously purloined till Manias, the General of Osman, the Mahometan Caliph, finding in himself no such scruple of Conscience, (after he had subdued this Island) made a Prey hereof, loading nine hundred Camels with the very Brass of it. From this Colossus was the Island sometimes call'd Colossa, and the people Colossians; not those Colossians (as some have very vainly thought) to whom St. Paul writ his Epistle, those being of Colosse, a Town of the Greater Phrygia, as hath there been noted. Here was also in this City anciently a Temple of Bacchus, enriched with many presents both of Greeks and Romans, of both which People the Rhodians were then held in a fair esteem; but the God, and the good Wines in greater. Towns of less note, are 3. Villanovia. 4. Russicare, and sometimes others, but as little memorable.

This Island was first peopled by Dodanim, the Son of Javan, and the Grand-child of Japhet, whom the Greeks call commonly, but corruptly, Rhodanim; mistaking the Hebrew Letter Dalet for that of Resh, Letters so like as easily it might draw them to that mistake. Finding this Island too narrow for him, he left here a Colony, and with the main of his People, passed into Greece; where he planted the Country of Epirus, as hath there been said. Those which staid here being mistakingly call'd Rhodians, (or call'd so by the Grecians, not looking with too curious Eyes into their Antiquities, from the abundance of Roses here growing) making the best use of their Haven, and other the advantages of their situation, became so expert in maritime Affairs, that by Florus they are styled Populus nauticus, and that not only in the way of Trade and Merchandize, but of Power and Government; holding for many years the Command of these Seas, and prescribing Laws for the Reiglement of Navigation. Which being call'd the Rhodian Laws, became the general Rule for deciding Marine Causes, and ordering the Affairs of Sea, in all the Parts and Provinces of the Roman Empire: And so continued till supplanted in these Western parts by the Laws of Oleron. Fearful of falling under the Macedonians, they applied themselves unto the Romans, whom first they aided in their Wars against Philip, the Father of Perseus; and afterwards in that also against Antiochus. Rewarded for this last Service with Lycia and Caria, two of the Asian Provinces, which Antiochus was to leave on his Composition; they became so faithfully affected to the State of Rome, that when all the other Islands of the Mediterranean and Aegean Seas revolted to Mithridates King of Pontus, this only adhered unto the Romans. Proud either of their Strength at Sea, or of those good Offices, they began to take upon them as Mediators, and thought themselves fit Men to advise their Masters. Grown troublesome by their frequent Interpositions, and losing much of their Esteem by such Impertinences, they began to grow jealous of the Romans, and incline to Perseus King of Macedon; whose Father they before opposed with their utmost Power. A change which Paterculus expressed with some Admiration. Rhodii ipsi fidelissimi antea Romanis, dubia jam fide proni- ores in Regis partes visi sunt; as his Words there are But yet they held for them against Mithridates, as before was said, and served their turn on all Occasions, until insensibly they betrayed their Liberty to the Power of their Friends, and of Confederates and Allies, became their Vassals. Made by Vespasian into a Province with the rest of the Isles; the Governor, or President of those Islands; which gave the Title of Metropolitan to the Bishop of Rhodes. Under that Empire it continued (or under that of Constantinople after the Division) till the Year 1124, when taken from the Grecians by the State of Venice; again recovered by the Greeks, in the time of their Emperor, John Ducas, then residing at Nice, in 1227. Won from the Grecians by the Turks, in 1283. The Knights of St. John of Hierusalem being utterly driven out of Asia, possessed themselves of it, by the favour of Emanuel, the then Emperor, who aided them in the Conquest, Anno 1308. Afterwards proving bad Neighbours to the Turkish Tyrants, whom they ceased not to infest upon all occasions, they were many times in vain invaded; Mahomet the Great, famous for taking Constantinople, and the Empire of Trabezond, spending some time before their City, with both loss and shame in 1480. At the last, Anno 1522, it was again besieged by Solyman the Magnificent, Lilla-damus Villerius being then great Master, who did as much in defence hereof, as Policy and Puissance could extend unto. But Multitude in the end prevailed, and upon Christmas-day, the Turk entred Rhodes as Conqueror; though possibly he might have said, (as Pyrrhus once said of a like Victory against the Romans) that such another Victory would quite have undone him. Since that a Province of the Turks, by whom, and by some Jews banish'd out of Spain, the City of Rhodes is wholly inhabited: The Christians which are licenced to dwell in the Country, and have leave to trade there in the day time, not suffered upon pain of Death, to stay there all Night. And so we pass from the Islands of the Asian Diocese, to the Isle of Cyprus, a near Neighbour unto Anatolia; but no Member it: The rest of that Diocese, and those Seas, as 11. Possidium. 12. Arcefine. 13. Bugiales. 14. Minyas. 15. Sirne. 16. Cesi, and the rest, yielding but little matter of Observation besides their Names. The Turks have to this day so great a veneration for the Valour of the Knights of Rhodes, that they preserve their Houses as they left them, with all the Arms, Statues, Paintings, and Inscriptions; and the Walls of the City are put, and maintain'd in the same State they were before the Siege. The Knights in the Year 1530, pass'd to Malta, where they still reside. Most of the Inhabitants transporting themselves to Italy, Candy, and other places, whereupon the Turks were forced to grant great Privileges to those who would settle here, which in a short time made it very Populous. The Walls of the City (saith Randolph) are now in very bad Repair.

Cyperus is situate in the Syrian and Cilician Seas, extended in length from East to West two hundred Miles, in breadth sixty; the whole compass reckoned five hundred and fifty. Distant about sixty Miles from the rocky Shores of Cilicia in Asia Minor, and about an hundred from the main Land of Syria; towards which it shooteth it self out with a long sharp Promontory, extending heretofore to the main Land, from which rent in former time by a violent Earthquake, as is said by Pliny, and worn unto this narrowness by the continual working of the Sea upon it.

No place hath ofner changed his Name, or at least had more Names on the By than this. Call'd at first Cethin, or Cethina, from Ketim the Son of Javan, who first planted it. Cerastus, from the abundance of Promontories, thrusting like Horns into the Sea, (as the word intimates in the Greek.) 3. Amuthusia. 4. Paphia. 5. Salamina: These three last from the principal Towns in those parts hereof. 6. Macaria from the fruitfulness and felicities of it. Besides these, it hath in some times had these By-names also; as 7. Asperia, from the roughness of the Soil. 8. Collinia, from the frequency of Hills and Mountains. 9. Arosa, from the Mines of Brasses which abound therein. 10. And finally, all those forgotten and laid by, it settled at last in the name of Cyprus. So call'd, say some, from the abundance of Cypress-Trees, with which most plentifully provided; as others, from Cryptos, a Greek word, signifying Concealed, or hidden, because sometimes concealed by the Surges from the Eye of Sailers; but most improbably said by others to take Name from Cyrus, who founded here the City of Aphrodisia; whereas indeed six hundred years before Cyrus his Birth, we find it by this name in Homer. More rightly Stephanus, who deriveth it, Σὺν Κυπρῷ ἡ θυγάτηρ Κίπρου, from Cyrus, Daughter of Cinyras, one of the Kings hereof, living before the Trojan Wars; though in my mind the first comes nearest to the truth, the Cypress-Tree not only growing here in so great abundance, but being anciently peculiar in a manner to this Island only.

But on what ground soever it was call'd Cyrus, certain I am, it had the name of Cerastis upon very good reason; no Island or Region that I know of, (for the bigness of it) thrusting out so many sharp Promontories. For on the West there is, 1. The Promontory call'd Acamas, now Capo St. Pilano. 2. Depranum, now Trepiano and Melechis. 3. Zaphyrum, or Caput Calidoni, now Punta Malota. On the South. 4. Pbrurium, now Capo Bianco. 5. Curtus, or Cape della Catte. 6. Gades, or Capo Chitt. 7. Throni, or Capo Pilæ. On the East, 8. Pendulum, now Capo di Griego. 9. Clides, now Capo S. Andrae. And on the North, 10. Coronyon, now Capo Cornobutte, besides some others of less note. Some of the Poets give another reason of this Name, as that Venus offended with the People of Amathus, for sacrificing their Guests, should turn them into horned Cattel, Unde etiam nomen traxere Cerastæ, as it is in Ovid, but that merely fabulous; somewhat of kin unto the Legend of Thomas Becket; and the Kentish Long tails. Yet so far we may joyn with Ovid, that the Island was not only call'd Cerastis, but that the People were also call'd Cerastæ, of which there wants not proof from some other Authors; with which we need not trouble our selves, that name being altogether worn out of use, and no other but that of Cyprus given it in common Speech. Nor is it a matter of more strangeness, that Cyprus should be call'd so by the Grecians from its abundance of Cypress-Trees, anciently and originally peculiar to this Island, as before was noted; than that the same Grecians should give unto the neighbouring Island the name of Rhodes, from its great plenty of Roses; or to the neighbouring Island the name of Phœnicia, from its great plenty of Palm-Trees; the word so signifying in that Language.

It is situate under the fourth Climate, so that the longest day in Summer is no more than fourteen Hours and a half; and for that cause the Air in Summer-time exceeding hot and foultry: The Soil moistned with some few Brooks, meriting rather the name of Torrents than Rivers, which being generated for the most part by Rain-water, are not seldom dried up by the heat of the Sun; insomuch, that in the Reign of Constantine the Great, this Island was for 36 years together almost utterly forsaken, no Rain falling all that time. These inconveniencies notwithstanding, it is stored with such plenty of all things, that without the help of any Foreign Nation, it is of it self able to build and rig a tall Ship from the Keel to the Top-sail, and so put it to Sea furnished with all things needful for a Voyage, or a Sea-Fight. It also aboundeth in Wine, Oyl, Corn, Sugar, Cotton, Honey, Wool, Turpentine, and Allom, Verdgreece, all sorts of Metals, store of Salt, Grograins, and other Commodities, whereupon this Island was once call'd Macaria (i. e. Happy.) By reason of which wonderful affluence of all Necessaries, and that variety of Pleasures (even to Sensuality) which the place afforded, it was anciently consecrated unto Venus, who is hence call'd Venus Cypria, and Dea Cyprî: Sic te diva potens Cyprî, in Horace; and in Ovid,

Venerat; ipsa suis aderat Venus aurea festis.*

Venus Feasts hallowed through all Cyprus came,
And Venus with her Presence grac'd the same.

The People hereof are Warlike, strong and nimble, of great civility and hospitality to their Neighbours, and love to Strangers of all Nations, Jews only excepted. For in the Empire of Trajan, the Jews inhabiting Aegypt and the adjoining Countries, drew themselves together, and chose one Alexander for their Captain, under whose Conduct they entred into this Island, and laid it desolate, killing in it 240000 Persons of all Sexes and Ages; not without much Bloodshed vanquished and slain by Lucius the Emperor's Lieutenant. Since which time the Cypriots permit no Jew to enter into the Island; but come he hither voluntarily, or by force of Tempest, they lay hands on him, and lead him presently to Execution. A hated Nation, that neither Innocence can protect, or Equity reprieve from that cruel custom.

The Women in former times much noted for their Unchastity, to which their worshipping of Venus was no small incentive; it being the custom of these Women to prostitute themselves on the Shores, to the Passers-by: Their very Virgins not refusing to be handled there, before fore their Marriage; either to raise their Portions by the sale of their Bodies, or else to please their Goddess with such beastly Sacrifices. And if Volaterranus may be credited, (as I think he may) the Ladies which attended on Queen Carlotta, when she came to Rome, to seek for aid against James the Bastard, who had dispossessed her of this Kingdom, shewed themselves little chaster than those ancient Cypriots. Somewhat more fortunate in the Men, 1. Æsclepiades, the Author of the Verse so named. 2. Xenophon, an old Poet. 3. Zeno; and 4. Apollonius, the Philosophers. 5. Epiphanius, the learned Bishop of Salames; and 6. Above all, St. Barnabas, the dear Associate of St. Paul; being all Natives of this Country.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by St. Paul, and Barnabas, as the very first fruits of their Apostleship, after they had been separated to the Work of the Ministry by the imposition of Hands, as appeareth, Acts 13. ver. 4. &c. The Church hereof, by reason of the Antiquity of it, and the Honour of this joint Foundation, so privileged in the best Ages of Christianity, that the Archbishop of this Island had all Prerogatives of a Primate; consecrated by his own Suffragan Bishops, and acting in all Sacred and Ecclesiastical Affairs, without dependance on, or relation to the See of Antioch, whereunto all other Bishops in the Eastern Dioecese were either subordinate or subject. Which Privilege being questioned in the Council of Ephesus, was by the Fathers there assembled, on a full hearing of the Cause, approved and ratified; confirmed by the Civil Sanction of the Emperor Justinian, whose Wife was a Native of this Island; and by the name of Jus Ciprium, the Privilege or Exemption of the Cyprian Church, transmitted to the Prelates of succeeding times. Which notwithstanding, they continued in good Correspondence with the Eastern Churches of the Greek Communion, and officiated all Divine Acts after the Rites and Forms thereof, till the Venetians became Lords of it, who brought in the Latin Service into some of their Churches, and appointed Bishops and other Ministers of the Papal party, for execution of the same. And for the Government of these Churches, they had at first fourteen Bishops, and Archbishops, to gratifie Queen Alice, (who had a mind to enrich her Friends with some of the Spoils of them); reduced by Innocent the Third to four only; that is to say, the Archbishop of Nicosia, the Bishopsricks of Famagusta, Paphos, and Amathus; but each See furnished with two Prelates, the one for the Greeks, the other for the Latins; of which the Bishops for the Latins have all the Lands, and Annual Revenue, which of right belong to those Cathedrals; the Greek Bishops living upon Stipends levied on the Priests and Deacons of their Jurisdiction.

Rivers, as formerly was said, here are very few, and of those few, the principal are call'd Lycus and Lapithus; the first running towards the South, the last towards the North; both not seldom so dried up, that they leave their empty Channels without any Water. Both also have their Source from the Hill Olympus, (the highest Mountain of the Island) garnished with Trees and Fruits of all sorts; in compass about eighteen Leagues, (which make four and fifty Italian Miles) and at the end of every League a Monastery of Greek Monks, or Calores, and a Fountain of fresh water for the use of the House. Here are also two other little Rivers, the one call'd 3. Bodens, the other 4. Tolius; but of the same nature as the former.

By Ptolomy, or in his time, divided into four parts, or Provinces; but since it fell into the hands of the Lusignian Family, distributed into twelve Counties, or Centredes; most of them call'd by the name of their principal Towns, viz, 1. Nicosia. 2. Famagusta. 3. Paphia. 4. Audima. 5. Lamissa. 6. Masorum. 7. Salines. 8. Messoria. 9. Crisofocus. 10. Pentalia. 11. Carpassus. 12. Cermes. The whole containing, besides the Cities and great Towns, 805 Villages, or thereabouts, which they call'd Casals, whereof the one half anciently belong'd unto the Crown, the other half divided betwixt the Lay-Nobility and the Ecclesiasticks; the Patrimony of these last being computed at 80000 Crowns of Annual Rents, besides Casualties, and the Vails of the Altar. But because the tracing out of these Centredes will be very difficult, (as a way which none have gone before me) I will adhere to the division made hereof in the time of Ptolomy, into the Provinces of 1. Paphia. 2. Amathysia. 3. Lapethia; and 4. Salaminie.

1. Paphia, so call'd of Paphos, the chief Town thereof, taketh up the West part of the Island; in which the Towns of most Importance and Observation are, 1. Paphos, on the Seaside, by Play call'd Palaeporos, or old Paphos, built, as some say, by Cyprus, the Father of Myrrha, and so named in memory of Paphos his Father; but, as others say, by Paphos, the Son of Pygmalion, King of Phenicia and Cyprus: To which last Ovid doth agree, who speaking of Pygmalion's Statue, turn'd into a Woman by the power of Venus, (or rather of his beautiful Wife, fabled, for the surpassing whiteness of her Skin, to be made of Ivory) he adds this of her:

She Paphos bare, whom from the name
Of Paphia to the Island came.

Here Venus had her so much celebrated Temple, hence the name of Paphia; and here her Votaries of both Sexes in their natural nakedness, did perform her Sacrifices. Both Town and Temple ruined by a fearful Earthquake; or as the Legends have it, by the Prayers of St. Barnabas; the Ruins of it still remaining. 2. Paphos Nova, or New Paphos, now call'd Baffo, five Miles from the old, built by Agapenor, one of the Nephews of Lycurgus the Spartan Lawgiver, after the Sack of Troy forced hither by a violent Tempest; consecrate to the same impure Goddess, and much frequented, but without injury to the other; those which here offered not thinking they had done her sufficient Service, unless they went in a solemn manner of Procession, and paid their Vows also at the other. 3. Arfinoe, situate betwixt both; built by, or call'd so in honour of Arfinoe, Daughter of Ptolomy the first King of Egypt, and Lord of Cyprus, of that House. 4. Drepanum, now call'd Trepano, under the Promontory so named, a well-traded Port, but miserably defaced by the Turks, when they took this Island. 5. Connelia, one of the richest of the Island, by reason of the plenty of Sugar and Cotton-wool growing thereabout. Built in the place of 6. Cithera, dedicated to Venus also, but differing from the Island of that Name in the Ægean Sea, rather in pronunciation than the purity of her Oblations; the last Syllable save one, in the name of that Island, being short in Verse, but this of Cyprus sounding long, as in this of Virgil:

Est Amathus, est celsa mihi Paphos, atque Cithera.

Cithera and Amathus Divine,
And lofty Paphos are all mine.

2. On the South-East of Paphia lieth the Province, or District of Amathysia, taking up the South-parts of the Island which look towards Egypt. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Amathus, giving Name unto this Division, then of most note, and much frequented for the Annual Sacrifices made unto Adonis the darling of Venus, who had here another of her Temples: The Ruins of both hardly now discerned. Built, as some say, by Amasis, King of Egypt, when he conquered this Island; but as others say by some of the Amashites, descended from Amath, one of the Sons of Canaan. 2. Cetium, or Citium, (for

(for I find it call'd by both names) the Birth-place of Zeno the Stoick, hence call'd Kimdis, or Cittensis; and memorable for the death of Simon the Athenian General. A Town wherein the Memory of Cittim, the Son of Javan, is most anciently preserved. 3. Episcopio, one of the chief of all the Island, built on the place, or out of the decay of 4. Curias, not far from the Promontory of the same name, founded by the Argives, where Apollo had both a Grove and a Temple, by the name of Apollo Hylates: His Altars in those times held so sacred, that whosoever presumed to touch them, was thrown into the Sea, from the Promontory, or Rocks adjoining. 5. Salines, or Salinae, so call'd from the rich Salt-pits; one of the chief Towns of this part, and giving name to one of those twelve Cantredes, into which the whole is now divided.

3. Lapethia, the third part of the Island, lieth on the North thereof, opposite to Cilicia in Asia Minor. Places of most Importance in it, 1. Nicosia, the Regal City of the Kings, the See of the Archbishop, and the chief of the Island; anciently call'd Ledromsis, and Lentainis; but those Names long ago laid by. Situate in the midst of the Isle, and in a plain and champaign Country, abundantly fertile and delightful. Environed with a fair Wall, so exactly round, as if it had been drawn with a pair of Compasses; in Circuit about five Miles, and both for Situation, number of People, and magnificent Buildings of all sorts both publick and private, compared by some to the most beautiful City of Florence. Fortified by the Venetians, when in their Possession, with new Walls, deep Ditches, and eleven strong Bulwarks, with three great Out-works, all of them built according to the Art of modern Fortification. But notwithstanding all these Works, and the help of 250 pieces of Cannon planted on the Walls, and about the City, it was by the Turks taken at the second or third Assault, Septemb. 9. Anno 1570. So evident a Truth it is, that Fortifications are more strengthned by the gallantry and courage of the Defendants, than the Defendants are by their Fortifications. 2. Cerines, situate near the Sea, strong by Art and Nature, and furnished with all things necessary to endure a Siege; but yielded to the Turks by Alphonfus Palacius, the unwarlike Governour, terrified with the great slaughter made at the Sack of Nicosia, before the Enemy came near it. At first call'd Ceurania, and said to have been built by Cyrus the great Persian King, when he first subdued the nine Kings hereof, and united the Island to that Crown; blest with a more temperate and wholesome Air, than any other in the Country. 3. Tremitus, the Birth-place of Spiridion, a Bishop of the Primitive times, renown'd for Miracles; many of which reported by Sozomen, lib. 1. chap. 10. and other Ecclesiastical Writers. Wholly decay'd, the Ruin of it much contributing to the rise of Nicosia. 4. Lapubus, (by Ulysses call'd Lapeto) on the Banks of a small Riveret of that name, of so great note in former times, that it gave to this Division the name of Lapethia; in that part standeth the Hill Olympus, (now the Mountain of the Holy Cross) described before.

4. Salamme, the fourth and last Province of this Island, taketh up the whole East-parts hereof. So named from, 1. Salamus, once the chief City of the Isle, and the See of the Primate, or Metropolitan hereof in the Primitive times. Destroyed by the Jews in the Reign of Trajan, and re-built again; but being after that taken, sacked, and razed unto the Ground by the Saracens, in the time of Heraclius, in 656, it never could again recover the Metropolitan See after that Subversion, being removed to Nicosia. It was sometimes, and by some Writers, call'd Constantia also; but that name could give it no more Perpetuity than the other of Salamus. Memorable whilst it stood for the Founder of it, being Tenaxer the Son of Tellamon, King of Salamus, an Isle of the Aegean Sea; banished his Country by his Father, and settled in this Island by the power of Belus, King of Phanicia: As also for a famous Temple sacred unto Jupiter, hence call'd Salaminius. Out of the Ruins hereof arose 2. Famagusta, now the prime City of these parts, built, as is said, by Costa the Father of St. Catharine; but that uncertain. Situate at the East end of the Island in a plain and low ground betwixt two Promontories, the one call'd the Cape of St. Andrew, and the other Capo di Griego, or the Head of Græcia. In compass not above two Miles, in form Four-square, but that the side towards the East stretcheth out more in length than the other three. On two parts beaten on with the Sea, the other parts towards the Land defended with a Ditch not above fifteen Foot in breadth, an old stone Wall, and certain Bulwarks. The Haven (opposite to Tripolis, a Town of Syria) openeth towards the South-East, defended from the injury of the Sea by two great Rocks, betwixt which the Sea cometh in at a narrow passage not above forty Paces broad, but after opening wider and wider, maketh a convenient Harbour, rather safe than large, assured both by the difficult entrance, and a Chain crossed over it. The whole Town, when the Turks appeared before it, but meanly fortified; the Works of it of the old fashion, generally decayed, except one Bulwark, which was built according to the modern Arts of Fortification, with Palisadoes, Curtains, Casemates, and all other Additaments: Most gallantly defended by Bragadine the noble General, to the wonder and envy of the Turks, who spent no less than 118000 great Shot upon it; and at last yielded upon honourable terms, had they been as punctually performed. 3. Aphrodisium, so nam'd of Venus, whom the Greeks call'd Aphrodite, who had here another of her Temples. 4. Arsione, built also by one of the Arsiones Queens of Egypt, there being two others of this name, and the same Foundation, now call'd Leicare, and anciently renowned for the Groves of Jupiter. 5. Tamassus, of good note in the time of Strabo for Rich Mines of Brass, as afterwards for an abundance of Vergreece and Vitriol found plentifully in the Fields adjoining. 6. Idalium, near a Mount of the same name, so call'd by accident. For Chalcenor, the Founder of it, being told by the Oracle, that he should seat himself, and build a City, where he first saw the rising Sun: One of his Followers, seeing the Sun begin to rise, cried out, ἰδὲ ἥλιον, that is to say, Behold the Sun. Which Omen taken by Chalcenor, he here built this City. But whether this were so or not, (as for my part I build not very much upon it) certain it is, that Venus had here another Temple neighbouring by the Idalian Groves so memorized and chanted by the ancient Poets. So strong an Influence had Lust and Sensuality on this wretched People, that every corner of the Island was defiled with those brutish Sacrifices, which day by day were offered to that impure Deity; though to say truth, it was no marvel if having made their Belly their God, they made in the next place their Glory their shame.

The first Inhabitants of this Island were the Posterity of Cittim the Son of Javan, and Grand-son of Japhet: who having seen his Brother Tarshish settled in Cilicia, (where his Memory is still preserved in the City of Tarshus) planted himself and his Retinue in this opposite Island. The City of Cettum, as Protony, or Cittum, as Pliny calleth it, one of the ancientest of the Island, taking name from him; which with the Authority of Josephus, and others of the ancient Writers, put it out of question. But being this Island was too narrow to contain his Numbers, and willing to seek further off for a larger Dwelling, he left here so many of his Followers as might serve in time to plant the Country; and with the rest passed into Macedon, where we have already spoken of him. Made tributary first to Amasis King of Egypt, from which distant about three or four days Sailing. Subjected afterwards to the Phœnicians, a near Neighbour to them, who being a Sea-faring People, made themselves Masters of the Sea-Coasts, and and maritime places. Cinyras the Father of Almiba, (by whom both Father and Grandfather to Almiba) is said to have been King of both. The like affirmed of Belus, one of his Successors, who is said to have been the founder of the City of Citium, named so (if not rather repaired than new built by him) with reference no doubt to Citium, the first Progenitor of this People. By the power and favour of this Belus, Tucer, the Son of Tilimon, banished his Country, accompanied with many Followers from Salamus, Athens, and Arcadia, was settled in the East parts hereof; where the City of Salamus, by him built, was his first Plantation. Yet so that the Phenicians kept their former hold; it being evident in Story that Elulæus one of the Successors of this Belus, (but a King of Tyre) and a Contemporary with Salmanassar King of Assyria, passed over into Cyprus with a puissant Navy, to reduce the Citians to Obedience, who had then rebelled. The Island, at first coming of Tucer hither, so infinitely overgrown with Woods, that the People were not able to Till the Island. Infomuch, that notwithstanding the great waste made of them, both in building Ships, and casting Metals, a Law was made, that every one which would should fell them, and take as much ground in severalty for his own Inheritance, as he could overcome and make fit for Tillage. Encouraged herewith, the natural Cypriots, together with the Colonies of Greeks, Phenicians, Egyptians, so bestirred themselves, that at last they brought it unto Champagn; parcelled out in succeeding times amongst nine Kings, for so many Cyrus, the great Persian Monarch found at his coming hither. But Cyrus, though he did subdue all those petit Princes, yet he took not from them their Estates or Titles: contented with the conquest of it, and an annual Tribute. For after this, in the time of Artaxerxes Mnemon, we find Evagoras and Nicocles, to whom Isostrates inscribed two of his O-rations, to be Kings hereof. And in the time of Alexander the Great, Citium it self (such was the honour born unto the Mother-City) had a King apart, not subject to any other. The King whereof to indear himself with the Conqueror, gave to him a Sword, μαχαίρα δαυμαστίη faith Plutarch, an admirable Sword, both for colour and lightness, which he after used in all his Fights. And after the death of Alexander, his great Commanders cantoning his Estates amongst them, the Princes and People of this Island were in great Distractions, not knowing to whom they might submit for their best advantage. But Ptolomy, who had seized on Agypt for his part of the Spoil, being strong in Shipping, settled them by a personal visit; and fortifying some of the best pieces in it, assured the Country to himself. To him and his Posterity it continued subject till the time of Ptolomy Auletes, the ninth King of this Line in our Account, who gave it for a Portion to one of his Brethren; in whose time, the Romans, without any colour, or pretence of Quarrel, but only to enrich themselves with the spoil of the Island, sent Portius Cato to subdue it. And he at first assayed to get it with the King's consent, offering him in the name of the Roman Senate, the Priesthood of the Temple of Paphos, being a rich and gainful Office, and of high esteem among that People. But when Ptolomy for fear of worse mischief had made away himself by Poyson, Cato without more Ceremony takes possession of it. And because Ammianus Marcellinus the Historian, hath so significantly expressed this business, and withal described so punctually the Estate of this Island; we will add this discourse from him, though somewhat he repeated which was said before. Cyprum insulam procul à Continente distantem, & portuosam, &c. "The Isle of Cyprus, far distant from the Continent, "and well stored with Herbages, is famous, besides many Municipal Towns, for two principal Cities, that "is to say, Salamus, and Paphos; the one sacred to Jupiter, and the other to Venus. An Isle so admirably "fruitful, and with all things furnished, that without

"the help of any foreign Nation, it is able of it self to build and rig forth a ship, from the very Keel unto the Tossail, and trim it with all Tackle necessary for a present Voyage. Nor do I shame to say, that with greater Avarice than Justice, the Romans did invade this Island, King Tolomy, our old Confederate and Ally, being unworthily proscribed for no other reason, but that our Treasury was bare, our Exchequer empty. And he no sooner had prevented this dishonour by a quick and vehement Motion, making away himself by Poyson, but the Island was forthwith made tributary, and the Riches of it, ut hostes extorere desuperant, &c. Quæ in urbe adductæ per Catonem, as the spoils of a conquered Enemy, were brought on Shipboard and conveyed by Cato unto Rome. So far and to this purpose.

I know there is another cause alleged for the sending of Cato on this Errand, viz. that Cato who was then Tribune, and spied the Roman might have opportunity by his absence to revenge himself on Cato, and some others of the opposite Faction; but the main business was the Money, as before was said; the Prey amounting to 7000 Talents, which comes to two Millions, and one hundred thousand Crowns of Coin now current. Which Money and Moveables, amounting unto so vast a Sum, he fearing to lose by Sea, divided it into many small Portions, which he put into several Boxes, viz. in every Box two Talents, and fifty Dracme. At the end of every Box he fastned a long Rope with a piece of Cork, by which floating above the water, the Money, if by Shipwrack lost, might be espied again; which was not much unlike the Buoys which Mariners fasten by long Ropes to their Anchors, that they may be sooner found. We see by this, that the pretence of the Romans to this Country was very weak: Avaritia magis quam Justitia fuit assensu, are the words of Sextus Rufus also. But being made a Roman Province, it was in the division of the Empire assign'd to the Constantinopolitan Emperors, under whom it suffered, as all other parts of the Empire did by the violent invasion of the Saracens, who spoiled and ransacked it in the time of Constance the Second, destroying then the City of Salamais, or Constantia. But that tempest being overblown, they returned again unto that Empire, govern'd by a succession of Dukes, till the year 1184. At which time Andronicus Comnenus usurping the Greek Empire, compelled Isaacus Comnenus, one of the Blood-Royal, to shift for himself; who seizing on this Island, made himself King thereof, and ruling till the year 1191, when Richard the first of England, being denied the common courtesie of taking in fresh Water, and seeing his Soldiers abused by the Cypriots, not only took the King Prisoner, but subdued the whole Island. And as Paterculus telleth us, that when Marcus Antonius had captivated Antiochus King of Syria, Catenis, sed ne quid honori decisset, aureis vincit: So did our Richard keep a Decorum towards this Prisoner, binding him not in bonds of Iron, but Silver. King Richard having thus possessed himself of this Country, sold it for ready Money, (which for the managing of his intended Wars against the Turks, he most needed) unto the Templers; and taking it, upon I know not what discontent, again from them, he bestowed it on Guy of Jusignan, the titular and miserable King of Jerusalem; receiving in way of exchange, the Title of that lost and shipwreck'd Kingdom, with which Title he and some of his Successors for a time were honoured.

In the posterity of this Guy, this Island continued free and absolute, till the year one thousand four hundred twenty three; when Alschella, (or Alschellalar) Sultan of Agypt, invaded this Country, took John King hereof, Prisoner, ransomed him for 150000 Sultanies, restored him to his Kingdom, and imposed on him and his Successors the yearly Tribute of 40000 Crowns. This John was Father to another John, whose two Children were Charlotte a legitimate Daughter, and James a Ballard Son. James after the death of his Father, dispossessed his Sister

Carlote of the Crown, by the consent and help of the Sultan of Agypt; and the better to strengthen himself against all opposition, he took to Wife Caitharine Cornari. Daughter by Adoption to the Venetian Senate; whom at his Death he made his Heir, if the Child she went withal (having then none by her) should die without Issue, as it did, not long after it was born; and she seeing the factious Nobility too headstrong to be bridled by a female Authority, like a good Child resigned her Crown and Scepter to the Venetian State, An. 1473. These defended it against all Claims, (paying only as tribute to the Agyptian, and afterwards to the Turkish Sultans, the 40000 Crowns beforementioned) till the year 1570, when Mustapha, General of the Turks, wrested it from the Venetians, to the use of his Master Selimus the Second, who pretended Title to it as Lord of Agypt. The Governor of the Venetian Forces at the time of this unfortunate loss was Signior Bragadino, who as long as hope of Succours, means of Resistance, or possibility of prevailing continued, with incredible Valour made good the Town of Famagusta, in whose defence consisted the welfare of the whole Island. At last he yielded it on honourable Conditions, had they been as faithfully kept, as punctually agreed on. But Mustapha the Turkish General inviting to his Tent the principal Men of worth in the Town, caused them all to be murder'd: And as for Bragadino himself, he commanded his Ears to be cut off, his Body to be head alive, and his Skin stuffed with Straw, to be hanged at the main yard of his Gally. The chief of the Prisoners and Spoils were in two tall Ships, and one Gallion, sent unto Selimus; but he never saw them. For a noble Cyprian Lady, destinated to the Lust of the Grand Signior, fired certain barrels of Powder; by the violence whereof both the Vessels and the Booty in them were in part burned, in part drowned. A famous and heroick Act, inferior unto none of the Roman Dames, so much commended in their Stories, though more to be commended in a Roman than a Christian Lady.

Thus having summed up the Affairs of this Island from the first plantation of it, till this last said Conquest, I will lay down the succession of the Cyprian Kings of the noble Lusignan Family, in this ensuing Catalogue of

The Kings of CYP R U S.

1191. 1. Guy of Lusignan, the titular King of Hierusalem, estated in the Kingdom of Cyprus, by Richard the First of England.
2. Almericus, the Brother of Guy.
3. Hugh, the Son of Almericus.
4. Henry, the Son of Hugh.
5. Hugh II. Son of Henry.
6. Hugh III. Son of Hugh the Second.
7. John, Son of Hugh the Third.
8. Henry II. the Brother of John.
9. Hugh IV. Son of Guido, the younger Brother of John, and Henry the Second.
10. Peter, the Son of Hugh the Fourth.
11. Petrinus, the Son of Peter.
12. James, younger Brother of Peter, and Uncle to Petrinus.
13. Janus, the Son of James, made Tributary by Melechmafer, to the Kingdom of Agypt.
14. John II. the Son of Janus.
15. Carlote, sole Daughter and Heir of John the Second, first married to John the Prince of Portugal, and after to Lewis Prince of Savoy; outed of her Estate and Kingdom, by
16. James II. the Ballard Son of John the Second, who by a strong hand seized upon it, and by help of the Venetians, kept it during life.
17. James III. Born after the decease of his Father, whom he survived not very long. After whose Death, being the last of this Family, the Venetians possessed themselves of Cyprus; which they invaded with no better Title, than the Romans had done in former times in 1473, not likely to be blest with a long Fruition of that which they had so unjustly got into their hands. But of that already.

And here is to be observed, that these Cyprian Kings retaining the Title of Hierusalem, (towards which they sometimes cast an Eye) bestowed upon their greatest Subjects, and deserving Servitors, both Titles of Honour, and Offices of State, belonging anciently to that Kingdom. So that we find amongst them a Prince of Antioch, a Prince of Galilee, a Count of Tripoli, a Lord of Cæsarea, and a Lord of Mount Tabor; a Seneschal of Hierusalem, a Constable, Marshal, and high Chamberlain of that Kingdom also. With better reason, tho' no doubt, with as little profit, as the Pope gives Bishopricks, and Archbishopricks in Greece, or Agypt. But those titular Offices are now quite extinct, though possibly some of the Titles of Honour which were took from thence, may be still remaining.

But to return unto the Turks, having thus taken Famagusta and Nicosia, on which the whole Island did depend; all other Cities of it, and the whole by consequence, were forced to submit to the Turkish Tyranny.

The Noblemen, and Citizens of principal Quality, either most cruelly massacred in the Sack of those Towns, or banished for ever their native Country, as Men whose living there might possibly endanger their new Conquest. But the Country people, Artificers, and persons of inferior Rank, permitted to enjoy both their Lives, and Livelihoods, together with their several and respective Religions, in the same manner as before; paying such ordinary Taxes as were laid upon them. And so this goodly Island came into the hands of the Turks, who have hitherto enjoyed the possession of it: For notwithstanding that the Venetians in the year next following, with the help of the Pope, and King of Spain, gave the Turks that great and memorable Overthrow, at the famous Battle of Lepanto; yet did they nothing, in pursuit of so great a Victory, for the recovery of this Island; and indeed they could not, the Confederates returning home, and dissolving their Fleet, as soon as they had secured their own Estates by the overthrow of the Turkish Navy. And though the Venetians, to put the best Face they could on so great a loss, so highly pleased themselves with the following Victory, that they put the same in balance with the loss of Cyprus; yet an ingenious Turk, to let them see the folly of so vain a boasting, compared the losing of Cyprus to the loss of an Arm, which could not without a Miracle be recovered; and the loss at Lepanto, to the shaving off of ones Beard, which grows the thicker for the cutting; as indeed it proved, for the next year the Turks armed out another Navy, no less formidable than the other had been before, braving therewith the whole Christian Forces, either not then disbanded, or reassembled. But however the Turks have since been in a declining state as to their Maritime, or Naval Forces, and were never able to recover the loss at Lepanto: And the War of Candy has since reduced their Land Forces to the same ebb; so that in all appearance that Empire is apace sinking into the Gulph of Ruin.

What the Revenues of it were to the Kings hereof, I cannot certainly determine. The profits of Salt only, and that of the Custom-house, yielded yearly to the Seignery of Venice, when it was in their hands, a Million of Crowns. For the Customs and Profits of the Salt were farmed for 500000 Crowns per Annum, which being turned into the chief Syrian Commodities, were counted double worth that Money, when unladed at Venice. To which, if we should add the Lands of the former Kings, and other ways of raising Money on the Subject, I cannot see, but the Inredo of the Crown must must needs amount constantly to a Million and a half yearly, if it were not more.

The Arms hereof were quarterly; First, Argent, a Cross Potent between four Crosses, Or: secondly, Barwise of eight Pieces, Arg. and Azure, supporting a Lyon Passant Azure, Crowned, Or: thirdly, a Lyon Gules; and fourthly, Argent, a Lyon Gules; as Bara, a French Herald hath given the Blazon.

On the East of Cyprus towards Syria, lie four or five Islands, which Plinius calleth by the name of Chalce, not far from the Promontory of that Name; both Promontory and Island, now call'd St. Zambor; and towards the West another little knot of Illets, which he calls Carpasie; but nothing memorable in either. So I pass them over.

There are in Cyprus, Archbishops 2. Bishops 6.

And so much for C Y P R U S.

SYRIA.

SYRIA is bounded on the East with the River Euphrates, by which parted from Mesopotamia; on the West with the Mediterranean Sea; on the North with Cilicia, and Armenia Minor, from the last parted by Mount Taurus; and on the South, with Palestine, and some parts of Arabia. The length hereof, from Mount Taurus to the edge of Arabia, is said to be five hundred twenty and five Miles; the breadth, from the Mediterranean to the River Euphrates, computed at four hundred and seventy, drawing somewhat near unto a Square.

In the Scripture it is call'd Aram, and the People Aramites, because first peopled and possessed by Aram the Son of Sem; though Hamath, Arphad, and Sidon, the Sons of Canaan, did also put in for a share; and yet not call'd thus by the Scriptures only, but by some of the Heathen Writers also: For Strabo doth not only acknowledge that the Syrians in his time were call'd Aequoi, but citeth Possidonius, a more ancient Writer, for proof that the Aequoi, which Homer speaketh of, must be those Syrians: Further averring, that the Syrians call'd themselves by the name of Aremæi; or plainly, Aramites. But by the Greeks they are call'd Syrians, Surians, from the City Tyre, call'd anciently by the name of Sur, or Tsur, (of which more hereafter) either because the Tyrians, or Tsurians had in those times the command of the Sea-Coasts of this Country; or else that Tyre, or Tser being the chief Mart-Town of all those parts, was the place where they traded with those Aramites. Conforming to which ancient Appellations the City of Tyre is again call'd Sur, and this Country Soria. Others conceive, that being when the Greeks first knew it, a part of the Affyrian Empire, the Seat of which was then at Ninve, it was call'd Syria for Affyria; as afterwards Affyria had the name of Syria, (of which more anon) when the Seat of that great Empire was removed to Antioch. And this may very well be so, considering that by the like decurtation we have turned Hispania unto Spain, as the Greeks before us did into Spania, by which name it occurs, Rom. 15. 28.

But here we are to understand, that though the Syria of the Romans, as it was a Member of that Empire, was limited within the bounds before laid down, yet anciently as well the Aram of the Hebrews, as the Syria of the Greeks and Romans, was of greater Latitude; of which, because it may be useful to the understanding of holy Scriptures, and of some Classick Authors also, I shall enlarge a little further. For Aram, taken in the largest acceptation of it, extendeth from the Coast of Cilicia,

North, to Idumæa towards the South; from the River Tygris in the East, to the Mediterranean Sea upon the West; containing besides the Syria of the Greeks and Romans, (in which Palestine was also included) Arabia the Desart, and Petræa, Chaldæa, Babylonia, and all those Provinces to which the name Aram is either prefixed, or subjoyned in the Book of God, as Aram-Nabaraïm, Aram-Sobab, Padan-Aram, Aram-Maachab, Sede-Aram, Aram-Beth-Rehob, all mention'd in the Holy Scriptures. Some do extend it further yet, and do not only bring Armenia within the Latitude of this Name, which they derive from Aram-minni, whose Neighbourhood to Syria may give some colour to the Error; but even those People of Cappadecia bordering on the Euxine Sea, the Inhabitants of which were anciently call'd Leuco-Syri, or White Syrians. But this not having any good Warrant, or Authority wherewithal to back it, shall not come under the compass of this Consideration. But for the rest, I find it generally agreed upon amongst the Learned, that Aram-Nabaraïm is the same with the whole Country of Mesopotamia, so named both by the Jews and Greeks, because it is environed with the two famous Rivers of Tygris and Euphrates, which Priscian by a meer Latin name, would have to be call'd Medam-na, but Inter Amna, by his leave, would express it better. And as for Padan-Aram wherein Laban dwelt, which is call'd Sede-Aram by the Prophet H-Jea, Ch. 12. ver. 13. that is a part only of the other; the whole Country of Aram-Nabaraïm, or Mesopotamia, being divided into two parts, whereof the more fruitful lying Northward, is call'd Padan-Aram, or Sede-Aram, to whose Inhabitants Xenophon gives the name of Syriani; the barren and most desert lying towards the South, which by the same Author is call'd Arabia. For Aram-Maachab mention'd 1 Chron. 19. 6. it is conceived to be that part of Syria which was after nam'd Comagena, whereof Samosata was the Metropolis, or Mother-City. And as for Aram-Sobab, of which, and of Adadzar the King thereof, there is so frequent mention in the Books of the Kings and Chronicles, it was the Province lying on the North East of Damascus, and so extending to the Banks of the River Euphrates, and is the same with that which afterwards was call'd Palmyra, from the City of Palmyra, South-West of which, amongst the petty Kingdoms on the North of Gislar, in the Land of Palestine, lay the Kingdom of Aram-Beth-Rehob, confederate with Ammon in the War which they had with David, 2 Sam. 10. 6. Nor did the Greeks less extend the name of Syria, than the Hebrews did did the name of Aram, if they stretched it not further. Certain I am, that Strabo comprehendeth the Assyrians, in the name of Syria, where he affirmeth, that the Medes over rul'd all Asia, καταλύσαντα πῶς ἦν Σύρον ἀσκήν, the Empire of the Syrians (he meaneth the Assyrians) being overthrown. And in Herodotus it is said, that those whom the Barbarians call Assyrians, ὑπὸ μὲν Ἑλλήνων ἐκαλέοντο Σύριοι, were call'd Syrians by the Greeks. And to that purpose Justin also, Imperium Assyrii, qui postea Syri dicti sunt, annos 1300 tenuere. But these all write after the time that Selucus and his Race had the possession of the Eastern Empire; who living for the most part in Syria, from whence they might more easily furnish themselves with Soldiers out of Greece, (as they did most commonly for all their Military Expeditions) caused all the other parts of their large Dominions to be call'd, in tract of time, by the name of Syria. But on the other side, as the Syria of the Romans extended not so far to the East and South, as the Aram of the Hebrews did; so it contained some other Regions; that is to say, those of Phœnicia and Palestine, which were not comprehended in the name of Aram, as being planted by a People of another Race, and of different Fortunes, till brought together under the command of the Babylonians. In which regard we will treat severally of the natures of the Soil and People, their Originals, Government, and Successes, till we have brought them into one hand, and then continue their Affairs, as one joint Estate. But first we will survey the ancient and present Fortunes of Christianity, and other Religions herein embraced or tolerated, wherein the whole, according to the bounds and limits before laid down, is alike concerned.

And for Religions in this Country, here is choice enough; those namely of the Mahometan, Christian, Pagan, and one compounded out of all, which is that of the Drusians: The Mahometan embraced by the generality of the People throughout the whole, and by all that be in any Office or Authority, is only countenanced and approved of, though all the rest be tolerated. The Pagan entertained only in the mountainous Countries bordering on Armenia, inhabited by a People whom they call'd Curdi, or the Curdenes, supposed to be descended from the ancient Parthians, as being very expert in Bows and Arrows, their most usual Arms. A Race of People who is said to worship alike both God and the Devil; the one, that they may receive Benefits from him; the other, that he may not hurt them. Se alios deos colere ut profint, alios ne noceant, as Lactantius doth affirm, of the ancient Grecians. But their principal Devotions are addressed to the Devil only, and that upon good Reasons, as themselves conceive: For God, they say, is a good Man, and will do no body no harm; but the Devil is a mischievous Fellow, and must be pleased with Sacrifices, that he hurt them not. And for the Drusians they are conceived to be the remainder of those Franks (by which name the Turks call all Western Christians) who driven unto the Mountains (when they lost the Sovereignty and Possession of the Holy-Land) and defending themselves by the advantage of the place, could never be wholly rooted out by the Turks, contented at the length to afford them both Peace, and liberty of their Religion. But they have so forgot the Principles of that Religion, that they retain nothing of it but Baptism, and not that generally neither; accounting it lawful, most unlawfully to marry their own Daughters, Sisters, or Mothers; and yet conform unto the Turks in their Habits only, wearing the white Turbant, as the Turks do; but abhorring Circumcision, and indulging to themselves the liberty of Wine, by Law forbidden to the Turks. A People otherwise very Warlike, Stout, and Resolute; with great both Constancy and Courage, resisting hitherto the Attempts of the Turkish Sultans. The Country they possess environed with the Confines of Joppa, about Cæsarea Pa- lestinae, betwixt the Rivers of Jordan and Orontes, extending Eastwards as far as the Plains of Damascus; so that here is no part of Syria, except Comagena, unto which their Habitations reach not.

But for the Christian Faith, it was first preaced here by some of the dispersed Brethren, (which fled from the rage of Persecution in Phœnicie) and the City of Antiochia, amongst whom St. Peter, as he passed through all quarters, Acts 9. 31. is by the Fathers said to have been the chief. The Church more fully planted in it by Barnabas first, after by Paul and Barnabas jointly; who spending there a whole year together, enlarged the Borders of the Church, and gained much People, as is said, Acts 11. 19, &c. infomuch, that here the Disciples were first called Christians, ver. 26. Not call'd so accidentally, as a thing of chance, but on a serious consultation amongst themselves, and a devout invocation on the Name of God, to direct them in it. The word Κηρυχίσαι used in the Original, importeth somewhat of Oracular and Divine direction. And certainly it standeth with reason that it should be so. For if upon the giving of a name to John Baptist, there was not only a consultation had of the Friends and Mother, but the dumb Father call'd to advise about it; and if we use not to admit the poorest Child of the Parish into the Congregation of Christ's Church by the door of Baptism, but by the joint invocation of the Name of God for his blessing on it: with how much more regard of Ceremony and Solemnity, must we conceive that the whole Body of Christ's People were baptized into the name of Christians? And there is some proof of it too, besides probability and conjectures. For Suidas, and before him Johannes Antiochenus, an old Cosmographer, do expressly say, that in the days of Claudius Cæsar, ten years after the Ascension of our Lord and Saviour, Euodius received Episcopal consecration, and was made Patriarch of Antioch the Great in Syria, succeeding immediately to St. Peter: then addeth, that at that time the Disciples were first call'd Christians. Τὸ αὐτὸ Ἐπισκόπος Ἐυοδῖος χειροτονήσας αὐτοῖς, καὶ ἐπηθήσας αὐτοῖς τὸ ὄνομα τῆτο, &c. i. e. Euodius their Bishop, calling them to a Solemn Assembly, and imposing this new Name upon them, whereas before they were call'd Nazarites and Galileans. A People so hated by the Heathen, that they ceased not to slander them from the first beginning. For as concerning this Sect we know that it is every where spoken against, said the Jews of Rome to the Apostle, Acts 28. 22. Tacitus, a Roman, but a Gentle, goes yet further with them, calling them Homines per flagitia invidios, & novissima meritos exempla: The Calumny in his time being strong and general, that at their private meetings they devoured Infants, and had carnal company with their Mothers and Sisters. Which defamations notwithstanding, they grew in few years to so great numbers, that they were a terror to their Enemies; though grievously afflicted, tortured, and put to several kinds of Death, under the ten famous Persecutions, raised against them, by Nero, An. 67. 2. Domitian, An. 96. 3. Trajanus, An. 110. 4. Marcus Antoninus, An. 167. 5. Severus, An. 195. 6. Maximinus, An. 237. 7. Decius, An. 250. 8. Valerianus, An. 259. 9. Aurelianus, An. 278. 10. By Dioclesianus, An. 293. All, but this last especially, so extremely raging, that (as St. Hierom writeth in one of his Epistles) there was martyr'd 5000 for each day in the Year, except the first of January, on which they used not to shed Blood. But Sanguis Martyrum, Semen Ecclesiæ. This little grain of Mustard-seed, sowed by God's own hand, and watered by the Blood of so many holy Men, grew so great a Tree, that the branches of it spread themselves over all the World; and got such footing even in the Roman Army it self, (Men commonly not of the strictest kind of Religion) that when Julian the Apostate, had vomited out his Soul, with Picisti tandem Galilee, they elected Jovianum, though a Christian, for his Successor, with this Acclamation, Christiani omnes sumus, We are also Christians. But see how the baptizing baptizing of God's People by the name of Christians in the City of Antioch, hath drawn me out of my way; I return again, both to the place, and to the Author. In whose Evidence, besides what doth concern the imposition of the name of Christian upon the body of the Faithful, we have a testimony for St. Peter's being Bishop of Antioch, the first Bishop thereof, (of the Church of the Jews therein at least) as is said positively by Eusebius in his Chronology, St. Ilicron in his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Writers, St. Chrysostom in his Homilie de translatione Ignatii, Theodoret Dialog. 1. St. Gregory Epist. lib. 6. cap. 37. and before any of them by Origen, in his sixth Homily on St. Luke. With reference whereunto, and in respect that Antioch was accounted always the principal City of the East parts of the Roman Empire, (the Præfect of the East for the most part residing in it) the Bishop hereof in the first Ages of Christianity, had jurisdiction over all the Churches in the East, as far as the bounds of that Empire did extend that way. To which by Constantine the Great, the Provinces of Cilicia and Isauria, with those of Mesopotamia and Ostroene were after added, containing 15 Roman Provinces, or the whole Dioecese of the Orient. And though by the subtracting of the Churches of Palestine, and the decay of Christianity in these parts by the Conquests of the Turks and Saracens, the jurisdiction of this Patriarch hath been very much lessened; yet William of Tyre, who flourished in the Year 1130, reciteth the names of 13 Archiepiscopal, 21 Metropolitanal, and 127 Episcopal Sees, yielding Obedience in his time to the See of Antioch. Since which that number is much diminished, Mahometism more and more increasing, and Christianity divided into Sects and Factions; insomuch, that of three sorts of Christians living in these Countries, viz. The Maronites, Jacobites, and the Melchites, only the Melchites are subordinate to the Church of Antioch, the others having Patriarchs of their own Religion.

And first for the Melchites, who are indeed the true and proper Members of the Church of Antioch, and the greatest body of Christians in all the East; they are so named in way of scorn, by the Jacobite and Maronite Schismaticks, separating without just cause from their Communion. The name derived from Melch, signifying in the Syriack Language a King or Emperor; because adhering to their Primate, they followed the Canons and Decisions of preceding Councils, ratified by Authority of the Emperor Leo, by whom subscription was required to the Acts thereof; and were in that respect (as we use to say) of the Kings Religion. Conform in points of Doctrine to the Church of Greece, but that they celebrate Divine Service as solemnly on the Saturday, as upon the Sunday. Subject to the true and Original Patriarch, who, since the destruction of Antioch, doth reside in Damascus; and on no terms acknowledging the Authority of the Popes of Rome.

Next for the Maronites, they derive that name, either from Marona, one of the principal Villages where they first inhabited; or from the Monastery of St. Maron, mention'd in the first Act of the Council of Constantinople holden under Menas, the Monks of which call'd Maronites; were the head of their Sect. Some Points they hold, in which they differ from all Orthodox Christians; others in which they differ only from the Church of Rome. Of the first sort, 1. That the Holy Ghost proceedeth from the Father only, without relation to the Son. 2. That the Souls of Men were created all together at the first beginning. 3. That Male-Children are not to be baptized together, but at several times by one and one. 4. That Hereticks returning to the Church are to be re-baptized. 5. That the Child is made unclean by the touch of his Mother, till her Purification; and therefore not baptizing Children till that time be past, which after the Birth of a Male-Child must be forty days; of a Female eighty. 6. That the Eucharist is to be given to Children presently after Baptism. 7. That the fourth

Marriage is utterly unlawful. 8. That the Father may dissolve the Marriage of his Son, or Daughter. 9. That young men are not to be ordained Deacons or Presbyters, except they be married. 10. That nothing strangled, or of Blood may be eaten by Christians. 11. That Women in their monthly Courses are not to be admitted to the Eucharist, or to come into the Church. 12. And finally, (which was indeed their first discrimination from the Orthodox Christians) that there was but one Will and Action in Christ; the Factors of which Opinion had the name of Monothelites. Of the last kind, 1. That the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was to be administered in both kinds. 2. And leavened Bread. 3. That Bread to be broken to the Communicants, (and not each Man to have his Wafer to himself) according to the first Institution. 4. Not reserving that Sacrament. 5. Nor carrying any part of the consecrated Elements to sick persons in danger of death. 6. That Marriage is nothing inferior to the single life. 7. That Christ entereth the Kingdom of Heaven till the General Judgment. 8. That the Saturday, or old Sabbath is not to be altered. 9. Nor the Sacrament upon days of Fasting to be administered till the Evening. They withdrew themselves from the See of Antioch, and set up a Patriarch of their own many Ages since, (but the certain time thereof I find not) conferring on him for the greater credit of their Schism, the honourable Title of the Patriarch of Antioch. His name perpetually to be Peter, as the undoubted Successor of that Apostle in the See thereof, dispersed about the spurs and branches of Mount Libanus, where they have many Townships and scattered Villages, of which four are reported to retain in their common speech the true ancient Syriack; that is to say, 1. Eden, a small Village, but a Bishop's See, by the Turks call'd Echira. 2. Hutchteth. 3. Sherry. 4. Bolosa, or Blousa, little superior to the rest in bigness, or beauty, but made the seat of their Patriarch, when he comes amongst them. At such time as the Western Christians were possessed of these parts, they submitted to the Church of Rome; but upon their expulsion by the Turks and Saracens, they returned again to the Obedience of their own Patriarch, on whom they have ever since depended. His Residence for the most part at Tripolis, a chief Town of Syria; but when he came to visit his Churches, and take an account of his suffragan Bishops (who are nine in number) then at Blousa, as is said before. Won to the Papacy again by John Baptist, a Jesuit, in the time of Pope Gregory the Thirteenth, who sent them a Catechism from Rome, Printed in the Arabian Language, (which is generally spoken by them) for their instruction in the Rudiments of that Religion; yet so that their Patriarch still retains his former Power, and the Priests still officiate by the old Liturgies of those Churches, in the Syriack Tongue. So that this reconciliation upon the matter, is but a matter of Compliment on the one side, and Ostentation on the other; without any increase of Power, or Patrimony to the Pope at all. And for the Jacobites, though dispersed in many places of this Country; yet since they are more intirely settled in Mesopotamia, where their Patriarch also hath his Abode, or Residence, we shall there speak of them.

The Language vulgarly here spoken is the Arabick Tongue, continued here ever since the subjugation of these Countries by the Saracens. But anciently they spake the Syrian and Phœnician Languages. Of which; the first (for of the other we shall speak when we come to Phœnicia) was the very same with the Chaldean, (as the learned Brerewood hath observed) either originally so, or else received by them when first conquered by the Babylonians. In which respect the Jews, when they returned home from their long Captivity, gave to the Language which they brought with them, the name of Syriack, being a compound of the Hebrew and Chaldean Tongues; Chaldean for a great part of it, as to the substance substance of the Words: But Hebrew as to the notation of Points, & conjugations, Affixes, and other properties of their former and original Speech. And of this more hereafter also, when we come to Palestine. But whatsoever their Language was in former time, it is now so overtopped by the Arabick, that it is spoken in four Villages of the Maronites only in all these Countries; the Arabick being generally used in all the rest, as was said before.

Principal Rivers of these parts are 1. Chorfaus, call'd Chiron by the Hebrews, which hath its Fountain in Palestine, but it falls in Phœnicia, not far from Mount Carmel. 2. Orontes, now call'd Saldino, and by some Writers Jordan the less, ariseth out of the Hills call'd Pieria, not far from Mount Libanus; and after a while running under the ground, breaketh forth again about Aparnia, and passing by the great City of Antioch, falleth into the Sea not far from it. It was first call'd Tiphon, and took this name from one Orontes, who built first the Bridge over it, as we find in Strabo. 3. Elutherus, which riseth out of some part of Libanus, and glided with a speedy course thorow a strangely intricate Channel into the Mediterranean Sea: Guilty of the death of the Emperor Fredrick Barbarasso, who falling from his Horse as he pursued the Infidels, and oppressed with the weight of his Armour, was here drowned, and lieth buried at Tyre. It is now call'd Casmer. 4. Singas, by whom said to be call'd Marsus also, which arising in the mountainous parts of Comagena, and passing by the City of Seleppo, falleth into Euphrates. 5. Euphrates, the most famous River of the East; of which more hereafter.

Chief Mountains of it, 1. Carmel, which being properly of Phœnicia, we shall there speak of it. 2. Pieria, out of which the River Orontes hath its first Original. 3. Casius, not far from Antioch, said to be four Miles high perpendicularly. 4. Libanus, famous for its multitude of Cedars growing thereupon; affording materials unto Solomon for the holy Temple. Besides which it affordeth such store of Frankincense, that some derived the name from Algar, signifying Frankincense in the Greek; and so replenished with Honey falling from the Heavens, and hanging on the Boughs of the Trees, that the Husbandmen used to sing (as Galen telleth us) that God rained Honey; and yearly filled their Pots and Vessels with the sweets thereof. This the most famous and greatest Hill of all these parts, extending in length 150 Miles; that is to say, from Sidon, a City of Phœnicia, to Smirna, one of the Cities of Cælo-Syria; and taking seven hundred Miles in compass. Inhabited wholly in a manner by the Maronite Christians, who to keep that Dwelling to themselves, without the intermixture of Mahometans, do yearly pay to the Great Turk, seventeen Sultanies a Man, for every one above twelve years of Age; each Sultany being reckoned at seven Shillings and Six-pence of our Money. And yet those Maronites, though intire, without intermixture, are held to be the smallest Sect, for numbers, in all the East; not estimated to exceed twelve thousand Households, by reason of the indisposition of this Mountain, in most places unfit for Habitation. For besides the cragginess and steepness of it, which makes many parts hereof to be inaccessible; the higher Ridges of it are in a manner perpetually covered with Snow, not melted in so hot a Climate at the nearest approaches of the Sun. And thence no doubt it took this Name; the word Leban, in the Hebrew and Phœnician Language, signifying White, or Whiteness; even as from the like whiteness of Snow, the highest part of the Tyrenian Hills had the name of Canus; and that perpetual Ridge of Mountains, which parts Italy from France and Germany, had the name of Alpes. Janfontus saith it is the highest Mountain in Palestine, the Northern boundary of which it is; and may be seen at the distance of 40 Miles. It produceth Frankincense, and a precious Drug call'd Sattar by the Inhabitants, and by us Manna; out of it springs the Chrysorrhoas, Jordan, Elutherus, Leon, Lycus, and the River Adonis. It is a fruitful pleasant Mountain, covered with Cedars, Cypresses, Pines, Olives, Box, and Furze, and under them with Aromatick and Medicinal Herbs, full of all sorts of ravenous wild Beasts, and no less replenished with pleasant and musical Birds. It is now inhabited by Syrians, Armenians, Greeks, Jacobites, Georgians, Maronites, and Nestorians. 5. Anti-Libanus, opposite to the former, and for that so call'd, a rich, but little Valley only being interposed; out of which Valley the Orontes hath its Spring, or Fountain, the Hill Pieria there beginning to advance it self. Some make but one Mountain of them both, divided into two great Ledges, or Chains of Hills. Of which the main body lying towards the North, hath the name of Libanus; that on the South, being but a branch or excursion of it, call'd Anti-Libanus. And to this the Scripture gives some hint, in which both pass for one, by the name of Lebanon.

The whole Country was anciently divided into these six parts, viz. 1. Phœnicia. 2. Palestine. 3. Syria specially so call'd. 4. Comagena. 5. Palmyrene; and 6. Cælo-Syria, or Syria Cæva. But Palestine coming under a more distinct consideration, we shall now speak only of the rest.

I. P H O E N I C I A.

Phœnicia is bounded on the East and South, with Palestine; on the North with Syria properly and specially so call'd; on the West with the Mediterranean Sea. So call'd by the Grecians, from the abundance of Palm-Trees therein growing, the word Phœnix in that Language signifying a Palm. And for a farther proof hereof, (for I know there are other Etymons and Originations pretended for it) the Palm was anciently the special Cognisance, or Ensign of this Country; as the Olive-branch, and Cony of Spain, the Elephant of Africk, the Camel of Arabia, and the Crocodile of Egypt, being peculiar to those Countries. And in an old Coin of the Emperor Vespasian's, stamped for a memorial of his conquest of Judæa, the Impress is a Woman sitting in a sad and melancholick posture, at the back of a Palm-Tree, with these two words, Judæa Capta, inscribed thereon; in which, no question may be made, but that the desolate Woman signifieth the Land of Judæa, and the Palm Phœnicia; Phœnicia being seated immediately on the North, at the back of Jewry.

But it was thus first call'd by the Grecians only, the Latins and other People after them taking up that name. For by themselves, and the People of Israel their next Neighbours, they are call'd Canaanites, or the Posterity of Canaan, five of whose Sons, viz. Zidon, Harki, Arvadi, Senari, and Chamathi, were planted here; the other six inhabiting more towards the South and East, in the Land of Palestine. For further evidence hereof we may add these Reasons: First, that the same Woman which in St. Matthew's Gospel, Chap. 15. 22. is named a Canaanite, is by St. Mark, Chap. 7. 26, call'd a Syro-Phœnician. Secondly, Where mention is made in the Book of Joshua, of the Kings of Canaan; the Septuagint (who very well understood the History and Language of their Country) call them βασιλεῖς τῶν φοινίκων, or the Kings of Phœnicia. Thirdly, The Pawni, or Carthaginians, being beyond all dispute a Tyrian, or Phœnician Colony, when they were asked any thing of their Original, would answer that they were Channici; meaning, (as St. Augustine, that Countryman, doth expound their words) that they were originally Canaanites, of the stock of Canaan. And lastly, From the Language of it, which anciently was the old Hebrew, Canaanitish, or the Language of Canaan; spoken both here, and in Palestine also, before that Country was possessed by the House of Jacob; as appears plainly by those names by which the places and Cities of Canaan were call'd, when, and before the Israelites came first to dwell amongst them, them, which are meerly Hebrew. And so much, as unto the Language is acknowledged by Bochartus also, who in the entrance of his Book inscribed Chanaan, declares what profit may ensue from that undertaking to the Hebrew Tongue; Cassius Phœnicia linguæ dialecta fuit, of which the Phœnician Language was a Dialect only.

The Country of it self not great, extended in a good length, from the further side of Mount Carmel, where it joyns with Palestine, to the River Kolanus on the North, by which parted from Syria: But withal so narrow, that it is little more than a bare Sea-Coast, and therefore very rightly call'd Terrarum angustissima, by a modern Writer. Rich rather by the benefit and increase of Trade, (to which no Nation under Heaven hath been more addicted) than by the natural Commodities which the Land afforded; yet for the quantity thereof, no place could be more plentifully furnished with Oyl, Wheat, and the best sort of Balm, and most excellent Honey; the lower part hereof being designed for the seat of Asher, of whom Moses prophesied, Deut. 33. 24. that he should dip his foot in Oyl. So that the Country generally, was well-condition'd, lovely to look upon, populous, and adorned with more beautiful Cities, than such a span of Earth could be thought to hold. Of which thus writeth Ammianus, Acclivis monti Libano Phœnicia Regio, plena gratiarum & venustatis, urbibus decorata magnis & pulchris, &c. i. e. Falling from Mount Libanus, lyeth the Country of Phœnicia, full of all Graces and Elegancies, adorned with great and beautiful Cities, of which the most renowned for the fertility of their Soil, and the fame of their Atchievements, are Tyre, Sidon, Berytus, &c.

The People anciently, by reason of their Maritime situation, were great adventurers at Sea, trading in almost all the Ports of the then known World, and sending more Colonies abroad upon foreign Plantations, than any Nations in the Earth. An active and ingenuous People, said to have been the first Navigators, the first builders of Ships, the first inventors of Letters, (of which hereafter more on some other occasion) and the first Authors of Arithmetick, the first that brought Astronomy to an Art or Method, and the first makers of Glass. De-famed in holy Scripture for their gross Idolatries, by which they laid a Stumbling-block at the Feet of the Israelites; Astarte (or Astarte) the Goddess of the Sidonians (but whether Juno, Venus, or some other, I dispute not here) being so highly prized amongst them, that Solomon himself, when he fell from God, made this one of his Idols. Once yearly, as Eusebius telleth us, they sacrificed some of their Sons to Saturn, whom in their Language they call'd Moloch: And in the inmost retreats of Libanus had a Temple to Venus, defiled with the practice of most filthy Lusts, intemperately using the natural Sex, and most unnaturally abusing their own. Nor could the purity and piety of the Christian Faith prevail so far, as to extinguish these ungodly Rites, till Constantine finally destroyed both the Temples and Idols, and left not any thing remaining of them, but the shame and infamy. St. Austin addeth, that they did prostitute their Daughters unto Venus before they married them; and it is most likely to be true. For the Phœnicians and Cyprians being so near Neighbours, and subject for a time to the same Princes also, could not but impart their impure Rites and Ceremonies unto one another.

Rivers of note there can be none in so narrow a Region but what are common unto others, and shall there be spoken of. Most proper unto this is the River of Adonis, (now call'd Camus), so named most probably from Adonis, the Darling of Venus, whose Rites are here performed with as much solemnity, as they be in Cyprus. His Obsequies celebrated yearly in the month of June, with great howlings and lamentations, Lactantius fabling that the River usually streameth Blood upon that Solemnity; (as if Adonis were newly wounded in the Mountains of Libanus), to give the better colour to their Superstitions. But the truth is, that this rehearsal of the water ariseth only from the Winds; which at that time of the year blowing very vehemently, do thereby carry down the Stream a great quantity of Minium, or red Earth, from the sides of those Hills, wherewith the waters are discoloured. Such use can Satan make of a natural Accident, to blind the Eyes, and captivate the Understandings of besotted People.

Chief Mountains of this Country are, 1. Libanus, spoken of before, which hath here its first advance, or rising. 2. Carmel, which Ptolomy placeth in this Country, of which it is the utmost part upon the South, where it joyneth with Palestine. Washed on the North-side with the Brook Chalon, on the West with the Mediterranean Sea; steep of Ascent, and of indifferent Altitude; abounding with several sorts of Fruits, Olives, and Vines in good plenty, and stored with Herbs both Medicinable, and sweet of smell. The Retreat sometimes of Elias when he fled from Jezabel; whose Habitation here, after his decease, was converted to a Jewish Synagogue. To this place (being then in the possession of the Kings of Israel) did that Prophet assemble the Priests of Baal; and having by a miraculous Experiment confuted their Idolatrous Follies, caused them to be cut in pieces on the Banks of the River Chalon near adjoining to it. Upon this visible declaring of the Power and Presence of the Almighty, the Gentiles grew persuaded that Oracles were there given by God, by Suetonius call'd the God Carmelus. Where speaking of Vespasian, who had then newly took upon him the Imperial Dignity, he addeth, Apud Judæam, Carmeli Dei Oracula conspiciuntur ita confirmare sortes, &c. That consulting in Judæa with the Oracle of the God Carmelus, he was assured that whatsoever he undertook should succeed well with him. In after-times the Order of the Friars Carmelites, as Successors unto the Children of the Prophets left here by Elijah, had their names from hence: The Ruins of whose Monastery are still to be seen, with a Temple dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; and under that a Cave, or Chappel, said to have been the lurking place of that holy Prophet, in the time of his troubles.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Ptolomais, now nothing but a ruin of what it hath been, but formerly of great Strength and Consequence. Named Acre at the first, a Refuge for the Persian Kings in their Wars against Egypt. Enlarged, or rather new built by Ptolomy, the first of that Race, by whom call'd Ptolomais, which name still continued, though Claudius Cæsar planting there a Roman Colony, would fain have had it call'd Colonia Claudia. After the Conquest of it by the Saracens, in the time of Omar the great Caliph, it returned towards its first name, and was call'd Acon, or Acre; both names still remaining in vulgar Speech, as that of Ptolomais amongst Latin Writers. Situate in the flourish of it on a flat, or level in form of a triangular Shield; on two sides neighboured by the Sea, which comes up close to it; on the third looking towards the Champaign: environed with a double Wall, to each Wall a Ditch, fortified on the outside with Towers and Bulwarks, within the Walls so strongly housed, as if the whole Town had been a Conjunction of Fortresses, and not ordained for private Dwellings. In the midst of the City was one Tower of great Strength and Beauty, which had sometimes been the Temple of Bezebut, and was therefore call'd the Castle of Phes; on the top whereof was maintain'd a perpetual Light, like the Pharos of Egypt, to give comfort and direction in the night to such Mariners as made towards this Port. Took from the Christians by the Saracens in the time of Omer, and from them wrested by the Turks with the rest of Syria. It became Christian again, Anno 1094, in the Reign of Baldwin the first, Brother of the Famous Godfrey of Bouillon, and second King of Hierusalem, by the help of the Genoese; who for their pains had the third part of the City assigned unto them. Recovered by Saladine to the Turks, in 1187, and from him taken again by the Western Christians, under the conduct conduct of Philip of France, and Richard the First of England, An. 1191, it continued in the possession of the Kings of Hierusalem, notably defended by the Hospitallers (now Knights of Malta) till the year 1291. When besieged by an Army of an hundred and fifty thousand Turks, it was forced to yield, though lost by Inches; and the Turks fearing lest the Christians would again attempt it, razed it to the ground, demolishing the large Walls and Arches of it, which lie like massy Rocks on their old Foundations. Memorable in those times for the brave Service here done by the Christians of the Western parts, of which none more renowned than those of our Richard the First, and Edward the First. This latter here treacherously wounded by an Infidel, with a poisoned Knife, the Venom whereof could by no means be asswaged, till his most vertuous Wife (herein proposing a most rare Example of conjugal Affection) sucked it out with her Mouth. And for the former, he became so terrible and redoubted among the Turks, that when their Children began to cry, they would say Peace, King Richard, is coming; and when their Horses started, they would spur them, saying, What you fades, do you think that King Richard is here? By the Mammalucks, when Lords of Syria, it was patched together, and made fit for Habitation rather than Defence; not peopled by above 300 Inhabitants, nor would it have so many, but for the Haven adjoining; which though a small Bay, and of very ill Anchorage, is much frequented by the Merchants of our Western World, trading here for their Cotten Wools, with which the neighbouring Country is abundantly furnished. I have staid the longer in this place, by reason of the great Fame and Importance of it, as being the last Hold which the Christians had of all their Conquests; with the loss whereof, they laid aside all thoughts of those Holy Wars. 2. Tyre, seated in a rocky Island, about seventy paces from the main Land; well built, and circular of Form, as well by Art as Nature impreguably fortified. A Colony of the Sidonians, and therefore by the Prophet Isa. Chap. 23. ver. 12. call'd the Daughter of Sidon; but by them built upon an high Hill, the Ruins whereof, by the name of Palatyrus, or old Tyre, are remaining still. Removed unto the Islands by Agenor, King of the Phœnicians, and by him named Sor, or Tzor, from the rocky situation of it, (as that word importeth.) Molli- fied by the Greeks to Tyrus, and from them taken by the Latins, though known to them also by the name of Sara, (the Tyrtan Purple being by Virgil, and some others of the ancient Poets, call'd Sarrarum Ostrum) and now at last returned to its first original Name, vulgarly at this day call'd Sar. Josaphus in the 8 Lib. of the Ant. c. 2. saith Tyre was built 2400 years before Solomon's Temple, which is to be understood of the second Tyre built in the Sea; which last Petavius parallels with the year of the Juban Period 3702, An. Mundi 2938; so that Tyre was built in 2698, in the times of Gideon. A City in elder times of great Trade and Wealth; the Prophet Isa. Chap. 27. ver. 8. calling the Merchants hereof Princes, and her Chapmen the Nobles of the World. Excelling all others of those times both for Learning and Manufactures, specially for the dying of Purple, first here invented; and that as Julius Pollux said, by a very accident; the Dog of Hercules (or if not his, some Dog or other) whose Lips by eating of the Fish call'd Conchylis, or Purpura, had been made of that colour. Grown to great pride, by reason of the Wealth and Pleasures, her destruction was fore-signify'd by the holy Prophets, accomplished in God's own time by Nebuchadnezzar, who with great Industry and Toil joyn'd it to the Continent. But his Works being demolished by the fury of the Sea, and the labour of the Tyrtans, it was after seventy years again re-edified; and having flourished after that for two hundred years, by Alexander the Great was again demolished, to whose indefatigable perseverance nothing was impossible. For having filled the Channel with the Stones and Rubbish of old Tyre, and rammed them in with huge Beams brought from Libanus, he made a passage for his Army; and having once approached the Walls, so over-topped them with Towers and Frames of Timber, that at last he made himself Master of it, putting to the Sword all such as resisted, and causing two thousand of them to be hanged in cold Blood, all along the Shore, for a terror to others. This Rendition of the Town was divined by the Southsayers, who followed the Camp of Alexander, upon a Dream which he had not long before: For dreaming that he had disported himself with Satyrs, the Diviners only making of one word two, found that Σατυρ was no more than Σατυρ that is, Tus Tyrus; and it happened accordingly. Recovering once again both her Riches and Beauties, she became a Confederate of the Romans in the growth of their Fortunes; endowed by them with the Privileges of their City, for her great Fidelity. Made in the best times of Christianity the Metropolitan See for the Province of Phœnicia, the Bishop hereof having under him fourteen Suffragan Bishops. Subjected to the Saracens in the year Six hundred and thirty six, and having groaned under that yoke for the space of four hundred eighty and eight years, was at the last regained by Guarimund, Patriarch of Hierusalem, in the Reign of the second Baldwin, the Venetians contributing their assistance to it, An. 1124. In vain attempted afterwards by victorious Saladine in 1187; but finally brought under the Turkish Thralldom, An. 1289, (or as others say in 1292.) as it still continueth. Now nothing but an heap of Ruins; but the very Ruins of it of so fair a Prospect, as striketh both Pity and Amazement into the Beholders, shewing them an exemplary Pattern of our human Frailty. Subject at the present to the Emir, or Prince of Sidon, and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, one of the best of the Levant, but of no great trading. 3. Sarepta, by the Hebrews call'd Sarphatb, situate on the Sea-Coast betwixt Tyre and Sidon. Memorable in Holy Writ for the Miracle here performed by the Prophet Elijah, in raising the poor Widow's Son; in Heathen Writers for the purest Wines, little inferior unto those of Falernum in Italy, or Chios in Greece: Of which, thus the Poet,

Quæque Sareptano palmite missa bibas.*

In English thus:

I have no Chian or Falernian Wines,
Nor those of Gazas, or Sareptas Vines.

4. Sidon, the ancientest City of all Phœnicia, and the most Northern of all those which were assigned for the Portion of the Sons of Asser; beyond which the Country of Phœnicia having been hitherto nothing but a bare Sea-Coast, beginneth to open towards the East in a fine rich Valley, having Libanus upon the North, and the Anti-Libanus on the South; once closed up from the rest of Syria with a very strong Wall, long since demolished. It was so call'd from Zidon, one of the Sons of Canaan, who first planted here; not (as some say) from Sida the Daughter of Belus, once a King hereof; this City being mention'd in the Book of Joshua, when no such Belus was in being. Situate in a fertile and delightful Soil, defended with the Sea on one side, and on the other by the Mountains lying betwixt it and Libanus, from whence descended those many Springs with which they watered and enriched their most pleasant Orchards. The Inhabitants hereof are said to be the first makers of Crystall Glass, the Materials of the Work brought hither from the Sands of a River running not far from Ptolemais, and only made subtle in this City. And from hence Solomon and Zerobabel had their principal Workmen, both for Stone and Timber, in their several several Buildings of the Temple. The People hereof so flourishing in Arts and Trades, that the Prophet Zachariah, chap. 9. v. 2. calleth them the Wise Sidonians. A City which at several times was both the Mother and Daughter of Tyre; the Mother of it in the times of Heathenism, Tyre being a Colony of this People; and the Daughter of it when instructed in the Christian Faith, acknowledging the Church of Tyre for its Mother Church. This City was taken by the Saracens in the Year of Christ 636, by the Western Christians under Baldwin in the Year 1103, rebuilt by St. Lewis King of France in 1250, and finally retaken by the Saracens in 1289. The City in those times very strong both by Art and Nature, having on the North-side a Fort or Citadel mounted on an inaccessible Rock, and environed on all sides by the Sea; which when it was brought under the command of the Western Christians, was held by the Order of the Dutch Knights; and another on the South-side of the Port, which the Templars guarded. Won by the Turks, with the rest of this Country, from the Christians, and ruined by those often interchanges of Fortune, it only sheweth now some marks of the Ancient greatness; the present Sidon standing somewhat West of the old, and having little worth a particular description, in respect of what it was in her Ancient Glories. The Haven at this time decayed, or serving at the best for Gallies; with a poor Blockhouse, rather for shew than service: the Walls of no greater strength, and as little beauty, and the Buildings ordinary; but that the Mosque, the Bannia of Bathes, and the Cane for Merchants, are somewhat fairer than the rest: yet gives a Title at this time to the Emir of Sidon, one of the greatest Princes of all this Country, of whom more hereafter. 5. Berytus, originally called Geris, from Gergeshi, the fifth Son of Canaan, took this new Name from Berith, a Phœnician Idol herein worshipped; and now called Barutti. Destroyed by Tryphon in the Wars of the Syrians against the Jews, it was re-edified by the Romans, by whom made a Colony, and honoured with the Name of Julia Felix, Augustus giving it the Privileges of the City of Rome. By Herod and Agrippa Kings of the Jews, much adorned and beautified: and of no mean esteem in the time of the Christians, when made an Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Tyre. Being a Place of no great strength, nor aimed at by every new Invader, it hath sped better than the rest of these Cities (though stronger than this) retaining still her being, though not all her beauties; well stored with Merchandize, and well frequented by the Merchant. Nigh to this Town is a fair and fruitful Valley, which they call St. George's, in which there is a Castle, and in that an Oratory of the same Name also: All sacred to St. George the Martyr, who hereabouts is fabled to have killed the Dragon, and thereby delivered a King's Daughter; but what King's I know not, nor they neither. 6. Biblis sometimes the Habitation of Hevi, the fourth Son of Canaan, and thence called Hevea. Afterwards made the Regal Seat of Cinyras, Father and Grandfather of Adonis by his Daughter Myrrha; whereof we have already spoken when we were in Cyprus. Of such esteem in the Primitive Times of Christianity, that it was made a Bishop's See; desolate and of no repute since it lost that Honour, and became thrall unto the Turks. 7. Ortobesia, called also Antaradus, because opposite to Aradus, another old City of this Tract; but in After-Ages called Tortosa, and by that Name well known in the Histories of the Holy Wars, undertaken by the Western Christians: To whom it made such stout and notable resistance, that though besieged on all sides with united Forces (the whole Army formerly divided, sitting down before it) yet after Three Months hard siege, they were fain to leave the Town behind them, and content themselves with spoiling the adjoining Country. 8. Tripolis, seated in a rich and delightful

Plain, more fruitful than can be imagined; one of which Fruits they call by the Name of Ammuzza Francô, i.e. Kill Frank, because the Western Christians whom they call by the Name of Franks, died in great numbers by the intemperate eating of them. A Valley which is said to have yielded yearly to the Counts of Tripolis no less than 200000 Crowns. As for the Town it standeth about two Miles from the Sea, at the Foot of Mount Libanus; so called because built by the joint Purse of three Cities; that is to say, Tyrus, Sydon, and Aradus. Of no great note among the Romans, for ought I can find, till made one of the Episcopal Sees, belonging to the Archbishop of Tyre in the Primitive Times. But thriving by degrees, it grew to principal account by the time that the Western Christians warred in the Holy Land: When conquer'd by them, it was made one of the Tetrarchies, or Capital Cities for the four Quarters of their Empire, which were Jerusalem for Palestine, Edessa for Comagena, or Mejopotamia; Antioch for Syria, and this for Phœnicia. Committed at the first taking of it, to the custody of Raymond Earl of Tbolouse in France; whose Posterity, whilst it lasted, had from hence the Title of Earls of Tripolis. A City, which I know not by what good hap, hath sped better than any of those parts, retaining still as much in strength and beauty as ever it had, if not grown greater by the ruin of all the rest. Situate two Miles from the Sea, as before is said; but not above half a Mile from the Haven, which lieth upon the West side of it: Compassed with a Wall, and fortified with seven Towers, of which the Fourth is commonly call'd the Tower of Love, because built by an Italian Merchant, who was found in Bed with a Turkish Woman, for which he had forfeited his Life, if not thus redeemed it. Before the Haven is an ill-neighbouring Bank of Sand, which every day groweth greater and nearer to it; by which in time there is a Prophecy which saith, It shall be quite choaked: On both sides of it many Storehouses for the Merchant to stow his Goods in, and Shops to sell them: the way from hence unto the City, having on both sides very pleasant Gardens, more curiously kept, than usually amongst the Turks. The Town itself stretched out in length from South to North, is situate, as before was said, at the foot of Libanus, conveying a Brook into the Streets, and many pleasant Springs into the Chief of their Gardens: in which, and in those towards the Haven, and on other sides of the Town, the Inhabitants keep great store of Silkworms, selling their Silks raw unto the Italians, and buying them again of them in the Stuff or Manufacture. Their Buildings generally low, and the Streets but narrow, except that leading towards Aleppo, which is fair and open. Over the Brook, at the East-side of the City, are built two Bridges; and on the South-side a strong Castle mounted on an Hill, built by the French when they had the custody hereof: now Garrisoned for the Grand Signior with two hundred Janizaries. At this time it is looked on as the Metropolis or chief City of Phœnicia, honoured with the residence of the Patriarch of the Maronites, for the most part dwelling in this Town, and enriched with a great part of the Trade of Scanderone, or Alexandretta, removed hither some forty Years ago by the Turks appointment; that Haven lying unfenced, and more open to Pirates.

That the Phœnicians were descended of the Sons of Canaan, hath been proved already. And being descendants of that Stock, they were at the first governed like them, by the Chiefs of their Families, whom they honoured (as most Nations did) with the Title of Kings. But most of the Canaanitish Kings being overcome and slain by Jeshua, Agenor a stout and prudent man, one of those many Kings, which commanded in those parts of the Country, seeing how impossible it was to resist that Enemy, borrowed some Aid from Egypt, where he had his Breeding, to make good the

Sea Coasts

Sea-Coasts of his Country ; in which the Philistims, who interposed upon those Coasts betwixt him and Egypt, concurred also with him. By which assistance, and by the fortifying of Sydon, Tyre, and Ace (or Ptolemais) which were all the Cities of this Country that were then in being, he did not only preserve his own Estate from the present danger, but left it so assured to the Kings succeeding, that neither Solomon, nor David, nor any of the Kings of Israel, durst attempt upon them. To Agenor succeeded his Son Phœnix, (Cadmus, his Elder Brother, going into Greece in search of his Sister Europa, ravished by Jupiter, where he built Thebes, and therein reigned till his Death) from whom, as some conceive, this Country had the Name of Phœnicia. And though I have declared my self for another reason of this Name, which I like much better, yet I shall rather yield to this, or to any other, than to that of Bochartus, who will have it derived from Ben-Anak, or the Sons of Anak, (as if the old Phœnicians were such Giantly men) which must first be contracted in Beanack, then by the Grecians turn'd into Pbeanac, and at last into Phœnix. Such farfetch'd and extorted Originations never please my Fancy, who had much rather hearken to the old receiv'd Opinions touching the first Originals of Names and Nations, where there is not very pregnant Reason to persuade me otherwise, than strain my self so far for a new Invention, or hearken unto those that do. But for what cause soever they were named Phœnicians, certain it is, that they were a very active and industrious People, trading in most parts of the Mediterranean, and planting Colonies in many. Thebes and Sephyra in Bœotia, Nola in Italy, Gades in Spain ; Utica, Leptis, Carthage in Africk, were of their Foundation. Nay, if we may believe Bochartus, there was no Island or Sea-Coast in the Mediterranean, or on the Cantabrian, Gallick, or British Ocean, wherein they did not keep some Factory, or erect some Colony. What Kings succeeded Phœnix in a constant and continued course, I can no where find. Most like it is, they were not under the command of any one Prince ; and that besides the Kings of Sidon, where Agenor reigned, there were some others who called themselves Kings of Phœnicia also, as well as they. Of which sort were Cyniras, Paphus, and Pigmalion, who had their Regal Seat at Biblis, and lorded it over a good part of Cyprus, as did also Belus, who gave some part of that Isle to Teucer, as is said before. There is also found mention of one Phœsis, a Phœnician King, at such time as the Grecians conquer'd Troy. After him none, till the subjugation of this Country by the Babylonians ; Tetramnestes, Tennes, and Strato, mentioned in succeeding times, being Tributaries to the Persian, and no absolute Princes. Whether it were that the Phœnicians were made subject to the Kings of Tyre, or that the Kings thereof did nothing to preserve their memory, I am not able to determine. Certain it is, that the Kings of Tyre came in a short time to be of very great repute, and to possess themselves of the Coasts of Syria and Phœnicia, and a great part of Cyprus ; whereby, and by the benefit of their Trade and Shipping, they grew rich and powerful, and of great consideration in Affairs of the World. The Names and History of whom I shall here subjoin, in this ensuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of TYRE.

A. M.

- 1 Abibalus, as Josephus, Abemalus, as Theophilus Antiochenus calleth him, Co-temporary with Samuel ; supposed to be the same which the Son of Syrach mentioned, Ecclesi. 46. 18.
- 2 Saron, the Son of Abibalus, whom David, as Eusebius saith, compelled to pay Tribute ; complained of by that Prophet, Psal. 83. 7.

- 2931 3 Hiram, the Son of Saron, Confederate with David, to whom he sent Cedars, with Carpenters and Masons, towards his Buildings in Jerusalem, after he had beaten thence the Jebusites ; as he did afterwards to Solomon when he built the Temple ; much mentioned in the Books of Kings and Chronicles. 53.
- 2955 4 Baleastartus, or Bazorus, succeeded Hiram. 7.
- 2962 5 Abdastartus, Son of Baleastartus, slain by the four Sons of his own Nurse, having reigned nine Years ; the eldest of which four did for the space of Twelve Years usurp the Kingdom.
- 2983 6 Astartus, Brother of Abdastartus, recovered the Kingdom to his House, out of the hands of the Ujursers. 12.
- 2995 7 Astorinus, or Arborinus, as Theophilus calleth him, the Younger Brother of Astartus. 9.
- 3004 8 Pbelles, the Brother of these Three Kings, and youngest Son of Baleastartus, reigned eight Months only.
- 3037 9 Irbobalus, called Ethbaal, 1 King. 16. 13. Son of Astorinus, slew his Uncle Pbelles, and so regained his Father's Throne ; before which he was the High Priest of the Goddess Astartoth, or Astarta, (a Dignity next to that of the King.) He was the Father of Jezebel, the Wife of Abab, so often mentioned in the Scripture. 32.
- 3043 10 Badezar, or Bazar, Son of Ethbaal. 6.
- 3052 11 Mettimus, by some called Matginus, Son of Badezar, and the Father of Elisa, whom Virgil celebrateth by the name of Dido.
- 12 Pygmalion, the Son of Mettimus, who slew Sicheus the Husband of his Sister Elisa, to get his riches, but yet was cozened of his prey : his Sister Elisa accompanied with her Brother Barca (the Founder of the Noble Barcine Family, of which Annibal was, and her Sister Anna, flying into Africk ; where she built the renowned City of Carthage. The Names of his Successors we find not till we come to
- 13 Elulæus, descended from a Son of Pygmalion, who overthrew the Fleet of Salamanasser, the Affyrian, in the Port of Tyre.
- 14 Ethbales, or Ethbaal II. who vaunted himself to be as wise as Daniel, and to know all secrets, as saith the Prophet Ezekiel, Chap. 28. v. 1, 2. And yet not wise enough to preserve his Kingdom from Nabuchadonosor ; who after a Siege of 13 years took the City of Tyre, and subjected it unto his Empire.
- 15 Raal, the Son and Successor of Ethbaal the Second, but a Tributary to the Babylonians.

After whose Death the Tyrians had no more Kings, but were governed by Judges, or by such Titular Kings only as were sent from Babylon. And though Tyre and Sydon did recover breath in the Fall of the Babylonian Empire, and the unsettledness of the Persian ; yet being of the Persian Faction, and having dependance on that Crown, they were by Alexander held unworthy to continue. Who therefore deposed Strato the King of Sidon, and overthrew the City of Tyre ; in the taking whereof he had spent more time, than in forcing all the Cities of Asia.

After this time Phœnicia being reckoned as a part of Syria, followed the Fortune of the whole, subject unto the Syrian Kings of the House of Salucus, till made a Province of the Romans ; subject to the Constantinopolitans till the fatal Year 636. when subdued by the Sarracens.

recent. Successively conquered by the Turks, Christians, and after their expulsion by the Turks again, then by the Mamelucks of Egypt, and finally with the rest of Syria, by Soliman the first, united to the Turkish Empire. Subject at this time, or of late, to the Emir of the Drusians, (commonly called the Emir of Sidon) of which people we have spoken before. A people who in the time of Amurat the third, were governed by five Emirs or Princes; one of which was Man-Ogli, who so resolutely resisted Ibrahim Bassa, Anno 1585. This Man-Ogli then kept his Court or residence at Andirene, a strong place situate on a hill, and was of that wealth, that he sent to make his peace unto the above-named Ibrahim, 320 Arcubuses, 20 Packs of Andirene Silks, and 50000 Ducats. At a second time he presented him with 50000 Ducats more, 480 Arcubuses, 1000 Goats, 150 Camels, 150 Buffes, 1000 Oxen, and 200 Weathers. By these rich gifts we may not a little conjecture of the Revenue of the present Emir of Sidon; who since the year 1600. hath reduced almost all the Countries belonging once to five Princes, under his own Empire; containing the Towns and Territories of Gaza, Barut, Sidon, Tyre, Acre, Saffet, (or Tiberias) his seat of residence, Nazareth, Cana, Mount Tabor, Elkiffe, &c. This present Emir, by name Faccardine, was not long since driven out of his Countrey by the Turk, and forced to fly to Florence: but he again recovered his own, laid siege to Damascus, and caused a notable Rebellion in Asia; not quenched in a long time after. And finally, having possessed himself of the City and Castle of Damascus, prepared for the taking of Hierusalem also; threatening to make the Christians once more Masters of it. This was in the year 1623. How he sped afterward, and whether his Son, as stout and valiant as himself, hath since his death succeeded him in his Estates, I am not able to say: having of late heard nothing of them.

SYRIA PROPRIA:

SYRIA PROPRIA, or Syria especially so called, is bounded on the East, with Palmyrene; on the West, with the Mediterranean; on the North, with Cilicia; on the South with Phœnicia, and some part of Cælo-Syria.

This part of Syria I take to be the Land of Hamath, so often mentioned in the Scriptures, the Kingdom of Toi or Tou, next neighbour, and sworn Enemy to Adadzer King of Aram-Sobab: who hearing of the great discomfiture which David had given unto that King, sent his Son Foram, or Adoram, (for the Scripture calls him by both names) with Presents to him, as well to congratulate his success, as to be assured for times to come of his love and amity. So called from Hamath one of the Sons of Canaan, who fixed his dwelling in these parts, and left many Cities of that name in Syria and Palestine (which we shall meet withal in the course of this work) either built by him or his Posterity. Now that the Land of Hamath was this part of Syria, I am persuaded to believe by these following reasons, viz. 1. From the neighbourhood hereof to Arpad or Arphad, conjoynd together, as in Isa. 10. 9. and Jer. 49. 23. So in other places, viz. Where are the gods of Hamath and Arphad? 2 Kings 18. 34. The Kings of Hamath, and the King of Arphad, Isa. 37. 13. And we know well that Arvad was the name of an Island over-against the mouth of the River Eleutherus, one of the Rivers of this Countrey so called from Arvad, one of the Sons of Canaan, alluded to by the Greeks and Romans in the name of Aradus; by which this Isle was known unto them. This River is small, and ariseth from mount Libanus, and falleth into the Sea between Tripoli the South, and the Orentes the North, but nearer Tripoli; and it separated Syria Seleucidis from Cælo-

Syria, as Strabo saith, lib. 16. 16. and the Island at Arvad is a Rock of Seven Stadias (almost one English mile) in compass, surrounded by the Sea, and nobly built with Houses of great height in his time; it lay seven miles from the Shoar and had no fresh water but what fell from Heaven, or was fetched from the Continent. This City was built by the Sidonians, and was of old a distinct Kingdom; and was very considerable afterwards though subject to the Kings of Persia, Greece and the Romans, but is now utterly perished. 2ly. By the vicinity which it hath to Palmyrene, the Aram-Sobab of the Scriptures, to which it joyneth on the East, with the King whereof (as bordering Princes use to be) the Kings of Hamath for the most part were in open War. Of which see 2 Sam. 8. 9, 10. and 1 Chro. 8. 9, 10. 3dly. From the authority of St. Hierom, who finding mention in the Prophet Amos, Chap. 6. 2. of a City named Hamath the Great, determineth it to be that City which afterwards was called Antiochia (the principal City of this part, and indeed of Syria;) the title of Great being added to it, to difference it from some other Cities of this name of inferiour note. And 4thly. from comparing the places in Scripture, with the like passage in Josephus the Historiographer. The Scripture telleth us, that Hierusalem being forced by the Babylonians, Zedekias the King was brought Prisoner to Nebuchadnezzar, being then at Riblah, 2 King. 2. 6. to Riblah in the Land of Hamath, ver. 21. where the Poor Prince first saw his Children slain before his face, and then miserably deprived of sight, that he might not see his great misfortunes, was led away to Babylon. Ask of Josephus where this sad Tragedy was acted, and he will tell us that it was at Reblatha or (Riblah) a City of Syria, Antiq. l. 10. c. 10. And if we ask Saint Hierom what he thinks of Reblatha, he will tell us that it was Urbs ea quam nunc Antiochiam vocant, the City which in following times was called Antioch. On these grounds I conceive this part of Syria to be the land of Hamath intended in the Texts of Scripture above-cited; though there were other Towns and Territories of the same name also.

The Countrey is naturally fertile; the hedges on the high-way sides affording very good fruits, and the adjoining fields affording to the Passenger the shade of Fig-trees. Were it not naturally so, it would not be much helped by Art or Industry, as being very meanly peopled, and those few people without any encouragement either to plant fruits, or manure the Land. Their sheep are commonly fair and fat, but so overladed in the tail, both with flesh and fleece, that they hang in long wreaths unto the ground, dragged after them with no small difficulty. Pliny observes it in his time, that the tails of the Syrian Sheep were a Cubit long, and had good store of wool upon them, Natur. Hist. l. 8. c. 48. and Modern Travellers report that the Tails of these sheep do frequently weigh 25 pound weight, and sometimes 30 pounds and upwards. The like hath also been affirmed of the sheep of Palestine comprehended in old times in the name of Syria. And that may probably be the Reason why the rumps and tails of sheep (and of no beast else) were ordained to be offered up in sacrifice, of which Lev. 3. 9. But besides the store of Wool which they have from the sheep, they have also great plenty of Cotten Wool, which groweth there abundantly; with the seeds whereof they sow their fields, as we ours with Corn. The stalk no bigger than that of Wheat, but as rough as a Bean; the head round and bearded, in the size and shape of a Medlar, and as hard as a stone: which ripening breaketh, and is delivered of a white soft Bombast, intermixed with seeds; which parted with an instrument, they keep the seeds for another sowing, and sell the Wool unto the Merchant: a greater quantity thereof issuing from that little shell, than can be imagined by those that have not seen it.

The people heretofore were very industrious especially about their Gardens ; the fruitful effects whereof they found in the increase of their Herbs, and Plants. Whence the Proverb. Multa Syrorum Olera. But withal they were observed to be very gluttonous, spending whole days and nights in feasting ; great scoffers, and much given to laughter. Crafty and subtle in their dealings, not easily to be trusted but on good security : and so were the Phœnicians, their next neighbours also. Hence came the Greek Adage which Suidas speaketh of, Σύροι καὶ Φοινίκαι, Syri contra Phœnices, used by them when two crafty Knaves endeavoured to deceive each other. They were noted also to be superstitious, great Worshippers of the Goddess Fortune, but greater of their Syrian Goddess, whatsoever she was. Affirmed by Plutarch to be a Womanish and Effeminate Nation, prone unto tears, and such as on the death of their Friends would hide themselves in caves from the sight of the Sun. Herodian addeth, that they were wavering and unconstant, lovers of Plays and publick Pastimes, and easily stirred up into Innovations. But at this time, they are almost beaten out of all these humours, having been so often cowed and conquered, that they are now grown servilely officious to them that govern them : not without cause, defective in that part of industry which before enriched them.

Whereby the way we must observe, that this Character of the people, and that of the Countrey belong not to this part alone, exclusively of those which follow ; but to all Syria, and every part and Province of it, except Chanaan, which being planted by a people of another Stock, hath had its character by it self. The whole by Ptolomy divided, besides Comagena, Palmyrene, and Cælo-Syria, into many petit Regions, and Subdivisions, as 1 Pieria. 2 Casiotis, from the hills adjoining. 3 Seleucis. 4 Apimene. 5. Laodicene. 6. Cyrrhestica. 7 Chalcidice. And 8 Chalybanotis, from their principal Cities. Of which in all he musters up the names of an hundred and upwards, then of some note, most of them now grown out of knowledge, and many of them of no mark or observation in the course of business. So that omitting his method, we will follow our own, and take notice only of such places as antient were, or at this present are, of most observation and importance in the course of Story : with reference notwithstanding to the subdivisions made by Ptolomy, as they come in my way, reckoning Cyrrhestica, Chalybanotis, Casiotis, and the Territories of Seleucus, Laodicea, and Apamea, into Syria-Propria ; and Pieria into Comagena.

First then to begin with those Cities which lye most towards the East, we have in Cyrrhestica, 1 Zeugma, on the banks of the River Euphrates, memorable for the passage of Alexander the Great, who there passed over his Army on a Bridge of Boats. The City is now perished, but the Ruins of a Bridge built here in after times by the Romans are still visible. Pliny saith on the other side of the River lay Apamia, the Capital of Mesopotamia. 2 Barræa ; supposed by some both antient and modern Writers, to be that which is now called Aleppo ; but the position of the place agreeth not with that supposition ; Aleppo being placed by our modern Cosmographers, in the 72 degree of Longitude, and the 38 of Latitude : whereas Berræa is assigned by Ptolomy, to the 36 degree of Latitude, and the 71 of Longitude. Besides that, the River Singas, on which Aleppo is situate, keepeth it self almost on an even course in the Latitude of 37, between 20 and 30 minutes over : which is more by a degree and a half than the sight assigned unto Berræa. Ptolomy placeth it on the River Singas and makes it to run from S. W. to N. E. but it is probable however, Aleppo stands much more to the North, and that it sprung out of the Ruins of Berræa. 3 Cybrus, as in the Latin Copies of Ptolomy, mistook for Cyrrus, once the chief City of this part, from hence called Cyrrhestica. 3 Heraclea, near which Antiochia had a Temple ; in which, as in that sacred to her in Laodicea, they used once yearly to offer a Virgin for a Sacrifice, but afterwards on the sight of that gross impiety, changed it to an Hart. 5 Regia, now Rugia, two days journey from Antioch, took by the Christians in the beginning of the Wars for the Holy Land. 6 Hierapolis, of great renown in those dark times of Ignorance and Idolatry for the Syrian Goddess therein worshipped ; from whence it had the name of Hierapolis, or the Holy City : being formerly by the Grecians called Callinice ; by the Syrians, Magog ; one of the first seats of Magog the Son of Japhet, and from him denominated. The Goddess so esteemed of in those wretched times, that from all parts, Assyria, Babylonia, Arabia, Cilicia, Cappadocia, and indeed what not, they brought her many rich gifts and costly offerings. Nero himself, who scoffed at all Religions else, being for a while a great Votary of this Syrian Idol, though afterwards he grew weary of her, and defiled her with urine. The Temple built by Stratonice, the wife of Seleucus, in the midst of the City, compassed with a double wall, about the height of 300 fathom : the roof thereof inlaid with Gold, and made of such a fragrant and sweet-smelling wood, that the cloaths of them which came thither retained the scent thereof for a long time after. Without the Temple there were places inclosed for Oxen, and Beasts of sacrifice ; and not far off a Lake of 200 fathom in depth, wherein they kept their sacred fishes : the Priests attending here for their several Offices, amounting in number to three hundred, besides many more subservient Ministers. The tricks and jugglings of these Priests to deceive the People, he that list to see, may find them copiously described in the Metamorphosis of Apuleius : which changing but the names and times, may serve for a relation of those gulleries and Arts of Leger-demain which the Friars and Pardoners have practised in the Church of Rome. 7 Chaliban, whence the parts adjoining were called Chalybanotis ; conceived by Postellus and some others to be Chalepium, or Aleppo, but on no good ground ; this City having one degree less of Northern Latitude, than Barræa had. 8 Barbarissus, in the same subdivision, near the banks of Euphrates. 9. Chalcis, the principal of that part of Syria Propria, which is called Chalcidice, but not otherwise memorable. 10. Telmedissa, another Town of the same division, and as little famous. 11 Seleucia, so named from the Founder of it, the first Eastern Monarch of that Race, and the greatest Builder of the World, founding nine Cities of this name, sixteen in memory of his Father Antiochus, six by the name of Laodice his Mother, and three in honour of Apamia his first Wife ; besides many others of great note in Greece and Asia, either new built, or beautified and repaired by him. From this, the Countrey hereabouts had the name of Seleucia. 12 Laodicea, one of the Cities founded by Seleucus, in honour of Laodice his Mother, from which the Region adjoining is called Laodicene : built by him in the place where formerly stood the City Rhamantus, so called from a certain Shepherd, who being struck with a flash of lightning, cried out amazedly Rhamantus, that is to say, Deus ab excelso ; before which time it had been named Leuca Atte, from the whiteness of the Sea-cliffs near to which it is situate : the Countrey round about commended anciently for the best Wines, and choice of very excellent Fruits. 13 Apamea, so named in honour of Apamia, the Wife of Seleucus ; which together with Laodicea and Seleucia before mentioned, having the same Founder, and maintaining a strict League of amity with one another, were commonly called the Three Sisters. From this the Countrey near is called Apamene. 14 Emesa, (now Hamse) the Episcopal See of Eusebius, hence called Emesens, who flourished in the time of Constantius, the Son of Constantine : in whose whose name are extant certain Homilies justly conceived to be of a later date. The City seated in a spacious and fruitful Plain of Apamea, watered with many pleasant and chearful Riverets: once of great note, as may easily be conjectured from the walls hereof, which are still perfect and entire, built of polished Stone, and of very large circuit; but the Dwelling-Houses so decayed, that it affordeth nothing worthy of observation. Al. Thevenot, p. 1. p. 223. gives this account of its present State: It is a pretty Town, the Walls whereof are of Black and White Stones, intermixed and strengthened with 26 Round Towers. It hath 6 Gates, 5 Churches, the principal of which is very great and noble, which was built by St. Helen, the Mother of Constantine the Great, and continued in the Christians hands till within 160 Years, but is now a Mosque, &c. This is now the only Town in that part of Syria as is honoured by a Sangiack under the Basha of Tripoli. 15 Epiphania, in the Cantred or subdivision of Cassotis; called at first Hamath, from Hamath a Son of Canaan, the Founder of it; and upon that account mistaken by St. Hierome for another Town of the same Name, in the Tribe of Naphtali; so different from this place both in Longitude and Latitude (as we shall shew hereafter when we come to Palestine) that they can by no means be the same. But that old Town being gone to ruin, it was repaired, if not re-edified by Antiochus Epiphanes King of Syria, who thereupon commanded it to be called Epiphania; obeyed herein as Josephus telleth us by the Macedonians, though the Syrians still called it Amatha, as in former times, Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. 16 Larissa, which still preserveth its old Name, being now called Laris; much mentioned in the Wars of the Holy-Land, especially for the death of Baldwin the first, Brother of Godfrey of Bouillon, and second King of Hierusalem, Anno 1118. 17 Gabal, the Gabala of Ptolemy, and others of the Ancient Writers, situate on the South of Laodicea, from which Twelve Miles distant; mentioned Psal. 83. as a Confederate with Tyre, and other uncircumcised Nations, in their hatred and designs against the Israelites; at this day called Gabella (with little difference from the old name of it) and by that name remembred in the Stories of the Holy Wars. 18 Albaria, distant Two Days march from Antioch, remembred also in the Wars of the Holy Land. 19 Aradus, one of the Co-Founders of Tripolis, situate in a rocky Island, of a Mile in compass, directly opposite to the mouth or influx of the River Eleutherus, and distant from the Continent about Twenty Stadia's. So called from Arvad, one of the Sons of Canaan, and mentioned by that Name in the Prophet Ezek. 27. 8, 11. This once a Kingdom of it self, containing not this Island only, but some part of the Continent; especially about Antaradus (so called because built over against it) situate on the Northern Banks of the River Eleutherus, of which we have spoken in Phoenicia. 20 Daphne, about five miles from Antioch; but afterwards by the continual enlargements of that City, accounted as the Suburb to it; so named of Daphne, one of the Mistresses of Apollo, who was here worshipped by the name of Apollo Daphneus, and had here his Oracle and his Groves, with other the Additaments appertaining unto those Idolatries; as much esteemed of, but more sumptuous than those of Delphos. The Grove about Ten Miles in circuit, environed round with Cypresses, and other Trees, so tall and close to one another, that they suffered not the Sun to enter in his greatest heats. The Ground perpetually covered with the choicest Tapistry of Nature, watered with many a pleasant stream, derived from the Catalan Fountains as it was given out; and yielding the most excellent Fruits both for Taste and Tincture, to which the Wind and Air participating, and the sweetness of the place did add a most delightful influence.

A place devised for Pleasure, but abused to Lust: he being held unworthy of the Name of a Man, who transformed not himself unto a Beast, or trod on this unholy Ground without his Curtain; inasmuch as they which had a care of their Good Names, did forbear to haunt it. A full description of it he that lists to see, may find in the Third Book and Eighteenth Chapter of Socrates's Ecclesiastical History, who is copious in it. The Temple said to have been built by Seleucus also, renowned for the Oracle there given, by which Adrian was foretold of his being Emperor; and therefore much resorted to by Julian the Apostata, for that purpose also. But the Body of Basil the Martyr, and Bishop of Antioch, being removed thither by the Command of his Brother Gala, then created Cæsar by Constantinus, the Devil and his Oracles were both frightened away, as the Devil did himself confess to Julian; who being desirous to learn here the success of his intended Expedition into Persia, received this Answer, That no Oracle could be given so long as those Divine Bones were so near the Shrine. Nor was it long after before the Idol and the Temple were consumed by a Fire from Heaven, as was avowed by those who observed the Fall of it; though Julian did impute it to the innocent Christians, and in revenge caused many of their Churches to be burned to Ashes. 21 Antioch, situate in that part hereof which is called Cassotis, first built, or began rather by Antigonus, when Lord of Asia, by whom named Antigenia; but finished and enlarged by Seleucus, after he had overthrown and slain him at the Battel of Issus. Built near the place, and partly out of the Ruins of an Ancient City, in the Second Book of Kings called Riblah in the Land of Hamath; Hamath the Great, in the sixth of Amos; by Josephus and the Syrians, Rablata; memorable in those days for the Tragedies of Jeboah and Zedechias, Kings of Judah, the first of which was here deprived of his Crown and Liberty by Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt, 2 King. 23. 33. the other of his Eyes and Children, by the Command of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, as was said before. In following Times it was by some Greek Writers called Epidaphne, from the nearness of it to that Grove: as afterwards in the Times of Christianity, by the Name of Theopolis, or the City of God; either from the many Miracles there done in the Primitive Time, or from the great improvement which the Christian Faith did here receive, where the Disciples first obtained the Name of Christians. The Royal Seat for many Ages of the Kings of Syria; and in the flourish and best Fortune of the Roman Empire, the ordinary Residence of the Præfect or Governor of the Eastern Provinces; next, of the Præfectus Prætorii Orientis, who had not only the superintendency over the Diocese of the Orient, tho that large enough, but also of the Dioceses of Egypt, Asia, Pontus, Thrace, extending so his Jurisdiction into all the parts of the then known World. Honoured also with the Residence of many of the Roman Emperors, especially of Perus and Falens, who spent here the greatest part of their Times; and from the first dawning of the Gospel, with the Seat of the Patriarch. A Title of such eminency in all Times of the Church, the second in account to the See of Rome (till Constantinople being made the Imperial City, got precedency of it) that there are at this time no less than four great Prelates which pretend unto it; that is to say, the True Patriarch, governing the Christians of those parts, whom they call Syrians, or Melchites; the Pseudo-Patriarchs of the Jacobite and Maronite Sectaries, both which, for the great credit to their Schism, do assume this Title; and finally, a Titular Patriarch nominated by the Pope, who since the Time that the Western Christians were possessed of these Eastern Countries, hath assumed a Power unto himself of nominating Patriarchs for Alexandria, Hierusalem, and this City of Antioch.

The City seated on both sides of the River Orontes, about Twelve Miles distant from the Shores of the Mediterranean.

terranean; the River Pbarfar passing on the South-side of it. By Art and Nature fortified even to admiration; compassed with a double Wall, the outermost of which was of Stone, the other of Brick, with four hundred and sixty Towers in the Walls, and an impregnable Castle at the East-end thereof; and on the other side defended with big broken Mountains, whereunto was adjoining a deep Lake coming out of the River Pbarfar, before mentioned; adorned in former times with many sumptuous Palaces and magnificent Temples answerable to the Reputation of so great a City; till taken by the Saracens, and after by the Turks and Mamelucks, Men careless of all State and Beauty in their fairest Cities, it began to grow unto decay. Recovered by the Western Christians from the power of the Turks, after a Siege of seven Months, June 3. Anno 1098. confirmed in their possession by a great and memorable Victory, got in the very sight hereof within few days after (June 28) obtained against Corbanas, Lieutenant to the Persian Sultan; in which, with the loss of Four Thousand and Two Hundred of their own, they slew a Hundred Thousand of the Enemy. The Town and Territory given by the Conquerors to Bohemund a Noble Norman, and Prince of Tarrentum; who by practicing with one Pyrrhus, who had the command of one of the Chief Towers thereof, afterwards called St. George's Tower, was secretly let into the City, and so made way for all the rest. Bohemund thus made the Prince, or as some say, King of Antioch, left it to Bohemund his Son about Ten Years after; succeeded in this Principate by Tancred and Roger, Princes of great Renown in those Holy Wars; which last unfortunately slain by the Turks, not far from Aleppo, in the Year 1120. Baldwin the second having revenged his death by a signal Victory, joined this Estate to the Kingdom of Hierusalem. Betrayed above sixty Years after this, that is to say, in the Year 1188. it came into the power of Saladine, the victorious King of Egypt and Damascus, and therewithal no fewer than Five and Twenty Cities which depended on the Fortunes of it: The Glories of this Famous City so declining after this last Tragedy (but whether laid desolate of set purpose, or destroyed by the injury of the Time; I am not able to declare) that it is grown the Sepulchre of what once it was, and lieth buried in its own sad Ruins, hardly preserving the repute of a sorry Village. Such is the instability of all Worldly Glories. Some other Towns there are in this part of Syria, but not to be remembred the same day with Antioch.

As for the Story of his Province, as a State distinct, we find it had a King of its own, called the King of Hamath (the Kingdom of Toi, or Tou before remembred) who together with the King of Arphad, commanded in this part of Syria, and the Isles adjoining. Vassals in Time succeeding to the Kings of Tyre, who lorded it over all the Sea-Coasts hereof, and consequently had great Influence on the Inlands also. And it continued in this State till the Assyrian Kings began to turn their Forces Westward; when added to that Empire by Tiglatb Pileser, after the subversion of the Kingdom of Damascus; or by Salmanasser, after the destruction of that of Israel. The proud but dreadful vaunt which Sennacherib, the Successor of those mighty Monarchs made to Hzekiab, viz. Where are the Gods of Hamath and Arphad? shews clearly, that those Kingdoms had been conquer'd not long before; and therefore needs by Salmanasser or Tiglatb Pileser. Afterwards, in the struglings betwixt the Babylonians and Egyptians, for the chief Command, it was a while at the devotions of the King of Egypt, it being at Reblatha in this Province, that Jehoaabaz King of Judab was put into Bonds, by the Command of Pharoah Necho, as was said before. But Necho being not long after vanquished by Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, it returned again to that Crown, and after followed the same Fortunes with the rest of Syria.

3 C O M A G E N A.

COMAGENA is bounded on the East with the River Euphrates, by which parted from Mesopotamia; on the West, with the Mountains called Amanus, which divided from Cilicia; on the North with Taurus, by which separated from Armenia Minor; on the South with Palmyrene. Called also Euphratenfis and Euphratesia, when a Roman Province, by reason of its situation, bordering on the River.

The Reason of the Name I find not amongst my Authors; but find that many Learned men conceive it to be that part of Syria which the Scriptures call Syria Maacab, mention whereof is made 1 Chron. cap. 19. v. 6. gainfayed by others, because they find a place called Maacha in the Tribe of Manasses, but with no great reason as I take it. For being it is joined (in 1 Chron. 19. v. 6. above mentioned) in the same action with Mesopotamia, and Syria Sobab; and not so only, but placed between them in the Method of that Holy Penman, I dare not think but that they were all very near neighbours, and ranked according to the natural situation of them. Which agreeth very well with the site of Comagena, having Mesopotamia on the East, and Aram-Sobab on the South. Nor is it any stronger proof unto the contrary, that Maacha is a Town of the Tribe of Manasses; than if a man should say, That there is no such Province as Mansfield in High-Germany, because there is a Town of that Name in England; or no such place as Savoy amongst the Alpes, because there is a House of that Name in London.

As for the People hereof, besides what they have common with the rest of the Syrians, they were of old much given unto Divination, and for that cause derided thus in the Sixth *Saty*r of Juvenal.

Thus Englished by my honoured Friend
Sir Robert Stapylton.

A childless rich man's Legacy, or young Love,
Are found i'th' Lights of a warm trembling Dove,
By Comagene Soothsayers; they look into A dead Chick's breast, the same the Armenians do,
They view the Entrails of a Dog, and reach
A Child perhaps: They do it, and then preach.

Chief places of this part, 1 Samosata, the Metropolis or Head City of it, when a Roman Province, situate near the Banks of Euphrates, over which it had a Bridge for passage into Mesopotamia. Unfortunate for being the Birth-place of Lucian, that prophane Scoffer of Christianity, though otherwise a man of quick Wit, and of great Abilities: as also of Paulus Samosatenus, Patriarch of Antioch, condemned of Heresie in a Council holden in his own City, Anno 273. (by the great and most Learned Bishops of that Age, there assembled together) for teaching, That our Saviour was no other than a Natural Man; but neither God, nor the Son of God, as the Scriptures testifie. Now call'd Scempsat by the Turks. 2 Germanicia (by some called Germanicopolis) on the other side of the Country near the Mountain Amanus; no less unfortunate than the former, in being the Birth-place of Nestorius, Patriarch of Constantinople, who troubling the Peace of the Church with Heterodoxie, and Impertinent Niceties about the Blessed Mother of Christ, as also about the Nature and Person of Christ himself, was thereupon condemned of Heresie.

Heresie in the Council of Ephesus, Anno 435. In former times called Aluta, as some write Alapa; but took this new name from Germanicus Cæsar, in honour of whom it was made a Roman Colony by Augustus, testified by this Inscription extant in Onuphrius viz. COLONIA JULIA GERMANICIA, SACRA AUGUSTA FOELIX. 3 Singa, so called from the River upon which it is situate. 4. Antiochia penes Taurum, so called because seated at the foot of that Mountain, to differ it from the other of this name in Syria. 5. Pinara, one of the Chief Cities of that part which is called Pieria. 6. Doliche, a small Town, but made an Episcopal See in the best times of the Church, as appeareth by the Acts of the Councils of Antioch and Constantinople, in which there is some mention of the Bishops of it. 7 Aleppo, now the principal of all the Countrey, supposed by some to be the Sepharvaim, mentioned 2 King. 17. 24. It was thus called, as some say, from Halep, which in the Language of those parts signifieth Milk, afforded liberally by the Rich Pastures round about it: as others more improbably from Aleph, the first Letter of the Hebrew Alphabet, because the first in estimation of the Cities of Syria: Most probably from Alepius, Lieutenant here in the time of Julian the Apostata, who did here many notable Exploits, and amongst others, in or near the Ruins of some old Town of these parts, not yet agreed on (in case it be not Sepharvaim before mentioned) advanced this City. Situate on the Banks of the River Singas, which rising out of the Hill Frabus, with many windings and turnings, runneth through Comagena, and there falleth into Euphrates. About this English Merchants who have lived in this City, say the River ends in a Bog or Morass about ten Miles below this City: But Knowles in his Turkish History pag. 357. agrees exactly with what is said above; and the Maps of Syria make the River fall into the Euphrates. Destroyed by Haalon King of the Tartars at such time as the Western Christians were possessed of this Country, and the Holy Land: but being repaired and re-peopled, became by reason of the commodious situation of it, to be much frequented by Merchants from all parts of the World. Situate in the midst betwixt Tripolis, Beritus, and Alexandretta, the three prime Ports of Turkey on the one side, and the Persian Territories on the other: it was made choice of for the Staple of the Eastern Commodities, brought to Euphrates, and then brought hither by Caravans by Land. A City of great Trade at present, the English Merchants (amongst others which frequent the same) having here three Houses for the Stowage and disposing of their Commodities, and a chief Officer or Superintendent over the whole Factory, whom they call the Consul of Aleppo. But greater was the Trade hereof in the former times, before the Portugals found out a way by Sea to those Eastern Countries, since followed by the English, Hollanders, and other Nations. The building of it low, but of one Story high (as in most Towns of Syria) with a plain top plaistred to walk upon; and with Arches before their doors or Houses: as well to pass dry under them in time of Rain, as to shew their Wares. Pleasantly seated amongst Gardens, with the sweet smells whereof very much refreshed; the ordinary Residence of a Turkish Bassa; safe rather in the remoteness of it from any Enemy, than the strength of the place, as being nothing less than well fortified. Near one of the Gates they shew a Sepulchre, by them affirmed to be Saint George's (whom of all the Christian Saints they only worship) before which they maintain a Lamp which burns continually. Monsieur Tavernier, pag. the 576 of his Travels saith, it is not known what was the Ancient name of it; but it fell into the hands of the Sarazens in the 15th year of the Hegyra. A. C. 637. as all the Arabian Writers agree.

It stands upon 4 Hills, the highest of which is in the middle covered with a Castle of Freestone, and is about 600 Paces in circuit, but of no defence, though it has a Moat 6 or 7 Fathom deep, half of which is filled with nasty Water, the rest dry. The City is about 5 miles in compass, well watered, and supposed to contain 250000 Souls, whereof about 40000 are Christians. And the Bassa is one of the greatest in the Empire of the Turks, his Revenue 817772 Aspers a year; he has under him nine Sangiacks, and five Castles. Mr. Knowles supposeth it to have sprung out of the ruins of Hieropolis. Gabriel Sionita makes the compass of this City six Miles, Water'd and Ditched but not strong. It is at this day, saith he, (who in 1619 Translated and Printed the Nubian Geographer in Latin) a splendid rich City, better Traded than in former times, and next Constantinople and Grand Cairo, the best City in the Ottoman Empire, and the Mistress of the East. 8 Aman, in the way betwixt Tripoli, and Aleppo, supposed by some to be that Hamat, mentioned whereof is made 2 King. chap. 17. 12. A City of a large circuit, pleasantly seated on two Hills, which give it a fair prospect over six of the neighbouring Villages; a thing not to be boasted of, as the World now goeth, by the many the Syrian Cities. On a third Hill once stood a Castle, now decayed, ruinous, beneath it a fair River which runs gently by it; environed round about with Orchards of Palm-trees, and very good fruits. 9 Chalmodora, seated by Ptolomy on Euphrates, of which no ruins now remaining, unless the name be changed to 10 Byrrha, as perhaps it may be: that being made by Ptolomy, the most Northern Town of Comagena; this the utmost Town which the Egyptian Mamalucks (then Lords of Syria) had upon this River, and the boundary betwixt them and the Sultans of Persia. Memorable for an old Ceremony here used by those Mamalucks, who accounted not themselves worthy of the name of a Sultan of Egypt, till in this place in solemn pomp in the sight of their Army, they had forced their Horse into the River, and made him drink of the waters of it: testifying by that Ceremony, as well the extent of their Dominions, as their readiness to defend the same against all Invaders. A Ceremony performed with great State by Camfon Gaurus, in the War betwixt him and Selimus the first. But for all this he lost the field, and his life to boot in the fight near Aleppo: and therewith did not only leave him Syria, as the fruits of his Victory, but opened him a fair way to the conquest of Egypt, which soon after followed. And hereto I refer the Cities of 11 Hena, and 12 Ivab, with their several Territories, mentioned together with the City of Sepharvaim, Isa. 37. 13. and 2 King 18. 34. it being probable, that if Sepharvaim were the City now called Aleppo, as the Jews that dwell there say it was, that then the other two joyned together with it, must be hereabouts, though we find no tract of them in the old Geographers.

And if they were (as it seems probable to me) we have then more Kings in this Province in the elder times, than the Kings of Maacha; unless perhaps it may be said that the Kingdom of Maacab (or of Aram-Maacab) being broken in pieces, these petty States arose from the ruins of it. Of little observation in the course of business, whether entire or subdivided into parcels; but that the King hereof (the King of Maacha) aided the Ammonites against David with 1000 men: no very great number I confess (as one who lay more out of the danger than the rest of the Syrian Confederates did) but sufficient to engage him in the quarrel with them. Nor find we any thing after this touching their affairs, but that the Kings of Hena, Ivab and Sepharvaim (who shared the greatest part amongst them) being swallowed up by the Affyrians (as the fore-mentioned Texts do expressly say) some Colonies of the People hereof were sent by Salmanasser the Affyrian Monarch, to plant the desolate dwellings of the Tribes of Israel, as appeareth plainly in in 2 King 17. 24. A course in which the Conqueror dealt exceeding wisely; weakning thereby the great Cities and mightier States of this Country, which otherwise might have been apt enough to revolt again; and strengthening therewithal their Conquest in the Land of Israel, which otherwise had lain open to the next Invader, and yielded little or no profit to the publick Treasury. More politick in this than the Babylonians in the like dissolution and destruction of the Kingdom of Judab. After this time it followed the same fortune with the rest of Syria, till Tigranes the last King hereof was subdued by the Romans. At what time all the rest of Syria being reduced under the form of a Province, this part being then in the possession of Antiochus, Son of that Antiochus surnamed Eusebes, whom Tigranes had spoiled of his estates, was left unto him by the Conquerors with the Title of King. Continuing in his Line till the death of another Antiochus, the last King hereof, when made a Province of the Empire by Tiberius Cæsar, as is said by Tacitus: Qu. Servæus being sent hither as the first Roman Prætor for the government of it; though Sueton, doth refer it to the times of Vespasian.

Tigranes was overcome by Lucullus in the year of Rome 684. The Antiochus here mentioned died about the year 770, and Tiberius thereupon sent Germanicus into Asia. It became a Kingdom again and was finally reduced into a Province in the year of Rome 826 by Vespasian.

4 PALMYRENE.

PALMYRENE is bounded on the East, by the River Euphrates; on the West, by Syria properly and specially so called; on the North, with Comagena; and on the South, with Mount Libanus, dividing it from the Province of Cælo-Syria, and part of Arabia Deserta.

It took this name from Palmyra the chief City of it. When conquered by the Romans, and made a distinct Province of itself, it had the name of Syria Secunda, and Salutaris: called Syria Secunda, to distinguish it from Syria specially so called, which by them was named Syria Prima; and Salutaris, in regard of the Medicinal waters springing in many places of it. But before it had any of these names, it was in the Scriptures called Aram-Sobab, whereof Adad-ezar was King in the time of David, as we read 2 Sam. 8. 3. and 1 Chron. 18. 3.

The Country destitute of Rivers fit for Navigation, save that it bordereth on Euphrates; but liberally furnished with those hot Springs good for many Diseases, which gave it the name of Salutaris. Of which thus writeth Marcellinus, lib. 14. In his tractibus navigerum nusquam visitur flumen, at in locis plurimis aquæ suapte natura calones emergunt, ad usum aptæ multiplicium medelarum. So he: The sense whereof we had before.

Places of most observation, are 1 Palmyra, seated in a desert and sandy Plain one of the Cities built by Solomon in the Wilderness, mention of which is made 1 Kings 9. 17, 18. this Palmyra being supposed to be that City which is there called Tadmar, or Tamar in the Vulgar Latin. The cause for long time of much contention betwixt the Parthians and the Romans, as situate in the borders of either Empire; not fully settled in the Roman, till that they had subdued Zenobia, then the Queen hereof. By Adrian the Emperour, who repaired it, it was called Hadrianople, but it held not long; the old name in short prevailing above the new. 2 Gezer. 3 Bethboron the upper. And 4 Bethboron the nether, said to be fenced Cities, with Walls, Gates, and Bars, 2 Chron 8. 4. And 5 Baalath; four of the other Towns here built by Solomon; but either quite worn out of knowledge, or called by new names in the time of Ptolomy, who saith nothing of them. 6 Adada, built as the name doth intimate, by some of the Adads Kings of this Countrey, or of Damascus, to which last made subject. 7 Sura, more towards the River Euphrates, in the Notitia, called Flavia Firma Sura; which sheweth that it was either repaired, or made a Colony by the Emperour Vespasian, whose fore-name was Flavius: honoured with an Episcopal See also in the times next following, as appeareth by the Acts of the Council of Constantinople. 8 Alamath, on the banks of the River Euphrates, which if it were lawful for me to criticize upon my Author, I should conceive to be Hamath of the Scriptures, which is called Hamath-Sobab, 2 Chron. 8. 3. against which Solomon prevailed: the mistake from Camatha to Alamatha, being not uneasy in the transcripts. Confirmed herein by that passage in 2 Chron. 18. 3. where it is said, that David smote Hadad-ezar King of Sobab unto Hamath, as he went to establish his Dominion by the River Euphrates: By which it seemeth that Hamath stood upon that River, as the Camatha or Alamatha of Ptolomy is said to do. And if it were the same, as I think it was, I should conceive it to be the chief Seat of those Kings: and the principal City of this Kingdom: the word Sobab, being added to it, not only for distinctions sake, but in way of eminency: But if the judicious Reader approve not this criticism, I should next think that this Alamatha of Ptolomy were that Elam, or Helaus, next unto which David discomfited that great Army of the Mesopotamians, mention whereof is made 2 Sam. 10. 16, 17. 9. Rasapha, a Town of note in the time of Ptolomy; but of greater in the Holy Scripture, where it is represented to us by the name of Reseph, Isa. 3. 20. Reseph Civitas Syriæ, as Saint Hierom hath it: and if a Town of Syria, then most like this. 10 Betab, and 11 Berothai, two other Cities of this Kingdom, taken by David in his War against Hadad-ezar, 2 Sam. 8. 8. the last supposed to be the Barathene of Ptolomy, though placed by him among the Towns of Arabia the Desert, to which it seems it was allotted in the change of time.

This part of Syria, as the rest, was once a distinct Kingdom of it self, by the name of the Kingdom of Sobab, or of Aram-Sobab. The first King thereof, whose name occurs in Holy Scripture, being Rebob, the Cotemporary of Saul King of Israel, by whom discomfited in battel, as is said, 1 Sam. 14. 47. But Adad-ezar the Son of Rebob, a Prince of greater power and valour than his Father was, having brought all the neighbouring Kings under his command (as is said 2 Sam. 10. 19.) conceived himself a fit match for David, and thereupon opposed his passage, as he went to recover his border at the River Euphrates. In which Action though he lost a thousand Chariots, and twenty thousand Foot, and seven hundred Horse, yet would he not so end the War: but first with the Syrians of Damascus, and after with the Ammonites and their Confederates; and finally by the aid of the Mesopotamians, renewed the Quarrel. But being discomfited also in this last enterprize with the loss of forty thousand and seven hundred men, and his life to boot, the Kingdom of Zobab was brought under by the Kings of Damascus. The story of this War we have in 2 Sam. ch. 8. v. 10. in 1 Chron. ch. 18. and 1 King. 11. 23, 24. yet were not the Kings of Damascus so well settled in it, but that David had possessed himself of Betab and Berothai, and other pieces of importance: the Regal City of Hamath-Zobab being won by Solomon, and many of the best Towns of it built by him to assure his Conquest. But the Kingdom of Solomon being rent in pieces in the next Succession, the Kingdom of Zobab fell unto those of Damascus: and so continued till Damascus it self was conquered by the Kings of Assyria: unless perhaps that Hamath, which Joroboam the second is said to have subdued (together with Damascus it self) to the Crown of Israel, 2 King. 14. 28. were this Hamath-Zobab, as perhaps it was.

After this nothing memorable in the Affairs of this Country, till the Time of Gallienus the Roman Emperour: during whose Reign, among the rest who contended that Empire betwixt themselves (commonly called the Thirty Tyrants) Odenatus a man of great power and virtue assumed the Imperial Habit, and took unto him the command of these parts of Syria, together with Mesopotamia, and some other Provinces, which he had conquered from Sapores the King of Persia; against whom he had so good an hand, that he discomfited him in Battle, seiz'd upon his Treasures, and took many of his Nobles, and most of his Concubines. For which great Acts admitted partner in the Empire by Gallienus, he was not long after slain by Maxonius his Cousin German. Who by that Murder hoped to obtain the Principality of Palmyrene (for by that Name it was now called) but in that deceived. For after his death, Zenobia his unfortunate Widow, a most Masculine Lady, not only preserved the Principality of Palmyrene for the use of her Children; but took upon her both the Purple Habit, and the command of his Army: which she managed with great wisdom and gallantry, the rest of the Time of Gallienus, all the Reigns of Claudius and Quintillus, his Two next Successors. But vanquished and took Prisoner by Aurelianus (who had the happiness to unite the broken Limbs of that Empire into as strong a body as ever formerly) she was led in Triumph through Rome. The Terror of her Name, and the unusualness of the Sight, so generally heightning the expectation; Ut ea specie nihil unquam esset pompabilius, saith Trebellius Pollio; That never any Shew was esteemed so glorious. A Lady of so strong a Vertue, and of such command upon her self, that she is said never to have made use of her Husband's Company when she perceived her self with Child. After this nothing singular in the Story of Palmyrene. But when all the rest of Syria was subdued by the Christians of the West, this Province and the next only was made good against them by the Turkish Sultans of Damascus.

COELO-SYRIA.

COELO-SYRIA is bounded on the East with Palmyrene, and Arabia Deserta; on the West with the Palestine; on the North with Palmyrene, and some part of Syria Propria, from which divided by the interposition of Mount Libanus; on the South with Ituræa, and Arabia Deserta also.

This is the Syria so much mentioned in the Books of Kings and Chronicles, called by the Greeks, Cælo-Syria, i. e. Syria Cava, because partly situate in the hollow Vallies interjected betwixt Libanus and Anti-Libanus; and sometimes also Syro-Pheñicia, from the intermixture of those people; as the Pheñicians which went with Dido into Africk, were called Libo-Pheñices. By the Romans when made a distinct Province of that Empire, it had the name of Pheñice Libani, or Pheñicia Libanensis, to difference it from the other Pheñicia, which they call Maritima. But before all this by the Hebrews named Aram-Damasek. Syria Damascena in the Latin, from Damascus the chief City of it: unless perhaps we should rather say, that Aram-Damasek contained only that which lay between the Mountains of Libanus and Anti-Libanus, the rest being added by the Romans, out of the neighbouring parts of Palestine and Arabia Deserta, as perhaps it was.

Chief Rivers hereof are 1 Abana, and 2 Pharfar, the Rivers of Damascus, as the Scripture calleth them, 2 King. 5. The one of which is thought to be the River Adonis, spoken of already; the other that which Ptolemy calleth Chrysorrhoas, or the Golden Flood; which rising in the Hills of this Country, passeth by Damascus, and so together with the other into the Mediterranean Sea. Chief Mountains of it, 1 Alfadamus, by the Pheñicians called Syrton; by the Amorites, Samir; a ridge of Hills which beginning at the East-point of Anti-Libanus, bend directly Southwards, shutting upon that side the Land of Israel, whereof more in Palestine. 2 Hippus, a ledge of Mountains in the South parts of this Province, where it bordereth on Arabia Deserta.

Towns of most consideration in it: 1 Heliopolis, so called from an Image of the Sun there worshipped in the Time of Paganism; now Belbec, or (as some say) Balbec. 2 Chalcis, more Eastward towards Damascus, which gave the Title of a King to Ptolemy Maeneus, and his Son Lysanias, the Kingdom then extending over the City of Abila, and the whole Province of Ituræa in Palestine. But that Family being either expired or grown out of Favour, and Abila with Ituræa otherwise disposed of; the Title of the King of Chalcis, with the Town and Territory was given to Herod, Brother of Agrippa, the first, King of Jewry. Erroneously supposed by some Learned men to be that Chalcis, from which the Country called Chalcidice takes denomination; that Chalcis being placed by Ptolemy a degree and a half more East than Damascus, and Two degrees more towards the North; whereas this Chalcis lieth on the West of that City, in the shades of Libanus, and in the very same degree of Northern Latitude. 3 Abila, seated at the foot of Libanus, betwixt Heliopolis and Chalcis from whence the Country round about it is called Abilene; given to Lysanias, the Son of the former Lysanias, King of Chalcis, with the Title of Tetrarch, mentioned Luke 3. 1. with those other Princes which shared Palestine amongst them. Not that he was the Son of Herod, as anciently Beda and Euthymius, and of late Times some very industrious men have been of opinion; but partly because the Cities of the Chalcis and Abila of right belonged to those of the Tribe of Naphtalim (though never conquered or possessed by them) and so to be accounted a part of Palestine; and partly because the Tetrarchy of Abilene, when St. Luke wrote that Gospel, was possessed together with the rest by King Agrippa. Restored (as it seemeth) to the former Family, after his decease; for known it was by the name of Abila Lisanie in the Time of Ptolemy. 4 Adida, memorable for the Victory which Aretas King of Arabia obtained near unto it, against Alexander King of Jewry, the Kingdom of Syria then lying open as a prey to the next Invaders. 5 Hippus, or Hippone, as Pliny calleth it, not far from the Mountain of that Name. 6 Capitolias, now called Suente. 7 Gadara; a City mention'd by Pliny, Lib. 5, 6, 8. It stands upon the River Hieromare in Manasses, upon a Mountain, at the foot of which rise Hot Springs. Alexander Jannæus, King of the Jews took and ruined this City, Joseph. 13. Anr. 19. Pompey rebuilt it, and Gabinus made it the 2d in Honour to Jerusalem, Joseph. Ant. 14. c. 11. 8 Scythopolis. This City was anciently called Bethsan, and Nysa, and Sandes upon the River Jordan, at the South End of the Lake or Sea of Galilee. The Philistians hung on the Walls of this City the Bodies of Saul and his Sons. And the Inhabitants of it were no less cruel to the Jews in the Roman War than their Ancestors had ever been, as Josephus tells in the History of his own Life. It is now a poor desolate Village, but shews Ruins which testify it was once a Rich Noble well-built Pile, by the Marble Pillars found amongst the Rubbish. 9 Gerasa; and 10 Philadelphia, reckoned by Ptolemy as Cities of Cælo-Syria; but of right belonging unto Palestine, where we mean to take notice of them. 11 Edin, at the foot of Mount Libanus, now a Town of the Maronites; and anciently of such esteem, that the whole Country of Damascus was called Beth-Eden, Amos 1. 5. 12 Damascus, situate in a large Plain environed with Hills, and watered with the River Crysorrhoas, which with a great noise descendeth from the Mountains, and so abundantly serveth the City, that not only most of the Houses have their Fountains of it, but their Orchards and Gardens have some Rivulets conveyed into them. The Country round about abundantly enrich'd with plenty of most excellent Wines (the Vines heréof bearing Grapes all the Year long) and great store of Wheat; as their Orchards with variety of most delicate Fruits: our Damascenus, (or Pruna Damascena, as the Latins call them) coming first from hence; as also our Damask Roses but infinite short of their natural Sweetness, by the Transplantation. A place so surfeiting of Delights, so girt about with Odoriferous and curious Gardens, that the Vile Impostor Mabomet would never be persuaded to come into it, for fear (as himself was used to say) lest being ravished with the ineffable Pleasures of it, he should forget the Business he was sent about, and make there his Paradise. But Mubawias, one of his Successors, having no such scruple, removed the Regal Seat unto it, where it continued (for the most part) till the building of Bagdat by Bugiaser the Twentieth Caliph, about an Hundred Years after this Removal: The Regal Seat before that Time being at Mecca, Cusa, or some other of the best Towns of Arabia Felix. The Chief Buildings of it, of late Times (till destroyed by the Tartars) were a strong Castle, in the Opinion of those Times held to be impregnable; and not without great difficulty forced by Tamarlane, whom nothing was able to withstand; and as Majestical a Church, garnished with Forty sumptuous Porches, and no fewer than 9000 Lanthorns of Gold and Silver; which with 30000 people in it (who fled thither for Sanctuary) was by the said Tamarlane most cruelly and unmercifully burnt, and pulled down unto the Ground. Repaired by the Mamulucks of Egypt when Lords of Syria; it hath since flourished in Trade, the people being industrious, and celebrated for most excellent Artizans; the branching of Satins, and fine Linnen, which we call by the Name of Damasks, being amongst many others, one of their Inventions. Renowned in the Old Testament for the Kings hereof, and the Birth of Eliezer, Abraham's Steward (so honourably ancient was this City;) and in the New, for the Conversion of St. Paul, who first preached the Gospel in this place, and here so narrowly escaped the Snares of his Enemies, that he was fain to be let down out of the House in which he was, by the help of a Basket.

But Ancient and Honourable though this City of Damascus was, we find nothing of the Story of it till the Time of David; the Kings thereof until those Days, being conceived to have been Homagers and Tributaries to the Kings of Zobab. The first Exploit ascribed unto them in the Holy Scripture, is their coming to the aid of Adad-Ezar, upon his first Defeat by David; in which Action having lost 22000 Men, they were so broken, that they did not only suffer David to put Garisons in the best Cities of Damascus, but patiently became his Servants, and brought Presents to him, 2 Sam. 8. 5, 6. The Name of this unfortunate Prince not made known in Scripture, is by Josephus affirmed out of Nicolaus Damascenus, to have been Adad (a Name much cherished and assumed by the Kings Successors) who keeping constant to the party of Adad-ezar in his following Wars, was at last slain with him, in that great discomfiture which David gave them, mentioned in 2 Sam. cap. 10. v. 18. In which Text the Scripture telleth us nothing of the death of those Kings, that being supplied to us by Josephus out of their Records; who also added, That Rezin, one of the Chief Commanders of Adad-ezar, taking his advantage, not only usurped his Master's Kingdom, but made himself Master of the Kingdom of Damascus also. From this Time forward the Seat Royal of the Kings of Syria. Nor is this the Tradition of Josephus only, but founded plainly on the Scriptures, of which see 1 King. 11. v. 23, 24. the Scriptures after this taking no notice of any other Kings of Syria (by the Name of Kings of Syria) but of those that reigned in Damascus; who in short time had swallowed up the petty Kingdoms of Geshur, Ish-Tuk, Rehob, besides that of Sobab before mentioned.

THE KINGS of SYRIA or DAMASCUS.

- 1 Adad, the Friend and Confederate of Adad-ezar King of Sobab, in whose Quarrel he was vanquished and slain by David, A. M. 2903.

2 Rezin, of whom the Scripture saith, in the 2d of Chron. That when David slew them of Sobab, he fled from Adad-ezar his Lord, and gathered men unto him, and certain Captains over a Band, and went to Damascus, and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damascus.

- 2930 3 Adad II. an Idumæan, supposed to be of the Family of Adad-ezar, but rather as I think of Adad, for fear of David fled to Egypt, where he married Taphnes the Queen's Sister; and hearing that both David and Joab were dead, returned again into his Country, and as some write, expelled Rezin out of Damascus, and reigned there as King.

4 Hezion, Successor unto Adad.

5 Tabrimon, the Son of Hezion, as is said 2 King. 15. 18.

6 Ben-badad, the Son of Tabrimon, hired by Asa King of Judab, to aid him in his Wars against Baasha of Israel.

7 Ben-badad II. Son of the former, twice invaded Israel in the Reign of Achab, but both times notably repulsed; the first time by the Sally of 700 Men, at the Siege of Samaria; the next at Aphec, where with the like number in effect, he was taken Prisoner, and his Army routed.

8 Hazael, Captain of the Host to Ben-badad, anointed King of Syria by the Prophet Elisha, whom God appointed so to do, that by his hands he might avenge himself on Ben-badad, whom Hazael slew; but he proved as ill a Neighbour to the Kings of Israel, as those before him. He attempted upon Judab also in the Time of Joas, but bribed with the Treasures of the Temple, he withdrew his Forces.

9 Ben-badad III. Son of Hazael, discomfited in three set Battels, by Joas King of Israel.

10 Ben-badad IV. Son of Ben-badad the Third.

11 Ben-badad V. Son of Ben-badad the Fourth.

12 Ben-badad VI. Son of Ben-badad the Fifth, in the Time of one of which Three Kings, but which one we find not for a certain, Jeroboam the Son of Joas King of Israel subdued both Chatham, and Damascus; of which see 2 King. 14. v. 18.

13 Rezin II. Son of Ben-badad the sixth, and the last King of Damascus, who joining with Pikab King of Israel, against Abaz King of Judab, enforced him to call unto his aid Tiglatb Pileser, King of Assyria; by whom Rezin was taken and beheaded, and the City of Damascus won; the Kingdom of Syria by that means united to the Assyrian Empire. A. M. 3210.

After this Time, the Syrians continued subject to the Babylonian and Assyrian Monarchs; and in the overthrow of that Empire by the Medes and Persians, became a part of their Estate: remaining so till the first Battel betwixt Alexander and Darius, fought near Issus in Cilicia. The Victory wherein falling to the Macedonians, gave him without more trouble than the Siege of Tyre, the possession of Syria and Phœnicia. He dying not long after his Conquest of Persia. This Country lay as it were at stake betwixt Ptolemy King of Egypt, and Antigonus the Chief Lord of Asia; but the possession of it, together with the rest of the Persian Empire, in both Asias, fell in the conclusion to the share of Seleucus, for his many great and signal Victories surnamed Nicanor; a man strangely preferred. For being at the first Governor of Cilicia only, he was forced to leave Babylon, and to forsake his Province for fear of Antigonus, then dreadful to all the Macedonian Captains; and to fly into Egypt, where he became Ptolemy's Admiral. After which Ptolemy fighting at a pitch'd Field with Demetrius Son to Antigonus, took Seleucus with him, and having won the Battel, gave him aid and License to recover his former Government.

Seleucus,

Seleucus, well beloved of the People, soon made himself Master, not of Chaldæa only, but of all the Persian Provinces beyond Euphrates: and not long after (being seconded by his good Friends Ptolemy, Cassander, and Lysimachus) he encountred Antigonus at Ipsus in Ionia, where Antigonus himself was slain, and his whole Army routed. This Victory made Seleucus Lord of all Asia, from whence passing over into Europe, he vanquished and slew Lysimachus: Seven Months after which Victory he was slain by Ptolemy Ceraunus, whose Patron and Protector he had formerly been; being yet the last Saviour of all Alexander's Princes, and the only Possessor of all the Dominions which his Master had, by the way of Conquest, Aegypt excepted. His Successors, although they were Lords of all Asia; yet since in Syria they kept their residence, to the end that they might the better furnish themselves with Soldiers out of Greece upon all occasions, as we said before, they were commonly called the Kings of Syria. But long they held not in that greatness of Estate and Power, which Seleucus left them; though a being full-bodied Tree, and of several Limbs, it endured the lopping off of many Branches, and many a sad blow at the very Root of it, before it fell. For in the time of Seleucus Callinicus, the Fourth of this House, Arfaces, a Noble Parthian recovered from it all the Provinces of the Persian Empire lying on that side of Euphrates; and erected the so much celebrated Parthian Kingdom, whereof more in Persia. And in the Reign of Antiochus Magnus, so called for his Victories in Aegypt, Judæa, and Babylonia, the Romans extorted from it all the Asian Provinces on this side Mount Taurus, not wanting many provocations to incite them to it: for he not only had made War against Ptolemy Philopater King of Aegypt, whom the Romans had taken into their Protection; but stirred up the Cities and States of Greece against them; invaded Lysimachia, and some other parts of Europe, in defiance of them, and had received Annibal the Carthaginian, and Thoas the Ætolian, their most mortal Enemies into his Dominion, governing his Councils by the Influences which they had upon him. Nor may we think but that Ambition and Avarice, to add to their Fame and Empire by the overthrow of so great a Prince, did persuade much with them. So that the Point being brought to a ready issue, they pleaded it on both sides in the Battel of Magnesia, a City of Lydia, to which Antiochus brought an Army of 300000 Foot, and as many Armed Chariots, besides store of Elephants, if the Roman Writers be not over lavish in their Reports. But rejecting the advice of Annibal, and committing his Affairs wholly to Evil Counsellors, he was vanquished by no more than Four Legions of Enemies, and for his Peace compelled to quit all his Asian Provinces on that side of Taurus, and to pay 15000 Talents in ready Money for the Charge of the War. The rest of his Estate they were content he should enjoy for a longer time, Et libentius quod tam facile cessisset (as Plorus handsomly puts it on him) because he had so easily relinquished that. Afterward in the Civil Broils among themselves, about the Succession of the Kingdom, Alexander King of the Jews took from them many of their best Towns in Palestine, as Joppa, Gaza, Antbedon, Azotus, Rhinocoura, almost all Samarita, and Gaulonitis, with Scythopolis, Gadara, and many other strong Towns in Cæle-Syria. Finally, when they had consumed almost all the Royal Race, and changed their Kings no less than ten times in Forty Years (a sure sign of a falling and expiring Kingdom) they were fain to cast themselves upon Tigranes the King of Armenia, a puissant and successful Prince, till ingaged in the Quarrel of Mithridates against the Romans; by whom stripped of all his Estates on this side Euphrates, he was fain to content himself with his own Armenia, leaving Syria to the absolute disposal of Pompey, who presently reduced it to the form of a Province. This said, we have not much more to do with the House of Seleucus, but to lay down their Names, and Times of their Governments, till we draw towards the last end of

of SYRIA.

3882 21 Tigranes King of Armenia, during these Dis-sentions was by the Syrians chosen King, that by his Power they might be freed from the Jews and Arabians: the most puissant Prince that reigned in Syria, since the Time of Antioch the Great, as being King of Syria by Election, of Armenia by Succession, of Media
by Conquest. But engaging himself with Mithridates, (whose Daughter he had married) against the Romans, was vanquished by Lucullus: who with the loss of five Romans only, and the wounds of an hundred, is reported to have slain of his Enemies above 100000 men. Finally, being again broken and vanquished by Lucullus, he yielded himself to Pompey (who being appointed Lu- cullus's Successor, deprived him of the Honour of ending that War) and retaining to himself Armenia only, he left all Syria to the Romans, 3890, having reigned 18 Years.

And tho Antiochus Comagenus, the Son of Eusebes, petitioned Pompey for a Restitution to the Throne of his Ancestors, yet it would not be granted: Pompey replying, That he would not trust the Country into such weak hands as were not able to defend it against the Arabians, Parthians, and the like Invaders; and so reduced it presently to the Form of a Province. The Government of this Country under these new Lords, was ac-

had almost tumbled M. Antonius out of his Throne. On this Occasion it was enacted by the Senate, That no man hereafter should have any Military or Legal Command in the Province where he was born; left perhaps supported by the natural propension of the People to one of their own Nation, and heartned by the power of his Friends, he might appropriate that to himself, which was common to the Senate and People of Rome. But this was when it was entire, and passed but from one Province only, Phœnicia being taken also into the accompt; which made the Antiochians so proud and insolent, that Adrian, in his Time intended to subduct Phœnicia from it, Ne tot civitatum Metropolis Antiochia diceretur (saith Galicanus) That Antioch might not be the chief of so many Cities. But what he lived not to accomplish, was performed by Constantine, by whom Phœnicia was not only taken off, but Syria it self divided into Four distinct Provinces, as was shewed before, each of them having its Metropolis or Mother City; but all subordinate to the Command of the Comes, or Præfekt of the East, as he to the Command of the Præfektus Prætorii Orientis, the greatest Officer of the Empire, of whom we have often spoken already.

For the defence hereof as well against all Foreign Invasions, as the Insurrections of the Natives (a wavering and inconstant People) the Romans kept here in continual pay Four Legions, with their aids, and other additaments. For so many Mutianus had here in the Time of Galba; and by the strength and reputation of those Forces, was able to transfer the Empire upon Vespasian. And tho the Constantinopolitan Emperors to whose share it fell, in the division of the Empire, rather increased than diminished any part of this strength, yet when the Fatal Time was come, and that Empire was in the declination, the Saracens, under the conduct of Haunmer their Third Caliph, Anno 636. possessed themselves of it, Heraclius then reigning in Constantinople. And it continued in their Power till Tangolipix the Türk, having conquered Persia, and the Provinces on that side of Euphrates, passed over the River into Syria, and made himself Master of a great part of that also. A Quarrel falling out betwixt him and the nearest Kinsmen, and thereby a great stop made in their furthest Progress, was thus composed by the Mediation of the Caliph of Babylon, in the Time of Axon his Successor. To Cuthu Moses was assigned a convenient Army, to be by him employed against the Christians, with Regal Power over the Provinces by him gained, without relation or subordination to the Persian Sultan; of whose successes and affairs hath been spoken elsewhere. To Melich and Ducat, two others of his discontented Kinsmen, but all of the same Selzuccian Family, he gave the fair Cities of Aleppo and Damascus, and those parts of Syria, with whatsoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Aegypt, who then held all Phœnicia, and the Sea Coasts of Palestine; to be held in fee and vassalage of the Crown of Persia. To these Two Brethren then we are to refer the beginning of the Turkish Kingdom in Syria; who, with their Successors, by reason that here they held their Residence, caused themselves to be called

The TURKISH KINGS of DAMASCUS.

- 1075 1 Melech and Ducat, the first Turkish Kings of Damascus, by the Gift of Axon, the second Sultan of the Türks, in Persia, added to their Dominions all the rest of Syria, together with part of Cilicia, and some neighbouring Provinces in the Lesser Asia.
- 2 N.N. Sultan of Damascus, at such times as the Christians of the West won the Holy Land; against whom he notably defended the City and Territories of Damascus; and in a set Battle discomfited and slew Roger the Norman Prince of Antioch.

- 1146 3 Noradine, (the Son of Sanguin) General of the Armies, and Son-in-Law to the former King, succeeded him in the Estate. A Noble Prince, memorable amongst other things for a gallant Answer made to his Commanders, when they persuaded him to take the Advantage on the Death of Baldwin the Third, and to invade Hierusalem whilst the Christians were busie in solemnizing his Funerals. Not so (saith he) Compassion and Regard is to be had of the just sorrow of those Christians, who have lost such a King, as could not be equalled in the World.
- 1175 4 Melechala, Son of Noradine, contemned by reason of his Youth, by his Nobles, and Soldiery, who made choice of Saladine for their King; by whom dispossessed first, and after vanquished.
- 1176 5 Saladine, the Turkish Sultan of Aegypt, having vanquished the Persians, or Partians, coming under the Conduct of Cacobed, Uncle to Melechala, to restore that Prince to his Estate, remained King of Damascus: and by the puissance of his Armies, recovered from the Christians all Syria, and the Holy Land, with the City of Hierusalem also.
- 1199 6 Eladel, or El-Aphzel, the eldest Son of Saladine, succeeded in the Realm of Damascus; which he exchanged for that of Aegypt with his Brother Elaziz.
- 7 Elaziz, The second Son of Saladine, succeeded upon this exchange in the Realm of Damascus, murdered not long after by his Uncle Saphradine.
- 8 Saphradine, The Brother of Saladine, having barbarously murdered eight of the Sons of Saladine, (the youngest called Saphradine escaping only, who was after Sultan of Aleppo) possessed himself of the Kingdom of Damascus, left at his death to Corradine, his Son or Nephew.
- 9 Corradine, Son or Nephew to the Tyrant Saphradine, was by him at his death left Sultan of Damascus; to which all Syria and Palestine were then made Provincials. But the Treacheries and Murthers of Saphradine crying loud for Vengeance, Haalon the Tartar, in the Year 1262. having taken the King of Damascus Prisoner (but whether Corradine, or some other, I am not able to say) brought him before the Walls of the City, threatening to kill him in the sight of the People, if they did not deliver it unto him. Which the Citizens refusing to do, the wretched King was torn in pieces, and the City taken by assault: the Kingdom taken by the Conquerors, conferred upon Agab the Son of Haalon. And so ended the Selzuccian Family of the Kings of Damascus in the person of Corradine, or the Son of Corradine, most miserably murdered by the Tartars; as it had done in Aegypt 17 Years before, in the person of Melechfela, and Elmutan, the Son of Meledine, as villainously deposed and murdered by the Mamelucks. So slippery is the Foundation of those Kingdoms that are laid in Blood.

Nor did this Kingdom hold long in the Hands of the Tartars, recovered from them in short time by the Mamelucks, then Kings of Aegypt; from them once more regained by the furious Tamarlane: who in the Year 1400 besieged Damascus with an Army of 1200000 Men, (if the number be not mistaken, and one Cypher added more than should) in pursuit whereof he filled up the Ditches with his Prisoners, put all the People to the Sword; and with great Art raised three Towers as a Trophy of his Victory, built with the Heads of those whom he had so slaughtered. A Man so strangely made up of Vice and Vertues, that it is hard to say which had the predominancy. But the violence of this

Tempest

Tempest being overblown, the Mamalucks, from whom he had also conquered the Kingdom of Egypt, recovered Syria by degrees, and repaired Damascus, continuing in their Power till the Year 1516, when Selimus the First discomfited Campion Gaurus the Egyptian Sultan in the Fields of Aleppo. Upon the News whereof the Citizens of Damascus, fearing the spoil of their rich City, then of very great Trading, set open their Gates unto the Victors; as did all the other Cities and Towns of Syria, by their Example. By means whereof, without any more Blows, the Turks became Lords of this Country; as the next Year of Egypt also, by the Vanquishment and Death of Tamombeius who succeeded Campion: So rooting out the Name and Government of the Mamalucks, and adding those rich Kingdoms to the Turkish Empire.

And so much for Syria.

MOUNT HERMON.

IN our Passage out of Cælo-Syria into Palestine, we must cross Mount Hermon; a ledge of Hills; which beginning at the East Point of the Anti-Libanus, bend directly South: in different places, and by several Nations called by divers Names. By Ptolemy called Alfadamus; by the Amorites, Samir, by the Phœnicians, Syrion; and by that Name remembered in the Book of Psalms. But Alfadamus they are called only where they border upon Cælo-Syria. Where they begin to part the Region of Trachonitis from Arabia Deserta, they are called by Moses and the Scriptures Hermon, part of the Kingdom of Og, the King of Basan, as is said Joshua, Chap. 12. 6. Syrian, by the Sidonians, as is affirmed Deut. 3. 9. Running further after this unto the South, they are called Gilead, or Galaad; by Strabo, Trachonitæ, after the Name of the Region along which they pass, and are conceived to be the highest part of all Mount Libanus, or rather of that long ridge of Mountains which there take beginning. And so we are to understand the Words of the Prophet Jeremy, saying, Galaad tu mihi Caput Libani, as the Vulgar readeth it. That is to say, That as the Head is the highest part of a man; so these Hills, or this part of them, was the highest of all the Branches, or Spurs of Libanus, called Galeed by Jacob, from that Heap of Stone which was there laid by Laban and Jacob, to be a Witness of the Covenant which was made betwixt them, Gen. 31. 27. the Word signifying in the Original, An Heap of Witnesses. And Laban said, This Heap is a Witness betwixt me and thee this Day: therefore was the name of it called Galeed, ver. 28. By these Hills, and the main Body of the Anti-Libanus lying on the North, and the Mountains of Phœnicia and Idumæa on the West, the Land of Palestine is so shut up on every side, that no Fortrefs can be stronger by Wit or Art, than that Country by Nature: the Passages in some parts so narrow, as hardly to afford passage for a single person. Clauditur undique montibus hinc abruptis rupibus, & profundis vallibus concursu Torrentium, inde artus & implexis anfractibus sic contractis, ut per angustos colles vix pateat transitus viatori, as my Author hath it. I had almost forgot to add, That that part of these Hills, which is commonly known in Scripture by the Name of Hermon, is in one place thereof called Sihon, as Deut. 4. 48. where it is said, That the Israelites possessed the Land from Aroer on the Bank of the River Arnon, even to Mount Sihon, which is Hermon. As also, That one of the highest Tops or Summits of it, had the Name of Amana, alluded to by Solomon in the Fourth of the Canticles; by some mistaken for Amanus, a Branch of Taurus, which divides Syria from Cilicia in the Lesser Asia, with which Solomon had but small or no acquaintance. And so having cleared our selves of so much of this Mountain, as lay before us in our way, we pass over to Palestine: where we shall meet with it again, (or rather with the Western Parts and Branches of it) under the Names of Gilead and Trachonitis, as a part of that Country.

PALESTINE.

PALESTINE is bounded on the East, with the Hills last mentioned, by which parted from Cælo-Syria, and Arabia Deserta; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea, and some part of Phœnicia; on the North, with the Anti-Libanus; which divides it from Syria, and the rest of Phœnicia; and on the South with some part of Arabia Petraea.

It was first called Palestine from the Philistims, the most potent Nation of those parts. A name first found in the History of Herodotus, but generally used in times succeeding, by the Greeks and Romans. And this I look on as the proper and adequate name of the whole Countrey, according to the bounds before laid down: the others, by which commonly called, being more restrained, and properly belonging to so much hereof, as was in possession of the Tribes of Israel. And of this sort, are 1 Canaan, or the Land of Canaan, so called from Canaan the son of Cham, by whom first peopled after the Flood. 2 The Land of Promise, because by God promised to Abraham, and his seed, for an habitation. 3 Israel, from the Israelites or sons of Jacob, whose surname was Israel. 4 Judæa, and by us Jewry, from the Jews, or people of the Tribe of Judah, the most prevalent of the Tribes of Israel. And 5 Terra Sancta, or the Holy Land, because the subject of the greatest part of the Holy Scripture; and that the work of our Redemption was herein accomplished by our Lord and Saviour. Which notwithstanding we must know, that though these names do many times by a Synecdoche, express the whole Countrey of Palestine; yet neither the Canaanites or the Israelites were ever Masters of of the whole: except only in the time of David, and of some of the Maccabæan Princes, as also in some part of the reign of Herod the Great; all which had the great fortune to command it totally.

But being the most considerable people of it were the Tribes of Israel; we will look first upon the Countrey People under that capacity. And for so much hereof as was held by them, it is situate between the 3^d. and 4th. Climates; the longest day being fourteen hours and a quarter. The whole length but 200 miles and not above 80 in breadth; yet was of such a fruitful soil, that before the coming in of the Israelites it had 30 Kings: and after the coming in of that people, so extremely populous, that David numbred a Million and 300000 fighting men, besides those of the Tribes of Levi and Benjamin. But of the fruitfulness hereof more shortly.

As for the People they were by composition of a middle stature, but strong of body: in their best times a murmuring and stiff-necked generation, never well pleased either with God or Man, with their Priests or Princes, seldom conform unto the Commandments of their God, nor very much constant to themselves: So crippled in their goings betwixt Superstitions and Idolatry, that they knew not how to walk uprightly: Idolatrous above measure, and incorrigible in it, till their coming back from the Captivity of Babylon: and after that as Superstitions and severe, in the point of their Sabbath, as they had formerly been exorbitant in the worship of Idols. No Medium on either side, but extream in both. Divided anciently into the four ranks, that is to say, 1 Jews, 2 Hellenists, 3 Proselytes, and 4 Samaritans; all of them pretending a Right unto this Countrey, though not all of them dwelling in it.

Of these the first called Jews, from Judah the predominant Tribe; and Hebrews, from Heber the Son of Selah, grand-son of Sem, and one of the Ancestors of Abraham, were such as naturally descended of the Tribes of Israel, and lived for the most part in their own Countrey; adhering to the Law of Moses, and embracing the whole Canon of the Old Testament, from the Book of Genesis to the Book of the Prophet Malachi. Called also Israelites, because descended from the loyns of their Father Jacob, to whom God gave the name of Israel, for his great honor. But after the ten Tribes were carried away by Salmanasser to an endless captivity: and two Tribes (with the remainder of the rest) returned from that temporary one which they found in Babylon, the name of Israelites was laid by, and that of Jews assumed, as more proper to them. These read the Scriptures, and executed all Divine Offices in their natural Hebrew.

2. The Hellenists, were such as were Jews by parentage, but lived dispersed in most Provinces of the Roman Empire; called by that name (we may English it, the Græcizing Jews) because they read the Scriptures in the Greek or Septuagint's Translation; and performed all publick Offices in that language also. In other things as superstitious in their Sabbath, as tenacious of their Circumcision and others of the Rites and Ceremonies of the Law of Moses, as the Jews of Palestine: and for that reason, scorned and derided by the Gentiles, amongst whom they lived; Credat Judæus apellæ, saith one of their Poets, relating to their circumcising; Recutitaque Sabbata palles, saith another of them, with scorn enough unto their Sabbaths. Novi illic ritus & cæteris mortalibus contrarii, saith Tacitus, a graver Author, of the whole body of their Rituals, or Acts of worship.

3. The Proselytes were such, as not being Jews by birth, or descent of Parentage, conformed themselves unto their customs, and desired to be admitted to their Religion. And these were all of two sorts, the one called, Proselyti Portæ; and the other, Proselyti fœderis. The first of these, admitted by the Jews to the worship of God, and instructed in the hopes of life to come, were only tyed to those Precepts which the Hebrew Doctors call the Precepts of the sons of Noah: but were neither circumcised nor otherwise conform to the Law of Moses. Which Precepts of the sons of Noah, so called, because supposed to be given by Noah unto his Sons, when he came out of the Ark, were seven in number: that is to say, 1 That they dealt uprightly with every man. 2 That they blessed and magnified the Name of God. 3 That they worshipped not any false Gods, but to abstain from Idolatry. 4 To refrain from all unlawful lusts and copulations. 5 To keep themselves from theft and robbery. 6 And from shedding blood. And 7 Not to eat the Flesh or Member of any Beast, taken from it when it was alive; by which all cruelty was forbidden. These, though they were admitted to the worship of God, and might repair unto the Temple; yet because of their Uncircumcision, they were not suffered to converse with the Jews, nor to come into the same Court of the Temple

Temple with them : but were accounted as unclean, and had their Court apart assigned them in the worship of God, which was called Atrium Gentium, or Immundorum, and was the outermost of all. The other Profelytes, which was called Profelyti federis, conformed in all things to the Jews, as in Circumcision, Sabbath-keeping, and all other Ceremonies : and were accounted of as adopted Jews ; privileged as they were, to worship in the Inner-Court ; bound as they were, from eating or drinking with a Gentile ; and in a word, partakers with them in all things both divine and humane, and different in nothing from them but their Race or Parentage. These last in the New Testament called simply Profelytes, without any addition : the former by the name of Σεβόμενοι, or the worshipping Gentiles, of which see Act. 16. v. 14. & ch. 17. v. 4. 17. & ch. 18 v. 4. &c.

4. As for the Samaritans, they possessed a great part of this Countrey, which the Profelytes did not ; yet were not so much Jews as they. But of these more anon, when we come to Samarita, the proper place of their abode.

As for the natural Jews themselves, they are divided also into several Sects ; as viz. 1 Esseni, 2 the Sadduces, 3 the Scribes, 4 the Pharisees, 5 the Herodians, and 6 the Gaulonites, or Galilaens. The Essenes, or Esseni, derive their name as some conceive, from Asca, which signifieth facere, to do, because they laboured with their hands : as others say, from Asa, which signifieth θεραπεύω, or to cure diseases, because they were much given to the Study and Practice of Physick. Their beginning is not yet agreed on. The first time they were heard of, was in the time of Jonathan, the Brother of Judas Maccabæus, about 150 years before Christ's Nativity ; then mentioned by Josephus, Antiqu. Judaic. lib. 13. cap. 9. A Pythagorean kind of Jew, and not much differing in opinion from those old Philosophers, professing as they did, 1 Community of Goods, 2 Abstaining even from lawful pleasures, 3 Forbidding of Oaths, 4 Forbearing Wine, and drinking Water, 5 Ascribing the conduct of Affairs to fate or destiny, And 6 Using only inanimate or unbloody Sacrifices. Some other Dogmata they had, but these the principal : forbidding Marriage not being common to the Sect, but only to some few amongst them. And though we find no mention of them in the New Testament, the Sect in those times being small and inconsiderable ; yet it is thought that St. Paul alludeth to their Tenets : as where he adviseth Timothy to make use of Wine, and glanceth upon those who prohibited Marriage, 1 Tim. 4. 3. or condemned others in the use of Meat and Drink, Coloss. 2. 16. As for the manner of their life, they lived together as it were in Monasteries, or Colledges, and in every one had their Συνεῖον, or Oratory : admitting none into their Fellowships or Society, unless he brought all he had into their common Treasury ; and not then neither under a three years Probationership. More of them he that listeth to see, may satisfy himself in that Tract of Philo, intitled De vita contemplativa, where he most copiously describeth their Institutes and course of life, mistakingly applied by Eusebius to the Primitive Christians, as if that Tract had purposely been composed of them, by that learned Jew.

2. The Sadduces either derive their name from Sadoc, who lived about the time of Alexander the Great, and is thought to be the first Founder of them ; or from Sadoc an Hebrew word signifying Justice ; the men pretending to be so exact and strict Justitiaries, as if they would justify themselves before God's Tribunal. The occasion of the Sect or Heresie (for both it was) said to arise from a mistake of Antigonus, a right learned man, who teaching, That we ought not to serve God, as Servants do their Masters. for the hope of Reward, occasioned Sadoc and Battus, two of his Auditors, to conceive that there was no Reward nor Recompence for a Godly Life ; and consequently, no Resurrection nor World to come, neither Angels nor Spirits. These were the most capital of their Errors, as appeareth Act. 23. 6, 8. Matth. 22. 3. Luk. 20. 20, 27, &c. But other Dogmata they had, not mentioned in the Holy Scripture ; ascribing nothing unto Fate or Predestination, but all things altogether to a man's free-will ; 2 Teaching the Soul to be annihilated at the hour of death ; 3 Rejecting all Traditions ; and 4 Allowing no more Scripture than the five Books of Moses. In most of their opinions contrary to the Scribes, and Pharisees, but joyning with them both in opposing Christ. and though like Sampson's Foxes they looked divers ways, and were tyed together by their Tails only ; yet in those Tails they carried Firebrands to destroy God's Harvest, and had done it, if they had been able.

3. But indeed the Pharisees were the men, who were the Master-wits in the Arts of Mischiefe, Homines robustioris impietatis, in the Father's words. Fellows of such a perfect and concocted Malice, that they were almost able to possess the Devil. Their name they derive from Pharez, which is to separate. Separatists we may rightly call them : For they were first ἀφορισμένοι εἰς τὸ νόμον, separated to the Study of the Law of God, as Saul was brought up to that purpose at the feet of Gamaliel : And 2dly, ἀφορισμένοι εἰς τὴν ἀγιότητα, separated from the rest of Mankind, by a more strict profession of sanctity, as the Pharisee boasted of himself, that he was not as other men, or as that Publican. And that they might so seem unto simple men, they did thirdly separate themselves from the Society and Conversation of others not so pure as themselves, whom they called Populum terræ, or the Sons of the Earth, upbraiding Christ that he kept company with Publicans and Sinners : and more than so, used a particular kind of Habit, and had a Garb unto themselves which no others had ; using it for a by-word amongst themselves, that Vestes Populi terræ, sunt concubatio Phariseorum. To which end, as their countenances were more clouded and severe than others ; so did they wear their Phylacteries of a broader size than others did : which, by the way, were scrolls of Parchment bound about their Heads, and upon their hands, wherein were writ the Ten Commandments of God ; foolishly so interpreting the words of Deut. And they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes, &c. c. 6. v. 8. They began at the same time with the Sadduces, which was about 300 years before Christ's Nativity. As for their Dogmata, besides those specified above, which were also practicable, they maintained, 1 A Pythagorean Metempsychosis, affirming that the Soul of a Righteous man passed from one into another at the time of his death : from whence the divers opinions touching Christ our Saviour, Mat. 6. 14. are supposed to spring ; as if his Body had been animated with the Soul of Elias, John the Baptist, Jeremy, or some other Prophet. 2 They adhered so tenaciously to unwritten Traditions, that in comparison of them they Neglected the written Law, as either insufficient or impertinent : And 3 ascribed so much sanctity unto frequent washings, especially when they came from Market, Mark 7. 4. (where possibly they might meet with some unclean persons) and before their sitting down to Meat, Mat. 15. 2. that if they came unto a place where there was not water enough both to drink and wash, the Pharisee would rather chuse to wash than drink, though he died for thirst. More of them he that list to see, may find it copiously set down in the four and twentieth Chapter of Saint Matthew ; and thither I refer the Reader. By means of which pretensions to so great a sanctity, and some other Arts they had to abuse the People, they grew so strong, and had such store of followers and dependants on them, that they became formidable in short time to their Kings and Princes. Insomuch that Alexandra durst not enter on the Government in her Childrens nonage, as Josephus telleth us, Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 23. until she had permitted all all things unto their disposing; ἡ μὲν δὲ τὴν ἐκείνων γράμματα, &c. and promised to do nothing without their advice. And this she did by the direction of King Alexander, her dying Husband: whose Government, as she found by too sad experience had in many things proved unsuccessful, διὰ τὴν ὑβρίδα πρὸς αὐτὴν, because she had put some scorns upon them, and otherwise offended that prevailing Faction. A Faction so predominant amongst the People, saith the same Josephus, Antiq. lib. 19. cap. 18 ὥς ἡ βασιλεία πλεονέκτης, ἡ καὶ Ἀρχιερέως, &c. that whatsoever they pleased to spread abroad, either of the High Priest, or the King himself, how false or scandalous soever, it was received for truth without more dispute, or any inquiry made into it.

4. But of the Pharisees enough, of the Scribes anon. Proceed we now to the Herodians and the Gaulonites, whom I look not on, as either the Authors or Promoters of any Sect of Religion in the Jewish Church; but as the names of two opposite Factions in the Civil State. The first were such who depending upon Herod's Fortune, as he did on the pleasure of the Roman Emperors, solicited the paying of Tribute to the Romans; and earnestly pressed upon that point, that Herod might be thereby the more endeared to his Masters of Rome, and they to him. Upon this ground nick named Herodians by the People, as men that more endeavoured the greatness and Estate of Herod, than the prosperity and liberty of their Native Countrey. And possible enough it is, that some amongst them seeing the Magnificence of Herod's Palace, and experimentally knowing his Prowess, might fancy him to be the Messiah so long looked for, and thereby own this name with a better Title, than the others did. Opposite unto these, were those called the Gaulonites (we may call the one the Court-Faction, the other the Faction of the Countrey, or common people:) so named from one Judas a Gaulonite, as Josephus calleth him, from the place of his birth; a Galilean, as Gamaliel calleth him, Act. 5. 37. from the place of his abode or habitation: By him the Jews were practised with to deny this Tribute, telling them that it was a manifest token of their servitude, and that they ought to know no Lord, but the Lord of Heaven: drawing them finally on this ground into open Arms, in which Actions he and his Adherents perished, and were brought to nothing. Most of his followers were of Galilee, though he had some Disciples in Hierusalem and Samaria also: and of these Galileans were those poor men, whose blood Pilate is said to mingle with their Sacrifices, Luk. 13. 1.

The Language of this People, by them called the Hebrew, was naturally and originally the same which Abraham found in the Land of Canaan, at his coming thither; as hath been shewn before when we were in Phœnicia. Used by them constantly till their subjugation by the Babylonians, when being led captive to that Countrey, and conforming themselves to the Speech and Dialect of it; they came at last to speak a kind of broken Language, neither true Chaldean, nor good Hebrew, but one made of both. Chaldee as to the main body of it; but Hebrew as to the affixes, points, and Conjugation: being the same with that which we now call the Syriack. And at their coming home, after seventy years, had so far lost the knowledge of their Mother-Tongue, that they were not able to understand the words of the Holy Scripture, when Ezra read it in their hearing: in so much that he was forced to imploy some learned in that Tongue to expound it to them. To this the Scribes so often mentioned in the New Testament, must refer their original: there being no such Office heard of till the time of Ezra, though long before that time the Law had ordinarily been read unto them in the Feast of Tabernacles. For this cause they were called Scribes of the Law, Ezra 7. 6. Doctors of the Law, Luk. 5. 17. and simply by the name of Lawyers, Luk. 7. 30. as men whose office was to expound the Law, and make it intelligible to the People. These we may best resemble to the Canonists in the Church of Rome, or the Divinity-Reader in some School or College: and grew to such great estimation in the Jewish State, that it was hard to say at last whether the Pharisees or they were the better men. For what the Pharisees gained on the common people by pretence of Sanctity, these got more justifiably by their zeal to the written Word, which they endeavoured to preserve from the common dangers both of corruption and contempt. And though I look on those men especially, as the name of a Faction, not a Sect; yet being they held so close to the Pharisees, and concurred with them in most of their Superstitions, as appeareth Mat. 23. I consider them as a strong and potent Faction, of great authority and influence in affairs of moment.

For matters of Religion, the People of this Land were privileged above all others, had they had the grace to make good use of it: the Law being given to them by God the Father, the Gospel preached amongst them by God the Son, and that Gospel countenanced and confirmed before their eyes, by the miraculous Operations of the Holy Ghost. The Government of that Church in the time of the Law, by a subordination of Priests and Levites to their several Heads; the Priests divided by King David into twenty four Ranks or Classes, each Class serving in their turns at the Holy Temple: the Chiefs or Heads of which several Classes, made but that Body of men which are called Principes Sacerdotum, or Chief Priests, so often mentioned in the Writings of the Holy Evangelists. Over all which there was one Supreme, whom they called Summum Sacerdotem, or the High Priest, descended lineally from Aaron, till the Romans out of Avarice and Reason of State made the Office saleable. And because possibly the High Priest might be under some pollution, and so incapable by Law to perform his Office, he had his Suffragan (or Sagan) to discharge it for him. Of which sort was Zephaniab, the Sagan or second Priest to Semiab, mentioned Jer. 52. 24. And of this sort is Annas thought by some to have been to Caiaphas; and for that cause the title of High-Priest to be given to both, Luk. 3. 2. though others think that Annas was High-Priest in right, and the other in fact; the one being deposed by the Romans, and the other superinduced into the place. In time of Christianity they were governed as in other Churches, by a subordination of Priests to Bishops. The first Bishop said to be St. James, the Son of Alpheus, commonly called the Lord's Brother; affirmed by Ignatius, Scholar to the Apostles, in his Epistle ad Trallianos; by Egesippus, who lived in the Apostles times, as St. Hierom and Eusebius cite him; as also by Clement of Alexandria cited by Eusebius, Hist. l. 7. c. 14. by Cyril of Hierusalem Catechism 4 and 14. Epiphanius, Hæres. 78. n. 7. St. Ambrose in Gal. 1. St. Chrysost. on the last of St. John's Gospel; St. Hierom in his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Writers; St. Augustine cont. Crescon. l. 2. c. 37. To whom there may be added the joynt consent of 289 Prelates assembled in the sixth General Council holden at Constantinople, affirming James the Lord's Brother to be the first Bishop of Hierusalem: all of them, with the Fathers before mentioned, taking the word Bishop in that sense, in which it generally passed for the times they lived in. His Successors subject at the first to the Bishop of Cæsarea, as their Metropolitan; though privileged in their own Diocese, with the rights of Patriarchs, as appears evidently by the Acts of the Nicene Council. But afterwards for the greater honour of the Holy City, wherein our Saviour wrought the work of our Redemption, it was ordained at Chalcedon, that the Bishop of Hierusalem should have as well the jurisdiction as the name of a Patriarch; the three Palestines (for Constantine had before divided it into so many Provinces) being subducted from the power of the See of Antioch, to make up his Patriarchate. So stood it in elder times, but now by the incroachment of Mabometanism the Christian Faith is obscured, and the beauty of it so eclipsed, that were it not for some Scets of Christians dwelling in Mount Sinai, and about Hierusalem, it might be said without any manifest untruth, to be quite extinguished. The Bishop of Jerusalem, and the Church there settled, were in the Apostles Times looked on as the Head and Fountain of the Christian Faith, and Jerusalem as the Metropolis and Royal City of Judea. But when Jerusalem was utterly destroyed by Titus, Son of Vespasian, Cæsarea became the head City of Judea, and consequently the Bishop of Jerusalem became subject to the Bishop of Cæsarea, and continued so till he recovered a part of his former Power and Authority by the Decrees of Succeeding Councils.

But to look back upon the Country, it cannot be described more fully and significantly, than Moses hath done it to our hands, in Deut. 8. where it is said to be A Land of Brooks and Waters, of Fountains and Depths, that spring out of the Valleys and Hills; a Land of Wheat and Barley, and Vines, and Fig-trees, and Pomegranates; of Olive, and Honey: a Land, wherein was Bread, without scarceness; a Land whose Stones were as Iron, and out of whose Hills one may dig Brass. An ample commendation; and yet in some sort short of the Fertility of this flourishing Country, which did not only consist in the choice and plenty, but the perpetuity of its Fruits; it being on Record in the Epistles of the Emperor Julian (surnamed the Apostate) that the Fig-Trees and other Fruit-Trees herein, were seldom or never without Fruits, the old not fully falling off, till the new come on. Which his Report, if true, (as certainly he did not love our Saviour so well as to flatter the Country for his sake) we have then an Answer to the Difficulty, which hath so much perplexed all Commentators of Former Times; and that is, Why our Saviour should curse the Fig-tree for not bearing Fruit, when the Text saith, That the time of Fruits was not yet come, Mark 14. 13. For tho the Time for new Fruits was not yet come (it being then but early Spring) yet our Saviour being hungry might expect to find some of the old, and failing of his expectation, lay that Curse upon it. Nor is this solution of the Doubt discountenanced, (rather much confirmed) by the Character and Condition of the Country, as it stands at present; naturally adorned with beautiful Mountains, and luxurious Valleys, the Rock affording excellent Waters, and the Air never pinched with Colds, nor scorched with Heats. And tho either by the negligence of the Inhabitants, or some Curse laid upon the Land, far short of that Fertility with which once it flourished; yet still Figs, Olives, Pomegranates, Palm-trees, are here very frequently to be seen, some store of Wine, with Oranges, and the Apple of Paradise, which they preserve upon the Trees all the Year long (which agrees very well with that of Julian spoken of before) as well furnished with Honey and Sugar-Canes, and also with Goats, Swine, Hares, Quails, and Partridges: but pestered so in many places with Rats and Mice, that if it were not for certain Birds which feed upon them, it were not possible for the People to have any Harvest. Balm they had anciently, not now. Nor any Nuts, Pears, Plums, or Cherries, but what are brought hither from Damascus.

Principal Rivers of this Country, are 1 Chisou, the Chorsecus of Ptolemy, which riseth out of Mount Tabor in Galilee, and falleth into the Mediterranean Sea, not far from Mount Carmel in Phonicia. 2 Cedron, a Torrent rather than a River, passing betwixt Hierusalem and the Mount of Olives; but more remarkable for many notable Actions, than many others, of a greater both name and course. For over this Brook did David pass when he fled from Abulom; and over this our Saviour, the Son of David, passed when he went to his Passion. On the Banks hereof did Aza the King of Judab burn his Mother's Idols, 1 King. 15. as Josiah did the Vessels which were made for Baal, 2 King. 23. 3 Zared. And 4 Naphtha, which arising out of the Hills of the Tribe of Judab, have their fall into the Mediterranean. 5 Arnon, which hath his Spring in the Hills so called, and endeth his course in the Mare Mortuum. 6 Jaboc, oft mentioned in the Scriptures; which issuing out of the Mountains of Galaad, And 7 Hermon, which springing from the Hills so named, lose themselves in Jordan. 8 Jordan, so called from For and Dan, two neighbouring Fountains, out of which he seems to take his source; tho they do also fetch their Spring from Phiala, a round deep Well at the foot of Anti-Libanus, about Twenty Four Miles from these Fountains, into which he maketh his way like a Mole under ground. A River of more fame, than length, breadth, or depth, running from Norib to Scuth, almost in a strait line to the Dead Sea, where he endeth his course; not navigably deep, nor above 10 Yards in breadth, where broadest; shadowed on both sides with Poplars, Tamarisk-trees, and Reeds of many several sorts, of some of which the Arabians make Darts and Javelins, of others Arrows, and some again they fashion into Pens to write with. Passing along it maketh two Lakes, the one in the Upper Galilee, by the Ancients called Samachonitis, dry for the most part in Summer, and then covered with Shrubs and Sedge, not mentioned in the Holy Scriptures: The other in the Lower Galilee, about an 100 Furlongs in length, and about Forty in breadth; called the Sea of Galilee from the Country: The Lake of Tyberias, from a City of that Name on the Banks thereof, and for the like cause called also the Lake of Genesareth. And here it is to be observed, that the River passeth thorough this Lake with so swift a course, that it preserves it self distinct from the Waters of it both in Taste and Colour, as is affirmed of Nilus for a long space in the Mediterranean, and other great Rivers in their Falls. Finally, having run thorough the Plains of Hiericho, it finisheth its course at last in the Mare mortuum, or Dead Sea. Honoured with the Name of a Sea, because salt and large, seventy Miles long, and sixteen broad; furnishing with Salt the whole Land of Jewry, but called the Dead Sea, either because it had no visible efflux into the Ocean, nor is it at all increased with the Waters of this River, and many other Torrents which fall into it; or because no living Creature is nourished in it, suffocated with the Bituminous savour which it sendeth forth, from the abundance of which Matter it is also called Lacus Asphaltites. Nigh hereunto stood the once famous Cities of Sodom and Gomorrab, with three others more, whence the Valley had the name of Pentapolis, destroyed for their Abominations by a Fire from Heaven: now fruitful in shew only, but not in substance; the Fruits here growing, being very fair unto the Eye, Sed levi tactu pressa in vagum fatiscunt pulverem, but if touched, moulder into Ashes, as Solinus hath it. Jansonius saith, Jordan is the greatest River in Palestine, which arising from Two Fountains is united in one Stream beneath Cæsarea Philippi, thence passing to Selencia, it forms the Lake of Meron, so watering Hazoreth Gentium, and passing between Corazim to the East, and Capernaum to the West, into the Lake of Tiberius, or Sea of Galilee; it passeth by Salem, Bethabara, and Livias, into the Dead Sea, where it changeth its Waters into Salt. The Fish either return back, or die in this Sea. The River having at last forced its way through this Lake, is swallowed up by an horrible Whirlpit or Abyss. The whole length of the River is about 100 Miles. Monsieur Therrenot who saw it, saith it is about half as broad at Jerico as the Seine is at Paris, very rapid, and the Waters of it thick, and passing through Fat Lands, full of Fish, and on both sides shaded with pleasant Woods.

Chief Hills and Mountains of it, besides Anti-Libanus and Mount Hermon, spoken of already, which be only borderers, are 1 Mount Sion, memorable for the Tower of David, which was built upon it, called frequently The Holy Hill of Sion. 2 Mount Moriah, famous for the intended Sacrifice of Isaas, and the Temple of Solomon. 3 Mount Calvary, on which CHRIST suffered, supposed sed to be the Burial-place of our Father Adam. 4 Mount Tabor, on which our Saviour was transfigured. 5 Mount Olivet, from which he ascended into Heaven. 6 Mount Garizim, whereon stood the Samaritan's Temple, their ordinary place of Worship, mentioned John 4. 20. 7 The Mountains of Saron, stretching with intermixed Valleys from the Sea of Galilee to the Mediterranean, not far from Tyre, there ending in a White Cliff, and for that cause called Capo Bianco by the Sailer. The whole Mountain pleasantly enriched with the fragrant smells of Rosemary, Sweet Marjoram, Hyssop, Bayes, and other Odoriferous Plants which do grow there naturally; but for all that, destitute of any other Inhabitants than Leopards, Boars, Jaccals, and such Savage Creatures. 8 The Mountains of Gilboa, the highest on the West of Jordan; as 9 those of Basan, celebrated for their height in the Book of Psalms. And 10 those of Abarim on the East-side of it: From one of the Summits of which last, called Nebo, by some Writers Pisgah, the Lord gave Moses a Survey of the Land of Promise.

As for this whole Country comprehended in the name of Palestine, it hath had divers divisions, according to the quality of the People, or the will of those who have been formerly Masters of it. Divided first betwixt the Philistines, Perezites, Hittites, Jebusites, and others of the Sons of Canaan, on this side Jordan; the Moabites, Ammonites, Midianites, and Amorites, dwelling on the other. When conquered by the Sons of Jacob, it was divided into the Twelve Tribes, of 1 Judab, 2 Benjamin, 3 Simeon, 4 Dan, 5 Aser, 6 Nephthali, 7 Zabulon, 8 Issachar, 9 Gad, 10 Reuben, 11 Ephraim, and 12 Manasseh. When that great Breach was made by Jeroboam, in the Kingdom of David, it was broken into the Two Kingdoms of Judab and Israel; of which the first contained only the Two Tribes of Judab and Benjamin, the latter comprehending the other Ten. When the Israelites were led captive into Affyria, and a new set of People planted in their rooms, those new-comers from Samaria, their Capital City, had the Name of Samaritans: and when the men of Judab were released of their long Captivity, and came back from Babylon, they took to themselves the Name of Jews. After which Time, the whole Country of Palestine, anciently possessed or subdued by the Seed of Abraham, was divided into 1 Peræa, 2 Ituræa, 3 Galilee, 4 Samaria, 5 Judæa, and 6 Idumæa. When conquered by the Romans, all these were joined into one Province, which for a time was reckoned as a part of Syria, or at least subordinate. But Constantine not liking of the one or the other, went a way by himself, and cast it into three Provinces, viz. 1 Palestina Prima, 2 Palestina Secunda, and 3 Palestina Salutaris; the Metropolis of the first being Cæsarea Palestine; of the Second, Samaria; of the Third Hierusalem. But this Division of Constantine's growing out of use, we will adhere unto the former: Beginning first with those parts hereof which lay on the other side of Jordan, because first conquered and possessed by the House of Israel; who at that Gate found entrance into all the rest; and coming round to Idumæa, which last of these Provinces was added to the State of Jury. In the Chorography whereof, I must confess my self a Debtor to Sir Walter Raleigh, whose Industry herein hath saved me a great deal of search, tho some times I make bold to differ from him, and add to him, as I see occasion.

PERÆA.

PERÆA, is that part of Palestine which lieth betwixt the River Jordan, and the Mountains of Armon, (which divide Palestine from Syria and Arabia) East and West; and reacheth from Pella in the North, to Petra the chief Town of Arabia Petraea, in the South. By Pliny it is made to bend more towards Agypt, who describes it thus: Peræa Judæa pars est ulterior, Arabia, & Agypto proxima, asperis dispersis montibus, & à cæteris Judæis, Jor- dane amne discreta: Peræa (saith he) is the furthest part of Judæa, neighbouring Arabia and Agypt, interspersed with rough and craggy Mountains, and parted from the rest of the Jews by the River Jordan. So called from the Greek Word πέρα, in regard of the situation of it on the other side of that River; and not improperly might be rendred by Trans-Jordana. Blessed with a rich Soil, and large Fields belet with divers Trees, especially of Olives, Vines, and Palms. The Habitation in Times past of the Midianites, Moabites, and Ammonites, as also of the Two Tribes of Gad and Reuben. Of all which I shall speak in order, beginning with the Midianites, and the Children of Lot, as the first Occupants hereof; upon the knowledge of whole Affairs, the State and Story of the Israelites hath so much dependence.

And first the MIDIANITES inhabited on the South-East of the Dead Sea, at the very entrance of the Country; descended from one or more of the five Sons of Madian, the Son of Abraham by Keturah, mentioned Gen. 25. 4. who leaving the rest of their Brethren to seek themselves new Habitations, more towards the Banks of the Red Sea, and the Deserts of Arabia Petraea; continued near unto the place of Abraham's Dwelling; and mingling with the Moabites and Canaanites in Blood and Marriages, came in short time to lose all the knowledge of the True God, and to worship Idols, as the rest of their Neighbours did.

Their chief Cities were 1 Recome, built by one of the five Kings of the Midianites, which was slain by Joshua, afterwards called Selah, 2 King. 14. 7. accounted at that Time a City of the Edomites; next of the Ismaelites or Arabians, and by them called Hogar. Best known unto the Greeks and Romans, by the Name of Petra, and by that Name we shall take further notice of it when we come to Arabia. 2 Midian, on the Banks of the Dead Sea, the ordinary Residence of their Princes, absolute of themselves at first, as in other places; but at the Time when Moses and Joshua led the people into their Possessions, subjected unto Sibon King of the Amorites; whose Dukes their five Kings and Princes are said to be, Josh. 13. 21. A People whom the Israelites had neither Commission or Intent to make War upon, if they had not causlessly provoked them, at the request of the Moabites, by sending amongst them (as Balaam the False Prophet had advised) the most beautiful of all their Women, not only to entice them to prohibited mixtures, but to allure them to the worship of their Idols also. A mischievous and successful Plot, but alike dangerous to both parties; God sending a fierce Plague amongst the Israelites, which cost them the Lives of 24000 persons; besides such as perished by the Sword; and giving a Command to Moses, to avenge him of the Midianites, who had so provoked him. On which Commission Moses called out 12000 Men, and sent them under Phineas against the Midianites; by whom all their Princes were slain, their Cities and goodly Cattles burnt with Fire, their Men, Women and Male-children put unto the Sword, as is related in the One and Thirtieth Chapter of the Book of Numbers; yet notwithstanding this great slaughter, they recovered their former power, if not a greater; and after the death of Barak the Judge of Israel, did for the space of Four Years so afflict that People, that they were fain to hide themselves in the Caves and Strong-holds of the Mountains, as is said, Judg. 6. 2. their Enemies having left them neither Sheep, Oxen, or Ales, or any Sustenance at all, v. 4. But Gideon being raised up by God for their deliverance, encountered with their four Kings, and put them to flight; of which four Oreb and Zeeb were taken and slain by the Ephraimites at the Passage of Jordan; Zeba and Zalmunna taken by Gideon himself, and executed by his own Hand, as the Story telleth us. In this War there are said to have perished of this People and their Confederates, no fewer than 120000 persons, by which so weakened, that we hear no more of them from this time forwards, in any Act of importance; their Name and Country being first incorporated into that of the Edomites, and after into that of the Imaelites, and other the Inhabitants of Arabia Petraea.

2 The MOABITES possessed all the Country, from the Midianites in the South, as far as to Esebon in the North, on both sides of the River Arnon; having Jordan on the West, and the Hills of Abarin on the East. Possessed at the first by the Emmins, a Race of Giants, whose chief City was Sheneth Kiriathaim. But these being vanquished and broken by Chedorlaomer and his Associates, of which see Gen. 14. 5. their Forlorn Seats were taken up by the Moabites, descended from Moab, one of the Sons of Lot; who lived here in great prosperity till the Time of Labeb, Grand-Father unto Balac, the Son of Zippor; from whom Sehon King of the Amorites had taken all the parts of Moab on the North of the River Saboc, and made that River, which before was the middle of Moab, to be the North Bound or Border of it. In which estate it stood in the Time of Moses.

Chief Cities of it at that Time, were 1 Rabbat, the Regal Seat of Balac the King of Moab, the Rhalmathum of Ptolemy. 2 Diblaham, destroyed with the rest of Moab, by Nebuchadnezzar, as is said Jer. 48. 22. 3 Gallin, the Principality of Phalti the Son of Laiish, to whom Saul gave his Daughter Michal, formerly married unto David, 1 Sam. 25. 44. 4 Muthana, and 5 Nathaniel, thorough which the Israelites passed after they had left the Well called Beer. 6 Bamatb, where Moses was encamped when he sent to Sehon to demand a passage through his Country, Numb. 21. 19, &c. 7 Mizpah, the City of Refuge to the Father and Mother of David, in the Time of his Troubles under Saul. 8 Hor, the chief City of Moab, not medled with by Moses in his march this way, the Lord himself forbidding him to touch upon it, or distress it, because it had been given by him for an Inheritance to the Children of Lot, Deut. 2. 9. Which prohibition was not only for this place particularly; (though this particularly there mentioned) but for all the Lands and Territories then in their possession. 9 Kir-basareth, of chief note for the barbarous and inhumane Fact of Mesha the Moabitish King, who being besieged herein by the Kings of Judah, Israel, and Edom, without hope of escape, sacrificed his own Eldest Son on the Wall thereof; which so moved the Kings of Judah and Edom, that they forsook the King of Israel whose the quarrel was. So the Siege was raised, 2 King. 3. 17.

Now as Moses did not at the present disobey God's Order, in leaving the Moabites in quiet; so neither did the Moabites on their part provoke him to any Hostile Act, giving him a free and open passage in his march for Canaan; out of an hope that when the Amorites were subdued, they should be put into possession of their lost Estates. And tho they were deceived of that expectation, the Israelites looking on that Country which they had conquered, as the Spoils of the Amorites, and giving it for a possession to the Tribe of Ruben; yet durst they not do any thing in the way of Arms, but sent for Balaam the False Prophet, to cast them by his Curses and Incantations into some Diseases, whereby their strength and courage might be taken from them. Balac the Son of Zippor was at this time King. After whom we find not the Name of any other, till we come to Eglon, who with the help of Ammon and Amalek, overmastered Israel, and for the space of 18 Years tyrannized amongst them; when slain in his own House, and afterwards 10000 of his People by the hands of Ehud. But this Indignity was in the Times succeeding revenged by Saul in some part, who made War upon them; but more by David, who subdued them, and made them Tributaries: and not so only, but subjected them to the vilest Offices, as is intimated in that Form of Speech, Moab is my Wash-pot, Rsal 60. 8. Taking their opportunity, they withdrew themselves from the House of David, and put themselves under the command of the Kings of Israel, to whom they paid for Tribute in the Time of Abab, 100000 Lambs, and 200000 Rams, with their Fleeces on: but quickly weary of those payments, and revolting from the House of Abab also, they were invaded by Jehoram, aided herein by the Kings of Judah and Idumæa; by whom being vanquished, Misba their King was fain to shut himself up in Kir-basareth, as was said before. After this joining with the Ammonites and the Idumæans, or Sons of Edom, they invaded Jehosaphat King of Judah, to whom God gave a memorable and signal Victory, without Blow or Battel: The Ammonites first setting upon the Edomites, and after upon one another till they were almost all destroyed, 2 Chron. 20. 23. From this Time we hear nothing of them; but probably they recovered some part of their former Dwellings, when that Two Tribes and a half on the East of Jordan were carried away captive by Tiglath-Pileser. Possessed hereof, and of other their habitations, till the Reign of Zedekias King of Judah; when vanquished, with the rest of these Nations, by the Babylonians and Assyrians under Nebuchadnezzar. Nor find we any mention of them in the Ages following; the Name of Moab being forgotten, or grown out of use: The South parts of their Country laid to Arabia Petraea, as the East parts were to that of Arabia Deserta; and all the rest, as well as that which had been conquered by the Jews, swallowed up in the general Name of Palestinians.

3 The AMMONITES inhabited on the North-East of the River Arnon, and possessed all that Tract from Arnon, on the head of the River, to the City of Rabbat; and on both sides of the River Jaboc, as well within the Mountains of Galaad as without the same. The Seat in elder Times of the Rephaims, and Zanzummims, a Giant-like Race of Men, as the Emmins were; but vanquished also, as the others, by Chedorlaomer; Ashtaroth and Hetb being then the principal of their Habitations. Succeeded too in their desolate and forsaken Dwellings, by the Children of Ammon, the other Son of Lot, and the Brother of Moab; both Houses running the same Fortune: These Ammonites being conquered, and deprived of the best part of their Country on the South-side of Jaboc, by Og King of Basan; as the Moabites, at the same time, of theirs by Sehon. A Monument of which subjection was the Bed of Og, found in the City of Rabbat, the chief City of Ammon, there to be seen when Moses had subdued the Kings of the Amorites, as appeareth in Deut. 3.

Chief Cities at such Time as the Israelites first conquered the Land of Canaan, were 1 Rabbat, the Regal City of their Kings; taken by Og of Basan, as is said before; but again quitted as it seemeth on the coming of Moses, that he might be better able to keep the Field. Memorable in succeeding Times for the death of Uriah, slain here by a design of David's when besieged by Joab. Who having brought it to Terms of yielding, sent for the King to come before it, that he might have the honour of taking a place so defensible, environed in a manner with the River Jaboc, and therefore called the City of Waters, 2 Sam. 12. 27. Afterwards repaired and beautified by Ptolemy Philadelphus, King of Agypt, who having made himself Master of those parts of Arabia which lie near unto it, and liking the conveniency of the situation, honoured it with the name of Philadelphia. 2 Datbema, supposed to be Ruthma, by the Learned Junius, mentioned Numb. 33. 18. (the Hebrew Letters D and A being much alike) a place of great strength among the Ammonites. 3 Minmeth, in the South Border, and 4 Abel-veinunim in the East Border of Ammon; both mentioned in the pursuit of that People when subdued by Jepthe. 5 Mitpa, sometimes one of the Cities of the half Tribe of Manasses, and at that Time honoured with the residence of Jepthe; but afterwards recovered by the Children of Ammon: in whose hands it was when utterly destroyed and burnt by Judas Maccabæus, 1 Mac.

535. 6 Magad, and 7 Bfor, Two other strong places of the Ammonites, there also mentioned; but said to be in the Region of Galaad, by which name, or by that of Gileadites, all the Country of the Ammonites lying on this side of the Mountains was at that Time called.

As for those Ammonites, they had nothing at all to do with Israel as they passed towards Canaan; neither provoking them, nor being provoked by them, to any Acts of Hostility. Afterwards not well pleased that they were not restored to the possession of those Lands which had been taken from them by Og of Basan, (conferred by the Decree of Moses on the Tribe of Gad) they joined with the Midianites in their Expedition. But worsted by the puissance and Good Fortune of Gideon; they lay still a while, till stirred up by some secret motion from Almighty God, to avenge him on that sinful and Idolatrous People, who by worshipping the Gods of the Heathen, had provoked him to anger. Prosperous in it for a Time, till his Wrath was pacified; who having made use of them to chastise his people, delivered up his Rod to be burnt by Jephth, vanquished and driven home by him with a very great slaughter. Not so much crushed by the unsuccessfulness of this Attempt, but that in the Time of Saul they brake out again, and besieged Fabesh Gilead; Nabash, a Cruel Tyrant being then their King; who having brought the City into great extremity, would give them no other conditions than the loss of every Man's Right eye; to the end that using to carry a great Target on their Left Arms, wherewith the Eye on that side was wholly shadowed, they might by this means be disabled from all future Service. But Saul came time enough to save them from that Shame and loss; from that cause so offensive to Nabash, that to despight him, he shewed Friendship to David in the Time of his Trouble. A courtesie which David was so mindful of, that he sent Ambassadors to Hanun the Son of Nabash, to make acknowledgment of it, and to confirm the Amity which he had with his Father; but found so ill requital from him, that instead of Thanks and kind acceptance, his Messengers were despightfully handled, their Beards half shaven, and their Garments cut off by the Knee. Incensed therewith he sent Joab against them, by whom the Country was laid waste, and Rabbah their chief City taken; their King's Crown weighing a Talent of Gold, set on David's Head, and all the Prisoners executed with great severity, some of them being cast into Limekilns, and the rest torn in pieces with Saws and Harrows. Quiet a long while after this, we hear no great news of them till the Reign of Jehosaphat, against whom confederated with the Edomites and Moabites, they made open War, but fell by one another's Swords, as was said before. Not well recovered of this Blow, they were subdued and made Tributaries by Ozias King of Judah, and so continued in the Time of Joatham his Son; who so increased the Tribute laid upon them by his Father, that it amounted to an Hundred Talents of Silver, Ten Thousand Measures of Wheat, and as many of Barley. Taught by this Lesson how to value the Kings of Judah, they continued either quiet Neighbours, or obedient Subjects, tho much improved in power and reputation, by regaining the greatest part of their Ancient Dwellings, on the removal of the Two Tribes and an half, on the East of Jordan, to the Land of Affyria, by Tiglath Pileser. For after this (with reference to the common danger) Baulis their King was so strict a Confederate with Zedechias, that when Nebuchadnezzar had taken Zedechias with him unto Babylon, and left Gedalsab as his Deputy to command the Country, Imael, one of the Blood of the Kings of Judah, was sent by Baulis to slay him. But he paid dear for his Attempt, his Country being shortly after conquered by the Babylonians, and the Name of Ammonite forgotten: changed by the Greeks when they came to Lord it over them, to those of Geleaditis and Philadelphias, according to the new Name of their principal City, and the old one of the Mountains and Hills adjoining.

4 The REUBENITES took name from Reuben, the Eldest of Jacob's Sons by Leah; of whom in the first Muster which was made of them at Mount Sinai, there were found 46000 fighting men; and 43700 at the second Muster, when they passed over Jordan. Their Dwelling was on the East of that Famous River, having the Gadites on the North, the Desart Arabia on the East, and the Land of Moab on the South, from which parted by the River Arnon.

Places of most observation here, Abel-Sittim, seated in that part of the Country which was called the Plains of Moab; the last incamping place of Moses: afterwards by the Jews called simply Sittim: Memorable for the Wood so often mentioned in the Scriptures, of which the Ark of the Lord was made. In after-times by the Greeks and Romans it was called Abila, nistock by some for that Abila or Abilene whereof Lyfennas was Tetrarch: That Town and Territory, as Josephus doth affirm expressly, being situate amongst the Spurs and Branches of Libanus, far enough from hence. 2 Bethaborab, or Beth-Bara, where John baptized, and Moses made his last and most Divine Exhortations to the Tribes of Israel, contained in Deuteronomy. 3 Macherus, the strongest In-land City and Castle in those parts of the World, standing aloft upon a Mountain every way unaccessible: first fortified by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews, as a Frontier Town against the Arabians; and afterwards demolished by Gabinus, one of Pompey's Lieutenants, in the War against Aristobulus. Unfortunately remarkable for the Death of John Baptist, where murdered by the Command of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee, and Lord of this Country of Peræa. It stood on the Banks of the Dead Sea. 4 Lasa, or Leshab, of which Gen. 10. 19. by the Greeks called Callirhoe, by reason of the Pair Fountains rising from the Hills adjoining, out of which issue Springs both of hot and cold Waters, as also bitter and sweet; all which soon after joined into one stream, make a wholesome Bath, especially for Convulsions and contraction of Sinews. 5 Medeba, upon the River Arnon, famous for the defeat given to the Syrians and Ammonites by the conduct of Joab, 1 Chron. 19. 7. In the Time of the Greeks laid with some other Towns of this Tract unto Cælo-Syria; but in the declining Times of the Seleucian Family, regained unto the Crown of Jewry by Alexander, the second King of the Race of the Maccabees; and finally, with eleven others in those parts, delivered by Antipater the Father of Herod into the hands of Aretas King of the Arabians, hoping thereby to gain him to the side of Hircanus the Son of Alexander, whose Cause Antipater most favoured. 6 Bosor, or Bozra, a City of Refuge, and one of those that were assigned unto the Levites on that side of the Water. Seated near the Dead Sea. 7 Livias, a Town new built by Herod, in honour of Livia, the Mother of Tiberius Cæsar, upon the River Jordan; different from that which the Geographers call 8 Libias (tho by some confounded) the same with Laban, mentioned Deut. 1. 1. 9 Kedemoth, another City of the Levites, seated near Arnon, giving name unto the adjoining Desert, from whence Moses sent his Ambassage to Sehon King of the Amorites. 10 Bamath-Baal, the chief City of the Worshipers of Baal, to which Balaam was brought by Balaac to curse the Israelites. 11 Hishbon, the Regal City of Sehon King of the Amorites. In the North Border of this Tribe. 12 Adam, or the City Adam (Josh. 3. 17.) where the Tribes passed dry-foot over Jordan, opposite unto Gilgal in the Tribe of Benjamin. Within this Tribe is the Mountain Nebo, from which Moses took a view of the Land of Canaan; an Hill as it seemeth of Two Tops, whereof that which looketh towards Ferlebo is called Pisgab: That which looketh towards Moab being called Hur. Here is also a high Hill named Peor, where the filthy Idol Baal was worshipped also, who hath hence the addition of Baal-Peor.

5 The GADITES were so called from Gad the seventh Son of Jacob, begot on Zilpah the Hand-maid of Leah; of whom were found at the first Muster when they came out of Egypt, Forty Five Thousand, Five Hundred and Fifty fighting men; and at the second, when they entered the Land of Canaan, Forty Five Thousand bearing Arms. Their situation was betwixt the Reubenites on the South, and the half Tribe of Manasses upon the North; the River Jordan on the West, and the Mountains of Arnon on the East; by which last parted from the Dwellings of the Children of Ammon.

Cities of most observation, 1 Aroer, on the Banks of the River Arnon, the principal City of the Gadites. 2 Dibon, more towards Jordan; of great note in the Time of Joshua, and of no small account in the Time of St. Hierom. 3 Beth-nimrah, of which *Esa*y prophesied, That the Waters thereof should be dried up; seated upon the Arnon also. 4 Nattoroth, more in the body of the Tribe. 5 Beth-baram, mentioned by Joshua, chap. 13. ver. 27. by Josephus called Betarampta; new built by Herod Antipas, and called Livias, in honour of Livia the Wife of Augustus Cæsar, translated into the Julian Family; who also laid unto it Fourteen Villages, to make it of the greater Power and Jurisdiction. 6 Beth-zob, by Josephus called Veteszabra, the habitation of Miriam, who in the Siege of Hierusalem, when destroyed by Titus, was compelled by Famine to eat her own Son. 7 Succoth, not far from the River Jordan, so called from the Tents or Booths which Jacob set up there in his passage from Mesopotamia to the Land of Canaan: The People of which Town having denied relief to Gideon, as he followed the chase of Zebah and Zalmunna, were by him miserably tortured at his return, under a Tribulum or Threshing-Car, wherewith he tore their Flesh, and bruised their Bodies. 8 Jabzor, another of the Regal Seats of Sehon, King of the Amorites; first taken by Moses, after recovered by the Moabites (as appeareth Isa. 16. 8.) then possessed by the Ammonites; and finally from them regained by Judas Maccabæus, 1 Macc. 5. 8. 9 Mahanaim so called from the Army of Angels which appeared to Jacob (Gen. 32. 2.) as ready to defend him against all his Enemies the Word in the Original importing a double Army. A place of very great strength and safety, and therefore made by Abner the Seat Royal of Ishbosheth, the Son of Saul, during the War he had with David; as afterwards the retiring place of David, during the Rebellion of his Son Abolom. 10 Rogelim, the City of Barzillai the Gileadite, so faithful to David in that War. 11 Ramoth, or Ramoth Gilead, so called from the situation of it near the Mountains of Gilead; a Town of special note in the Book of God; particularly, for the Pacification here made betwixt Jacob and Laban; for the Death of Abab King of Israel, who lost his Life in the recovery of it from the hands of the Syrians; and finally, for the Election of Jehu to the Crown of Israel. Anointed at the Siege hereof by a Son of the Prophets. 12 Penuel, so called from the interview which the Lord pleased to bestow there on his Servant Jacob, at his return out of Mesopotamia, mentioned Gen. 32. 32. the Word signifying the place of the Face or Vision of God; defaced by Gideon for their churlish usage of him, when he craved relief of them against the Midianites; to whom, together with the Moabites and Ammonites, the whole Territory appertaining to these Two Tribes did once belong. But being from them taken by Og King of Basan, and Sehon King of the Amorites, it came by the overthrow of those Kings to the hands of Moses; by whom assigned unto the Tribes of Gad and Reuben, for their Habitation. Continuing theirs till the Fatal Period of the Kingdom of Israel began to approach; at what Time these Two Tribes, with the half Tribe of Manasses lying on the East of Jordan, being carried captive into Assyria, by Tiglatb Pilser, the Moabites and Ammonites recovered a great part of their Ancient Dwellings. Of which possessed, till their subversion by the Babylonians. Afterwards this whole Country coming into the hands of the Kings of Syria, had the Name of Peræa, for the Reason formerly delivered. And being won piece meal by the Maccabæans, came with the rest of the Kingdom of Judab, to the possession of Herod the Great; by whom bequeathed at his Death unto Herod Antipas, one of his Sons, who held, together with both Galilees, under the Name of Tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa, as Josephus; or of Galilee only, as St. Luke; who being dead, it was bestowed on Agrippa King of the Jews, of whom more hereafter.

ITURÆA hath on the East and North, Cælo-Syria; on the West, the River Jordan; and on the South, Peræa. So called from Ietur one of the Sons of Ismael, seated in this Tract; tho lost by his Posterity to the Amorites one of the most powerful Tribes amongst the Canaanites; and by them made the Patrimony of the Kings of Basan. The Race of which Kings ending in Og, the wealthiest and best parts hereof, were given by Moses to the half Tribe of Manasses; such parts of it as lay towards Damascus being seized on by the neighbouring Aramites, and made a Kingdom of itself, called the Kingdom of Gessur; and the more mountainous and unpleasant left to the first Inhabitants, as not worth the conquering. But both the Kingdom of Gessur, and those of the half Tribe of Manasses, shifting from one Lord to another, till they came into the hands of the Grecians; the name of Ituræa revived again, and grew into very good esteem: The Ituræans being reputed for good Soldiers, especially at his Bow and Arrows; of which thus the Poet in his Georgicks, lib. 2.

——— Ituræas taxi torquentur in Arcus.

Of the best Ewe that can be had

The Ituræan Bows are made.

The whole Country in the Times of the Greeks and Romans, divided into Trachonites and Ituræa, specially so called: This last again being subdivided into Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Panæas. For whereas it is said in St. Luke's Gospel, That Philip the Brother of Herod was Tetrarch of Ituræa, and the Region of Trachonitis; and by Josephus, That for his Tetrarchy he had the Provinces of Trachonitis, Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Panæas; it must needs be that the Four last mentioned Provinces make up that one, which by St. Luke is comprehended in the Name of Ituræa; distinct from that of Trachonitis, tho a part thereof. Inhabited in the Time of Josephus, as in those of Joshua and David, both by Jews and Syrians; the Syrians dwelling in the more mountainous and more barren parts, the Jews in that which was assigned them in the Time of Moses; the whole not yielding unto Galilee for extent of Ground, but far inferior to it for Wealth and Fruitfulness; not well inhabited where best, and in some places which are desert and very barren, hardly inhabited at all, or bearing any thing but Wild Fruits. Such was it in the Time of Josephus, and not bettered since.

1 TRACHONITIS is that mountainous and hilly Country, which beginning at the Borders of the Ammonites, where the Hills are called the Mountains of Gilead, extendeth it self Northwards as far as Libanus: The Hills in those parts being by the Jews called Gilead, Syrion, and Hermion; but by the Grecians, for the craggedness and roughness of them, by the name of Trachonites. The People mischievously bent and much given to Witchcraft, as we find in Strabo. Montanum regionem incolunt Ituræi & Arabes, malefici omnes. So he, or his Translator rather, for I have not the Original by me. Where by Arabians he meaneth those of Trachonitis, which every where he maketh to be the same with Ituræa, tho differing from it as the Cotswold Countries do from the rest of Gloucestershire, or as a part doth from the whole, because united by that name into one Estate, at the Time

he lived in. Solet & Trachonitis Ituræa nomine appellari. saith the learned Grotius, according to the general consent of the ancient Writers. A people generally addicted to spoil and robbery, living especially on the spoil of those Merchants which traded to and from Damascus: Till with some difficulty restrained to a more orderly life by Herod, on whom Augustus Cæsar had bestowed the Country, to the end that by strong hand he might hold them in.

The People and the Country by Josephus are thus described. "The Trachonites (saith he) have neither Towns, nor Lands, nor Heritage, nor any other possessions, but only certain Retreats and Caves under the Ground, where they lived like Beasts: And having made abundant provision of Water and Victuals, were able to hold out a long time against any Assailant. For the doors of their Caves were made so narrow, that they could be entered but by one at once; and the way to them not direct, but full of turnings and windings, not possibly to be found out but by the help of a Guide: The whole Country naturally consisting of craggy Rocks. The passages of the Caves once entered, they were found to be very large and spacious; sufficient to contain great multitudes of those Thievish people; who when they had not opportunity to spoil their Neighbours, would rob one another, and omitted no kind of wickedness; being so accustomed to theft, that they could not live otherwise. So he. But I conceive this is not meant generally of all the people, but only of some body of Thieves or Out-laws, which possessed themselves of the streights of the Mountains, and from thence issued to assault and spoil the Passengers. For it is afterwards expressed, that revolting upon the news of Herod's death, and committing new outrages; they no sooner heard of his recovery but they fled the Country, and betook themselves unto a strong Castle in Arabia, where they increased to the number of 1000 persons, so that there is no question to be made at all, but they had Villages and Lands, and Heritages, in the more civil parts hereof, though not amongst those Mountainers which Josephus speaks of. And amongst those, I reckon, 1 Gerra, 2 Elere, 3 Nelaxa, 4 Adrama; all named by Ptolomy, and all placed by him in the Longitude of 70 degrees or upwards: More towards the East than well agreeth with the position of this Country, or with any part of Batanea, lying more towards the West than Trachonitis, though to that part of Ituræa, by him ascribed. Hither also I refer the City of 5 Tishbe, the Country of old Tobit, and of the Prophet Elias. 6 Tob, where Jeptube lived in exile, when oppressed by his Brethren, till the necessities of his Country called him to the publick Government. 7 Hippus, at the foot of those Mountains, reckoned amongst the Cities of Cælo-Syria, differing in Soil as well as Etymology from another of the same name in Batanea: This being so named from the Mountain Hippus, under which it standeth; that from a Garison of Horse there placed, as shall there be shewn. 8 Bathira, on the borders of this Country towards Batanea, built there by Herod, and planted with a Colony of the Jews which came thither from Babylon; the better to suppress the Insolencies, and prevent the Robberies of this thievish people, accustomed (as before is said) unto spoil and rapine.

2 BATANEIA is that part of Ituræa which anciently made up the best and greatest part of the Kingdom of Basan, whence it had this name: The changing of S. to T. as Assyria into Attyria, and the like, being usual amongst the Greeks. But that Kingdom being brought to an end by Moses, it was given to the half Tribe of Manasse, so called of Manasses the Son of Joseph; of whom there were found at the first muster near Mount Sinai, 32200 Men able to bear Arms; which though consumed in the Deserts, yet were they of such a swift increase, that they were found 52700 fighting Men of them, when they passed over Jordan. Their Territory on that side of the River stretching from Jaboc on the South, to the Realm of Gessur on the North; and from the Mountains unto Jordan, East and West, was exceeding fertile: Replenished with all sorts of Cattel, and adorned with the goodliest Woods in that part of the World; the Oaks of Basan being celebrated in the Holy Scriptures.

It had in it sixty fenced Cities when first conquered by those of this Tribe. The principal of which, 1 Pella, formerly called Burus, but being rebuilt by Seleucus, the great King of Syria, was by him called Pella; with reference to a City of that name in Macedonia, the birth-place of Alexander, to whom Seleucus owed his Greatness and whole Estate. Destroyed by Alexander Jannæus, King of the Jews, because not willing to admit of the Law of Moses; it was afterwards restored by Pompey to its former lustre. Memorable in Church story for the Admonition or Premonishment, given by a voice from Heaven, to the Christians dwelling at Jerusalem, to remove thence and dwell at Pella, that so they might escape that destruction, which the Roman Army under Titus was to bring upon it. It stands on the River Jaboc, between it and Mount Hermon. 2 Edrey, the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Basan. 3 Carnaim, on the Banks of Jaboc, taken by Judas Maccabæus, who set fire on the Temple of the Idols there, and burnt therein all such as fled thither for Sanctuary. 4 Ephron, a strong City upon Jordan, taken and burnt by the same Judas Maccabæus, for refusing to give a passage to his Army. 5 Jabesh Gilead, more near unto the Mountains, whence it had that Adjunct; memorable in the Scriptures for the siege of Nabash King of the Ammonites, the raising of that siege by Saul, and the gratitude of the People towards him again, in taking down, embalming, and the entombing the bodies of him and his Sons, which the Philistines had most despitefully hanged on the Walls of Bethsan. 6 Astaroth, a City of great note in the elder times: The Seat of the Rephaims, a Giant-like Race of Men, of whom descended Og of Basan; from whence the Country adjoining had the name of the Land of Giants. Astaroth, the Goddess of the Sidonians, had here her Worshipers. 7 Gaulon sometimes possessed by Og of Basan, and afterwards made one of the Cities of Refuge; of such esteem in the times of the Greeks and Romans, that the North-part of Basanitis or Batanea was called Gaulonitis; divided into Superior and Inferior, so often mentioned by Josephus. And of this City or Country was that Judas of Galilee, spoken of in the fifth of the Acts, the Founder of the Gaulonites, or Anti-Herodians. 8 Gamala in the lower Gaulonitis, so called because the Hill upon which it stood was fashioned like the back of a Camel: Invincibly situate, strengthened both by Art and Nature; and at last with so great difficulty and hazard of Vespasian's person, stormed by Titus, that the Romans in the heat of the execution, spared neither Women nor Children; insomuch that all the Inhabitants perished, except some few Women which had hid themselves. 9 Gadara, after Ten Months siege, taken and destroyed by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews; repaired by Pompey, and by Gabinius made one of the five seats of Justice for the whole Country of Palestine: The other Four being Jerusalem, Scribo, Hamath, and Sephorab. 10 Gerasa, or Gergesa, the chief City of the Gergesites, the people whereof on the loss of their Swine intreated our Saviour to depart out of their Coast, as St. Matthew hath it. St. Luke, and St. Mark ascribe it to the people of Gadara. Not that the Cities were both one, or the Evangelists at odds in their Relation; but because they were two neighbouring Cities, and their Fields lay in common pour cause de voisinage, as our Lawyers phrase it; and so the story might be common to both alike. 11 Hippus, not far from the River Jordan, so called from a Garison of Horse there placed by Herod, not far from the Mountain Hippus, as some suppose, pose which is too far off to have any influence upon it. 12 Julias, built by Philip the Tetrarch of Ituræa in the Southern border of his Estate, in imitation of the like work of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa; to ingratiate himself with Julia, the Wife of Tiberius Cæsar. 13 Sibek, by Josephus called Abel Maucha, for distinctions sake: Where Sheba that grand Rebel besieged by Joab, and the City brought into some danger, had his Head cut off, and thrown over the Wall, at the persuasion of a wise Woman of the Town. So the Rebellion ended, and the City was saved.

North of Basaniitis, or Batanea, lieth the Kingdom of GESSUR, by a latter name called AURANITIS, from Hauran, a Chief City of it, mentioned by the Prophet Ezekiel, chap. 16. 18. A Kingdom spoken of by Moses as the Northern bound of the half Tribe of Manasses on that side of Jordan, Deut. 4. 14. by Joshua as the Northern Border of the Kingdom of Basan, Chap. 12. 5. but reckoned as a part of Syria, because held by the Aramites, 2 Sam. 15. 8. A Kingdom though of no great Territory, yet of some consideration in the Eye of the World: David esteeming the Alliance of the Kings hereof of some use unto him; and therefore marrying Maacha the Daughter of Tolmai, King of Gessur, by whom he had Abjalom and Tamar. And to this King it was that Abjalom fled on the killing of Ammon, abiding here three years as the story telleth us.

Conterminous to this, or at least not very much distant from it was the petit Kingdom of Ishtob, which sent 12000 Men to the aid of the Ammonites against David: And not far off, but more towards Palmyrene, or Aram-Zobab, that of Beth-Rebob, Confederate in the same War also with the other Syrians; mention whereof is made in the second Book of Samuel, Chap. 10. 6. Which whether they belonged to Syria, or to those North parts of Ituræa, is of no great certainty, and as little consequence. For after this their greatest and last exploit we hear no more news of them; swallowed up not long after (as it seems) by the Kings of Damascus.

To return therefore into Gessur, as more certainly within the limits of Palestine, the places of most observation in it, were 1 Gessur, then the chief City of it, and giving name unto the whole. 2 Mabacath, or Mucut, as some call it, conceived to be that Maucha mentioned 1 Chron. 19. 6. But of this we have already spoken in Comagena. 3 Cauran, or Hauran, mentioned by the Prophet Ezekiel, Chap. 47. whence these Northern parts of Palestine were called Auranites. 4 Chatfar-Heven, there mentioned by that Prophet also. 5 Us, near the Borders of Damascus, the first Habitation of Us the Son of Aram, and Grand child of Sim, by whose name so called: Supposed to be the Founder of Damascus also, and that more probably, than that the Country thereabouts should be the Land of Hus enobled by the dwelling and story of Job. 6 Sueta, mentioned by Bochar-dus, and by some conceived to be the habitation of Bil-Ad, surnamed the Shuebute, one of Job's three Friends, mentioned in that story: But both of him, and Job himself, and the Land of Hur, we shall speak more at large when we come to Arabia. More certainly remarkable for a Fort of great strength and use, for the commanding of the Country; recovered from the Turks in the time of Baldwin the second, by digging with incredible labour through the very Rock upon which it was seated.

As for the fortunes of this part, after the Tribes on that side of Jordan were led captive into Assyria, and the Kingdom of Damascus subverted by Tiglath Pileser; it followed the fortune of the Babylonian and Persian Empires, together with which it came to the Macedonian Kings of the Race of Seleucus. In the declining of which House it was conquered (or at least the greatest part thereof) by Alexander the Second, King of the Jews, of the Race of the Maccabees; but lost again for the most part in the time of Hircanus the Son of Alexander; yet afterwards made up the greatest part of the Kingdom of Chalcis; possessed by Ptolomy the Son of Mennæus, in the beginning of Herod's greatness; who dying left it to Lysanias his eldest Son, murdered about seven years after by Marc. Antony, on the suggestions of Cleopatra, who presently seized on his Estates. But Antony and Cleopatra, having left the Stage, Lysanias a Son of the murdered Prince entereth next upon it, by the permission of Augustus. During whose time Zenodorus, Lord of the Town and Territory of Pancas, farming his Demesnes. and paying a very great Rent for them; not only suffered the Trachonites to play the Robbers, and infest the Merchants of Damascus, but received part of the booty with them. Augustus, on complaint hereof, giveth the whole Country of Trachonitis, Batanea, Gaulonitis, and Auranitis, to Herod the Ascalonite, before created King of Jewry; that by his puissance and power he might quell those Robbers, and reduce the Country into order: Leaving unto Lysanias nothing but the City of Abila, (of which he was the natural Lord) whereof and of the adjoining Territory, he was afterwards created Tetrarch, by the name of the Tetrarch of Abilene, mentioned Luke 3. Nor did Herod's good fortune end in this. For presently on the Death of Zenodorus, not long after following, Augustus gave him also the District of Pancas (of which we shall speak more when we come to Galilee.) which with the Countries formerly taken from Lysanias, made up the Tetrarchy of Philip his youngest Son; affording him the yearly Revenue of 100 Talents, which make 37500*l.* of English Money. On Philip's death, his Tetrarchy was by Caius Caligula conferred on Agrippa the Nephew of Herod by his Son Aristobulus; whom he had also dignified with the Title of King: After whose death, and the death of Agrippa Minor, who next succeeded, his Estate's escheated to the Romans, and have since had the same fortune with the rest of Palestine.

3 GALILEE.

GALILEE is Bounded on the East with Batanea, and part of the half Tribe of Manasses on that side of Jordan; on the West, with the Sea-coast of Phœnicia, on the Mediterranean; on the North, with Anti-Libanus; on the South, with Samaria. So called as some say, from Geliloib, a Phœnician word signifying as much as borders; because the bordering Country betwixt them and the Jews. On the West it has the Mediterranean Sea; on the North Libanus; on the East Jordan; and on the South the Sea of Galilee, and the River Chison, and it was divided into the upper Galilee which lay to the North and is call'd Galilee of the Gentiles; and the Lower which lay South. In which our Saviour spent the greatest part of his life, and wrought most of his wonderful Works.

The Countrey not so large as that on the other side of the River, but far more fertile; naturally fertile of itself, every where producing excellent fruits without much pains to the Husbandman, and so well cultivated in old times, that there was hardly any waste ground to be found in it. Thick set with Cities, Towns, and Villages, in the time of Josephus, and those so populous and rich, that the smallest Village in it is affirmed by that Author, to comprehend no fewer than 15000 Inhabitants. A number beyond all parallel, if reported rightly, and not mistaken in the transcripts. The people from their childhood very stout and warlike, not daunted for fear of want, or dread of penury: which seconded by their vast and almost incredible numbers, made them experimentally known for a tough piece of employment when subdued by Titus. And this, together with their zeal to the Jewish Religion, makes it more than probable, that there was something in them of the ancient Israelite; and that they were not merely of

of an Affyrian, either stock or spirit; but intermixt with such remainders of the Tribes as had saved themselves, either by flying to the Mountains or hiding themselves in Caves and Desarts, or otherwise were inconsiderable for strength and numbers; in the great transplantation of them made by Salmanassar. And in this I am the more confirmed by their speech or language, which was the same with that of the natural Jews, differing no otherwise from it than in tone, and dialect; as our Northern English doth from that which is spoke in London: as appeareth by the communication which the Damofel had with St. Peter, in the High-Priest's Hall; in which she plainly understood him, but so, that she pronounced him for a Galilean. For had the Transplantation been so universal, as some think it was, and that both sick and sound, old and young had been carried away, and none but Colonies of the Affyrians to fill up their places; it must needs be that those New-comers would have planted their own language there, as the Saxons did on the extirpation of the Britans, on this side of the Severn. The like may be affirmed of the other Tribes on this side of Jordan, especially Simeon and Dan, which either bordering upon Judab, or having their Lands and Cities intermingled with it, continued in great numbers in their former dwellings, under the Patronage or subjection of the Kings thereof.

Divided it was anciently into the Higher and Lower. The Higher so called from its situation more amongst the Mountains, had also the name of Galilea Gentium, or Galilee of the Gentiles; and that either because it lay betwixt the Gentiles and the rest of the Jews; or because a great part of it had been given by Solomon to the Kings of Tyre. But for what cause soever it was called so first, certain it is, it held this name unto the last; known by it in the time of the Apostles, as appeareth by St. Matthew's Gospel, Chap. 4. 15. The Lower Galilee is situate on the South of the other, memorable for the Birth and Education of our blessed Saviour, whom Julian the Apostate called for this cause, in scorn, the Galilean: as for the same, the Disciples generally had the name of Galileans imposed upon them, till that of Christian, (being a name of their own chusing) did in fine prevail. Both, or the greatest part of both, known in the New Testament by the name of Decapolis, or Regio Decapolitana, mentioned Mat. 4. 25. Mark 7. 31. So called from the ten principal Cities of it, that is to say, 1 Cæsarea Philippi. 2 Aser. 3 Cedes-Nephtalim. 4 Sepphet. 5 Chorazim. 6 Capernaum. 7 Bethsaida. 8 Jotopata. 9 Tiberias. And 10 Scythopolis. By which account it stretched from the Mediterranean to the head of Jordan, East and West; and from Libanus to the hills of Gilboa, North and South; which might make up a square of forty miles. With reference to the Tribes of Israel, the whole Galilee was so disposed of, that Aser, Nephtali, and a part of the Tribe of Dan, had their habitation in the Higher; Zabulon, and Issachar in the Lower: according to which distribution we will now describe them.

1. The Tribe of NAPHTHALI, was so called from NAPHTHALI the sixth Son of Jacob, begotten on Bilhah the hand-maid of Rachel; of whom at their first muster were found 53,400 fighting men, and at the second 44,540 able to bear Arms. The Land allotted to them, lay on the West side of the River Jordan, opposite unto the Northern parts of Ituraea; where before we left: having on the West, the Tribe of Aser, and that of Zabulon on the South. Within which Tract were certain Cities which they never conquered; and one which appertained to the Tribe of Dan: the chief of those which were with-holden by the Gentiles, being Chuleis, Abila, Helopolis, Cities accounted of as belonging to Cælo-Syria; where they have been spoken of already.

That which did appertain to the Tribe of DAN, lay on the North-East part hereof, confronting the most

Northern parts of Ituraea, as before was said; where the Danites held one Town of moment, besides many other of less note. And it seemed destined to this Tribe by some old Prefage; the Eastern Fountain of Jordan (which hath its original in this Tract) being called Dan, at the time of the defeat which Abraham gave to Chedor-Ismer and his associates, hundreds of years before this Tribe had ever a possession in it. Of which see Gen. 14. 14. The Town of moment first called Lishem, by some Writers Laishe: afterwards subject or allied to the Kings of Sidon, and upon strength thereof made good against those of Nabath; but taken by some adventurers of the Tribe of Dan. Of whom it is said, Job. 19. 47. That finding their own Country too little for them, they went up and fought against Lishem which they took, and called DAN. Accompted after this exploit, the utmost bound Northward of the Land of Canaan, the length thereof being measured from Dan in the North, unto Beersheba in the South LXXII German miles, or 268 English miles: remarkable for one of the Golden Calves which was placed here by Terobeam, and for the two spring heads of Jordan, rising near unto it. When conquered by the Romans it was called Panæas, from a Fountain adjoining of that name: which with the Territory about it, after the death of Zenodorus, who held it of the Roman Empire, as before was said, was given by Augustus Cæsar unto Herod the Great: and by him at his decease to Philip his youngest Son, with the Tetrarchy of Ituraea and Trachonitis. By him repaired and beautified, it was called Cæsarea Philippi, partly to curry favour with Tiberius Cæsar; partly to preserve the memory of his own name: and partly to distinguish it from another Cæsarea situate on the shore of the Mediterranean, and called Cæsarea Palestinæ: and being so repaired by him, it was made the Metropolis of that Tetrarchy. Mentioned by that name, Mat. 16. 13. when St. Peter made that confession or acknowledgment of his Lord and Master, That he was CHRIST the Son of the living God. By King Agrippa, who succeeded him in his Estates, in honour of the Emperor Nero, it was called Neronia. But that, and the Adjunct of Philippi, were of no continuance: the Town being called Cæsarea Panæa in the time of Ptolemy; and simply Panæas, as before, in the time of St. Hierom. Of this Cæsarea was that Woman whom our Saviour cured of the bloody Flux, by touching but the Hem of his Garment: who in a pious gratitude of so great a mercy, erected two Statues in this place, representing CHRIST, and her self kneeling at his feet; remaining here entire till the time of Julian the Apostate, by whose command it was cast down, and a Statue of his own set up in the place thereof, miraculously destroyed by a fire from Heaven. The City being at that time, and long before, an Episcopal See. Of less note there were, 1 Haleb, and 2 Reccath, both situate in the confines of it. And not far off the strong Town and Castle of 3 Magdala, (the habitation as some say of Mary Magdalen) where the Pharisees desired a sign of our Saviour CHRIST, as is said Mat. 15. 39. & 16. 1. the same, or some place near unto it, being by St. Mark (reporting the same part of the Story) called Dalmanutha, Chap. 8. 10. 11. But whether this Castle did anciently belong to these Danites, or to those of Naphtali, or to the half Tribe of Manasses beyond the River, I am not able to determine.

Of those which were in the possession of the Tribe of NAPHTHALI, the Cities of most eminent observation were, 1 Hazor, or Azor, by Junius and Tremellius called Chatzar, the Regal City and Metropolis of all the Canaanites: memorable for the Rendezvous of 24 Canaanitish Kings in the War with Joshua; by whom it was taken notwithstanding, and burnt to ashes. But being afterwards rebuilt, it became the Regal Seat of Jabin the King of the Canaanites, who so grievously for the space of 20 years, afflicted Israel; till vanquished by Deborah and Barak. Destroyed in that War, and repaired by Solomon, it continued in so good estate in our Saviour's time, that it was then one of the ten Cities of Decapolis; it being so still, but known by the name of Antiochia. 2 Capernaum, seated on the River Jordan, where it falleth into the Sea of Galilee; of which Countrey it was accounted the Metropolis, in the time of our Saviour, with whose presence and preaching often honoured, and one of the principal of the Decapopolitans. Some marks of its former greatness it retained when St. Hierom lived, who confesseth it to be a Town of some good capacity, but so decayed in the time of Breidenbach and Brochardus, that it consisted but of six poor Fishermens houses. 3 Hamath, so called from Hamathi the Son of Canaan, planted in these parts; a Town of such esteem in the elder times that it was reckoned to be one of the Gates of the Land of Canaan; and therefore called in Scripture, Iavrouam Hamath, or the entrance of Hamath; as Numb. 34. 8. Josh. 13. 5. Judg. 3. 3, &c. Mistaken by St. Hierom for another of the same name in Syria, by the Greeks and Romans after them, called Epiphania. And in this I say he is mistaken; Epiphania being placed by Ptolomy two degrees more Eastward than Cæsarea Philippi, the most Eastern City of all Galilee; and two degrees more North than that, though the most Northern City of all Palestine. The ground of this mistake we have seen before. Won by the Syrians of Damascus, it was again recovered to the Crown of Israel, by Jeroboam the second Son of Joas; and after added by the Romans (as were Scythopolis, Pella, Gadara, and some others of this tract) unto Cælo-Syria. 4 Kadesh, to difference it from others of the same name, called Kadesh-Naphtalim, high seated on the top of an Hill, as is said, Josh. 20. 7. the King whereof being taken and slain by Joshua, it was made one of the Cities of Refuge, and given to the Levites. Most memorable for the Birth of Barak, who discomfited Sisera, Lieutenant of the Host of Jabin before mentioned, in the infancy of the Jewish State; one of the ten Cities of Decapolis, in the time of the Romans; and an Episcopal See in the first ages of Christianity. 5 Riblah, watered with the fountain of Dauphis, a little Rivier, which hereabouts falleth into Jordan: to which City, as some say (but I think erroneously) Zelchibius the unfortunate King of the Jews was brought Prisoner unto Nebuchadnezzar, who caused his children to be slain before his face, and then put out his eyes. But this I look on as an Error in them that say it, the Scene of this Tragedy being by Josephus laid in Riblah (or Riblah) a City of Syria; the same which in succeeding times had the name of Antioch. And certainly Josephus, who for so long was Governor of both the Galilees, cannot be conceived to be so ignorant of the State of this Province, as to transfer that bloody execution to a City of Syria, if it had been acted in this Countrey. Nor can I think that this Riblah, none of the greatest Towns in the Tribe of Naphtali, should be capable of the Court and Train of that mighty Monarch; especially for so long a time, as he is said to have attended in that place, the success of his forces then before Jerusalem, and the disposal of the State when the Town was taken. 6 Saphet, another of the Decapopolitan Cities, strongly if not impreguably seated; one of the strongest Fortresses of the Western Christians, as it was after their expulsion of the Turks and Saracens; who from hence wasted and subdued all the neighbouring Countrey, as far as to the very Sea. The only place, not of this Countrey only but of all the East, in which the Jews (who possessed a third part of this Town) have any shew or shadow of a Common Wealth. 7 Beithshemeth, mentioned Josh. 9. 38 made tributary unto those of this Tribe; though otherwise possessed by the Canaanites who held out against them. 8 Cartham, or Knairbaim, situate near the Mountain, which in following times was called Mont Christi because much frequented by our Saviour; who here made choice of his Apostles, as is said Mark 3. 12. and where he made also that Divine Sermon, recited in the 5. 6. and 7. Chapters of St. Matthew's Gospel. 9 Majcoloth, a place of a great strength, but forced by Bacchides, General of the Armies of the Kings of Syria, in the time of the Maccabees. 10 Cinnereth, a strong City, after called Genezareth; whence the Lake or Sea of Tiberias, neighbouring near unto it, is sometimes called the Lake of Genezareth, as Luke 5. 1. &c.

2. The Tribe of A S E R, was so called from Aser, the eighth Son of Jacob, begotten of Zilpah the Handmaid of Leah; of whom at their first Muster when they came out of Egypt, were found 41500 persons able to bear arms, all above twenty years of age, and at the second Muster when they entered the Land of Canaan, 53400 fighting men of the new increase. The portion of the Land allotted for their habitation was plentiful in Wine, Oyl, and Wheat, with great store of Balsom; extending from the Coast of Sidon, to Ptolomais, thirty miles in length; and from the Mediterranean Eastward to the Tribe of Neptali, some twelve miles in breadth. And though they never were of power to reduce the maritime Cities of Ptolomais, Tyre, Sarepta, and Sidon, under their command; yet had they in this narrow compass many beautiful Cities and Towns of note; which they were quietly possessed of, till their subjugation by the King of Assyria.

The principal of those, and others which have since been founded, 1 Aphik, memorable for the great slaughter there made of the Syrians when besieged by Benhadad; of whom 100000 were slain by the Israelites under the leading of Abab, and 27000 killed by the fall of a Wall. 2 Gabala, mentioned by Ptolomy amongst the mid-land Cities of Phœnicia; but belonging properly to this Tribe: one of those twenty which were offered by Solomon unto Hiram, and upon his refusal peopled by the Israelites. Fallen to decay, it was afterwards rebuilt and strongly fortified by Herod the Great. 3 Giscala, a Town of great strength and consequence; the birth-place of John or Jebocanan, one of the three seditious in Jerusalem when besieged by Titus, where he did more mischief than the Enemy. Attempting to betray this City to the power of the Romans, he gave the Tyrians an opportunity to be Masters of it, by whom it was burnt unto the ground. But being rebuilt by the authority of Josephus, then Governour of Galilee for the Jews, it was afterwards yielded to Titus upon composition. 4 Cana, for distinction sake called Cana-Major, to difference it from another of that name in the Lower Galilee, affirmed for the dwelling of that Woman, whose Daughter Christ delivered of an evil Spirit; called by St. Matthew a Woman of Canaan, chap. 15. a Syro-Phœnician by St. Mark, chap. 7. the Syro-lbanicians of this Tract, being originally of the Race of Canaan, as was said before. 5 Hethlan, or Cetblan, the furthest City of the North; as 6 Missal, or Masbeal, to the South, of the Tribe of Aser. Of later Date there are 7 Thoron, a strong piece, built by the Christians on the Hills near Tyre, to hinder the Excursions of the Turks, when they held that City. Situate in a pleasant and fruitful Soil, of great importance in the Wars of the Holy Land, and giving Name to the Noble Family of the Lords of Thoron; one of which being Constable to King Raldwin the Third, lieth buried in the Chapel adjoining to it, a curious piece of Workmanship, and dedicated by the Name of the Blessed Virgin. 8 Belford, so named from the strength and beauty of it; seated on the high Grounds near the River Naar, and memorable for the great repulse which Saladine the victorious King of the Turks received before it; being forced to raise his Siege with dishonour and loss, on the coming of the Christians Armies. Some other Forts here are of the same Erection, as 9 Montfort, and 10 Mount Royal (or Castrum Regium) belonging to the Dutch Knights (of whom more hereafter) and by them valiantly defended against the Infidels. Elurbe-

Elutherus, a small River which springing from Mount Libanus, washeth Hamath, Cana Major, Beisfort and Holma, falls into the Mediterranean, North of Tyre. Near this River stood Castrum Novum, built by one Humsfy de Torono, which being besieged by the Great Saladin, he was so frightened by the death of one of his Favourites slain by an Arrow before it, that he raised the Siege, and left the Castle.

3 The Tribe of ZABULON, was so called from Zabulon the Tenth Son of Jacob, by his Wife Leab; of whom there mustered near Mount Sinai 57400 able Men; and 65000 at their second Muster, when they came into Canaan. Their Territory lay on the South of Aser and Naphthalim, and the North of Zabulon, extending from the Lake of Tiberias to the Mediterranean.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Joknebam, the King whereof was slain by Joshua, and the City given unto the Levites. 2 Zabulon, or the City of Men; a stately and magnificent City, till burnt to the Ground by Cestius a Roman President. 3 Cana-minor, so called to difference it from the other in the Tribe of Aser, the birth-place of Nathaniel, and as some say, of Simon Zelotes: Memorable for the Marriage at which our Saviour wrought his first Miracle, of turning Water into Wine: Called in St. John's Gospel, Cana of Galilee. 4 Bersabe, standing in the Border betwixt both Galilees, and therefore strongly fortified by Josephus against the Romans. 5 Dotban, where Joseph found his Brethren as they fed their Flocks; and where the Prophet Elisha strook blind the Syrians, who besieged him in it. 6 Bethsaida, situate on the Sea of Galilee, one of the Ten Cities of Decapolis, the Birth-place of Peter, Andrew, and Philip; but most renowned for the Miracles and Preaching of our Lord and Saviour. 7 Nazareth, now a small Village, seated in a Vale betwixt two Hills, not far from Ptolemais, or Acon; upon one of which Two Hills it was formerly built, where still are to be seen the Ruins of many Churches, here founded by the Christians; it being in the flourishing Times of Christianity an Arch-bishop's See. Of great esteem for being, if not the Birth-place, yet the Habitation of the Virgin Mary; who was here saluted with those joyful Tidings by an Angel, as she sat in her Chamber. Of which Chamber it is said in the Popish Legends, That it was after the Virgin's Death had in great reverence by the Christians, and remained in this Town till the Holy-Land was subdued by the Turks and Saracens, Anno 1291. Then most miraculously transported into Sclavonia; but that place being unworthy of the Virgin's Divine Presence, 'twas by the Angels carried over into the Sea-Coasts of Italy, Anno 1294. That place also being infested with Thieves and Pirates, the Angels removed it to the little Village of Loretto, where her Miracles were quickly divulged; insomuch that Paul the second built a most stately Church over this Chamber, and Xistus the fifth made the Village a City. And thus we have the beginning of our Famous Lady of Loretto. Here did our Blessed Saviour spend a great part of his Life before his Baptism; from whence both he and his Disciples had for many years the name of Nazarites. 8 Jesopata, strongly seated on the top of a Mountain near the Lake of Gennesareth, fortified by Josephus in the War with the Romans, but after a long Siege taken by Vespasian, and in it Josephus the Historian, Chief Governor of the City, and of both the Galilees. 9 Tiberias, raised out of the ground by Herod the Tetrarch, and named thus in Honour of Tiberius Caesar. Situate in a fruitful Soil on the edge of the Lake, which afterwards took the name of the Lake or Sea of Tiberias: This City being held to be the greatest of the Lower-Galilee, and the Metropolis of the Decapolitan Region. In this City it was that our Saviour CHRIST called St. Matthew from the Receipts of the Custom-House; and near unto it that he raised the Daughter of Jairus. The Nubian Geographer assureth us it was in the Twelfth Century the greatest City on the River Jordan, and that it stood something further from Tyre than from Ptolemais. 10 Bethulia, more within the Land, seated on an high Hill, and of very great strength, as appears by the Story of Judas and Isiofernes. 11 Japha, a place of like strength, but forced by Titus; who in the fury of the storm slew in it above 15000 Persons, and carried away with him 2000 Prisoners. 12 Sephoris, or Sippora, the Habitation of Jechim and Anna, the Parents of the Blessed Virgin; fortified with strong Walls by Herod the Tetrarch, who made it his Regal-Seat for the Lower Galilee. Before that Time, it had been made by Gabinus, one of the five Judicial Reivots for the Palestinians: after that not without great difficulty forced by Vespasian; and is nothing now but a Castle known by the name of Zaphet, or Saffet. The ordinary Residence, for the most part of the Turkish Sanziak who hath the Government of this Province; and lately, if not still, of the Emirs of Sidon; Faccardine the late Emir having been made the Sanziak of it, before his falling off from the Turks. Not far off is Mount Tabor, famous for the Transfiguration of our Saviour; for a sumptuous Chappel built on the Top of the Hill in memory of it, by the Empress Helena, Mother of Constantine the Great: and for the Fountain of the Brook Chison, which presently divided into Two Streams runneth Eastward with the one to the Sea of Tiberias; and Westward with the other to the Mediterranean.

4 The Tribe of ISSACHAR is so called from Issachar the ninth Son of Jacob, by his Wife Leab, of whom were found at the first Muster 54400 fighting men, and 64300 at the second Muster. Their Lot, in the partition of the Land amongst the Tribes, fell betwixt Zabulon, and the half Tribe of Manasses on this side Jordan, North and South; extending from that River to the Mid-land Sea. A Territory not so well replenished with strong and eminent Cities, as was that before; nor yielding so much matter of observation in the course of Business.

Those of most note in it, 1 Tarichaa, on the side of the Lake, about 8 Miles from Tiberias, of great strength both by Art and Nature; as witnessed the notable resistance which Vespasian found when he besieged it, by whom taken with great difficulty and incredible slaughter. 2 Cishion, a City of the Levites. 3 Remeth, called also Farmuth, another City of the Levites; where the Hills of Gilboa take beginning, and thence range as far as the Mediterranean Westward, and the City of Yezreel towards the East. 4 En-badda, near which Saul being discomfited by the Philistines, slew himself for grief; or else for fear of falling into the hands of those merciless Enemies, against whom he had so often returned victorious. 5 Naim, on the Banks of the River Chison; where CHRIST raised to life the Widow's Son. 6 Hapharaim, or Apbraim, on the Banks of the same River also. 7 Endor, of chief note for the Witch with whom Saul consulted; and the discomfiture of the Midianites by Gideon, who perished at Endor, and became as the Dung of the Earth, saith the Royal Psalmist. 8 Dabarrath, one of the Cities of Refuge. 9 Arbela, not far from the Cave of the Two Thieves, which so greatly infested Galilee in the Time of Herod. And of a later date, the Castle of Pilgrims (Castrum Peregrinorum in Latin Writers) built by Raymund Earl of Tholouse, and after fortified by the Templers, for the security of such as travelled to the Holy-Land, and for long time the Magazine or Store-house of the Western Christians, now called Tortora. Situate on the Shores of the Mediterranean, near a spacious Bay; on the North-side whereof Mount Carmel, described already.

As for those Galileans which succeed in the place of these Tribes, they were for the most part originally such as were sent hither by Salmanassar to inhabit there when the Israhelites were led away into endless Thraldom; but intermixed with some Remainers of the Ten Tribes, as was said before. And yet as if they had been whole ly of the same Extraction, with the rest of the Samaritan Nations, they were as much despised by the Jews (as witnesseth that scornful by-word, Can there any good come out of Galilee?) as the others were: Tho these as Orthodox in Religion as the Jews themselves. In which so zealously affected, that neither Threats nor Force could make them offer Sacrifice for the health of the Roman Emperors, whom they looked on as the Enemies of their Law and Liberty, brought under the Command of the King of Jewry by the Maccabæans, and with the rest of that Kingdom bestowed on Herod by the Romans. Left by him at his death to Herod surnamed Antipas, the second of his Sons then living with the Title of Tetrarch, which he joined till the Death of our Saviour; and on his deprivation (being banished to Lyons in France by the Emperor Caligula) bestowed upon Agrippa his Brother's Son, the first King of the Jews so named. Under him, and his Son Agrippa the second, it continued till the general Revolt of the Jewish Nation. Subjected by the Sword of Titus to the Power of the Romans, it hath since followed the same Fortune with the rest of Palestine.

4 SAMARIA.

SAMARIA is bounded on the East with the River Jordan; on the West with the Mediterranean Sea; on the North with Galilee; and on the South with Judea. So called from Samariz, the chief City of it: of which more hereafter.

The Country interchangeably composed of Plains and Mountains, excellent good for Tillage, and full of Trees, yielding variety of Fruits: watered both with the Dew of Heaven, and many Fresh Springs which the Earth affordeth it; occasioning thereby abundance of Grass, and consequently of Milch-Beasts exceeding plenty. Heretofore very wealthy, and no less populous; but now famed for neither.

The People for the most part were originally the descendants of those Assyrians whom Salmanassar sent hither to possess the Dwellings of the Captive Israelites. Gentiles at first, till better instructed by the Lyons whom God sent amongst them, and after by the Priest sent hither by the Kings of Assyria; they entertained the five Books of Moses, and out of them learned the manner of the God of the Land, 2 King. 17. Further than this they would not go, rejecting all the rest of the sacred Canon; and no strict Observers of this neither. And tho at first they so embraced the Worship of God, as that they still adhered to the gods of the Nations where before they dwelt, as Nergal, Ashmab, Nibbas, Tartak, and the rest of that Rabble, mentioned 2 Kings 17. yet they were soon taken off from those Impieties, and became zealous in the Worship of one only God; erroneous chiefly in the place which was destined to it. The wicked Policy of Serobast the Son of Nebat, was as natural to them, as if they could not have possessed his Estates without it; and therefore would not suffer their People to go up to Jerusalem to worship, as the Law required. More pious in this than their Predecessors, that they erected no Golden Calves in Dan and Bethel, or any other parts of their Dominions: Tho to divert the People from the Temple of God, they would have a Temple of their own. Mount Garizim, and the Temple there (of which more anon) as sacred unto them, as that of Solomon to the Jews. Schismatical enough in this, but not Idolatrous and Schismatical too as the others were; yet so conceited of themselves, and their own Perfections, that they imagined themselves defiled by any Company but their own. If therefore they had visited any of their Neighbour Nations, at their return they used to sprinkle themselves with Urine; But if by negligence, or the necessity of Business, they had touched any not of their own Sect, they drenched themselves, Cloaths and all, in the next Mountain. But in this the Jews cried quittance with them, not so much as eating or drinking with them, nor having with them any kind of commerce or dealing, as appeareth John 4. 9. but loading them, on the other side, with all the bitterness of reproach and hatred. There are two manner of People (saith the Son of Sirach) which mine heart abhorreth, and the third is no people: they that sit on the Mountains of Samaria, the Philistims, and the foolish People that dwell at Sichem, Eccles. 50. And this continued to the Times of our Blessed Saviour, whom when the Jews endeavoured to reproach with their heaviest Calumnies, they could find out none so great, as to say, That he was a Samaritan, and (which they thought came all to one) a man that had converse with Devils and Familiar Spirits.

Of these there were some Sects also, as amongst the Jews. 1 The Dositheans, so called from Dositheus or Dositheai, supposed to be the first Priest who was sent thither by the King of Assyria: agreeing with the Jews in Circumcision, and the Sabbath, and the Doctrine of the Resurrection, (in which last they differed from the common Samaritan, who was a Sadducee in that Point) but differing from them in some Points of a signal consequence. For they rejected the Writings of all the Prophets, as not Σοφιστικοί inspired by the Holy Ghost; they ate of nothing that had life, like the Pythagoreans; abstained from Marriage like the Essenes; and in the Point of Sabbath-keeping out-went the Pharisees; it being resolved upon amongst them, That in what Posture soever a Man was found on the Sabbath-day Morning, in the same he was to continue without alteration the next Day after. 2 The Selwians, so called from Sebva, one of the Companions of that Dositheai; who they kept all the Publick Festivals, as the Jews and the other Samaritans did, yet they kept them not at the same Time: Transferring the Passover to August, the Pentecost to Autumn, and the Feast of Tabernacles to the Time of the Passover; not suffered for that cause to worship in the Temple of Garizim. 3 The Gortheni, who kept the same Festivals, and observed the same Times of those Solemnities, as the Law required; but kept only one of the Seven Days of those great Festivals, and laid by the rest, as Days of ordinary Labour. In other Points not differing from the other Samaritans, who tho at first possessed of all the Land belonging to the Ten Tribes of Israel, were yet reduced at last to a narrower compass; shut up betwixt Galilee and Jordan, within the Ancient Territories of the Tribe of Ephraim, and the other half Tribe of Manasses, on this side of the Water.

1 The half Tribe of MANASSES on this side of Jordan, was situate betwixt Iffachar on the North, and the Tribe of Ephraim on the South; extending from the Mediterranean, to the Banks of that River. In which the places of most consequence and consideration, 1 Beth-san, environed almost with the Land of Iffachar, situate near the Banks of Jordan, where it beginneth again to streighten and be like it self, having been almost lost in the Sea of Galilee; first called Nisa, and so called by Bacchus, or Liber Pater, the Founder of it, in memory of his Nurse there buried; but the Children of Manasses not being able to expel the Natives out of it, as in other places, gave it the name of Beth-san, or the House of an Enemy. Afterwards when the Scythians invaded those parts of Asia, and compelled some of the Jews to serve them against the rest (whom notwithstanding their good Service they put all to the Sword) they new-built this City: Called therefore by the Græcians, Scythopolis, or the City of Scythians; and by them reckoned as a City of Cælo-Syria. Memorable in the Old Testament for the hanging of the dead Bodies of Saul and his Sons on the Walls hereof, by the barbarous Philistims; in the Time of our Saviour, for being the greatest of all the Decapollitan Region; as afterwards in the flourishing Times of Christianity, for being the See of an Arch Bishop: now nothing but a desolate Village, and an heap of Rubbish, out of which many goodly Pillars, and other other pieces of excellent Marble, are often digged. 2 Terzib, used by the Kings of Israel for their Regal Seat, till the building of Samarita, and the removal of it thither. 3 Acrabata, the Territory whereof called Acrabata, was afterwards made one of the Toparchies of Judea. 4 Tobes, not far from Samarita, where the Bastard Abimelech was wounded with a Stone, which a Woman threw at him from the Wall; and perceiving his death to be drawing on, commanded his Page to slay him, that it might not be said he perished by the hands of a Woman. 5 Ephra, or Hophra, in which Gideon dwelt: near whereunto there stood an Altar consecrated to Baal, defaced by Gideon: and not far off the Fatal Stone on which Abimelech slew 70 of his Brethren. An Heathenish Cruelty, and at this day practiced amongst the Turks. 6 Asophor, an ignoble Village, made famous only for the great and notable defeat which Ptolemy Latbarus here gave to Alexander the King of the Jews: which Victory he used with so great Barbarity, that he slew all the Women as he passed along, and caused young Children to be sod in Caldrons. 7 Bezek, The City of the bloody Tyrant Adoni-Bezek, whose Story (touched upon before) see at large in Judges, chap. 1. By Josephus it is called Bala, and seems to be the place in which Saul assembled the chief strength of Israel and Judah, to the number of 33000 men, for the relief of Jabesh-Gilead, then distressed by the Ammonites. 8 Jezreel, the Royal City of Abab, and the Kings of his Race, situate on the foot of the Mountains of Gilboa: so near unto the Borders of Issachar, that some have placed it in that Tribe. Memorable in Sacred Story for the stoning of Naboth by the procurement of Jezabel, and the breaking of Jezabel's neck by the Command of Jehu. A City which gave name to the Plains adjoining, called the Valleys or Plains of Jezreel (but by the Name of Campus Magnus in the Book of Maccabees, lib. 1. cap. 10.) extending from Scythopolis to the Mediterranean: Famous for the great and many Battels which have been fought in it; as namely, of Gideon against the Midianites, of Saul against the Philistims, of Abab against the Syrians, of Jehu against Jeboham; and finally of the Christians against the Saracens. 9 Megiddo, unfortunately observable for the death of the good King Josiah, slain hereabouts in a Battel against Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt; and before that of Abaziah King of Judah, who received his death-wound at Gaber, a Town adjoining, when pursued by Jehu. 10 Dora, or Dor as the Scripture calls it, on the Mediterranean, not far from the Castle of Pilgrims in the Tribe of Issachar. A very strong and powerful City, and therefore chose by Tryphon for his City of Refuge, who having first treacherously taken, and barbarously murdered Jonathan the Maccabean, after he had received 200 Talents for his Ransom; and no less villanously slain Antiochus the sixth of Syria, his Lord and Master whom he succeeded in his Throne, was by Antiochus the seventh, with an Army of 120000 foot and 8000 horse, besieged in this City, and most deservedly put to death. 11 Cæsarea, anciently called the Tower of Straton, from Straton a King of the Zidonians; new-built by Herod, and by him not only beautified with a large Theatre and Amphitheatre, both of polished Marble, with a fair and capacious Haven, which with incredible charge and pains he forced out of the Sea. And having in twelve years brought it to perfection, in honour of Drusus Cæsar, Son-in-Law of Augustus, he caused one of the chief Towers thereof to be called Drusus, the City it self to be called Cæsarea Palestina. The stateliness and magnificence of which City (when first built by Herod) he that lists to see may find the same described at large by Josephus the Jew, in the 15th Book of Antiq. cap. 13. In this City was Cornelius baptized by St. Peter: Here did Paul plead in defence of Christianity before Festus then the Roman President: and finally, here Herod Agrippa was smitten by an Angel, and devoured by Worms, after his Rhetorical Oration, which his Parasites called the voice of God, and not of man. The Metropolis of all Palestine, when one Province only; as afterwards of Palestina prima, when by Constantine, or some of his Successors, cantoned into three: the first Bishop hereof being said to be that Cornelius, whom Saint Peter here initiated in the Faith of CHRIST. Uliny saith this City was call'd Apollonia, Vespasian gave it the Title of Flavia Colonia. 12 Antipatris, another City of Herod's building, in the place where Kapharsalama, mentioned 1 Maccab. 7. 31. had sometimes stood; who in honour of his Father Antipater, gave it this new name. Near hereunto did Judas Maccabeus overthrow a part of Nicanor's Army: and not far off, the Mountain where Obadiah the Steward of Abab hid the hundred Prophets, whom he preserved against the fury of Jezabel: Finally to this City it was that Saint Paul was conveyed by the command of Lysias to save him from the Jews, who lay in wait to destroy him. Act. 23. 31. This place is built in one of the most fruitful spots of Earth in Palestine, and was considerably strong in the time of the Holy War, that Godfrey the first King of Jerusalem could not take it, but Baldwin his Successor however Conquered it. 13 Alexandrium a strong Castle in the Southern border of this Tribe, which Alexander the Son of Aristobulus fortified against the Romans, but was at last forced to yield it up and the Castle was demolished. Aristobulus escaping from Rome would have rebuilt it but was forbidden by Gabinus. Herod rebuilt it and left his Wife Mariamna in it when he went to Augustus to Rhodes. Janfonius.

2. The Tribe of EPHRAIM was so called from Ephraim, the second and youngest Son of Joseph; of whom were mustered in the Desarts 45000 fighting men, and 32500 in the Land of Canaan; where their Lot fell betwixt this half Tribe of Manasses, on the North; and the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin, upon the South, extending from the River Jordan to the Mediterranean.

Places of most consideration, 1 Saron on the Mediterranean, to the South of Antipatris, mentioned Acts 9. 35. and giving name unto that fruitful Valley which reacheth from Cæsarea Palestina, as far as Joppa. 2 Lydda, upon the same shores, where Saint Peter (virtute Christi, non sua) cured Aeneas of the Palsy. By the Gentiles it was called Disopolis, or the City of Jupiter; but by the Christians, in the time of the Holy Wars, it had the name of Saint George's; partly from a magnificent Temple which the Emperor Justinian there erected to the honour of that blessed Martyr; but principally from an opinion which they had amongst them, that he suffered Martyrdom in that place. An opinion founded on mistakes, first of a Canotaphium, or an empty Monument erected in this City to preserve his memory, for the Grave in which he was interred; the other, in taking the word Passio, used in the Martyrologies, for the place of his suffering, which is meant only of the Story or Celebration. But howsoever they entituled it by the name of Saint George's, as was said before, and made it on that account also an Episcopal Sec. 3 Ramatha, or Arimathea, a City of the Levites, supposed to be the dwelling of Joseph, who begged of Pilate the Body of CHRIST. 4 Helon, or Ajalon, a City of the Levites also; by some placed, and perhaps more fitly, in the Tribe of Dan, and there we shall hear further of it. 5 Thermath-Cares, given by the Israelites to Josiah, who enlarged the same, and made it a strong and goodly City; honoured with the Sepulchre of that brave Commander, one of the Nine Worthies of the World; and afterwards made one of the Presidencies of Judea, by the name of Thammitica. 6 Adæsa, or Adarsa, where Judas Maccabeus with 3000 Jews overthrew the Army of Nicanor. 7 Jisetti, called otherwise Pelethi, which gave name and birth unto the Pelethites, part of David's Guard, under the governance of Bennab. 8 Silo, situate on the top of a lofty Mountain; the receptacle of the Ark, till taken and carried thence by the Philistims. 9 Michmas, the habitation of Jonathan, one of the Maccabæan Brethren, situate in the middle way from Samaria to Hierusalem, now called Byza. 10 Naiotb, where Saul prophesied. 11 Bethoron, a City of the Levites, beautified by Solomon, but made more famous by the great and notable overthrow which Judas Maccabæus here gave to Lyfias. 12 Pirbathon, on the Mountain Amelec, the City of Abdon the Judge of Israel. 13 Sichem, called also Sichor, the habitation in the old times of Sichem the Father of that Hamor, who defloured Dinah the Daughter of Jacob; the City for that cause destroyed by Simeon and Levi; repaired again, and afterwards by Abimelech levelled with the ground: a third time re-edified by Jeroboam the Son of Nebat, and a third time ruined by the Kings of Damascus: yet notwithstanding these blows, it was of good esteem in the time of our Saviour, who abode in it two days, and converted many. Memorable for Jacob's Well, which was very near it; more for his neighbourhood to Mount Garizim, where the blessings were to be read to the people (of which see Deut. 11. 27. and Josh. 8. 23) and where afterwards was built a magnificent Temple for the use of the Samaritan Nation, at the cost and charge of Sanballat, a great Prince amongst them. Who having married his daughter to Manasses, brother of Jaddus the High Priest of the Jews, and fearing he would put her away, to avoid the sentence of Excommunication, which he was involved in for that Match, promised him, that if he would retain her, he would build a Temple answerable to that of Hierusalem, and make him the High Priest thereof, which was done accordingly. But this Temple had not stood above two hundred years, when destroyed by Hyrceanus the Maccabæan; the place remaining notwithstanding a place of worship, as appeareth John 4. 20. As for the City of Sichem, or Sichor, it was by the Græcians called Nicopolis, afterwards made a Colony by the Emperor Vespasian, who caused it to be called Flavia Cæsarea: of which Colony was that renowned Justin Martyr. 14 Samaria, the Metropolis of the Kingdom of Israel, founded by Omri one of the Kings thereof, on the top of the Mountain Samron (which overlooketh all the bottom as far as the Sea-coast) whence it had the name. A stately and magnificent City, conjectured by Brocardus, who had traced the ancient Ruins of it, to be bigger than Hierusalem. Destroyed by the Affyrians when they carried away the Ten Tribes; but afterwards repaired again, and again beaten to the ground by the Sons of Hyrceanus above-mentioned. But Herod the Great who was pleased with the situation of it, did again re-edifie it, in more stately manner than before; as appeareth by the great store of goodly Marble Pillars, and other carved Stones, in great abundance found amongst the rubbish: and having rebuilt it to his mind, inclosed it with a strong wall, and beautified it with a goodly Temple; in honour of Augustus Cæsar, whom the Greeks call Sebastos, he caused it to be called Sebaste. Memorable after this new erection for the Sepulchre of John Baptist, and being made the Metropolis of Palestina Secunda, (by consequence an Archbishop's See) now nothing but a few Cottages filled with Græcian Monks.

Nor were the Samaritans themselves (so called from this their principal City) less subject to the vicissitudes and change of fortune, than the City was. Descended for the most part from the Affyrians, and such other Nations as were sent thither to fill up the empty places of the captive Tribes: but called Curbeans by the Jews, either because most of them were of Curb, a Region of Persia, as Josephus telleth us, which is now called Chuzestan; or else by way of scorn, for Chusites, as being of the Posterity of the accursed Cham, by Chus his son. Having imbraced the Law of Moses, they began to think better of the Jews than the other Nations, but fitted their affections to the change of times: it being the observation of the said Josephus, that as often as the Jews were in any prosperity, then they called them Cousins, and would be of the same Nation with them; but when their fortunes were on the declining hand, then they were strangers which came thither out of foreign Nations, and no kin at all. Nor doth he wrong them in that Character. For when Alexander the Great had granted the Jews a release of the seventh years Tribute, the Samaritans desiring the like exemption, pleaded for themselves Ἐγγιστοὶ καὶ εἰσὶν &c. that they indeed were very Hebrews though it pleased the Sidonians to call them Sichemites. But when Antiochus raged against them with fire and sword, the Samaritans sent Letters to him, disclaiming all relation to those of Judah, and challenging their descent from the Medes and Persians. Nor were they content only to disclaim all kindred with the Jews, in the times of trouble, when any persecution rose against them for the Law of God; but did them also all ill Offices, and joyned with their Enemies to their destruction: especially after the Jews had refused to admit of their assistance, in the re-building of the Temple; which after that they hindered with great malice, and no less perverseness. But the fortune of the Jews did at last prevail, the whole Nation being subdued by Hyrceanus the Maccabæan, who destroyed their Schismatical Temple also, and levelled Samaria itself to the very ground. After this, subject to the Jews, who possessed themselves of most of their Cities, and contracted them into a narrower compass than they were in formerly: but still so hated and contemned, that nothing was able to appease that inveterate malice, which they had conceived; till both Nations were extirpated in the time of Adrian, and made to seek their dwellings in other Countries. Made afterwards a Province of the Roman Empire, by the name of Palestina Secunda; successively subject with the rest to the Persians, Sarazens, and Turks, who do now possess it.

JUDÆA is bounded on the East with the Dead Sea, and the River Jordan; on the West with the Mediterranean; on the North with Samaria; and on the South with Idumæa. So called from the Jews, or people of the Tribe of Judah, who after their return from the captivity of Babylon, communicated the name of Jew unto all the Nation, as they did that of Judæa to this part of the Country.

The Soil of the same nature with that of Samaria, before described; but that it is more swelled with Hills, and more stored with Rivers, though of no great fame. And therefore we shall say no more, as to the general character and description of it; but look on the particular parts as it stood divided betwixt the Philistims, the Tribes of Dan, Simeon, Judah and Benjamin.

And first, the PHILISTIMS commanded all the Sea coasts from the South of Phœnicia, to the North of Idumæa; or from the Castle of Pilgrims, to the City of Gaza, taking both into the account. But Joppa, and all the Towns on the North of that, being taken in by the Israelites, they held no more than six Towns of any importance, with the Countries and Territories adjoining to them: but those so populous and strong, that by their own power, and the assistance of the Edomites, and the rest of their Neighbours, not well affected to the Tribes, they kept them under terms, and lay more heavy on them than all the Canaanites together; as will appear when we sum up the story and successes of their affairs.

In the mean time let us survey the Country which was holden by them, notwithstanding all that could be done against them by the Kings of Israel: And therein we shall find worth our observation, 1 Gath, or Gath, the Birth place of the huge Giant Goliath, slain by

by David; as also of many others of the like Gigantine proportion, slain by David's Worthies. Destroyed by David, or rather slighted and dismantled, it was rebuilt by Rehoboam the Son of Solomon; but again razed by Ozias King of Judah, who found the Philistines there Garisoned but ill Neighbours to him, and finally laid waste by Hazael the King of Syria. Not much regarded after that, though it kept the name of Gath in St. Hierom's time; till in these last ages Fulk the King of Hierusalem erected there a new Castle, from the ancient ruins. From hence, as I conceive, the Idol Dagon, so much worshipped by these Philistines, was by the Syrians and Phœnicians called Ater-Gatis; and not from Gatis a Syrian Queen, as is said by many. 2 Accaron, on the South of Gath, of great wealth and power, and one that held out notably against the Danites and Judeans. Much spoken of in the Holy Scriptures, but for nothing more than their Idolatrous worship of Belzebub, that is to say, the Lord of Flies: so called by the Jews, either in contempt of the Idolatries committed to him, or because of that great multitude of Flies which attended his Sacrifices, whereof some say, the Temple of Hierusalem was wholly free. But whatsoever he was, or for what cause so named, certain it is that he was here had in special honour, and therefore called in Scripture the god of Accaron: and thither Abaziah the King of Israel sent his Messenger, to enquire of this Idol, concerning his health. 3 Ashod, (by the Græcians called Azotus) memorable in Holy Writ for the Temple of Dagon, into which the Ark of the Lord was brought; that Idol falling down before it, as not able to stand upright when the Ark so near. Near to this Town was Judas Maccabæus overcome and slain by Bacchides, Lieutenant to Demetrius the King of Syria; and not long after the Town it self was taken by Jonathan the Brother of Judas, who put the Citizens to the sword, and burnt all such as fled into the Temple of Dagon, together with the very Idol, consumed in the same fire with the Idolaters. Rebuilt by Gabinus a Roman General, in the times of Christianity it was made an Episcopal See; and continued a fair Village till the days of St. Hierom. 4 Ascalon, on the Sea side also, said to be built by Ascalus a noble Lydian, employed by his King in a war against the Syrians; but this very uncertain. One of the chief and strongest Cities of the Philistines, of great note amongst the Gentiles for a Temple dedicated to Dirceto, the Mother of Semiramis, here worshipped in the form of a Mermaid: and for another of Apollo, wherein Herod the Father of Antipater, and Grand-father of Herod the Great (from his birth in this City called Herod the Ascalonite) is said to have served as the Priest. It had in the first times of Christianity an Episcopal See; and in the course of the Holy Wars was beautified with a new wall, and many fair buildings by King Richard the first. 5 Gaza, more within the Land, on the River Beſor; a fair and strong Town, formerly called Aſſa, from whence perhaps the name of Gaza was derived by the Heathens; or else it was so called by the Persians, in regard that Cambyſes here laid up the Treasure which he had provided for the War of Agypt, the word Gaza in the Persian Language signifying treasures. Of which Cambyſes it is said by Pomponius Mela, Cum armis Agyptum peteret, huc bellioſes & pecuniam inſuebi curavit. After which it was made the Redempt of Treasury, in which the Persians laid the Tribute of the Western Provinces, whence all riches had in time the name of Gazæ. Once Caleb took it, but not able to hold it against the Philistines, he again deserted it. Destroyed by Alexander the Great, and rebuilt again, it made notable resistance against the Maccabees; till at last forced by Simon the brother of Judas, who liked the place so well that he intended to have made it his place of residence: not so decayed in length of time, but that it was a goodly City in the days of Brochardus. And it is still the best of all this Coast, built on an hill encompassed with rich and pleasant Vallies; the buildings low and mean, as in other places: but some of them adorned with Pillars of fair Parian Marble digged out of the remaining ruins. 6 Maioma, the Port Town of Gaza, but made a City of it self by Constantine, by whom called Constantia: but restored again by Julian unto those of Gaza, and by him commanded to be called Gaza Maritima.

These were the chief places holden by the Philistines, a strong and Giant-like race of men, such as the Scripture calls by the name of Anak, or the Sons of Anak. Originally descended from Cassubim and Caphorim, of the race of Mizraim the Son of Cham: as appeareth both by the common consent of ancient Writers, and plain Texts of Scripture, Jer. 47. 4. and Amos. 9. 7. These being settled first in the borders of Agypt and Libanus, where the Cassubim gave name unto the Province of Cassotis, and the Mountain Cassus; proceeded Northward and subdued the Avim, a Canaanish people, planting themselves in their habitations, as is said expressly Deut. 2. 23. Here Abraham found them in his time, and here they were when Isaac went down to Gerar. Governed at first by one King, whom they called always by the name of Abimelech, as the Agyptians theirs by the name of Pharaoh; sometimes by five, according to the number of their principal Cities; but still united in the time of approaching dangers. Too strong to be subdued by the Tribes of Israel, they made head against them, and mastered them at several times, for above 150 years, tyrannizing over them, till broken by Samſon and for a time kept off by Samuel. Recovering again, they vanquished the Israelites in the time of Saul, whom they discomfited, and hanged his dead body barbarously on the walls of Bethſan. But David, a more fortunate Prince, overthrew them in many set battels, and at length took the Town of Gath, one of the strongest Towns they had; and by that means so weakened them, that they durst not stir all the time of David, nor a long while after. Beginning to be troublesome in the days of Ozias King of Judah, they were warred on by him, their Army overthrown, Ita and Arctia, two of their strong Forts, took and razed, and the Town of Gath again dismantled. In the time of the Idolatrous Achaz, associating with the Edomites, (who evermore attended the destruction of Judah) they brake out again; took Bethſemes, Ajalon, Tinnab, and some other Towns; carried away many Prisoners, and slew much People: But the good King Ezekiah made them pay dear for it, taking from them, the greatest part of their Country, betwixt Gath and Gaza. Which notwithstanding, they recovered to so great esteem, that the whole Countrey had from them the name of Palestine. But broken by degrees by the Maccabæans, they lost both their power and reputation, passing in common estimate as a part of Jewry; the fortunes of which it followed for the time succeeding.

2. The Tribe of DAN is so called from Dan the fifth Son of Jacob, by Bilbab the Hand-maid of Rachel, of whom were mustered at Mount Sinai 62700 fighting men; and 66400 at the second muster, in the Land of Canaan: where their lot fell betwixt Ephraim, on the North, Simeon on the South, the Tribe of Benjamin on the East, and the Mediterranean on the West.

Places of most note in it, 1 Joppa (now called Jaffa) once a famous Mart-Town, and the only Haven to Judea in foregoing times: the Town where Jonah took ship to flee unto Tarſhiſh, where Peter raised Dorcas from death to life; and where he lying in the house of one Simon a Tanner, was in a Vision taught the conversion of the Gentiles. This City they report to have been built before the flood. And here they say reigned Cepheus; whose Daughter Andromeda was by Perſeus delivered from a Sea-monster, some of whose bones the people used to shew to strangers, even to the flourishing of the Romans. Just as our Citizens of Coventry and Warwick shew the bones of the Dun-Cow of Dunsmear heath, and the bones of I know not what Giant, slain by Guy Earl of Warwick. In the time of the Maccabees it was garisoned by the Syrians, who having in the Port a Fleet of good power and strength, invited 200 of the chief Citizens to go aboard with them, and there drowned them all: for which their Fleet was fired by Judas, and such as did escape the fire, fell upon the sword. Twice taken by the Romans, and the second time burnt unto the ground: new walled, and fortified with Towers by King Lewis of France, in the year 1250. the Holy Wars then drawing to their final end. Now nothing standing of it but two little Turrets where are certain Harquebusses for defence of the Haven, none of the best; defended from the South and West-winds with eminent Rocks, but exposed to the fury of the North; which makes it more unsafe than the open Seas when enraged by Tempests. Not much frequented by the Merchants, who trade here but for Cottens only, and hold their Factory not far off in a Town called 2 Rama, by the Moors called Remula, situate in a sandy plain, on the rising of a little Hill; built of Free-stone, but the streets thereof narrow, and the houses contemptible. More beautiful in the ruins of some Christian Churches, and a Monastery built by Philip the Good of Burgundy, where the House of Nicodemus stood, than in any of the remaining Edifices. 3 Jamnia, near Joppa, where Judas burnt the rest of the Syrian Fleet, the flame whereof was seen to Hierusalem, 240 furlongs off: mentioned by Ptolomy, and in the times of Christianity an Episcopal See; now not discernable in the ruins. 4 Cedar or Cedron, fortified against the Jews by Cendebeas one of the Lieutenants of Antiochus, who hereabouts was overthrown by the Maccabees. 5 Modin, a small Town, but honoured with the birth and sepulchre of those Maccabaeans; the Sepulchre being seven Marble Pillars of so great an height, that they served as a mark for Seamen. 6 Gibbethon, in the Country called Makats, a City of the Levites, but afterwards possessed by the Philistims, at the siege whereof Nadab, the Son of Jeroboam King of Israel, was slain by Baasha, who succeeded; and Omri chosen King on the death of Zimri. 7 Cariathiarim, where the Ark of the Lord was kept for 20 years, in the house of Amnidadab; that is to say, from the sending it home by the Philistims, till brought to Hierusalem by David. 8 Bethsemes, to which the Ark was brought by a yoke of Kine, turned loose by the Philistims: for irreverent looking into which there were slain by the immediate hand of God, no fewer than 50070 persons of this City. 9 Tjarab, near which is a Fountain, called the Fountain of Ethiopia, because Phillip there baptized the Ethiopian Eunuch. 10 Caspin, taken with great slaughter by Judas Maccabeus. 11 Lachis, remarkable for the death of Amaziah King of Judab. 12 Ajalon, a City of the Levites also, touched upon before in the Tribe of Ephraim; in the borders whereof we find it situated; and therefore by some Authors reckoned to the same Tribe, and by some to the other, in the Valley whereof the Moon is said to have stood still at the prayers of Joshua, as the Sun did over the City of Gibeon: the motion of the Heavens being staid, that he might have the more time for execution on the Kings of the Canaanites. To this Tribe also belongeth the Town and Territory of Dan, or Lasham, afterwards called Cæsarea Philippi, in the Tribe of NEPHTHALIM, whereof we have there spoke already.

3. The Tribe of SIMEON was so called from Simeon the second Son of Jacob by his first Wife Leah: of whom were found at the first muster 59300 able men, and but 22200 at the second muster when they came into Canaan. Where they enjoyed but a small Territory to themselves, their Lot falling amongst the Philistims, whom they were not able to expel: and therefore they were taken into the Tribe of Judab, where they were permitted to enjoy some Towns and Villages, intermixed with that more potent Tribe. Afterwards in the reign of King Hezekiah, some of them possessed themselves of Gedar, belonging to the Children of Ham; and others passing South-wards into Idumæa, smote the Amalekites which inhabited in the Mountains thereof, and dwelt in the places by them conquered. But for all this, wanting room for themselves and their children, many of them undertook the Office of Scribes or Scriveners, and dispersed themselves amongst the rest of the Tribes, teaching their children to write, and giving themselves to the employment of Publick Notaries. God herein verifying the Curse which Jacob had denounced on Simeon, that he should be divided and scattered in Israel. But for their fixed habitation which fell to them by Lot, it lay betwixt Dan upon the North, and Idumæa on the South; the Tribe of Judab on the East, and the Philistims upon the West.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Gerar, the Royal seat of the two Abimelechs, Kings of the Philistims, with whom Abraham and Isaac had to do; and probably of some other of their Kings and Princes, till subdued by the Israelites. Situate in the South border of Canaan, not far from the Wilderness of Beersheba, but in a very healthful air; called therefore Regio Salutaris in the times succeeding. 2 Siceleg, or Ziglag, belonging to the Philistims till the time of David, to whom given by Achish King of Gath, for his place of retreat, when persecuted by Saul, from whom flying he lodged here all his goods and carriages; sacked by the Amalekites, but the booty recovered from them speedily by the diligence and good fortune of David. 3 Haim, a City of the Levites. 4 Cariab-Sepher, that is to say the City of Books, seated within the bounds of Simeon, but belonging to Judab: which some hold to be the University or Academy of old Palestine. A City of the Levites also, and at first possessed by the Sons of Anak, or men of a Gigantine stature, but taken by Orbniel the Son of Kenan; on the promise and encouragement which was given by Caleb, that whosoever took it should have his Daughter Achsab to Wife. Afterwards it was called Debir, Judg. 1. 11. known in the time of St. Hierom by the name of Daema. 5 Chorma, conceived by some to be that place mentioned Num. 14. 45. to which the Canaanites and Amalekites pursued those of Israel. 6 Beersheba, or Puteus juramenti; so called of the Well of waters, and the Oath which was there sworn betwixt Abraham and Abimelech, Gen. 21. 31. Memorable in the Scripture for the Grove which Abraham there planted, the wandring of Hagar thereabouts, when she was cast out of Abraham's house with her young Son Ismael; and the dwelling of Isaac, for which cause called the city of Isaac. Situate in the extreme South border of the Land of Canaan, the length whereof is often measured in the Scripture from this Town to Dan; and for that cause well fortified by the Western Christians, when they were possessed of this Country; as standing on the borders of Idumæa, and the Desarts of Arabia, in the way from Egypt.

4. The Tribe of JUDAH was so called from Judab the fourth Son of Jacob, by his Wife Leah: of whom there were numbered at the first general muster taken near Mount Sinai, 76600 fighting men; and no fewer than 76500 at their entrance into the Land of Canaan. The greatest Tribe, and therefore answerably fitted with the largest Territory, bordering on the Dead Sea, East; upon Simeon West; the Tribe of Benjamin on the North; and the Idumæans on the South. Comparatively large, with reference to the other Tribes; but otherwise unable to contain or feed those infinite multitudes, without the extraordinary Providence of Almighty God, which are recorded to be in it: King David mustering 470000 fighting men of this Tribe alone; which was more than half the number found in the rest of the Tribes. A Tribe which had a native Sovereignty over all the others; the Scepter, the Legislative power, and the World's Mishab being all promised to them.

Pla-

Places of most observation in it, 1 Arad, situate in the entrance of Judæa, in the way from the Wilderness of Edom. 2 Hebron, one of the ancientest Cities of Canaan; the Seat of the Gyants, called Anakim, or the Sons of Anak. This word Anak signifieth a Chain worn for Ornament, and it seemeth that this Anak enriched with the Spoils of his Enemies, wore a Chain of Gold, leaving both the custom and name to his Posterity. We read the like of Manlius Torquatus in the Roman Histories. This Town did Abraham buy for a Burial-place for his Dead; in which his Wife Sarah was first Buried, and after her four of the Patriarchs. Adjoyning to this Town is the Plain of Mamre, where Abraham, the Father of the Faithful, sitting in his Tent, was visited from Heaven by God in the shape of a Man. Caleb took this Town from the Philistims in the Conquest of the Land of Canaan, and it was after assigned to the Levites. Here David kept his Court before the winning of Hierusalem; to this place came the Tribes to Anoint him King over Israel; and hither came Abshalom, under the pretence of paying his Vows, to Usurp the Kingdom of his Father. 3 Tecoa, the City of Amos the Prophet; and also of that Woman, who by the words which Joab put into her Mouth, perswaded the King to call Abshalom from Exile. In the Wilderness of this Tecoa there Assembled the Inhabitants of Moab, Ammon, and Mount Seir, to overthrow Judab. But the Lord being appeased by the publick Fast, proclaimed, and kept by Jehosaphat and the People, sow'd Dissentions among them: So that the Children of Ammon and Moab stood up against the Inhabitants of Mount Seir, utterly to slay and destroy them; and when they had made an end of the Inhabitants of Mount Seir, every one help'd to destroy one another. 4 Cerith, or Cariot, the Birth-place of Judas, hence surnamed Iscaiot (or the Man of Cariot) who Betray'd our Saviour. 5 Fether, or Fatter, in the North Border of this Tribe, towards Eleutheropolis, a City anciently of the Levites, and called in St. Jerom's time, Jetbira, and then altogether replenished with Christians, now nothing but the Name remaining. 6 Maresa, the Native Soil of the Prophet Micah, near whereunto first Aza King of Judab discomfited the vast Army of Tera the Arabian, or Ethiopian, consisting of above a Million of Men; and afterwards Gorgias was overthrown by Judas Maccabæus. 7 Emaus (after call'd Nicopolis) memorable for the third overthrow which Judas gave to the said Gorgias; for our Redeemer's shewing himself after his Resurrection to Cleophas and another of his Disciples; and for the hot Baths hereabouts, which gave the name of Salutaris to this part of Palestine. The Sovereign Virtue of which Waters Sozomen, a Christian, attributes to the washing of Christ's Feet in them, as he passed by at that time; but Josephus a few, ascribes (as is most likely) unto natural causes. 8 Hasor, or Chatfor, one of the Frontier Towns towards Idumæa. 9 Odalla, or Hadullan, an Ancient and Magnificent City, taken, and destroyed by Joshua, and long after much enlarged and beautified by Jonathan, one of the Maccabees. 10 Cela, or Keila, where David sometimes hid himself when he fled from Saul; by him delivered afterwards from the Assaults of the Philistims. 11 Eleutheropolis, or the Free City, not far from Hebron; a City of later date than any of Judab, mentioned by Ptolomy, and much remembred by St. Hierom. 12 Azecha, not far from Emaus, to which Joshua followed Dabir the King of Eglon, and his four Associates, whom he discomfited in the Cause and Quarrel of the Gibeonites; molested by them for submitting to their Common Enemy. Seated in the Valley of Terebinth, and of very great strength; presuming upon which it Revolted from Joam King of Judab, at the same time that Libna and the Edomites had Revolted from him. 13 Beth-Sur, or (Beth-Sora) that is to say, the House on the Rock, so called from the situation on a Rocky Hill, one of the strongest places of Judab: Fortified first by Rehobam the Son of Solomon, after by Judas Maccabæus; and finally made impregnable by his Brother

Simæon. 14 Aloram, Bordering on the Dead Sea Beautified also by Rehobam. 15 Zoar, in former times called Bela, but took its name from the words of Lot, alledging that it was but a little one, Gen. 19. 2. as the word Tjabor doth import, in whose escape it was preserved, being otherwise one of the five Cities of the Region called Pentapolis, doomed unto Destruction; the other four, Sodom, Gemorah, Adama, and Sebim, being at the same time destroyed by Fire and Brimstone. 16 Masfala, frequently mentioned by Josephus as a place of great strength both by art and nature, and as it is by him described (in the seventh Book de Bello Jud. Cap. 28) to be thought impregnable; and therefore made by Herod (in the time of his Troubles) the place of Refuge in which he disposed of Martha his betrothed Wife, her Mother Alexandra, with divers Honourable Ladies; and where they were preserved in safety against all his Enemies, till he came Armed with Power from Rome, to dislodge their Forces, which was done accordingly. First built by Jonathan the Brother of Judas Maccabæus as a sure place of Refuge against the Syrians; and afterwards so esteemed by Herod for the reason above mentioned, that he not only much enlarged it, with all the requisite additions of Strength and Beauty, but built within the verge thereof a Magnificent Palace. The whole enclosed with a Wall of 7 Furlongs compass, 12 cubits high, and 8 cubits broad, built of white Stone, and situate on a high Mountain called Collis Achilæ, washed on the East side by the Dead Sea, or Lacus Asphalites and by that secured; on the other sides fenced with such deep Ditches that it was a terror to any man to look down into them: besides which natural situation, it was Fortified by Herod with 27 Turrets, who left therein as in a place impregnable and inaccessible, a Magazine of Arms and all warlike furniture for an Army of 10000 men, all sorts of Victuals to sustain them, and ground enough within the walls to yield Corn sufficient, when time and a long Siege should consume those victuals. A place of such strength, and so great concernment, that it held out against the Romans (when Vespasian and his Son Titus managed that great War) after all the rest of Judæa had been Conquered by them. 17 Libna, a strong City seated in a corner of Judab, running between the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin. This City Revolted from Joam King of Judab, at the same time the Edomites did, and continued a Free State, even as long as Judab continued a Kingdom. 18 Zuph in the Wilderness, wherein David hid himself from the Fury of Saul. Hither, when Saul pursu'd him, David came into his Camp (the Watch being all asleep) and took thence his Spear and a Cruse of Oyl and departed. Abissai indeed would fain have killed him: But David, tho' he knew that Samuel had by God's Command Abdicat'd Saul from the Kingdom, and that himself was appointed in his stead would not touch him; but left him to the Judgment of the Lord, whose Anointed he was. 19 Bethlehem (or to distinguish it from another of this name of Zabulon so called) Bethlehem-Judab. This City or Town was called Ephrata, from the Wife of Calb, and was the Birth place of David, and where Christ was born; and the Innocents suffered for him before he had suffered for them. In this general massacre of young Children, a Son of Herod's, which was at Nurse, was also slain; which being told unto Augustus, he reply'd, He had rather be Herod's Swine than his Son. His Swine being safe in regard the Jews were forbidden to log-meats; but his Sons frequently made away upon Tears and Jealousies. A Town for this cause had in great respect by the Primitive Christians, Beautified by Helen with a stately Temple, which yet standing entire; by the Lady Paula (much extolled by St. Hierom) with some goodly Monasteries, in one of which the Body of that Father lieth; and by the Western Christians, with a See Episcopal. On the Frontier of this Country towards the Philistims, was that strong Castle which Herod repairing, called Herodium, seated on a Hill, the Ascent into which was made with 200 steps of Marble, exceeding fair and large. In this Country also are the Hills of Engaddi, in a Cave of which David cut off the Lap of Saul's Garment; and all along the bottoms whereof were the Gardens of Balsamum or Opobalsamum, the trees of which were by Cleopatra (at such time as she Governed Mark Antony and the East) sent for to be replanted in Heliopolis of Egypt; and Herod, who durst not deny them, plucked them up by the roots and sent them to her.

5. The Tribe of BENJAMIN, took name from the twelfth and youngest Son of Jacob, by Rachel his best beloved Wife, who died in that Child-birth: Of which at the first Muster, near unto Mount Sinai, were numbred 35000 able men; and at the second Muster, when they entred the Promised Land, there were found of them fit for Arms 45600 persons. A Tribe in great danger to have been utterly cut off, by the Folly of the Men of Gibeab, all Israel Arming against it as one man. For besides those that perished in the former Battels, there fell in one day 25000 men that drew the Sword: the fury of the Conquerors after that great Victory sparing neither Man nor Beast, nor any thing that came to hand, and burning down all their Cities also which they came unto. So great an havock was there made of innocent Maidens, that when the edge of this displeasure was taken off, there were not Wives enough found for those young men who had escaped; The other Tribes having bound themselves by a solemn Oath, not to bestow their Daughters on them: insomuch that they were fain to provide themselves Wives of the Daughters of Jabesh-Gilead, a Town of the Manassites beyond Jordan, whom they took by Assault; and of the Daughters of Shilo, whom they took by Stratagem. The whole Story see at large in the Book of Judges, chap. 19, 20, 21.

The Territories of this Tribe lay betwixt those of Ephraim on the North, and Judab on the South; having the Dead Sea to the East, and the Tribe of Dan to the Westward of them. The chief of their Towns and Cities were, 1. Michmas, the incamping place of Saul, 1 Sam. 13. 2. and the abiding place of Jonathan, one of the Maccabaean Brethren, 1 Maccab. 9. 73. 2. Mispah, famous in being the ordinary place of Assembly for the whole Body of the People, in matters of War and Peace: as also in that standing in the midst of Canaan, it was (together with Gilgal) made the Seat of Justice, to which Samuel went yearly to give Judgment to the People. 3. Gibeah, the North Border of the Kingdom of Judah toward Israel. 4. Gebrah, the Country of Saul, the first King; where the abusing of the Levite's Wife by the young men of this Town, had almost rooted the Tribe of Benjamin out of the Garden of Israel. 5. Jerico, a great and strong City, in the Siege of which, the Amorites were first discomfited: but when by the death of Abim, who had stohn the accursed thing, the Camp was purged, Joshua by a Warlike Stratagem Surprized it. 6. Gibeon, the Mother-City of the Gibeonites, who prefiging the unresistable Victories of the Israelites, came to the Camp of Joshua, and by a wile obtained Peace of him and the People: employed by them in hewing Wood and drawing Water for the use of the Tabernacle, after the Fraud was made known unto them; called Netbinims, Ezra 4. 3. from Nathan, which signifies to give, because they were given to the Service of the Tabernacle first, of the Temple after. Saul about four hundred years after, slew some of them, for which Fact the Lord caused a Famine on the Land; which could not be taken away till seven of Saul's Sons were by David delivered unto the Gibeonites, and by them hanged. This Famine did God send, because in killing those poor Gibeonites, the Oath was broken which Joshua and the Princes swore concerning them. In defence of those Gibeonites it was that Joshua waged War against the Kings of the Canaanites, and stay'd the motion of the Sun by his fervent Prayers. 7. Jericho, destroyed by the sound of Rams-horns, was not only levelled by Joshua to the ground, but a Curse inflicted on him that should attempt the re-building of it. This Curse notwithstanding, at the time when Abab Reigned in Israel (which was about five hundred years after the Ruin of it) Hiel a Bethelite, delighted with the pleasantness of the place, re-edified it. But (as it was foretold by Joshua) as he laid the Foundation of the Walls, he lost his Eldest Son; and when he had finished it, and was setting up the Gates thereof, he lost also the younger. It may be Hiel, when he began this Work, minded not the Prophecy, it may be he believed it not: peradventure he thought the words of Joshua not so much to proceed from the Spirit of Prophecy, as from an angry and vexed heart; they being spoken in way of wish, or execration. And it is possible, it may be, he chose rather to build the Eternity of his Name on so pleasant and beautiful a City, than on the uncertain Lives and Issues of two young men. Vespasian took, and ruined this City, Anno Christi 68. and Adrian the Emperor rebuilt it. Brocardus found here only eight houses in his time, but Thevenot found thirty or forty Inhabited by the Arabians. 8. Anathoth, the Birth-place of the Prophet Jeremy, and the Patrimony of Ahiathar the High-Priest, sent hither by the command of Solomon, as to a place of his own, when deposed from his Office by that King. 9. Nob, called, 1 Sam. 22. 19. the City of the Priests, destroyed by Saul, for the Relief which Abimelech the High Priest had given to David; the Ark of the Lord then residing there. 10. Gilgal, upon the Bank of Jordan, where Joshua did first eat of the fruits of the Land, and kept his first Passover; where he Circumcised such of the People as were born during their wandring in the Wilderness; and nigh to which he set up twelve Stones for a Memorial to Posterity that the Waters of Jordan did there divide themselves, to give passage to the twelve Tribes of Israel. Here Agag, King of the Amalakites was hewn in pieces by Samuel; and here Samuel once every year administred Justice to the People. For being seated in the midst of the Land of Israel, betwixt North and South, and on the East side of the Countrey near the Banks of Jordan, it served very fitly for that purpose: as Mispah also did, which stood in the same distance, in regard of the length of the Land of Canaan, but situate towards the West Sea, near the Land of the Philistines: used therefore interchangeably for the ease of the People. 11. Bethel, at the first called Luz, but took this new name in remembrance of the Vision which Jacob saw here, at going towards Mesopotamia, as is said, Gen. 28. 19. It signified the House of God, and was therefore chosen by Jeroboam, for the setting up of one of his golden Calves; though there (as the Prophet said) he made it to be Beth-aven, the House of Vanity, Hos. 3. 15. & 10. 5. For then it was a part of the Kingdom of the ten Tribes, and the Southern Border of that Kingdom on the Coast of Ephraim: but taken from it by Abim the King of Judah, and after that accounted as a Member of his Kingdom, till the destruction of it by the Chaldeans. Called with the rest of those parts, in the time of the Maccabees, by the name of Apharima, which signifieth a thing taken away; because taken away from the ten Tribes, to which once it belonged, 1 Mac. 11. 34. where it is said to have been taken from the Country of Samarita, and added unto the Borders of Judaea. 12. Ramath, another place there mentioned, and said to have been added to the Realm of Judah, having been formerly the South Border of the Kingdom of Israel; and therefore strongly Fortify'd by Baasha, in the time of Asa King of Judah. 13. Chadid, or Hadid, one of the three Cities (the other two being 14 Lod, and 15 Ono) which were inhabited by the Benjamites after the Captivity, Destroyed in the Wars with the Kings of Assyria, and afterwards re built by Simon the Maccabean.

But

But the chief Glory of this Tribe, and of all the rest, and not so only, but of all the whole World besides, was the famous City of Hierusalem; seated upon a rocky Mountain, every way to be ascended with steep and difficult ascents (except towards the North) environ'd on all other sides also with some neighbouring Mountains, as if placed in the midst of an Amphitheatre. It consisted in the time of its greatest flourish, of four parts, separated by their several walls, as if several Cities; we may call them, the Upper City, the Lower City, the New City, and the City of Herod: all of them but the Lower City, seated upon their several hills. Of these, that which we call the City of Herod, had formerly been beautified with the houses of many of the Prophets, as in our Saviour's time with that of Mary the Mother of John Mark, mentioned Acts 15. 37. converted to a Church by the Primitive Christians: the western part whereof was wholly taken up by the Palace of Herod, (a wicked, but magnificent Prince) for cost excessive, and for strength invincible; containing Gardens, Groves, Fish-ponds, places devised for pleasures, besides those for exercise. Fortified with three Towers at the corners of it. That on the South-East of the Wall, fifty cubits high, of excellent workmanship, called Mariamne's Tower, in memory of his beloved but insolent Wife, rashly Murder'd by him. Opposite to which, on the South-west corner, stood the Tower of Phaicolus, so called by the name of his Brother, seventy cubits high, and in form resembling that so much celebrated Egyptian Pharos: and on the North Wall, on a high hill, the Tower of Hippick, exceeding both the rest in height by fourteen Cubits, and having on the top two Spires: in memory of the two Hippici, his very dear friends, slain in his Service in the Wars.

2. On the South side stood that part which was call'd the Old City, possessed, if not built by the Jebusites, and therein both the Mountain and Fort of Sion: but after called the City of David, because taken by him; who thereon built a strong and magnificent Castle, the Royal Court and Mansion of the Kings succeeding. In the West part hereof stood the Tower of David; a double Palace built by Herod, the one part whereof he named Agrippa, and the other Cæsar, composed of Marble; and every where enterlay'd with Gold; and not far off, the House of Annas and Caiaphas, to which the Conspirators led our Saviour to receive his Trial.

3. That which was called the Lower City, because it had more in it of the Valley, was also called the Daughter of Sion, because built after it, and did in Majesty and Greatness exceed the Mother. For therein, upon Mount Morab, stood the Temple of Solomon (whereof more anon) and betwixt it and Mount Sion, on another Hill, the Palace which he built for his Wife the Daughter of Egypt; and that which he founded for himself, from which by an high Bridge he had a way unto the Temple. West hereof, on a lofty Rock overlooking the City, stood the Royal Palace of the Princes of the Maccabæans, Re-edified and dwelt in by King Agrippa, (tho' of Herod's Race) and not far off the Theatre of Herod's Building, adorned with admirable Pictures, expressing the many Victories and Triumphs of Augustus Cæsar. In this part also stood Mount Sion, and on that once a Citadel built by Antiochus King of Syria, but razed by Simon one of the Maccabæan Brethren, because it overtopped the Temple; the House of Helena Queen of Adiabene, who converted from Paganism to Judaism, had here her dwelling, and he died and finally, Herod's Amphitheatre, capacious enough to contain 80000 people, whom he entertained sometimes with such shews and spectacles as were in use among the Romans. And in this part also, on a high and craggy Rock, not far from the Temple stood the Tower of Barrab, whereon the same Herod built a strong and impregnable Citadel, in honour of Marc-antonny, whole Creature he first was, called by the name of Antonius, having a fair and large Tower at every corner, two of them fifty cubits high, and the other seventy; afterwards Garrison'd by the Romans, for fear the Jews presuming on the strength of the Temple might take occasion to Rebel.

4. As for the New City, which lay North to the City of Herod, it was once a suburb only unto all the rest; inhabited by none but mechanicall persons, and the meanest Tradesmen, but after encompassed by Agrippa with a Wall of 25 Cubits high, and fortified with ninety Turrets. The whole City fenced with a wonderful Circumvallation on all parts thereof; having a Ditch cut out of the same Rock, as Jacobus an eye-witness writeth 60 foot deep, and no less than two hundred and fifty foot in breadth. First built, say some, by Melchisedeck the King of Sehon; by the Jebusites themselves, say others: by whomsoever built, called at first Jebusalem, afterwards Jerusalem, with the change of one Letter only: enlarged in time, when made the Royal Seat of the House of David, to the Magnificence and Greatness before described, till it attained unto the compass of 60 furlongs, or seven miles and a half. Unconquer'd for the first four hundred years after the entrance of the Children of Israel; and when David attempted it, the People presumed so much on the strength of the place, that they told him in the way of Scorn, that the Blind and the Lame which they had among them (as the Text is generally expounded) should defend it against him. But as I think, the late Learned Mr. Gregory of Christ's Church in Oxon, hath found out a more likely meaning of the Text than this, who telleth us, That the Jebusites by the Blind and Lame (as they knew well what the Israelites called Blind and Lame) did understand those Tutelar Idols, on whose protection they relied (as the Trojans did on their Palladium) for defence thereof: and then the meaning must be this, Those gods whom you of Israel call Blind and Lame, shall defend our Walls. Why else should David say, (had they meant it literally) that his Soul hated the Lame and the Blind? 2 Sam. 5. 8. or why should the people of Israel be so uncharitable as to say, That the Blind and Lame should not come into the House (or the Temple of God) were it meant no otherwise? but notwithstanding these vain hopes, the Town was carried under the conduct of Joab, that Fortunate and Courageous Leader, and made the Royal Seat of the Kings of Judah.

Proceed we now unto the Temple built by Solomon, in providing the Materials whereof there were in Libanon 30000 Workmen, which wrought by 10000 every Month; 70000 Labourers, which carried Burdens; 80000 Quarry-men, that hewed Stones in the Mountains; and of Officers and Overseers of the Work, no less than 3300 men. The description of this stately Fabrick, we have in the first of Kings, Chap. 6. 7. In the Year of the World 2350, it was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar at the taking of Hierusalem: re-built again after the return from the Captivity; but with such opposition of the Samaritans, that the Workmen were fain to hold their Tools in one hand, and their Swords in the other, to repulse, if need were, those Malicious Enemies. But yet this Temple was not answerable to the Magnificence of the former; so that the Prophet Haggai had good occasion to say to the People, chap. 1. ver. 3. Who is left among you that saw this House in her first Glory? is it not in your eyes as nothing, in comparison of it? Nor fell it short thereof only in the outward Structure, but some inward Adornments: For it wanted, 1. The Pot of Alanna, which the Lord commanded Moses to lay up before the Testimony for a Memorial, Exod. 16. 32, &c. 2. The Rod of Aaron, which only Budded of all the Rods of the Princes of Israel, and was commanded to be kept before the Ark of the Testimony, for a token against Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, Numb. 17. 10. 3. The Ark of the Covenant, the making whereof we have, Exod. 25. 10. and the placing of it in the Oracle, or Sanctum Sanctorum, 1 Kings 6. 19. 4. The Table of the Law, writ by God's own finger, and by Moses laid up in the Ark of the Covenant, Exod. 40. 20. and Deut. 10. 5. And 5 The fire of Sacrifice, which came down from Heaven, mentioned, Lev. 9. 24. 2 Chron. 17. 1. which by the Priest was to be kept continually burning, never to go out. This second Temple, partly because it was grown Ruinous, partly because it seemed not Magnificent enough, but principally to curry favour with the Jews, Herod the Ascalonite pulled down, and set up another in the place; making it not much inferior (if at all) unto that of Solomon, but far superior to the other Immensæ oppulentiae Templum, as Tacitus most truly called it. And this was it to which our Saviour did sometimes vouchsafe his presence.

But here we are to understand, that by the Temple it is not meant the Fabrick only, or the House it self, but also all those several Courts with which encompassed, being four in number. That is to say, Atrium Sacerdotum, or the Priest's Court, which was next unto the Temple; wherein stood the Brazen Altar for the daily Sacrifice, and the Laver for the washing of the Priests and the Sacrifice also: into which Court might none enter but the Priests alone. 2. Then there was Atrium Populi, or the Peoples Court, separated from the other by a Wall of three Cubits height; to which the People did repair to perform their Sacrifices, to say their Prayers, and to make payment of their Vows. In the middle of this Court did Solomon make a Brazen Scaffold for the Kings his Successors, 2 Chron. 6. 13. and afterwards in imitation of his Porch built before the Temple, were many Porches built about it for the People to repair in Rainy weather; which gave to this whole Court the name of Solomon's Porch, whereof see John 10. 23. Acts 3. 11. Without that stood Atrium Fœminarum, or the Womens Court, divided from the other, as is collected out of 2 Chron. 20. 5. in the time of Jehosaphat King of Judah; in which stood the Treasury, or poor Man's Box, mentioned in St. Luke's Gospel, Chap. 21. from whence this whole Court had sometimes the name of Treasury, as appeareth John 8. 20. where it is said, that these words spake JESUS in the Treasury, that is to say, in the Womens Court, where the Treasury or Alms-box stood. Betwixt these last was an ascent of 15 steps, on which the Levites used to sing those 15 Psalms, which do immediately follow the 119 Psalm; upon each step one: from whence they had the name of Psalmi Graduales, or Cantica Graduum, i. e. the Psalm or Songs of Degrees. And so far all was counted Holy Ground, upon which none might tread but either natural Jews, or Circumcised Profelytes, whom they called Profelyti fœderis, as before was said; or such of the other Sex (not natural Jewesses) who having received all outward initiations, had bound themselves unto the observation of the Law of Moses. 4. So was it not with the fourth and last Court, called Atrium Gentium, or the Court of the Gentiles, designed for the use of those Gentiles whom they called Profelytæ Portæ, bound only unto the keeping of the Precepts given to the Sons of Noah; for in that, as unsanctified ground (tho' counted part of the Temple also) did they permit a Market of Sheep and Oxen, the Sale of Doves and Pigeons, and the Tables of Money-changers, for the Oblations of the People: stabling the poor Gentiles among their Cattel, and ranking them with the worst of them. And out of this Temple, or Court of the Temple did CHRIST our Saviour cast the Buyers and Sellers, and overthrew the Tables of the Money-changers; asserting it to its primitive original use, which was to be an house of Prayer for all Nations. This last Court separate the other by a wall of three Cubits high, adorned with certain pillars of equal distance, bearing this Inscription, Μὴδεῖ ἀλλοφύλον εἰσὶν εἰς τὸ Ἁγίον περὶεῖναι, i. e. Let no Alien (or one that is no Jew) enter into the Holy Place: And to this Wall it is that the Apostle alludeth, saying, He hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us, i. e. between the Jews and Gentiles) making one of twain, Ephes. 2. 14, 15. inferring hereupon, that the Gentiles are no more Strangers and Foreigners, but fellow-Citizens with the Saints, and of the Household of God, v. 9.

But to go forwards with the Temple, having continu'd in the Glories of which Herod brought it, not above 85 years, it was finally destroyed by Titus the Son of Vespasian, in the 69th year of Christ's Nativity. At what time the Temple of Delphos was utterly overthrown by Earthquakes and Thunderbolts from Heaven; neither of them ever since Repaired, tho' much endeavoured. The concurrence of which two Miracles evidently sheweth, that the time was then come in which God would put an end both to the Jewish Ceremonies and Heathen Idolatries, that so the Kingdom of his Son might be all in all. For this Destruction of the Temple of Jerusalem I may call a Miracle, in regard it was done against the command of Titus; who was not only careful to preserve it, before his Soldiers had put fire to it, but did all that possibly might be to quench it. His reason was, Ῥωμαίων γὰρ εἶναι αἱ βλάβαι, as Josephus hath it, because thereof would redound so highly to the prejudice of the Roman Empire, in being deprived of such a Glorious and Magnificent Structure. But do he what he could with his utmost Industry, there was no quenching of it till it was consumed. And it adds somewhat to the marvel, that this should happen on the 10th day of August, on which day the first Temple had been burnt by Nebuchadnezzar. And certainly it is worth the noting (I hope I shall not be accounted Superstitious for this observation) to see how happy or unfortunate, one or the same day had been found unto divers persons. In the Wars betwixt the French and Spaniards for the Realm of Naples, Friday was observed to be very lucky to that great Captain Gonzalvo; he having on that day given the French many notable overthrows. Wednesday is said to have been fortunate to Pope Sixtus V. for on that day he was born; on the same made a Monk; on that day created General of his Order; on the same day made a Cardinal, then chosen to be Pope; and finally, on the same inaugurated. To Henry VII. of England, Saturday was observed to be very Fortunate in all his Actions; as was the 24th of February unto Charles V. on what day soever, for on that he came into the World, and in that he took the King Francis Prisoner at the Battel of Pavie, and on the same received the Imperial Crown. But to return unto the Temple, we find that on the Sabbath, or Saturday, it was taken by Pompey, on the same day by Herod, and on that also by Titus.

But go we forward to Hierusalem as now it standeth, it lay in Rubbish and unbuilt (after the Destruction of it by Titus) till repaired by Adrian: and then the Temple not so much as thought of, till out of an ungodly policy, in the Reign of Julian, that politic Enemy of the Church; who, to diminish the infinite number of Christians by the increase of the Jews, began again to build this Temple. But no sooner were the Foundations laid, but a terrible Earthquake cast them up again; and Fire from Heaven consumed the Tools of the Workmen, together with the Stones, Timber, and other Materials. As for the City it self after the Desolation in it which was made by Titus, it was Re-edified by the Emperor Adrianus, who named it Ælia, drove thence the Jews, and gave it to the Christians. But this new City was not built in the place of the old. For within this, Mount Calvary is comprehended, which was not in the old before. As on the other side, a great part of Mount Sion, part of the City of Herod, and the Soil where the New City stood, are left out of this: the Ruins of the other still remaining visible, to shew the ancient greatness and magnificence of it. To look upon it then as it stands at present, it is now only famous for the Temple of the Sepulchre built by Helena (whom most report to have been Daughter to Coylus a British King) Mother to Constantine the Great. Much ado had the good Lady to find find the place where the Lord's Body had been laid; for the Jews and Heathens had raised great hillocks on the place, and built there a Temple of Venus. This Temple being plucked down, and the Earth digged away, she found three Crosses, whereon our Blessed Saviour, and the two Thieves had Suffered. To know which of those was the right Cross, they were all carried to a Woman who had been long visited with Sickness, and now lay at the point of Death. The Crosses of the two Thieves did the weak Woman no good, but as soon as they laid her on the Cross on which the Lord Died, she leaped up, and was restored to her former health: The occasion of the Festival on the third of May, by the Latins called Inventio sanctæ Crucis. This Temple of the Sepulchre, even at the first building, was highly revered and esteemed by the Christians of these parts. And even until our days, it is much resorted to, both by Pilgrims from all the parts of the Romish Church, who fondly and superstitiously hope to merit by their Journey: And also by divers Gentlemen of the Reformed Churches, who Travel hitherwards, partly for Curiosity, partly for love to the Antiquity of the Place, and partly because their generous Spirits imitate the Heaven, and delight in Motion. Whosoever is admitted to the sight of this Sepulchre, payeth 9 Crowns to the Turkish Officers; so that this Tribute only is worth to the Grand Seignior, eighty thousand Ducats yearly. The other Building generally very mean and poor, if not contemptible. Built of Flint-stones, low, and but one Roof high; flat on the top for men to walk on, and fenced with Battlements of a yard in height to preserve them from falling, the under-rooms no better than Vaults, where they repose themselves in the heat of the day. Some Houses near the Temple of Solomon, and the Palace of Herod, adorned with Arches toward the Street; where Passengers may walk dry in a shower of Rain; but not many such, nor anything but the Ruins left of the ancient Buildings. The whole circuit of it reduced to two or three miles; and yet to those that take a Survey thereof from some Hills adjoining, where the Ruins are not well discerned from the standing Edifices, it affordeth to the eye no unpleasing Prospect. And as the place is, such is the people, inhabited for the most part by Artizans of the meanest quality, gathered together of the scum of divers Nations: the greatest part consisting of Moors and Arabians; a few poor Christians, of all the Oriental Sects, which dwell there for Devotion; and some Turks, who, for the profit which they make of Christians, are content to stay in it. In-somuch that when Robert Duke of Normandy, being then not cured of his wounds, was carried into this City on the backs of some of these rascally people, he called to a Gentleman of his, who was going for England, and bad him say, that he saw Duke Robert carried into Heaven on the backs of Devils.

Come we now to the Tribe of LEVI, though indeed not reckoned for a Tribe, because not planted close together as the other were, nor had whole Provinces to themselves, but mingled and dispersed among the rest of the People; having forty eight Cities assigned them for their Habitation, proportionably taken out of the other Tribes. So was it ordered by the Lord, partly, that they being set apart for his Service, might be at hand in every place to instruct the People; and partly to fulfil the Prophecy which he had spoken by Jacob, who had fore-signified to Levi at the time of his death, that he should be divided in Jacob, and scattered in Israel.

The like fortune he had prophesied of Simeon also, of the accomplishment whereof, so far as it referred to him, and the dispersion of this Tribe, we have spoken before. Now to make up the number of the twelve Tribes, Joseph was divided into Ephraim and Manasse; and the Levites were reckon'd to belong unto that Tribe, within whose Territory that City which they dwell in, stood. Their Maintenance was from the Tenth or Tithes, the First-fruits, Offerings, and Sacrifices of the People: and as it is in Joshua 11. 17. The Priesthood of the Lord was their Inheritance. There were of them four kinds: 1. Punks or *Tyrone*s, which from their Childhood till the five and twentieth year of their Age, learn'd the duty of their Offices: 2. Graduates, ḥazzai, which having spent four years in the study of the Law, were able to answer and oppose in it. 3. *Licentiate*s, ḥazzai, who did actually exercise the Priestly Function. And 4. Doctors (Rabbins they us'd to call them) who were the highest in Degree. For maintenance of whom, they had (as before is said) the Tithes, First-fruits, and Offerings of all the rest of the people, besides the 48 Cities assigned for their Habitation: which last, with the several Territories appertaining to them, extending every way for the space of two thousand Cubits, seem to have been a greater proportion of it self, than any of the other Tribes, with reference to the small number of Levites had in their possessions. Then for the Tithes, there was not only a full tenth set out of all kinds of increase, but such an imposition laid upon all sorts of Grain, as came to more than a sixth part of the Crop it self. For first, out of 6000 Bushels (and so accordingly in all after that proportion) a sixtieth part at least, (and that they termed the Therumah, or the evil eye, or the niggards First-fruits) was to be set forth as the First-fruits of the Threshing-floor, which was an hundred in the total. Out of the residue being five thousand and nine hundred bushels, the first Tithe paid unto the Levites came to five hundred and ninety bushels; and of the residue, being five thousand three hundred and thirty bushels, five hundred thirty and one were paid for the second Tithe unto the Priest, which Ministered in the Holy Temple; yet so, that such as would decline the trouble of carrying it in kind unto Hierusalem, must pay the price thereof at the Priest's own estimate. Laying which several sums together, it appears demonstrably, that of six thousand bushels (& sic cæteris) there will accrue one thousand two hundred seventy and one bushels to the Priests and Levites; and but four thousand seven hundred seventy and nine to the Lord or Tenant; which is not fully a sixth part, as was said before. Then had they the first-born of Mankind, and all unclean beasts, redeemed at a certain rate; the first fruits of Wine, Oyl, and Wool; the first-fruits of the Dough; and of the firstlings of clean beasts (their blood being sprinkled upon the Altar, and the fat offered for a burnt-offering) the flesh remained unto the Priests. They had also the meat-offerings, the sin-offerings, the trespass-offerings, the shake-offerings, the heave-offerings, and the shew-bread, as also of all Eucharistical Sacrifices the breast and the shoulder; of others the shoulder, the two cheeks, and the maw; and of the whole burnt-offering they received the skin, besides the free gifts of the People, appearing thrice yearly before the Lord: and all this brought in unto them without charge or trouble. Which makes it evident, that they were far more liberally provided for, than the rest of the Tribes, tho' they had no whole Country allotted to them, as others had. And so much for such parts of the Land of Palestine as were possessed in part, or wholly by the Sons of Jacob; proceed we now to the Inheritance of the Sons of Esau.

6. I D U M Æ A.

I D U M Æ A, or the Land of EDOM, is bounded on the East and South, with Arabia Petrea; on the North with Judæa, on the West with the Mediterranean Sea. So called from the Edomites, or Children of Esau, whose name is Edom, Gen. 36. 1. the Father of the Edomites, v. 43. by whom it was planted and possessed; or as others say, from the Idumæi, a People of Arabia; who in a Mutiny being forc'd to forsake their Country, came and settled here. The first the more certain of the two, and therefore I adhere to that. The

The Country towards the Sea-side very fat and fruitful; but where it bendeth towards Arabia, exceeding mountainous and barren. Heretofore it afforded Balm, not now: but still it hath some store of Palm-trees, for which much celebrated by some Writers of ancient times, as Arbusto Palmarum dives Idume, in the Poet Lucan. Sandy, and full of vast Deserts, for which, and for the want of water, it is thought unconquerable. For though they have many Wells there for the use of the Natives, yet to them only are they known, and not obvious at all to the eyes of strangers, no not upon the strictest search that can be imagined. But all places are not so well furnished, as appeareth by the sad condition which the Kings of Judah, Israel, and Edom were fallen into, when they led their Armies through the Deserts of this Country, against the Moabites, finding herein no Water for Man or Beast: insomuch that the King of Israel said, Alas, that the Lord hath called these three Kings together, to deliver them into the hands of Moab, 2 Kings 3. 10. Not otherwise delivered out of this perplexity, but by a miracle from Heaven: God sending them the next Day an abundance of Water, without Wind or Rain, or any other visible Means.

The People anciently rude and barbarous, greedy of change in government, easily stirred to insurrections, and in love with tumults. Professed Enemies to the Jews, till conquered by them: and when compelled by Hircanus to the Jewish Religion, they were at the best but false Friends; and in the Siege of Hierusalem by Titus, did them more mischief than the Romans. At this time subject to the Turks, and differ not much in life and custom from the wild Arabians.

Rivers of note there can be none, where so little Waters. One Lake it had, though possibly it hath been better, had they been without it, now small, and every Day growing less; the passage being long since barred, which it had to the Sea. Anciently, though then narrow, it was two hundred Furlongs, or five and twenty Miles long: bordered on each side by Hills of Sand, which born by the Winds into the Water did so thicken the same, that it was not easie to be discerned from the dry Land; insomuch as whole Armies have been swallowed up in it. Thence called Barathrum by the Latins: The true name of it formerly was the Lake of Syrbon. By the Italians it is now called Lago di Tevero, by the Natives Bayron; the utmost bound of Palestine, where it joyneth on Egypt.

The chief Mountains of it are, 1 Mount Ser, the first habitation of Noah, after he left his dwelling in the Land of Chanaan, to make room for Jacob, as is said, Gen. 36. 7, 8. Not called so, unless by Anticipation (a thing not unlawful in the Scriptures) till the coming of Ejau thither; the word Ser signifying hairy or bristled, such as Ejau is described to be, Gen. 27. 11. To this St. Hierom doth accord, deriving the name Ser from Ejau, Sumpto ab elute rumpere. His Reason is, Ser quippe interpretatur hirsutus & pilosus qualis Ejau fuit. So he in his Comment on Lam. chap. 21. For the same Cause, is the whole Country of Edom, sometimes called Mount Ser in Scripture, by the name of this Mountain, as 2 Chron. 20. 10. 23. The second Hill of note is that called Cassius, not far from the Lake of Syrbon, now nothing but an huge heap of Sand; formerly famous for a Temple of Jupiter, and the Sepulchre of Pompey the Great; who being basely murdered here (after his defeat near Pharsalia by Julius Caesar) by the command of Ptolemy the younger, King of Egypt, unto whom he fled (or rather by the command of Achilles who then governed his Counsels) by the piety of a private Soldier was here interred in an obscure and homely, but honest Sepulchre. The Sepulchre afterwards re-edified, and made more suitable to the Man, by the Emperor Adrian. The Piety of the Soldier not a whit the less for the cost of the Emperor; in whose name Lucan had bestowed this Epitaph, on that first Monument.

Which may be Englished to this purpose.

Here Magnus lies, such Fortune is thy doom,
That this vile Earth should be great Pompey's Tomb.
In which even Cæsar's self would rather have His Son-in-Law interr'd, than want a Grave.

Places of most consideration in it, 1 Dirhabarb, the City of Bela, the first King of Edom. 2 Anub, the City of Hadad. And 3 Pan, the City of Hadad, two others of the Kings hereof: which three are mentioned Gen. 36. 32, 35, 39. 4 Berzanna, placed here by Ptolemy, supposed to be the same with Becisheba in the Tribe of Simcon, the utmost border Southwards of the Land of Chanaan, of which more there. 5 Caparorfa. 6 Gammara. And 7 Elasa, all of them mentioned by Ptolemy; which sheweth them to be of some consideration in those times, though now forgotten with the former. 8 Antbedon, on the South side of the River Biser, opposite to Gaza in the Tribe of Simcon, which is situate on the Northern Bank. A Port Town, once of good repute, till defaced by Alexander King of the Jews, re-edified afterwards by Herod the Great, and named Agrippias, in honour of Agrippa, the Favorite and Son-in-Law to Augustus Cæsar. 9 Rossa, a Fort of consequence, not far from Massada, before mentioned, when we were in Judæa; taken by Herod in his way to relieve that Castle. 10 Raphia, on the Mediterranean-Sea next Antbedon, memorable for the great defeat which Ptolemy Philopater there gave unto Antiochus surnamed Magnus. 11 Rhinocurura, so called from a mishap which befel the Inhabitants hereof, by mangling and defacing their Noses. By Pliny and Strabo called Rhinocurula; and at this time Pharamica. Memorable for an old but ill grounded Tradition, that here the World was divided by Lots, betwixt the Posterity of Noah: and so considerable in the Wars of the Holy-Land, that it was so strongly fortified by Baldwin the first, to obstruct the passage of such Forces as usually came out of Egypt, to aid the Turks. 12 Ostracine, now Stagioni, on the Sea-side beneath Antbedon, and that part of the Country which from Mount Cassius hath the name of Cassotis, ascribed by Ptolemy to Egypt: but being they are both on the North of the Lake of Syrbon, more properly belonging to Palestina. But most of these being now buried in their Ruins, there are left none but a few Castles and scattered Villages: the Villages inhabited for the most part by Arabians, the Castles garisoned by Turks. The chief of which lying on the Sea, in the Road of Egypt, are 13 Hammunes, a small Castle not far from Gaza, used chiefly for a Toll booth, to receive custom of such Merchants as pass that way. 14 Harisa, a small Castle also, serving specially for the same use; but stronger, and of more importance, because near the Sea, from which not above two Miles distant; and for that cause garisoned with an hundred Soldiers: Environed with a few Houses, by reason of the commodity of the Water, which is sweet and wholesome; else little better than a Desert. 15 Catro, another Castle or rather Toll-booth, with a Garison of about sixty Soldiers in it, seated in a place so desert and unfruitful, that nothing vegetable groweth in it, but a few starved Palm-trees. The Water which they have there, so bad and brackish, though esteemed good enough for the common Soldiers, that all which the Captain drinketh is brought from 16 Tma, a Town upon the Sea-shore, about twelve Miles distant, and the last upon this Coast towards Egypt.

The first Inhabitants of this Country were the Horites, the Horites that dwell in Mount Ser, as we read in Genesis 14. 6. that is to say, which dwelt in that hilly Country which afterwards was called Mount Ser. But whether it was so called from Ejau's dwelling here, as is said before, or from Ser the Horite, mentioned Gen. 36. 20. as perhaps they may probably be supposed, need not now come into dispute. Broken in by Chedor-Ismer, and his Associates, they were the more easily subdued by Eſau, who leaving the Land of Canaan to his Brother Jacob, Gen. 6. 7, 8. because thoſe parts in which they dwelt did not afford them room enough for their ſeveral Cattel, came into this Country; and having deſtroyed the Horites from before them, ſucceeded in their Habitations, and dwelt there in their ſtead even unto this day, Deut. 2. 22. 'Tis true, we find Eſau in Mount Seir, before this remove: for it is ſaid, that Jacob at his firſt coming out of Meſopotamia, ſent Meſſengers before him to Eſau his Brother, unto the Land of Seir, the Country of Edom, Gen. 32. 3. And hence a Queſtion hath been moved, How Eſau dwelling there before Jacob's coming, can be ſaid to remove thither to make room for him. To this Sir Walter Raleigh, and ſome others, answer, That at the time when Jacob came out of Padan-Aram, Eſau dwelt in thoſe parts of the Mountains which lye on the Eaſt of Jordan, called afterwards Galaad and Mount Hermion, by which Jacob muſt needs paſs in his way to Canaan; which Mountains then were called by the name of Seir, and from thence Syrion by the Zidonians, or Phœnicians, in the Ages following: from whence driven by the Amorites, at ſuch time as they vanquiſhed thoſe of Moab and Ammon, they were forced to ſeat themſelves on the South of Canaan, where Moses found them. But with this I am by no means ſatisfied. For beſides that it maketh Eſau to carry a Mount Seir with him whitherſoever he went; it doth expreſſly differ from the plain words of Scripture, both in occaſion, and the time of his ſetting there: the Victories which the Amorites had over the Ammonites and Moabites, being then freſh and newly gotten, when Moses with the Children of Iſrael came into theſe Parts; which was at the leaſt 200 Years after Eſau did withdraw himſelf to the Land of Edom. And therefore I ſhould rather think, that Eſau finding himſelf diſtaſted by his Father and Mother, in regard of his Canaanitiſh Marriages, and the hatred which he bare to Jacob, departed from thence, and ſojourned in the South Parts amongſt the Horites of Mount Seir; that thither Jacob ſent his Meſſengers, to make Peace between them; that the Reconciliation being made, Eſau returned unto the place where before he ſojourned; and having brought thence his Children, Cattel, and the reſt of his ſubſtance, fixed himſelf again near the Houſe of his Father: and finally, That on Iſaac's Death, finding his Family increaſed, his Herds and Flocks augmented, and the reſt of his ſubſtance alſo doubled by the death of his Father, he thought it fit alſo to enlarge his dwelling, and ſo removed once more to Edom. A thing not needful to be done, had he dwelt in Galaad, Hermion, or any other part of that Mountainous Tract, conſidering the great diſtance betwixt thoſe Mountains and the City of Hebron, in which Iſaac dwelt; nigh to which Jacob alſo had ſet up his dwelling.

But on what ground ſoever Eſau left the poſſeſſion of the Land of Canaan to his Brother Jacob, certain it is, he did it not without ſome ſtrong Impuſſions from the Spirit of God, by whom the poſſeſſion of that Land was deſigned for Jacob, to whom the Bleſſing and the Birth right had been both preferred. And though Eſau over ruled by Almighty God, ſeemed to have forgotten all Diſpleaſure againſt his Brother; yet the Quarrel begun by them in the Womb of Rebecca, brake out more violently in the time of their Poſterity. Inſomuch that Moses could by no means obtain a Paſſage through Edom into the Promiſed-Land, though he ſought it by fair Addreſſes, and preſſed it by all thoſe Motives and Inducements, which a wiſe and an underſtanding Man could have ſet before them. For though the King of Edom then being, ſeemed to pretend nothing but the ſafety of himſelf and the People; both which he might have hazarded (in all human Reaſon) by opening the Cloſures of his Mountains, and letting in a Nation mightier than his own: yet it is poſſible there might be as much of Stomach, as worldly Policy; and that as well the buying of the Birth-right for ſo ſlight a title, as the getting of the Bleſſing by ſuch fraudulent Means, might not be forgotten. For he not only denied them Paſſage, and ſent word expreſſly they ſhould not go thorow; but came againſt them with much People and a ſtrong Band, as is ſaid, Numb. 20. 20. But the Edomites could not for all this prevent their Deſtiny, or make the Word of God to be ineffectual; by which it hath been ſignified, when they were yet in their Mother's Womb, that the Elder ſhould ſerve the Younger. Nor verified in Eſau's Perſon; for Jacob called him his Lord Eſau, profeſſed himſelf to be his Servant, and willingly ſubmitted to his Superiority; but in the iſſues of them both: then ſpecially when David had ſubdued the Edomites, and made them Homagers and Vaffals to the Crown of Judab, 2 Sam. 8. 14. Nor is leſs intimated in theſe words of the 60 Pſalm, where it is ſaid, Over Edom will I caſt my ſhoe; it being a cuſtom of old times to ſling their Shoes upon a Country conquered, or deſigned for Conqueſt, Projeſtio calceamenti ſuper Regionem aliquam, denotat ſubjicere, as my Author hath it. And in Alluſion unto this, there is a Story in the Chronicles of the Kings of Man, how Magnus King of the Iſles ſent his Ambaſſadors to Murchard a King in Ireland, commanding him on the next Chriſtmas-day to carry openly the Shoes of King Magnus upon his Shoulders; in teſtimony, ſaith the Story, that he was his Vaffal. The caſting of the Shoe on a Conquered Country, or the treading of it under Feet, another Ceremony of this nature, mentioned, Deut. 33. 29. do come both to one, and ſignifie that Vaffalage or Bondage, which ſuch a captivated Country was reduced unto.

But on the other ſide, there was another part of the Heavenly Oracle, which made for Edom. Iſaac had ſignified to Eſau, that though the Bleſſing given to Jacob could not be revoked, and that he muſt content himſelf with being a Servant to his Brother for a certain ſeaſon: yet there ſhould one Day come a time, in which he ſhould not only break that Yoak from off his Neck, but obtain the Dominion over him, Gen. 27. 40. The firſt part verified, when the Edomites revolted from the Kings of Judab, in the time of Joram, or Jehoram, the Son of Jehoſaphat: and inſtead of a Vice-Roy ſent unto them from the Court of Hieruſalem, ſet up a King of their own Nation; never returning after that to the Houſe of David. For though Joram made War preſently upon them, and got the Victory; yet he did not proſecute it unto any effect, nor beat them out of any of their ſtrong Holds, nor reduce any of their Cities unto his obedience: as if he had got Honour enough in the Eye of the World by being Maſter of the Field; or ſhewing his Abilities in command of a greater Army, than the Edomites could bring againſt him. The like Error was committed by Amaziah, who by a vaſt Army of 30000 fighting Men, did no greater Wonders than the killing of 10000, and the taking of as many Edomites; but neither left Garifons in any of their defenſible Places, nor reduced any part of their Country under his obedience. And for the latter part thereof, it was as punctually fulfilled in the time of Antipater, an Idumean, Herod the Aſcalente, his Son, and their Succeſſors; who in the decrepit age of the Houſe of Jacob, became King of the Jews, and Lorded over them with inſolence and contempt enough.

Mean time to look upon the intermediate Paſſage of their State and Story. It ſeemeth that at firſt they were governed by Dukes, each having the command of thoſe ſeveral Families, of which they were the Heads or Princes. But as Ambition and Power did prevail among them, the more potent having vanquiſhed or awed the reſt, took to himſelf the name of King: which by the names of their Fathers, and their ſeveral Cities in which they reigned, ſeem to have been choſen by Election; or otherwiſe to come in by ſtrong Hand, as the Sword could could carry it. The names of which are thus set down in the Book of Genesis.

The KINGS of EDOM.

- 1 Bela, the Son of Beer.
- 2 Jobab, the Son of Zerab.
- 3 Hafham, of the Land of Temani.
- 4 Hadad, the Son of Bedad, who warred against the Midianites, and vanquished them in the Fields of Moab, Gen. 36. 35.
- 5 Samlah, or Mafrekah.
- 6 Saul, of Reboboth, by the River Euphrates.
- 7 Babal-Hanan, the Son of Achbor.
- 8 Hadar, the Son perhaps of Baal-hanan, for I find no mention of his Father. After whose death the Heads of the several Families resumed the Government again; ruling over their own Tribes, without any one Sovereign or Supreme. And all these Kings they had, before there reigned any King in Israel, Gen. 36. 31. that is to say, before any form of Supreme Government was established amongst them in the Person of Moses, called by the name of a King in the Book of Deuter. chap. 35. v. 5. But this distracted Government did not long continue, the Edomites being under a King again, at such a time as the Children of Israel came out of Egypt: for it was unto the King of Edom that Moses sent Messengers from Kadesh, to desire a passage thorow his Country. Which being denied, and the Edomites in Arms to defend their Passies, Moses forbore to force his way, though the nearest for him: partly because he had no mind to spend those Forces in fighting with Hills and Defarts, which were designed for the Conquest of another Country; but principally, because God commanded him not to meddle with them, or to take so much as a Foot of their Country from them, Deut. 2. 5. But David, upon whom lay no such obligation, having vanquished the Syrians, and other Nations round about him, followed his Fortunes unto Edom, whom he overcame, and put Garisons into all their Cities, and the Edomites became his Servants. Governed from thenceforth by a Deputy or Vice-Roy (as is said before) till the time of Joram the Son of Jehoshaphat King of Judah; in whose Reign they revolted, as before was said. Never regained to that Crown, and but twice endeaoured; that so the Word of God might be all in all. Only the Simeonites in the Reign of Hzekiah, wanting Pasture for their Cattel, and room for themselves, seized on the Parts that lay nearest to them, destroyed the Inhabitants thereof, and dwelt in their Habitations; because there was pasture for their Flocks, 1 Chron. 4. 39. Provoked wherewith, and with the natural Antipathy which was between them, no People were more mischievously bent against Judah than these Edomites were: no Men so forward of themselves, to assist Nebuchadnezer against Hierusalem; none that so vehemently cried, Down with it, down unto the ground; none half so ready to set Fire unto the Holy Temple. But they got little by this Service to the Babylonians, their own thraldom following close upon that of Judah, with whom made fellow-Subjects to the Chaldeans; as afterwards to the Persians, and Kings of Syria, of the Race of Sekmus. In the declining of that House, subdued by Hyrcanus the Son of Simon, the fourth of the Maccabean Princes; by whom they were compelled to be circumcised, and to receive the Law of Moses: not only reckoned after that, as a Province of the Jewish Kingdom, but as natural Jews. Which notwithstanding, and that the setting of that Crown on the Head of Herod and his House, being originally Idumeans, might in all reason have extinguished their inveterate Malice: yet was their hatred of that Nation as great as ever. Forgetting therefore how they had been rewarded by the Babylonians they would needs aid the Romans against them also: putting themselves into Hierusalem, when besieged by Titus, only of purpose to betray it; joyning with the seditious there, doing more mischief in the City than the Enemy had done without: and finally, setting fire to the second Temple, as they had done unto the first. Subjected afterwards by the Romans, they followed the same Fortune with the rest of Palestine.

Having thus gone thorow with the Story of those neighbouring Nations which encompassed Canaan, it will be seasonable to look on the affairs of the Canaanites first, and after on the House of Jacob, who possessed their Country. First for the Canaanites, they descended from Canaan the Son of Cham, who with his eleven Sons were here settled immediately after the Confusion of Babel. Of those twelve (taking in the Father) five planted in Phanicia, and the Coasts of Syria; that is to say, Sidon, Harki, Arvadi, Semari, and Hamathi: the other seven in those parts which we now call Palestine, though not all of that; the Edomites, Moabites, Midianites, Amorites, and Ituræans, being Occupants or Tenants with them. And of those seven came those seven Nations, which by God's appointment were totally to be rooted out, viz. the Canaanites, the Amorites, the Hittites, the Jebusites, the Hivites, the Gergeshites, and the Perizzites. But from which of the Sons of Canaan these last descended, is not agreed on; unless perhaps they were descended of the Sinies (not otherwise reckoned in this Muster) and got the name of Perizzites on some new occasion. Governed at first by the chiefest of their several Families, with the names of Kings; the number of which increased, as their Families were subdivided into smaller Branches: insomuch as Joshua founded 31 Kings of the Canaanites only, besides what might descend from those who were settled in Phanicia, and the Borders of Syria. The most potent of these Nations were the Amorites, the Jebusites and the Canaanites properly so called. Of which the Amorites had not only enlarged their Borders beyond Jordan, but in the Reigns of Og and Sihon, ruling at the same time at their several parts, had thrust the Ituræans, Ammonites, and Moabites out of most of their Countries; and so restored the same again to the Race of the Emmims and Zanzumims (of which Line Og and the Kings of Basan were) who had been dispossessed thereof by the Sons of Loth. These vanquished in the time of Moses, and their Habitations assigned over to the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the one half Tribe of Manasses. The Canaanites properly so called, as they were the first which fought with the House of Jacob; so they were the last of all these People that contended with them. The first fought with them under the conduct of Arad their King, who thinking it more safe and prudent to encounter the Enemy in another Man's Country, than to expect them in his own gave Battel unto Moses in the Defarts of Moab; and having cut off some of the out-parts of his Army, and taken a few Prisoners, he went home again. But Jabin, under whom they make their second on set, went to work more resolutely; and taking a time when the Iniquities of that People cried aloud for vengeance, so prevailed against them, that he tyrannized over them for the space of twenty Years. After which time his Army being discomfited by Barack, in the time of Deborah, Sisera, his great Captain, slain by Jael the Wife of Heber the Kenite, and most of his Cities taken and possessed by the Israelites, he perished himself in the close of that War; for it is said, That they prevailed against Jabin the King of Canaan, till they had destroyed him, Judg. 4. 24. As for the Jebusites, they were grown so formidable (at the time of the coming of the Hebrews) to the rest of their Neighbours, that their King Adonibezek bragged, that he had cut off the Thumbs and great Toes of 70 Kings, and made them eat the Crums which fell under his Table. But being vanquished by Judah, he was served in the same kind himself by Judah and Simron, and carried to Hierusalem, where he died: the whole Country of the Jebusites, and the City of of Hierusalem it self the Fortrefs of Mount Zion excepted only, being made a prey unto the Victor. And though the Jebofites held that Fortiefs till the time of David; yet being they were only on the defensive side, and made no open War against those of Israel, I reckon the Canaanites as the last which did contend with them for the chief Command.

The Canaanites, thus Conquered and for the most part worn out of the Country, the Israelites Succeeded in their Possessions; according to the promise of God, made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac, and confirmed to Jacob. Governed after the death of Moses and Joshua, by the Congregation of the Elders, as appears by many passages in the Book of Judges; the Judges (as the Scripture calleth them) not being the ordinary Magistrates, but raised up occasionally by God for some special purpose, according to the exigence of their Affairs, carrying in this a likeness unto the Dictators in the State of Rome. So that the Government at first was an Aristocracy; though to say truth, it was rather a Theocracy, as the Fathers call it; that is to say, a Government wherein God presided more immediately than in other Nations. And thereupon when the People cried out to Samuel to have a King, God said unto him, Hearken unto the voice of the People, for they have not Rejected thee, but they have Rejected Me, that I should not Reign over them, 1 Sam. 8. 7. God was their King, and he had Mightily Reigned over them since they came out of Egypt; but they desired to have a King like other Nations, to go in and out before them, and to Fight their Battels; a King whom they might see with their Bodily Eyes, and converse with him in such manner as the People did, which dwelt round about them. And so came in the Monarchy of Kingly Government, begun in Saul, but confirmed in David: the first a Benjamite, the second of the Tribe of Judab; of which Jacob had foretold at the time of his death, that the Kingdom of his People should be vested in it. But there were only three in all, reckoning Saul for one, who had Dominion over the whole House of Israel; the Kingdom after Solomon's Death, being rent in twain; Ten of the Twelve Tribes Revolting unto Jeroboam the Son of Nebat; and only Benjamin and Judab, and so much of the Tribes of Dan and Simeon as lay intermingled with, and in the Tribe of Judab, remaining firm to Rehoboam the Son of Solomon, who, misguided by some Evil Counsellors which were about him, had given occasion to the Breach. A Breach that could never be Solder'd or made up again, notwithstanding the fair Opportunities which were after offered of Uniting Judab unto Israel, (for so the two Kingdoms were distinguished in the time of Joas, and re-joyning Israel to Judab, in the time of Asa. The opportunity offered to Asa King of Judab, for regaining the Revolted Tribes, was the Confusions which in his time had fallen out among them, by several Factions; each challenging the Privilege of making a King unto it self: Nadab the Son of Jeroboam being Slain by Baasha, Ela the Son of Baasha Murdered by Zimri, Zimri Deposed by Omri the Father of Abab, and Tibni, a Competitor against Omri also. During which time, as the People must needs suffer many great Oppressions, which might make them think of their Allegiance to the House of David: So could not Asa have wanted many fair advantages (had he made his best use of them) of working on that divided Kingdom, and reducing it back unto this House. But there were two Reasons which prevailed more against this re-union than any that could be presented to invite them to it. First, the Imperiousness and Arbitrary Government of the Kings of Judab, putting to Death without formality of Law, those that had displeased them, as in the case of Shimes, Joab, and Adonijab, in the days of Solomon: and raising on the Subjects what Sums they pleased, though more for Ostentation than for their own Magnificence, than the Necessities of the State. Of which Exactions Rehoboam the Son of Solomon was so far from promising a Release, or some Moderation, at least, that he threatened to make them more than double to what they had been formerly: And who knew they but that Asa, and all such as descended from him might be of the same Temper also, and according to those Principles which their Fathers left them. Whereas the Kings of Israel holding by no other Tie than the Love of their People, and the Moderate and Regular Form of their Government over them, had put their mouths into such a taste of the Sweets of Liberty, and made them so much Masters of their own, both Lives and Fortunes, that Naboth durst deny his Vineyard to Abab, though offering full compensation for it; and Abab durst not question the Life of Naboth, but by Suborning Witnesses to accuse him of Blasphemy. So that the present Confusions under which they suffered, by the Change and Violent Death of so many Kings one after another, being only Temporary, and not likely to continue long, were no perswasions unto them to accept of Asa, and much less to offer themselves unto him, who conceived all Adversity to be far more tolerable than the weighty Scepter of that House. And there was something also of preceding Profit, which swayed the business. The People were obliged by the Law of Moses to make three chargeable Journeys yearly to Hierusalem, to Worship there in the Holy Temple; and to pay a double Tenth yearly out of their Estate (besides Offerings and other Casualties) to the Priests and Levites. Jeroboam out of an ungodly Policy, fearing these frequent Journeys unto Hierusalem might be an occasion of reducing them to the House of David, released them of that Charge and Trouble, by setting up a new Form of Worship, erecting Golden Calves for them in Dan and Bethel; and leaving every Man unto the liberty of his own Opinion, so it tended not to the Establishment of the old Religion. And on the other side, the Levites which dwelt amongst them, and received their Tithes, not willing to conform to these new Impieties, and finding that their Ministry was no longer useful, withdrew themselves into the Kingdom of Judab, and left the ancient places of their Habitations: by means whereof, the people were released of those payments also. If they returned again to their old Obedience, and accepted Asa for their King, they must return again also to their old Religion; the Golden Calves of their own imaginations and inventions, must no more be Worshipped: and (which no doubt prevailed most on the common People, who like that Religion best that costs them nothing) the ancient payments to the Priests and Levites must come up again. Rather than so, they were resolved to suffer yet a little longer, to please themselves in expectation of more settled times; and so no falling off to Asa, tho' as Moderate and Religious a Prince as they could have wished for, had they had power of fashioning a King to their own desires. Now as this opportunity of re-joyning Israel unto Judab, proved unsuccessful unto Asa; so did the like of uniting Judab unto Israel, prove as unprofitable unto Joas the Son of Jehonahaz, and Grand-Child of Jebu King of Israel, who being provok'd by Amaziah King of Judab, made War upon him; and not only discomfited him without Battel, and took him Prisoner without Blows, but led him Captive to the very Walls of Hierusalem; and by his Authority got the Gates thereof to be opened to him. But not contented with this Honour (greater than ever had befallen to the Kings of Israel) he caused 400 Cubits of the Wall to be broken down; through which Breach he entred Triumphantly in his Chariot, carrying the unhappy Prince before him: and being entred, Sacked both the Royal Palace and the Holy Temple. This was the opportunity which was given to Joas, of uniting Judab unto Israel; and this the loss of it. For the People, otherwise like enough to have accepted him for their King, as a Prince of whose Noble Acts they had heard much speech, were so exasperated by these rash and unseasonable outrages, that they looked upon him as a Sacrilegious Church-Robber, whom the Holy Altars were not safe from; and as a Covetous and Ungovern'd Tyrant, not able to concoct the fulness of his own Prosperities. If he were thus unsatiable in his Covetousness, and unsupportable in his Pride when he was a Candidate for their Kingdom; when in all common Prudence he would have sought their Love, and insinuated into their good Opinions, by easing them of former Taxes, and shewing them fair hopes of his moderate Government: what must they look for when their Towns were filled with Garisons, Hurusalem stuffed with Armed Troops, and all the Princes of the House of David, from whom they might expect Redemption from Bondage, Destroy'd or Banished, or otherwise made unable to afford them Succours? Rather than so, they were resolved to rise up as one Man against him, and let him see, that neither their Army was so scattered, nor themselves so cow'd, but that they durst adventure it to a farther Tryal. The fear of which made Joas sensible of the loss of his Opportunity: and so content with Hostages for his safe Retreat, he returned home again without other benefit of his Victory, than the Spoil and Honour. And that this possibly might be the motive of his going back, without putting the success of the Affair to a farther hazard, may be made probable by the like occurrence in the Story of Guicciardine, which in brief is this; Peter de Medicis had very weakly opened the Gates of Florence to Charles VIII, then in his passage towards Naples. Charles entreats it Triumphantly, as a Conquer'd City, Armed in compleat manner, and his Lance on his Thigh; his whole Army with him. Many insolencies being committed by the French, the Citizens prepare to Fight in defence of their Liberties. Charles willing to go forwards on his March towards Naples, propounds Conditions in Writing: but so Intolerable, that Peter Cappony, one of the Chief Citizens, catching the Papers out of the King's Secretary's hands, and tearing them before his face, Do you (saith he) Sound your Trumpets, we will Ring our Bells, and see what will follow. Which stout and peremptory dealing did so daunt the French, that they condescended upon very easie Terms to abandon the City, and restore all the places appertaining unto their Estate, which were then in his power. The like consideration probably might prevail with Joas, as did then with Charles; and prompt him not to fight with an enraged Multitude in the Streets of a City, where he could make no use of his Horse; and where he might be more galled with Women and Children, throwing Stones or Darts out of their Windows, and from the tops of their Houses, than with an Armed Enemy in the open Field. Nor wanted Joas an example of this kind, in the times before him; even that of Abimelech, in the Book of Judges: who having taken the Town of Thebes, and forced all the Men and Women into the Castle, was slain there by a piece of a Millstone, thrown at his head from one of the Turrets of it by the hands of a Woman.

To proceed further in the Story of these several Kings or recapitulate the summe of their principal Actions (as in other places we have done) may be thought unnecessary: The Scripture being in the hands of all sorts of Persons, in which their Actions and Successions are at large contained. So that I only shall subjoyn their names, with the time of their Reigns, and the year of the World in which they did begin their Empire: leaving the rest unto the industry and search of the Christian Reader, of whose acquaintance with the Scriptures I dare make no question. This only I premise as concerning the Judges, That the time of their continuance in that Authority, is not to be measured from the time of their coming to it, till the entrance of the next Successor, as in that of the Kings: these being occasionally raised by Almighty God, for some present Service, and no standing or established Magistrates; except Moses and Joshua only, who held the Government during Life, and managed it as absolute Princes.

JUDAH and ISRAEL.

The Kings of JUDAH.		The Kings of ISRAEL.
A. M.		A. M.
2971	1. Rehoboam, the Son of Solomon, the first King of Judah. 17.	2971	1. Jeroboam, the Son of Nebat, of the Tribe of Ephraim, the first King of Israel. 22.
2988	2. Abijah the Son of Rehoboam. 3.	2993	2. Nadab, the Son of Jeroboam. 2.
2991	3. Asa, the Son of Abijah, discomfited the numerous Army of Zera, the Ethiopian or Arabian King.	2995	3. Baasha, of the Tribe of Issachar, having slain Nadab, Reigned in his stead. 24.
3031	4. Jehosaphat, the Son of Asa, a great Reformer of the State, both Ecclesiastical and Civil, 35.	3019	4. Ela, the Son of Baasha. 2.
3056	5. Jehoram, the Son of Jehosaphat, 8.	3021	5. Zimri, a King of seven days only, the Murderer of Ela, and his own Executioner.
3064	6. Abaziah, the Son of Jehoram by Athalia his Wife, the Sister of Abab King of Israel. 1.		6. Omri, the Captain of the Host, who removed the Regal Seat from Tirza to Samaria. 8.
3065	7. Athaliah, the Daughter of Omri, and Sister of Abab, having destroyed the Regal Race of the House of David, usurped the Kingdom for seven years.	3029	7. Abab, the Son of Omri, and Husband of Jezebel, a Phœnician Princess.
3072	8. Joash, the only surviving Heir of the House of David, restored by Jehoiadab the Priest, to the Throne of his Ancestors. 40.	3051	8. Abaziah, the Son of Abab. 2.
3112	9. Amaziah, the Son of Joash, vanquished by Joash King of Israel, and a breach forced through the walls of Hierusalem. 29.	3053	9. Jehoram, the Brother of Abaziah. 12.
3141	10. Azariah, the Son of Amaziah, called also Uzziah; smote with a Leprosie by the Lord. 52.	3065	10. Jehu, the Captain of the Host, vanquished and slew Jehoram, Reigning in his stead. 28.
3192	11. Jotham, the Son of Uzziah, or Azariah. 16.	3093	11. Jehoahaz, the Son of Jehu. 17.
3208	12. Abaz, the Son of Jotham, in whose time, and on whose occasion the Kingdom of Damascus was Ruined by Tiglath Pileser King of Assyria, and the Tribes on the farther side of Jordan led into Captivity. 16.	3110	12. Joash, the Son of Jehoahaz. 16.
3224	13. Hezekiah, the Son of Abaz, a Religious Prince, in whose time the Kingdom of	3126	13. Jeroboam, II. the Son of Joash. 41.
		3178	14. Zachariah, the Son of Jeroboam the II. after an Interregnum of eleven years, Succeeded in the Throne of his Father: slain at the end of six Months by
			15. Shallum, who at the Months end was slain by 3178	16. Menabem, the Son of Gadi. 10.
		3188	17. Pekabiah, the Son of Menabem, slain by
		3190	18. Pekab, the Son of Remaliah; served in the same kind, after a Reign of Twenty Years, by 3210	19. Hosab, the Son of Ela; in the 5th Year of whose Reign, and the 18th Year from the death of Pekab, Salmasser King of Assyria, having by a Siege of Three Years carried the City of Samaria, destroyed the Kingdom of Israel, and led the greatest part of the people into Captivity. R r r r 2 the the Ten Tribes was destroyed by the Assyrians, and that of Assyria by the Babylonians.

3253 14. Manasses, the wicked Son of the good King Hezekiah, restored Idolatry, and put to death the Prophet Isaiab, for opposing his irreligious courses. 55.

3308 15. Amon, the Son of Manasses, and as bad as he was, slain by a Conspiracy of his Servants, when he had reigned but Two Years only.

3310 16. Josiah, the Son of Amon, a right godly King; unfortunately slain by Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt, at the Battel of Megiddo. 31.

3341 17. Jeboabaz, the Son of Josiah, a King of Three Months only; deposed and sent Prisoner by Pharaoh Necho, to Riblah in the Land of Hamath, since called Antiochia.

18. Jeboiakim, the Son of Josiah, and half Brother of Jeboabaz, advanced unto the Throne by Necho, who changed his Name from Eliakim, by which he formerly was called, into that of Jeboiakim. 11.

3351 19. Jeboiachim, or Jechoniah, the Son of Jeboiakim, at the end of three Months led captive unto Babylon, with his Wives and Mother, and the Great Officers of the Realm, by Nebuchadnezzar.

20. Zedekiah, another of the Sons of Josiah, and Brother by the whole blood of Jeboabaz, made King by Nebuchadnezzar in the place of Jeboiachim, or Jechoniah; his name being changed from Mattaniah, by which called before. But rebelling against his Benefactor, contrary to the Counsel of the Prophet Jeremy, he was taken Prisoner in the Eleventh Year of his Reign, Hierusalem destroyed, the Temple ruined, and the People carried captive to the Land of Babylon, A. M. 3362. where they lived in Exile 70 years. Which Time expired, Cyrus the King of the Persians gave them leave to return to their Country, and to re-edifie their City and Temple: Which Work being finished, by the encouragement of Ezra, Nehemiah and Zorobabel; and the Nation again settled in some part of their old Possessions, they were after governed by their Higb-Priests, and the Council of their Elders, which they called the Sanhedrim, the Higb-Priest bearing the chief stroke, and being looked on as a Man of the greatest Power. And therefore I will here subjoin the Catalogue of so many of them as governed the Affairs of this Country, from the Return of the People from the Captivity of Babylon, till the Time of the Maccabees; who managed the Estate hereof both as Priests and Princes, till their Subjection by the Romans.

The Higb-Priests of the JEWS after the Captivity.

A. M.

- 3427 1. Joshua, The Higb-Priest at the Time of the Return, assistant to Zorobabel in re-building the Temple, which he lived not to finish; tho continuing (as some say) in the Government 100 years. But I believe rather, that the Names of his Successors being lost, the whole Time is ascribed to him.
- 3530 2. Jeboiakim, said to be the Son of Joshua, in whose Time, by the diligence of Ezra and Nehemiah the Temple was finished, and the Worship of God restored.
- 3580 3. Jonathan, or Jobanan. 30.
- 3610 4. Jaddus, who entertain'd Alexander the Great coming to Hierusalem, (of whom more anon) the Brother of that Manasses, for whose sake, and on whose occasion, the Temple on Mount Gerizim was built by Sanballat, with the leave of Alexander. 20.

- 3630 5. Onias succeeded Jaddus, as Jaddus had done Jonathan; not by Birth (as formerly) but by Election of the People.
- 3651 6. Simon, surnamed Justus. 9.
- 3660 7. Eleazer, the Brother of Simon. 32.
- 3692 8. Menelaus, the Brother of Eleazer and Simon.
- 3718 9. Onias II. 14.
- 3732 10. Simon II. 10.
- 3742 11. Onias III. the Son of Simon the 2d.
- 3787 12. Jason, the Brother of Onias the 3d.
- 3789 13. Menelaus II. the Brother of Jason, in whose Time the Temple was prophaned by the Syrians, at the Command of Antiochus Epiphanes.
- 3794 14. Alcimus, under whose Government the Maccabees began to appear in defence of their Country and Religion, by whom succeeded in the Office of Higb-Priest, after his decease. Among these none of greater note than Jaddus, Higb-Priest at such time as Alexander the Great having conquered Syria, marched towards Hierusalem, and was encountred by this Jaddus in his Priestly Vestments, assuring him in the Name of the Most High God, and making it demonstrable from the Prophecie of Daniel, That he should prosper in his Enterprize against the Persians. An hope which Alexander did embrace with the greater confidence, because (as he affirmed to Parmenio his Chief Commander) he had once at Diu, a City of Macedon, seen in a Dream or Vision such a person as Jaddus was, so habited, and professing the same One God; by whom he was encouraged to pursue the Action which he had in hand with assurance of Victory. And upon this the Jews were so much favoured by him, that he gave them leave to live according to their own Laws, and to enjoy with Freedom their own Religion. But it held only for his own Time: For shortly after his decease, they were on both sides plagued by the Kings of Egypt and Syria, who ransacked their Cities, slaughtered their People, made havock of their Goods, and compelled many of them both to eat of Forbidden Meats, and offer Sacrifice unto Idols. At the last God raised up Mattathias (descended from Asmoneus a Priest of the Rank of Joarib) and his five Sons, to resist these Insolencies; who in the Reign of Antiochus Epiphanes King of Syria, undertook the protection of the people, and gave unto the Syrians many notable overthrows; insomuch that the Jews made choice of Judas surnamed Maccabeus (the Eldest of the five Brethren) for their Prince or Governor.

The ASMONEAN Princes of JEVRY.

A. M.

- 3799 1. Judas Maccabeus, the Third Son of Mattathias above-mentioned, one of the Nine Worthies, vanquished three great and puissant Armies of the Syrians, conducted by Apollonius, Gorgias, and Lisias, Men of great renown, being Commanders of the Forces of Antiochus Epiphanes, before mentioned.
- 3805 2. Jonathan, the Brother of Judas, vanquished the Forces of Bacchides and Alcimus, Captains of Demetrius King of Syria; and after many notable Exploits and Deeds of Arms, was tracherously murdered by Tryphon, aspiring at that time to the Syrian Diadem.
- 3823 3. Simon the Elder, Brother of Judas and Jonathan, subdued the Cities of Gaza, Joppe, and Jamnia, and cleared Judea of the Syrians; perfidiously slain in the course of his Fortune, by his Son-in-law Ptolemy. 8.
- 3831 4. Johannes Hyrcanus, the Third Son of Simon (his two other Brethren being in the power of Ptolemy) succeeded in the Government. He destroyed destroyed the Temple on Mount Garizim, conquered all Samaria, and subdued the Idumæans, compelled them to be Circumcised; transferred the War into Syria; and dying, left the Sovereignty to his Eldest Son Aristobulus.

The ASMONÆAN Kings of JUDAH.

A. M.

- 3862 1 Aristobulus, caused himself to be Crowned, and was the first King of Judah after the Babylonian Captivity; he starved his Mother, and slew Antigonus his Brother.
- 3863 2 Alexander, the Brother of Aristobulus, exceedingly enlarged the Kingdom of Jury by the conquest of Iuræa, and some parts of Syria; but was withal so great a Tyrant, that he causelessly slew of his own Subjects fifty thousand in Battel; and commanded 800 of his principal Enemies to be hanged before his face. He left behind him Two Sons, Hircanus, who was at last slain by Herod after all his Troubles, leaving no Issue Male behind him; and Aristobulus the Father of Alexander, and of Antigonus, of whom more anon: Of which Two, Alexander was the Father of another Aristobulus, the most beautiful Prince of all his Time, and of Mariamne the Wife of Herod, by whose command they were most villanously murdered.
- 3890 3 Alexandra, by some called Salome, the Wife of Alexander, and following the Counsel of her Husband at the time of his Death, committed herself and her Children into the hands of the Pharisees, then in great power and credit amongst the people; by means whereof she procured an honourable Burial for her Husband, obtained the Kingdom for herself, and finally left it to her Children, whose disagreements caused the ruin of this Famous Family.
- 3899 4 Aristobulus II. The Younger Son of Alexander, an active Prince, and beloved of the Military Men, having presently after the death of his Mother possess'd himself of the greatest part of the Forts and Castles, by the Forced consent of Hircanus his Elder Brother, succeeded in the Kingdom and High-Priesthood also; both which he held with great trouble and opposition both from his Brother and the Romans, whom most imprudently they called in to decide the Controversy: by Pompey sent Prisoner unto Rome (with Alexander and Antigonus his two Sons) he escaped thence, and raised a new Army for the recovery of this Kingdom; but being forced to yield himself to Gabinus one of Pompey's Lieutenants, he was sent back again to Rome, where he died in Prison, having reigned Three Years and Six Months.
- 3903 5 Hircanus II. a Prince of weak parts, and not fit for Government, was made High-Priest in the first Year of his Mother's Reign, but dispossest of that Dignity by Aristobulus his younger Brother. Restored again by the Favour of Pompey, he was again disturb'd in his Possession by Alexander the Eldest Son of Aristobulus; who escaping out of Rome, had raised some Forces; and began to dispute the Forces with him; but was soon after discomfited by Gabinus afore-mentioned, and slain by Scipio, another of Pompey's Captains. After the Death of Aristobulus, which happen'd in the year 3903. Hircanus was look'd on by the people, not only as their High-priest, but as their Prince and King, commonly called so by Josephus in the course of his History. His Affairs managed for the most part by Antipater (an Idumæan born, and the Father of Herod) his constant and most Faithful Friend in all his Troubles, who governed the Estate with great care and prudence. But he being made away by Poison, Antigonus the younger Son of Aristobulus, set on foot his Title to the Kingdom, and drew in an Army of the Partians to make it good; by whose aid, having treacherously insnared Hircanus, he cut off his Ears (to make him incapable of the Priesthood for the time to come) and sent him Prisoner to Babylon; taking upon himself the Title of King, though never acknowledged for such by the Jewish Nation. But long he did not please himself with that Title neither, for being besieged in Jerusalem by Herod, then newly created King of the Jews by the Roman Senate, and by him taken Prisoner in the Sack of that City, he was sent in Bonds to Mark Anthony, and by him beheaded. As for Hircanus the Rightful Prince of his Country, he remained Prisoner for a time amongst the Partians, till hearing of the Death of Antigonus, he returned into Jewry, and lived contentedly under the Government of Herod, of whose greatness he had laid the first Foundation, and was by him in fine wickedly murdered.

The Idumæan Kings and Princes of Jewry.

- 1 Herod the Ascalonite, surnamed the Great, Son to Antipater the Idumæan, was by the power of Mark Anthony created, and by Augustus confirmed King of Jewry; under whom that Kingdom was more enlarged, and in greater Splendor than ever it had been in since the Time of David. A Prince of great Magnificence, but of greater Vices. During his Reign, the Scepter being now departed from Judah, the Lord CHRIST was born.

A. Christi.

- 2 Archelaus, Eldest Son of Herod at the time of his death, succeeded with the Title of King; but in truth and reality possessed only a Tetrarchy, or Fourth Part of the Kingdom, though the best and largest of the Four, containing Judea, Samaria, and Idumæa. The rest of Herod's Kingdom was divided into Three other Tetrarchies, i. e. the Tetrarchy of Galilee and Petræa, given to Herod Antipas: Secondly, That of Iuræa, given to Philip, another of the Sons of Herod: And Thirdly, That of Abilene, conferred on Lysanias. Banished into France, his Tetrarchy was made a Province of the Roman Empire; governed by Pontius Pilate at our Saviour's Passion.

- 3 Herod II. surnamed Antipas, Tetrarch of Galilee and Petræa, on the Banishment of Archelaus, succeeded him, as chief of the Herodian Family, but not in his Tetrarchy; and at last followed him in his Banishment also. This is he who murdered John Baptist, and in whose Time CHRIST suffered.

40

- 4 Herod III. surnamed Agrippa; in Honour of Agrippa the Son-in-law, and most Trusty Favourite of Augustus Cæsar, Nephew to Herod the Great, by his Son Aristobulus begotten on Mariamne of the Race of the Asmonæes, was by Caligula first invell'd in the Tetrarchy of his Uncle Philip, with the Title of King; and next, in that of Antipas also; and finally by Claudius, in that also of Lysanias, some part of the Tetrarchy of Archelaus being added unto his Dominions. This was the Man that murdered James, and imprisoned imprisoned Peter ; and in the end was stricken by an Angel, and devoured by Worms.

47 5 Agrippa Minor, Son of Herod Agrippa, was he before whom St. Paul pleaded in defence of the Gospel ; and the last which had the Title of King of the Jews : For in his Time the City of Hierusalem was destroyed by Titus , and the whole Kingdom made a Province of the Roman Empire, Anno 69.

For the fuller clearing the Intricate Successions of the several Princes which Reigned in and over Jerusalem and the Jewish Nation, till the Final End of that State and People under Vespasian , I have added from Ludovicus Capella the following T A B L E S ; which commence with the Death of Solomon, and the Division of the Kingdom of Israel , and end with the Desolation of Jerusalem.

And here it is to be observed, that when Salmanaffar had subdued and captivated the Ten Tribes of Israel, he sent new Colonies of his own to plant this Country; that so fruitful and well-situate a part of his Empire might yield its Just Tribute, and not lie open to the Fury of the next Invader. But the Romans not having (it seemeth) so much Policy or Providence as those whom they counted barbarous; having laid the Country desolate, left it unfurnished of new Colonies; whereby the Persians, next the Saracens, and after them the Turks, entering the Roman Empire at this door, have successively driven the Romans out of the whole House. Now that we may the better perceive how the Romans had weakened, and almost utterly rooted out the Jewish Nation, we will relate some of their particular Massacres, which were not more cruelly inflicted on them by the Enemy, than justly deserved by themselves; they wishing tho' (I suppose) not desiring, that the Innocent Blood of our Saviour should be on them and their Children. First then the Inhabitants of Cæsaria slew of the Jews in one day, about 20000, and such as fled were took and imprisoned by Florus the Roman Lieutenant of Judæa. To Revenge this Slaughter, the Jews set upon the Syrians; in which skirmish 13000 of them were slain. The People of Alexandria put 50000 of them to the Sword; they of Damascus, 10000; Antonius a Roman Captain, slew in Ascalon, 10000 of them, and Cestius another Captain, 8040 persons. Now to come to the Wars here managed by Vespasian; This Vespasian in the Siege of Aphaca, slew and took Prisoner 17130 persons; in Samarita 11600 persons; In Jotopata, 42200 persons; In Joppa, so many killed and drowned themselves, that the Sea threw up again 4200 dead bodies; and the rest so totally perished, that there remained none to carry tidings to Hierusalem of the loss of the Town. In the City of Tarichea, were slain and made Captives, 45000 persons, besides those which were given to the King Agrippa. In Gamala there perished 90000, and none left alive but only two Women; In Gascula, 5000 Men died by the Sword; In the City of Gadera there were slain 32200, besides an infinite number which had drowned themselves. In Hierusalem it self, there died 1100000 of them, partly by the Sword, and partly by the Famine; the worse Enemy of the two; there were found 2000 in Privies and Sinks, and 9700 taken Prisoners; insomuch that 30 Jews were sold for a penny. So punctually was the Divine Justice in retaliating to this wretched people, according to the measure of their Iniquities that they who bought their Saviour for 30 pence, should be sold at thirty for a penny in the open Market.

Now that Jerusalem was able to contain such a number of People, is evident, in that when Cestius was Lieutenant of Jewry, the High-Priest did at his request number the People which came thither to eat the Paschal Lamb; and found them to be two millions and seven hundred thousand living Souls, all sound and purified: For to Lepers, or Men having a flux of Seed, or Women in their Monthly Terms, or to Strangers, it was not lawful to eat of it. And when Titus laid Siege to the City, it was in the Feast of the Paschever, when most of the People were there assembled; God (as it were) having thus Imprisoned them. All these Massacres, besides divers others which I have omitted, and infinite numbers which were slain in the fields and Villages, which drown'd themselves, and which were privily made away, amounting all to almost 2000000 of people hapned in the compass of four years; beginning at the 12th. of Nero, and ending at the 2d. of Vespasian; yet was not the whole Nation rooted out, till the year 136. For then this miserable people having stirred two notable Rebellions; the one under Trajan, and the last under Adrian the Emperor, were generally banished their Native Country, and never again permitted to Inhabit it, otherwise than as strangers. After this dissolution the Jews were dispersed all over the World, and especially in Spain, where Adrian commanded many of them to dwell; yet they found every where so little favour, that having divers times been put to grievous Mulcts and Ransoms, they were at last thrust out of most of the Kingdoms of Europe also. They were Banish'd out of England by Edward I. Anno 1290. Out of France by Philip the Fair, 1307. Out of Spain by Ferdinand the Catholique. 1492. Out of Portugal by Emmanuel, 1497. Out of Naples and Sicily, by Charles the Fifth, 1539. Yet are they found in great numbers in the Romish parts of Germany and Poland; in most Cities of Italy, especially Rome it self, where are no less than 15000 or 20000 of them; and also in the Pope's Pope's Country of Avignon. The reason why they are permitted to live thus under the Pope's Nose, is pretended to be an expectation of their Conversion, which is a meer pretence indeed; the true reason being the benefit hence arising to his Holiness's Coffers; the hopes of their Conversion being very small, and the means less. For besides the scandal, Datum & acceptum, by the Papists fond worshipping of Images, so peremptorily contrary to the first Table of the Law: They are not permitted to see any Book of Christian Religion, no not so much as the New Testament. And (which worketh much upon Men of their metal) because at their Conversion they must quit all their Goods unto the Church, as being ill-gotten, and by consequence the works of the Devil, which in their Baptism they promise to renounce. They have also a Synagogue at Amsterdam, and are pretty thick spread over the Dominions of the Turks: who, notwithstanding so hate them for crucifying of CHRIST, that they used to say in the detestation of a thing, I would I might dye a Jew. Neither will they permit a Jew to turn Turk, unless he be first baptized. And though their multitudes be so great both in Thessalonica and Constantinople, that it is conceiv'd they do amount to the number of 160000 persons; yet they are not only contemned but hated: But there, and in all other places of their habitation, upon every tumultuous assembly of the Common People, and constantly every Easter, wheresoever they be, in danger of death. Inasmuch that if a Jew do but stir out of doors betwixt Maundy-Thurs'day at Noon, and Easter-Eve at Night, the Christians of the East, amongst whom they dwell (though far fewer in number) will be sure to stone them; because at that time, they buffeted, derided, and in fine, crucified their Saviour. Hated in all the parts of the Turks Dominions, because employed as Publicans in gathering and enhancing the publick Tributes which they exact with all severity that may be, and improve unto the most. And no less hated in all parts of the Christian World, as Enemies to the Cross of CHRIST: so unreclaimably addicted to their ancient Judaism, and so abhorring from the conversation of other Men; that it is not possible they should reap any other harvest, than contempt and scorn from those amongst whom they dwell.

To give you their Character in brief; They are a People which know how to comply with the times, and the condition which they live in; especially if their profit be concerned in it: reviled like Dogs, and used like Slaves, yet never shew so much as an angry Countenance. A Nation which will thrive wheresoever they come, but most by Usury and Brokage; not lending any thing but on pawns, and those once forfeited, never more redeemable. The best of both Sexes said to have an unfavoury rankness, not incident (if not caused by flutishness) to other People: From whom as different in their habits, as in their Religion. And as for that, they retain still Circumcision, as the badge and cognizance of their Nation; but mingled with many Ceremonies not prescribed by the Law, nor observed by the Ancients: Placing a void Chair for the Prophet Elias, whom they believe to be present, though unseen at the Solemnity. And upon this they are so besotted, that they conceive the Female Sex incapable of eternal life, because not capable of Circumcision; and therefore use to name them with no other Ceremony, than at six weeks end to have some young Wenches lift up the Cradle with the Child in it; which she that standeth at the Head, giveth the name unto. Of their Sabbath so extremely doting, that they have added to the Superstitions left them by the Pharisees: And herein they are so precise, that if a Jew travel on the Friday, and in the Evening fall so short of his Journeys end, that it amounts to more than to 2000 Cubits, or six Furlongs, which they account a Sabbath-days Journey, there must he sit him down and keep his Sabbath, though in a Wood, or Field, or the High-way side, without fear of Wind or

Weather, of Thieves or Robbers, and without taking order for Meat or Drink: Periculo latronum prædonumque omni, penuria item omni cibi potusque neglectis, as Exactorius hath it. And so far have they gone in despite of Christ, as to declare it unlawful to lift the Ox or Ass out of a Ditch; permitted in the strictest times of Pharisaical rigor. So pertinacious in retaining the difference of meats and drinks, that they will by no means sit at the Table with other Men, and so precise in the dressing of it, that they will eat of no flesh but of their own killing only; and that too with such cautions and reservations, that if any of the entrails be corrupt or dislocated, they will sell the whole Beast to the Christians for a very trifle. Beneficial in that only to the neighbouring Christians. Wine they forbear except it be of their own planting, not so much out of dislike of that Liquor, for they are generally good Fellows, and love their bellies, as for fear the Wine should be baptized: a Ceremony much used in the Eastern Parts. Of the coming of their Messiah so full of hopes, that there is no great Warriour stirring, but they look upon him as the Man; till some sad Tragedy or other, which they suffer under that persuasion, makes them see their Error: promising to themselves whensoever he cometh, a Restitution of their Kingdom: and such felicities therein, in the literal Sence of some Texts of Scripture, which carry in them a more mystical and sacred meaning. That in good time (but God's, not theirs) they shall be made partakers of the several blessings which those Texts do speak of, is both the hope and wish of all pious Men; who cannot chuse but grieve to behold the natural branches, so long dismembered and cut off from the tree of life. And this they neither hope nor wish for but on some fair grounds, presented to them by St. Paul: who said expressly, that when the fulness of the Gentiles is once come in, that then all Israel shall be saved, Rom. 11. 25, 26. The words are so plainly positive that they need no Commentary. Or if they did, we have the general consent of the Ancients, besides the constant current of most modern Writers; who cherish the glad hopes of their Conversion to the Gospel, which the Apostle doth there aim at. Origen, Athanasius, Hierom, Augustine, Chrysostome, for the Primitive Times; Beda and Hugo Cardinalis, in the times succeeding; Gorran, and Thomas Aquinas, for those of Rome; Calvin, Beza, Bullinger, and Peter Martyr for the Reformed Churches; besides divers others of great note, so expound that Text. Nor want there other Texts of Scripture to affirm as much, which he that doth desire to see, may find with the Expositions of most Christian Writers in a Book writ by Doctor Willet, Entituled, De generali & novissima Judæorum vocatione; and thither I refer the more curious Reader. Out of all I shall take these words of Peter Martyr, written on that passage of St. Paul to the Romans, viz. Non ita Judæi perierunt ut nulla de illorum salute spes super sit; The Jews (saith he) are not so wholly fallen from the favour of God, but that there still remains some hopes of their Salvation. Of their Salvation then by the Gospel of Christ, when the fulness of the Gentiles is once come in, we conceive good hopes: but whether there be any of their Restitution to their temporal Kingdom, is a farther Question; and not so clearly evidenced in the Book of God, though there be somewhat in that Book which may seem to intimate it. That the opinion of being restored by the Messiah, to that Temporal Power which was taken from them by the Romans, was prevalent as well amongst Christ's Disciples, as the rest of the Jews, is, I take it, clear enough in the holy Gospel. In such a Kingdom, and no other, did the two Sons of Zebedee desire to sit on both hands of their Master; and the same was it, and no other, which all of them expected, as appeared by the words of Cleopas, Luke 24. 21. that Christ should have restored unto them. We thought, said he, that this would have proved the Man, that should have redeemed Israel. Redeemed Israel? From what? from Sin and Satan, or the Curse and Bon-

Bondage of the Law? not so, ἂν' ὅτι τὸ ζύγος τῆς δουλείας, but from the Yoke of Vassallage, which the Romans had so lately imposed on them, say the Fathers rightly. Touching the same it was that they moved him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the Kingdom of Israel? Acts 1. 6. In answer whereunto, our Saviour makes them no denial, as unto the thing, nor tells them that they never must expect such a Restoration; but only puts them off as unto the time, and bids them rest themselves on the pleasure of God the Father, in whose Hands the disposing of all Kingdoms was: It is not for you, (saith he) to know the times and seasons, which the Father hath in his own power, ver. 7. By which answer (as it seems to me) there is a possibility of restoring them to their Kingdom also; though not in the τὸ νῦν, at that very instant when they were most desirous to have it done, or at any other time fit for them to know; that being a Secret, which the Father hath reserved to himself alone.

But leaving these Speculations of a Restitution of the Throne of Israel, and the great Power and Privileges it may then enjoy, let us look back on the Estate in which it flourished in the former times, when the Forces and Revenue of it were at the highest. And first for the Revenues, they amounted in the time of Solomon (as is said, 2 Chron. 9. 13.) to 600 Talents of Gold, besides the Benefits of his Customs and Impositions, which cometh to 2997000 Pounds of yearly income. A vast Sum for such a little Kingdom. Nor can we reckon them at less, if they were not greater in the time of David; of whom it is affirmed, 1 Chron. 22. 14. That he left to Solomon 100000 Talents of Gold, and 1000000 Talents of Silver towards the building of the Temple, besides 3000 Talents of Gold, and 7000 Talents of Silver, formerly deposited for that purpose, as is said 1 Chron. 29. 4. Which if it be computed at the ordinary rate of a Jew's Talent, reckoning a Talent of Gold at 4500 Pound, and a Talent of Silver at 375 Pound, will amount in our Money to 840125000 Pounds. So vast a Sum, that it had been sufficient to have built a Temple of pure Gold and Silver, far greater than the Temple of Solomon, without other Materials. I conceive therefore with our learned and industrious Brexewood, that by the Talent in those places we are to understand a far lesser Sum than the ordinary Hebrew Talents: which whether it doth there signifie a Sicle only, which is half a Crown of English Money, as Eusebius, cited by Eusebius, was of opinion; or that every Talent of Gold came to three Golden Crowns of Athens, which maketh forty five Shillings of English Money, as Julius Pollux hath it in his Onomasticon, I am not able to determine: But measuring it by the last estimate, which I more approve of, it will amount to two Millions and two hundred ninety and five thousand Pounds: a vast Sum for a King to leave in ready Money, which was always exercised in War. And though I do not find expressly what the Revenues of Judah might amount unto, after the division: yet by one circumstance I find them to be very great. For it is written 2 Kings 18. 14. that the yearly Tribute imposed upon Hezekiah, by the King of Assyria, was three hundred Talents of Silver, and thirty Talents of Gold: amounting (according to the ordinary Hebrew Talent, which questionless is there intended) to two hundred forty seven thousand and five hundred Pounds of English Money: and therefore probably his ordinary Revenue must be thrice as much, above that Tribute; else the Assyrian had not left him a subsistence for a King to live on. Nor can I think that the Revenues of this Crown were less to Herod, than formerly to Solomon, or David; considering his vast Expences, the many and magnificent Structures which he brought to perfection, the immeasurable donatives bestowed upon Augustus, Livia, and the Court of Rome, together with the large Legacies he gave at the time of his death: not parallel'd by any King before or since, though of a more large and more ample Territory than he stood possessed of.

What Forces the Kings of the Hebrews were able to bring into the Field, may be best estimated by the Muster which David made, when he numbered the People; the enrolment of such as were able to bear Arms, and fit for Service, coming in all to five hundred thousand fighting Men, in Judah only, and eight hundred thousand Men in the Tribes of Israel. Tis true that David never brought into the Field so vast a Multitude; but when the Kingdoms were divided, and War denounced betwixt Jeroboam and Abijah, we find almost the whole number brought into the Field: that is to say, 800 thousand on the side of Jeroboam the King of Israel, and four hundred thousand by Abijah, the King of Judah. After this, out of that small Kingdom, Asa the Son of Abijah, being invaded by Zerah the Arabian or Ethiopian, advanced an Army of five hundred and eighty thousand Men, which was more than the enrolment made in the time of David. An infinite proportion for so small a Kingdom; and were it not avouched in the holy Scriptures, far above Belief; had not that God who said to Abraham, that his Seed should be as the Stars of Heaven for multitude, been able to have made it good.

As for the Story and Affairs of this Country since the time of Adrian, the Jews being all expelled their native Soyl, and Christianity in fine prevailing over all those Parts, it was inhabited as the rest of the Empire was, by Men of that Religion only, in this Country so advanced and countenanced, that Helena the Mother of Constantine, is reported to have built in it no less than two hundred Temples and Monasteries, in places of most note for the Miracles of Christ our Saviour, or the dwelling of some of his Disciples. In the Year 615. the Persians, under the Conduct of Chosroes their King, became Masters of it; and possessed themselves of Hierusalem also: expelled thence by the valour and good Fortune of the Emperour Heraclius, who recovering the Cross on which Christ suffered, out of the Hands of the Pagans, carried it with as great a Triumph into Constantinople, as David once did the Ark into Hierusalem; occasioning thereby the annual Festival on the fourth of September, called Holy-Cross Day, or Exaltatio Sanctæ Crucis. But this Glory and Rejoycing did not long continue: For within twenty Years after the recovery of this City from the Power of the Persians, it was again conquered and subdued by Omar, or Aumar, Caliph of the Saracens, Anno 637. Under this Yoke the captivated Christians had long suffered, when they changed the Tyrant, but not the Tyranny, the Turks about the Year 1079. overcoming the Saracens, and domineering in their stead. Twenty Years did the Christians languish under this Oppression, when one Peter an Hermite, travelling for Devotion to the Holy Land, and being an Eye-witness of the Miseries under which they groaned; at his return, made his Addresses to Pope Urban the second, acquainting him with the sad conditions of the poor Christians in those Countries. A Council thereupon is called at Clermont in France, where the Pope (willing to imploy the Christian Princes farther off, that he might the better play his game at home,) did so effectually advance and endear the business, that no fewer than three hundred thousand fighting Men, under several Leaders, undertook the Service. And it prospered so well with them in the first beginning, that having beaten the Turks out of Asia Minor, taken the great City of Antioch, and most of the strong Towns of Syria, they incamped before Hierusalem, and in short time took it, Anno 1099. after it had been four hundred Years and upwards in the Power of the Infidels. The City being thus gained, was offered with the Title of King, to Robert Duke of Normandy, Son of William the Conquerour: but he upon hopes of the Kingdom of England, refused that honour; never prospering, as it was observed, after that refusal. Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrain, had the next offer of it which with a Religious Joy he accepted of; though on the Day of his inauguration he refused the Crown: at-affirming that it was not fit for a Christian Prince to wear in that City a Crown of Gold, where the Redeemer of the World wore a Crown of Thorns.

The Kings of Hierusalem.

- 1099 1 Godfrey of Bouillon Duke of Lorrain.
 - 1100 2 Baldwin of Lorrain, Brother of Godfrey, won Ptolemais, and many other Cities of Syria.
 - 1118 3 Baldwin II. surnamed of Bruges, Cousin of Godfrey, and Baldwin, the former Kings, overcame the Sultan of Damascus; and enlarged his Kingdom by the addition of Tyre.
 - 1131 4 Fulk, Earl of Anjou, having married Milliscent the Daughter of Baldwin the second succeeded after his Decease; unfortunately killed with a fall from his Horse.
 - 1142 5 Baldwin III. Son of Fulk and Milliscent, fortified Gaza against the Caliph of Egypt; and recovered Paneade from the King of Damascus.
 - 1164 6 Almericus, the Brother of Baldwin the third, so distressed the great Caliph of Egypt, that he was forced to call in the Turks to aid him; by whom slain, and his Kingdom transferred on Saracon the Turkish General.
 - 1174 7 Baldwin IV. Son of Almericus, overthrew Saladine the victorious King of the Turks in a Fight near Ascalon, and valiantly defended his Dominions.
 - 1185 8 Baldwin V. Son of Sybil the Sister of Baldwin the fourth by William Marquis of Montferrat; unnaturally poisoned by his own Mother, having reigned only five Months, to make way for her second Husband, called
 - 1185 9 Guy of Lusignan, the last King of Hierusalem, that had the possession of the City: During whose time Saladine the Sultan of Egypt won that Kingdom, Anno 1187. which his Successors defended against all invasions, till the year 1517. in which Selimus the first, Emperor of the Turks, added the Holy Land, together with Egypt, to his Empire. When Hierusalem was taken by the Christians, it is said that the German Emperor's name was Fredericus; the Pope's Urbanus; the Hierosolymitan Patriarch, Heraclius; and that so also were they called, when the Christians again lost it. This is the conceit of Roger Hoveden, in the Life of Henry the Second; but how it can agree with Chronology, I do not see.
- After the taking of Hierusalem by Sultan Saladine, the Christians retired their Forces into some of the other Towns of the Holy Land; which they made good against the Enemy, and defended them under the Government of these Three Kings following, viz.
- 10 Conrade Marquis of Montferrat, Husband of Isabel the Daughter of Almericus, King of Hierusalem.
 - 11 Henry Earl of Compagne, second Husband of Isabel.
 - 12 John di Brenne, Husband of Mary, or Yoland, as some call her, Daughter of Conrade and Isabel, the last Christian King that ever had possession in Syria or Palestine: Inhabited ever since by Moors and Arabians; few Christians, and not many Turks but such as be in Garisons only. Yoland the Daughter of this John di Brenne, was Wife to Frederick King of Naples, who in her Right intitled himself King of Hierusalem: And so now do the Kings of Spain, as Heirs unto, and Possessors of the Kingdom of Naples. Concerning which Title, it would not be amiss to insert this Story. When the Wars in Q. Elizabeth's time were hot between England and Spain, there were Commissioners of both sides appointed to Treat of Peace. They met at a Town of the French King's; and first it was debated in what Tongue the Negotiations should be handled. A Spaniard thinking to give the English Commissioners a shrewd gird, proposed the French Tongue as most fit; it being a Language which the Spaniards were all skilled in: And for these Gentlemen of England, I suppose (saith he) that they cannot be ignorant of the Language of their fellow-Subjects; their Queen is Queen of France, as well as of England. Nay in faith my Masters, replied Doctor Dale (a Civil Lawyer, and one of the Masters of Requests) the French Tongue is too vulgar for a business of this secrecy and importance, especially in a French Town: We will therefore rather treat in Hebrew, the Language of Hierusalem, whereof your Master is King; and I suppose you are therein as well skilled, as we in the French. And thus much for this Title.

The Arms of the Christian Kings in Hierusalem was Luna, a Cross Croset crossed, Sol; which was commonly called the Hierusalem Cross. But for their Forces and Revenues, I cannot see how any estimate may be made hereof, in regard they subsisted not by their own proper strength, but by the Purse and the Forces of the Western Christians, more or less active in that Service, as zeal, or emulation, or desire of glory, were predominant in them.

Chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, after the Recovery thereof from the power of the Turks, were,

1. Of the Sepulchre, said to be instituted originally by Queen Helena. The Mother of Constantine the Great, by whom the Temple of the Sepulchre was indeed first built: But more truly, by Philip King of France, Anno 1099. at such time as that Temple was regained from the Turks. Their Arms the same with that of the Kings before blazoned, representing the five Wounds of our Saviour CHRIST. At the first conferred on none but Gentlemen of Blood and Fortune; now saleable to any that will buy it of the Pater-Guardian, who with a Convent of Franciscans doth reside near that Temple.

2. Of St. John of Hierusalem, begun by one Gerrard, Anno 1114. and confirmed by Pope Paschalis the second. Their Badge or Cognizance is a white Cross of eight points. Their duty, to defend the Holy-Land, relieve Pilgrims, and succour Christian Princes against the Infidels. They were to be of noble Parentage and Extraction; and grew in time to such infinite Riches, especially after the suppression of the Templars (most of whose Lands were after given unto this Order) that they had at one time in the several parts of Christendom, no fewer than 20000 Mannors; and of such Reputation in all Christian Kingdoms, that in England the Lord Prior of this Order, was accounted the Prince Baron in the Realm. But now their Revenue is not a little diminished, by the withdrawing of the Kings of England, and other Protestant Princes, from the Church of Rome, who on that change seized on all the Lands of this Order in their several Countries; and either kept them to themselves, or disposed them to others as they pleased. Of these we shall speak more when we are in Malta, where they now reside: advertising only at the present, that their first Great Master, was that Gerrard by whom they were founded; the last that had his residence in the Holy-Land, one John de Villiers, in whose time being driven out of Palestine, they removed unto Cyprus, and in the time of Fulk de Villaret, Anno 1309. to the Isle of Rhodes; Out of which expelled by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1522. they removed from one place to another, till at last by the magnificence of Charles the Fifth, Anno 1530. they were settled in Malta: And there we shall speak further of them.

3. Of the Templars, instituted by Hugh of Payennes, Anno 1113. and confirmed by Pope Eugenius. Their Ensign was a Red Cross, in token that they should shed their blood to defend Christ's Temple. They were buried cross legged, and wore on their backs the Figure of the the Cross, for which they were by the common people called Cross-backs, or Crouch backs, and by corruption Crook-backs. Edmund Earl of Lancaster, second Son to our Henry the Third, being of this Order, was vulgarly called Edmund Crook-back; which gave Henry the Fourth a foolish occasion to feign, that this Edmund (from whom he was descended) was indeed the Eldest Son of King Henry the Third; but for his crookedness and deformity, his younger Brother was preferred to the Crown before him. These Knights had in all Provinces of Europe their subordinate Governors, in which they possessed no less than 16000 Lordships: The greatness of which Revenue was not the least Cause of dissolving the Order. For Philip the Fair, King of France, had a plot to invest one of his Sons with the title of King of Jerusalem, and hoped to procure of the Pope the Revenue of this Order, to be laid unto that Kingdom, for support of the Title; which he thought he might the better do, because Clement the Fifth then Pope, for the love he bare to France, had transferred his Seat from Rome to Avignon. But herein his hopes deceived him; for this Order being dissolved, the Lands thereto belonging were given to the Knights Hospitallers, or of St. John. The Causes objected against this Order were, First, Their Revolt from their professed Obedience unto the Patriarch of Jerusalem, who was their Vitor; Secondly, Their unspeakable Pride; And Thirdly, Their sins against Nature. The House of our Law-Students in London, called the Temple, was the chief House of the Knights of this Order in England; and was by the Knights of St. John, whose principal Mansion was in Smithfield, sold unto the Students of the Law, for the yearly Rent of 10*l.* about the middle of the Reign of Edward the Third.

These Three Orders Mr. Selden (and deservedly) putterh not in his Titles of Honour, in that they were prohibited to kiss a Woman; honorary Knighthood, and the Love of Ladies, going together like Virtue and Reward. Thus much for Palestine.

O F ARABIA.

ARABIA hath on the East Chaldæa, and the Bay or Gulf of Persia; on the West, Palestine, some part of Egypt, and the whole course of the Red-Sea; on the North the River Euphrates, with some parts of Syria and Palestine; and on the South the main Southern Ocean. But at some times the name extended somewhat farther. Pliny enlargeth it as far as Comagena, the North part of Syria; in regard that many Arabian Colonies had been there planted by Tygranes: And Xenophon comprehended in it the greatest part also of Mesopotamia; because situate on the West of the River Tigris, and consequently the Western part of the Assyrian Empire, as the word Erub doth import, from whence some derive the Etymon, and name hereof. Which notwithstanding, in the general esteem of Authors, it is bounded only as before.

As for the Name, there be some that derive it from Arabus, a supposed Son of Apollo and Babylonia; others from three supposititious Sons of Janus Pater, one of the pretended Grand-sons of Cham, who is fabled to have sent his Son Arabus into Arabia Deserta; Petrius, into Arabia Petraea; and Sabus, into Arabia Felix, the dwelling place of the Sabaæans. And for this trim conceit we are beholden to the Berosus of Friar Anninus. More probable is their conjecture who derive the name from the Hebrew, Arab, signifying Black; by reason of the swarth or tawny complexion of the Inhabitants who are inter nigrum & fulvum, as Vertomannus an eye-witness hath informed us of them; on the same reason as one of the Provinces of Africa, is commonly entituled the Land of Negroes. But the most likely origination of it, as I conceive, is from Harabi, which signifieth in the Hebrew, a Thief or Robber, such as the Arabians in all Ages have been known to be. According unto that of the Prophet Jeremy: In the ways thou hast sate for them, as an Arabian in the Wilderness, as our English reads it: Tanquam Latro insidians in solitudine, saith the Vulgar Latin, Jer. 32. St. Hierom, though he render it quasi Latro, as the Vulgar doth, yet in his Commentary he informs us, That the word doth also signify an Arabian, que gens latrociniis dedita, etque lohe incurfat Palestinae, fines, &c. which being addicted to Theft and Robbery, do to this day (saith he) infest the Coasts of Palestine which border near them, and lay in wait for those which had any occasion to travel thither. Agreeable hereunto is the Observation of Martin del Rio; Adeo latrocinium infames sunt, ut Hebraei Arabi latronem, denotat, sicut Chananæus Mercatorem, Chaldæus Mathematicum; i. e. So infamous were they for their Theft and frequent Robberies, that it was familiar with the Jews to call a Thief by the name Arabian, as by Chanaanite to signify a Merchant, or to use the word Chaldæan for a Mathematician. In the same sense they came in the succeeding times to be called Saracens, from Sarak, or Saraka, an Arabian word, which signifieth to steal; whereof more anon: No otherwise than one of the American Islands had the name of Ladrones, or Insula Latronum, given by Magellanus, from the thievishness of the Inhabitants, who had stolen his Cock-boat.

I have staid the longer on the Name, because it doth express so much of the Character of the People also; living for the most part upon Spoil and Robbery, as all that travel that way know by sad experience. Of mean stature, raw-boned, tawny or swarth-complexioned having feminine voices; of swift but noiseless gait, and upon you ere you are aware. Of no set-dwellings (except only in Arabia Felix) living in Tents, which they remove like walking Cities, for the benefit of Pasturage, and hope of Booty: for this last cause hanging about the skirts of more habitable Countries, and having robbed, retire with a marvellous speed; Mounted on Dromedaries for that purpose, a Beast of most incredible swiftness, satisfied with little Food, though without Water to it, and will easily carry a Man an hundred Miles a day, without any refreshing. Nor are such Horses as they have, though but poor and lean, of less speed, or less patient of travel; whom they feed twice a day with the Milk of Camels, and think them not worth keeping, if not able to out-go an Ostrich. As now, so formerly, all Horsemen, and but ill appointed; fitter to rob and spoil than to deal with Soldiers; as riding stark naked, and trusting rather to the swiftness of their Horses, than any other resistance, where they were opposed.

Their Language is the Arabick, so called from this Country, but not proper to this Country only; Spoken in all places where Mahometanism hath got any footing: The Alcoran being written in it, the publick Offices of their Religion performed in it, and the Tongue taught in Schools as generally, as with us the Latin: But made the natural Language in Aleopetania, Syria, Palestine, the three Arabias & Egypt, and all Barbary, except the Kingdom of Morocco. A great extent, but short of that which some give to it, who will have it spoken in two parts of the whole habitable World.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by S. Paul, of whose being in Arabia, after his Conversion he telleth us, Gal. 1. 17. to which the coming in of the Sara- cent, gave a great increase, in the time of Mavia their Queen, during the Empire of Valentinian I. Moses, a Man of exemplary Piety, and famed for many Miracles, being created their first Bishop; after more generally propagated over all the Country, by the King Alamandarus, Anastasia then Reigning in the East. But long it had not been received, when supplanted by Mahometanism, which had its first beginning here; and hath so universally overspread the whole face hereof, that now there are no Christians left in all the Country, except only in Elter, a Port Town in the Bay of Arabia Felix, in Arabia Petraea, the chief City of Arabia Petraea, and in two small Monasteries about Mount Sinai.

It is in circuit about 4000 miles, but of so unequal and heterogeneous composition, that no general character can be given of it: and therefore we must look upon it as it stands divided into, 1 Arabia Deserta. 2 Arabia Petraea. 3 Arabia Felix. And 4 the Arabick Islands.

I. A R A B I A D E S E R T A.

AR A B I A D E S E R T A (called Beriara by the Turks) is bounded on the East with Babylonia; on the West with parts of Palestine and Arabia Petraea; on the North, with Palmyrene and Mesopotamia, from which last it is parted by Euphrates; and on the South, by some parts of Petraea, and Arabia Felix.

It hath the name of Deserta, from the vast Deserts which are in it, and the desolation thereof; call'd also by Ausitis, Afpera, from the roughness; by Serenus inferior, or the lower, in regard of the situation of it more towards the River; by Luctan, from the frequent Bottoms and Vallies in it, Arabia Cana; and finally by the Jews it was called Kedar, from the blackness or swarthiness of the People, the word in Hebrew signifying as much as Sun-burnt; whence the People are by some Writers called Kedereni, and by Pliny, Cedraei.

But the common and most usual name of it, is Arabia Deserta, agreeable to the nature of it, being generally a sandy Country, full of vast Deserts; in which all such as Travel, use to carry their provisions with them, and to guide themselves in their Journey by the course of the Stars, tho' in some parts which lie near Euphrates, and the Mountains of Arabia Felix, it hath some few Towns, and those resorted to by Merchants. But this is only in those parts; the residue of the Country being so desolate and waste, that one who had travelled in it, doth describe it to be so wild a place, Ut nec homines nec bestiae videantur, nec arves; imo, nec arbores, nec gramen aliquod, sed non nisi montes saxosi, attissimi, asperissimi: A Country, saith Gulandinus Melchior, where are found neither Men, nor Beasts, no not so much as Birds or Trees, nor Grass; nor Pasture, but only Stony, High, and most craggy Mountains.

The People for the most part used to dwell in Tents, alluded to by David, Psal. 120. v. 5. which they removed from place to place, as the Pasture for their Cattel failed them, taking no other care for houses, than the boughs of Palm-trees, to keep them from the heat of the Sun, and other extremities of Weather. Hence by the Ancients called Scanitia, or Men dwelling in Tents; in which respect the Jews call the Tartarians Kedarim, from the like course of life which these Kedareni or Arabians lived: but the name reaching into the other parts of Arabia also, where they use the same kind of living: Of whom more anon.

Yet notwithstanding most memorable is this Country in Sacred Story, both for the dwelling-place of Job and the habitation of those Wise-men, who came out of the East unto Jerusalem, to Worship Christ, the new-born King of the Jews. That Job was an Inhabitant here, appeareth by the situation of his dwelling, being in the East, as is said in the story of him, cha. 1. v. 3. that is to say, the Country lying East to the Land of Canaan, as this part of it doth; and therefore called simply by the name of the East, as Judg. 6. 3. where by the Chil- dren of the East, are meant expressly the Inhabitants of Arabia the Desert, who together with the Midianites and Amalekites oppressed those of Israel. 2. By the ill neighbourhood which he found from the Sabaeans, who inhabited in this part also; and of the Chaldeans, mentioned ver. the next Borderers to it: and 3. By the inconsequences which needs must follow, if we place him, as some do, in the Land of Us near unto Damascus. For how improbable must it be for the Sabaeans, of the Red Sea, or the Persian Gulf, or the Chaldeans dwelling on the Banks of the River Euphrates, to fall upon Job's Cattel, grazing near Damascus, the Countries being disjoyn'd by such vast Deserts, and huge Mountains, that it is impossible for any Strangers to pass them, especially with any numbers of Cattel, in respect of those large Mountains, deep Sands, and the extreme want of Water in all that passage? And how impossible must we think it, that the Penman of the Story of Job, who certainly was guided in it by the Holy Ghost, should be so mistaken as to place Job's dwelling in the East, if the Land of Us, wherein he dwelt, bordered on Damascus, which lay not on the E. but on the N. of Canaan? A City called Us, or Uz, there was situate near Damascus, so called from Us, the Son of Aram, Gen. 10. 23. A Land of Us also among the Edomites, spoke of in the Lamentations of the Prophet Jeremy, c. 4. v. 21. so called from Us, one of the Posterity of Esau, mentioned, Gen. 36. 28. And finally a Land of Us, or Uz, so called from Hus the Son of Nachor, the Brother of Abraham, mentioned, Gen. 22. 21. which is that situate in this Tract, the Habitation and Possession of that Righteous Man: The Country hereabouts being called Ausitis, and the People Ausitae; tho' by mistaking in the Transcripts, we find them named, Ausitas or Ausitae; in the fifth of Ptolemy. The like I say also of the Wise men, or Magi, who came to Jerusalem from the East, That they dwelt in this Country, where the said Ptolemy placeth the City of Saba; according unto that fore signified by the Royal Psalmist, That the Kings of Arabia and Saba should bring their Gifts, Psal. 72. 10. Confirmed herein by the situation of the Country, lying East of Canaan; the Authority of those Fathers who lived nearest to the time of our Saviour's Birth, Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Cyprian; and by the testimony of Gulandinus Melchior above-mentioned, affirming on the credible report of the People hereof, that they came neither out of Mesopotamia, or Arabia Felix, as many wise men do believe, but out of Saba in Arabia the Desert, which City (saith he) when my self was there, was, as I judge, called Semiscasac.

Cities of note in a Country so desert and uninhabited, we must look for few; yet some there are, inhabited by a more civil sort of People, whom they call by the name of Moors, giving that of Arabian to those only who live roving and robbing up and down. Ptolemy gives the name of forty Cities and Villages in it (Civitates & vicus saith the Latin) the memory of most of which is now utterly perished. Those of most observation, 1 Saba or Saba, the Habitation of the Sabaeans who pillaged Job; so called from Sbeba, the Grandson of Abraham by Keturah, mentioned, Gen. 25. 3. of whom, and of the rest of that Line, it is said, in ver. 6. of that chap. that Abraham gave them Gifts, and sent them away from Isaac, Eastward, unto the West Country, now called Semiscasac, as is thought by Melchior. 2 Theman, which possibly may be the Country of Elphaz, the Themanite, one of the Visitants of Job. As 3 Shubab, on the North hereof, was probably of Bildad, another of them, hence surnamed the Shubite. 4 Thosacai, by Pliny called Aptisopolis. 5 Zagmar, near the Persian Gulf, in the Country of the Raubeni, supposed to be descended from Alsham, the fourth Son of Ismael. 6 Hunton, the 37th. 7 Oboth, the 37th Mansion of the Children of Ismael. 8 Rhepanna another of those named by Ptolemy, in the Greek Copies called Beganna. Of any Town of Note now being, more than Semiscasac before named, I find nothing certain.

The

The first Inhabitants of this Country, of whom there is any certain Constat, were the Posterity of Nachor, the Son of Nachor, and the Sons of Abraham by Keturah; of whose being settled in these parts, we had before good Testimony from the Book of God: and intermix'd with them lived some of the Descendants of Ismael also. For if the Adubeni, whom Ptolomy calleth the Agabeni, fetch their Original from Abdeel the Third, and the Raubeni from Mishmael the fifth Son of Ismael, as some say they do, I see no reason but the whole Country might be called Kedar, from Kedar, the second Son, as well as from the tawny complexions of the People of it. From them descended the Tribes or Nations spoken of by Ptolomy, that is to say, the Orbomi, Chaurabeni, Zinve, Mosoni, Materna, and Agrati, besides the Adubeni, and Raubeni, already specified. But being a di-jointed People, not under any settled form of Government, not possessed of any thing worth locking after, they were either held not worth the Conquering, in regard of their Penury; or else Unconquerable, in respect of their Country, impassable for great Armies, by reason of the rolling Sands, and want of all things. Yet I conceive, that lying so near to the Chaldeans, they followed the Fortunes of that Mighty Monarchy: Subjects unto it whilst it stood, and after Tributaries unto those who successively possessed themselves of the Supreme Power. Not looked at by the Romans, or regarded by them, who aimed at Wealth as well as Honour in their Expedition: nor otherwise Subject to the Turk at this present time, than as they make use of him and his Protection in their frequent Robberies: but counted of as a part of the Turkish Empire, because the more civil Arabians are indeed his Subjects.

2. A R A B I A P E T R Œ A.

AR A B I A P E T R Œ A (now called Baraah and Baribalaba) hath on the East Arabia Deserta, and part of Sinus Persicus, or the Bay of Persia; on the West the Isthmus which joyneth Africa to Asia, and part of the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; on the North Palastine; and on the South a long Ridge of Mountains, which divide it from Arabia Felix.

It had this name either from the Rockiness of the Soil hereof, or more properly from Petra, the chief City of it, called also by Arabicus Sicaria, but I know not why: by the Hebrews, Chus, generally Translated Ethiopia; by William of Tyre, Arabia secunda, Felix being reckoned for the first. By Strabo, Ptolomy, and Pliny, it is called Nabathæa, which Name it had from Nabithoth, the Eldest of the Twelve Sons of Ismael; though properly that name belongeth only to those parts of it which lay next Judæa: Fruitful, though joyning to the Deserts: and thus remembered by the Poet, as an Eastern Country.

Eurus unto the East did fly,

Where fruitful Nabathæ doth lie.

The Country much of the same Nature with the other, but in some parts thereof more fertile, if well manured: and in the time of Marc' Antonius, affirmed to be a rich Land, flourishing with variety of Trade and Traffick. But for the most part full of untravellable Deserts, except to those which carry their Provisions with them for fear of Starving, and go in great Companies, or Caravans for fear of Robbing: and yet much Travelled by Merchants who Traffick into Aegypt and Babylonia; the Commodities whereof they lay on Camels, which are the Ships of Arabia, as their Seas the Deserts. For upon one of the Camels, they will lay ordinarily 600 and sometimes 1000 pound weight: yet not afford him Water above once in four days, not oftner in fourteen, if there be occasion. So that the Camel carrying so great a burden, and seldom fewer than 500 going in one Voyage, the Merchant, if he escapeth Robbing, makes a rich return. Of these Deserts the most memo-table are those of Sin and Liban, in which the Arabians so long wandered, nor the first of Liban, nor adorned with Trees, the Palm only excepted; nor is watered with Water, but by Rain or Manna.

The People of it for the most part descended of the Sons of Chus and Ismael, intermix'd with the Arabians, descending from Abraham by Keturah, and the Amalekites, descended probably from Abraham, the Grandson of Ismael, mentioned Gen. 25. 16. but all united at last in the name of Arabians. This name derived, as some think, from Sarra, signifying a Desert, and Saracen, which signifieth to Inhabit, because they live for the most part in these Desert places: and others say, from Sarak, signifying a Thief or Robber, agreeable to that of Arabia, before delivered. This last most suitable to their nature, and best liked by Strabo. Saraceni a vicinis dicuntur ab Elharak, i.e. a vicinis, quod rapinis vacillant. So he, in his second Book de Emend. Tem. A People not reckoned in the former time till made remarkable by their Compect of a great part of the World, but always counted Warlike and Martial Men. Of whom take this Character out of Arrian. The Saraceni (saith he) whom we are ready to wish for our Friends nor Enemies, are a Martial People, half naked, clad as far as the groin with painted Cassocks, ranging up and down on Camels and swift Horses, as well in peace as troublesome times. Not used to the Plough, to plant Trees, or get their living by Tillage; they wander from one place to another, without house or home, or any constant dwelling place, or the use of Laws; nor can they long endure the same, either Air or Soil, the manner of their living being always sitting like ravenous Kites; which if they chance to spy a prey, snatch it up in their flight: or if they chance to fasten on it as it lieth on the ground, they make no long stay. Their food is chiefly upon Venison, and store of Milk, herbs which they gather from the ground, and Birds which they get by Fowling; but altogether ignorant of Corn and Wine. Their Wives they only hire for a time, though for a shew of Matrimony they present their Husbands with a Spear and a Tent, as in way of Dowry; but they part with them when they please. Both Sexes not extremely given to Carnal Lusts, the Women as rambling as the Men, Married in one place, and brought to bed in another; leaving their Children where they fall, without more care of them. So far, and to this purpose he.

Rivers of note here are not many. The principal are, 1. that called Trajanus amnis, or the River of Trajan, which passing through this Country endeth his Course in the Red-Sea. 2. Rhinocorura, called in Scripture the torrent of Aegypt, which rising in this Country, and passing by the Borders of Idumæa, hath its fall in the Lake of Sirbon; and together with the waters thereof, loseth it self at last in the Mediterranean.

With Mountains it is better stored, and those of eminent observation, as 1. Mount Sinat famous in all Ages for the promulgation of the Law; and of late times for a Monastery of Maronites on the Top thereof. The Hill so high, that both shores of the Red-Sea may be thence seen; but easie of ascent, by reason of steps cut out of the Rock: which notwithstanding, he that beginneth to go up it at the break of day, will hardly overcome the top of it till the afternoon. The Monastery made an Episcopal See, and formerly very well endowed, as appeareth by the Letters of Eugenius Bishop thereof, to the Arch Duke Charles, anno 1569. complaining that the Turk had sold all their Land, and that himself and the Monks were fain to pawn their holy vessels, and take up Money on Usury. Here is also a Meque, or Mejquit of Turks, who resort in Pilgrimage to this Hill as well as the Christians. 2. Mount Horch, where the Israelites worshipped the molten Calf, about a mile and a half distant from Mount Sinat, but not so high: on the top of which is a Church also; and a Monastery of Colories or Greek Monks, at the bottom, exceeding Hospitable to Strangers, whom they entertain of free-cost and cheerfully shew them all the places worth observation, which the Scripture mentioneth in that tract. Both hills by Ptolomy called Melany, or the Black Mountains; the last now called Orub. 3 Mount Hor, bordering on Idumæa; and memorable for the death of Aaron.

Places of most observation, 1 Petra, the name given to this part, at first called Rekem, and at that time belonging to Midian: afterwards called Sela, when pertaining to the Idumæans. But falling under the power of the Arabians, it is now called Crat. Best known in holy Scriptures by the name of Sela, before-mentioned, which signifies the same with the Latin Petra. A City of great note and strength in all times foregoing, taken by Amaziah the King of Judah, 2 Kings 14. 7. and by him called Jock-beli; but in vain Besieged by Scaurus, a Roman General, who finding the place to be impregnable, was content by the perswasion of Antipater, to take a Sum of Money and Raise the Siege. Nor did the Emperor Trajan speed much better at it, his Soldiers being still beat off in all their Assaults, the very next man to him slain with a Dart and himself forced to cast away his Imperial Habit, and flee for his life; the Heavens themselves, if Dion (who is never sparing of the like Prodigies) may be believed, fighting against the Romans with Thunder and Lightning, Whirl-winds and Tempests, as often as they made any approaches to it: But in the end Subdued with the rest of the Country. In such esteem, by reason of the strength of it, by the Soldans of Ægypt, that they kept here their choicest Treasures; and in the course of the Holy Wars, much aimed at by the Turks and Christians, as the Key that opened the Gates of Palestine; on the South border whereof, not far from Mount Hor, before-mentioned, the Town is situate. The Metropolis of the Province when first under the Romans; and made the Seat of a Latin Bishop, when the Christians of the West were the Lords thereof. 2 Bosra, said to have been built by Augustus Cæsar, because by him repaired, when decayed and Ruined; afterwards by Alexander Severus made a Colony of the Romans. This last most certain, and for such testified by this ancient Inscription in an ancient Coin, COL. BOSTRAIN. T. R. ALEXANDRIANÆ. Memorable also for the Birth of Philip the Emperor, one of that Alexander's next Successors, by whom it was caused for a time to be called Philippus; for the Metropolitan Dignity removed hither from Petra somewhat before the time of Justinian, but by whom I find not; and for being the Episcopal See of Titus (hence surnamed) Bosrenus, a Reverend Father of the Church in the time of Julian the Apostate. A City of as great Antiquity as the most that be, mentioned, Gen. 36. 33. though there accounted of as a City of Edom, to which at that time it did belong; and is still remaining, and well known by the name of Russeretb. 3 Elama, on a Bay of the Red-Sea, called hence Sinus Elamiticus. 4 Phara, reckoned by Ptolomy for a chief Town of this Tract, from whence the Wilderness of Paran seems to take its name 5 Berenice, so called from some of the Queens of Ægypt, but better known by the name of Exion-gaber, one of the Stations or Encampings of the Children of Israel; and made by Solomon the ordinary Harbour for his Ships, which Sailed to Ophir in the East-Indies. 6 Sur, the chief City of the Amalakites, giving name to the Wilderness or Desert of Sur, coming close up to it: remarkable for the first Encampings of the Tribes of Israel after their miraculous passage over the Red-Sea; and the defeat which Saul gave to the Amalakites, whom he smote from Havilah to this place. 7 Havilah, so called from Havilah the Son of Chus, being the farthest border of these Amalekites, and Ismaelites, on the Gulf of Persia, as Sur was on the Red-Sea or Gulf of Arabia. 8 Madian, so called of Madian, the son of Abram by Ketura, situate towards the Red Sea also; the City of Jethro, whose Daughter Zipporah was the Wife of Moses; who flying from the Court of Pharaoh King of Ægypt, was by God's secret Providence directed hither: that keeping the Flocks of Jethro in the Desarts adjoining, he might acquaint himself with the ways and passages through which he was after to lead the House of Israel. 9 Rephaim, the Encamping place of Moses, where he discomfited the Amalekites; and to which the said Jethro came to him with his Wife and Children, advising him to ease himself of some part of that burden, which the Government of so great a People would else bring upon him. 10 Kadesh-barnea, the station of the Tribes, when the spies which were sent to discover the Land of Canaan returned back unto them; memorable for the death of Miriam the Prophetess. And 11 Thara, no less memorable for the Mutiny and Punishment of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, the place remembered, Num. 33. 27. But others will have 12 Mackbeloth, mentioned v. 25. of that Chapter, to be the stage of that action, the Scriptures being silent in this particular. The rest of their Encamping places, being most of them in this part of Arabia, I omit of purpose, as obvious in the Scripture unto every Reader: as I do also some of the Cities of Moab and Ammon, accounted of by Ptolomy, as Cities of this Province, but spoken of already in our Description of Palestine, to which more properly belonging.

The old Inhabitants of this Country were the Midianites, the Ismaelites, the Amalekites, and the Children of Chus; who dwelling promiscuously together, are sometimes used for one another: the Merchants which bought Joseph of his Brethren, being indifferently called Midianites and Ismaelites. Gen. 37. 28. and Zipporah the Wife of Moses, who questionless was a Daughter of Midian, being by Miriam and Aaron called an Ethiopian or Chusite, as in way of Reproach, Num. 12. 1. But being they were different Nations, and such as had some special engagement with or against the Children of Israel, we will consider them by themselves, till we have brought them into one Body, by the name of Chusites, Ethiopians, or Arabians, which are all the same.

And first the MADIANITES were such of the Posterity of Madian, the Son of Abram by Ketura, who preserving the knowledge of the true God, withdrew themselves from all communion with the Idolatrous Canaanites, at such time as the rest of their brethren did associate with them; and settled themselves more towards the banks of the Red Sea, where they did all good Offices to the Children of Israel, as they passed through their Country. Of these the Kenites were a Branch, as appeareth, Judg. 1. 16. where Jethro the Prince or Priest of Madian, is called a Kenite: some of which turned Prophets and dwelt with the Israelites in Canaan; of which Race Heber the Kenite, the husband of Jael, who slew Sisera, was undoubtedly one. The rest, continuing mingled with the Amalekites, till the time of Saul, were by him warned (in memory of former Courtesies) to withdraw themselves from them; lest they should perish with them in the same destruction. Afterwards we hear little of either People, losing their name in the greater Nation of the Israelites, with whom intermingled, or passing with them in the same common notion of Arabians, Chusites, or Ethiopians.

Secondly, nor were the AMALEKITES, though a greater and more powerful Nation, of much more continuance; descended, as it is conceived, from Amalek, the Grandson of Esau (though I deny not but there are some reasons to be urged against that opinion) and planted on the backs of the Edomites, as their Guard or Out-work. A people mischievously bent against those of Israel, as if they had inherited the hatred which Esau their Fore-father did bear to Jacob, whom they violently set on at Rephidim, when they supposed them spent and wearied with their flight from Ægypt. And though discomfited in that Battel, yet they continued in their malice lice against the Tribes, joyning first with the Canaanites against them when they were in their March; and after with the Midianites, when not well settled in their new Possession. A provocation so ill taken by the Lord of Hosts, because unnatural, and ill grounded, that he declared his resolution from the time of the Battel of Rephidim to put out the Remembrance of Amalek from under Heaven, Exod. 17. 14. Accordingly, when the Children of Israel were provided for it, he commanded Saul to set upon them, and to slay both Man and Woman, Infant and Suckling, yea, their Sheep and Cattle. But some of them escaped this slaughter, and fell not long after upon Ziglag, the retiring place of David, which they took and ransacked; but being by him followed on the first Intelligence, they were easily overthrown, and the prey recovered. Their Malice yet survived their Power; and what they could not do by their Forces, they endeavoured to effect by joyning with the Ammonites, Moabites, and other Enemies of David, in their Wars against him. And this was ultimam conam, one of the last flashes of their dying light; nothing done by them worth remembrance of the times succeeding, most of the Nation being worn out, and those few which were left, retiring to the Mountains of Edom, but thereof also dispossessed by the Simeonites, during the Reign of Hezekiah.

Thirdly, the ISMAELITES, descending from Ismael the Son of Abraham by Hagar, branched into twelve great Nations, and grown wondrous populous, spread themselves over a great part of these three Arabia's: all of them either Thieves or Merchants; Trading to Egypt in Spicery, and Balm, and Myrrh, or Robbing those which Traded in the like Commodities. Called also Hagarens in the Scripture, as 1 Chron. 5. 10. Psal. 83. 6, &c. and by that name well known to many of the ancient Writers. A People for the most part of a vagabond and roguish life, more given to Spoil than any honest course of living, which made every Traveller and Merchant to be Armed against them; so verifying the prediction which was given to Ismael, that he should be a wild Man, having his hand against every man, and every man's hand against him. S. Hierom so conceives that Prophecy to have been accomplished. More fitly verified perhaps, when in and under the name of Saracens (by which, and by the name of Scenites, they were most generally known to the Greeks and Romans) they made such foul havock in the World, and were esteemed the common Enemies of all civil Nations. Never so governable in their best and most orderly times, as to acknowledge King or Law, till made one Body with the Chusites, and the rest of those Nations: and then no further, than it stood with their lust or liking.

Fourthly, As for the Chusites, tho' they permitted the Nations above-specified, to inhabit in those Desarts and wast places, which themselves either could not people, or cared not for; yet were they always of most power, and gave name to that whole tract of ground, containing now all Petræa, the South part of Deserta, and the Mountains which divide Petræa from Arabia Felix; which from them was called Chus, or the Land of Chus. Rendred in all places of the Old Testament by the name of Ethiopia, first by the Septuagint, and afterwards by all the Fathers Greek and Latine, the Vulgar Translation of the Bible, and almost all the other Translations at this day extant. And rendred right enough at first, as in all times since, tho' by some mistaken: who having never heard of any other Ethiopia than that in Africk, have transferred thither all those Actions and Texts of Scripture, which are meant of this. The Septuagint, no doubt, were not so ignorant of the Affairs of their next neighbouring Nation, as not to know by what name they were called by the Greeks, their then Lords and Masters. And he that looks into the History of Herodotus, who liv'd 150 years before that Translation, will find, that by the Greeks they were called Ethiopiens and called so questionless from the self same reason; that is to say, the swartheiness, or Sun-burntneess of their Complexion, as the Libyans of Africk were: that name being framed from the Greek word, ἠθίοψ, signifying to burn; and ὄψ, a Countenance, by reason of their tawny and Sunburnt Countenances. For, speaking of the huge Army of Xerxes against the Greeks, he doth thus proceed, 'Ἀραβίων δ' ἔχ' Ἀιθίοπων δ' ἔχ' Αἰγυπτίων ἐκὼς Ἀραβίων, &c. Arames (saith he) was Captain of the Arabians (he meaneth the Trogludites) and Ethiopiens which are beyond Egypt: but the Eastern Ethiopiens were ranked with the Indians, nothing differing from the other in the structure of their Bodies, but their hair and voice only; the Eastern Ethiopiens wearing their hair smooth, those of Lybia curled. The Ethiops of Asia were armed like the Indians, but the Ethiops of Africa were arrayed with the Skins of Beasts. Here then we have an Asian Ethiopia in the Time of Herodotus; the same acknowledged by Strabo, an old Greek Writer, and by Philostratus after him, though they look for it in the wrong place: The first amongst the Seres, in the North of Asia; the other on the River Ganges, too much in the East. Nor doth Strabo, one of the old Cosmographers, published by Simlerus, shoot more near the Mark, who speaking of the River Tigris, saith, That it burieth it self, and runneth under the Ground in Ethiopia. Which though Simler doth interpret of these parts of Arabia; yet questionless that Author meaneth it of the Country about Mount Taurus, where that River doth indeed run under ground, and having passed under those vast Mountains, riseth up again.

But what need further search be made to find out the situation of this Ethiopia, when it is bounded out so plainly in the Holy Scriptures? For when it is said of Zipporah the Wife of Moses, that she was an Ethiopian Woman, Numb. 12. 1. who is well known to have been a Native of this Country; and when it is said in 2 Chron. 21. 16. That the Lord stirred up against Jehoram the Spirit of the Philistines, and of the Arabians that were near the Ethiopiens; it must needs be that the Ethiopia there spoken of, must be conterminous to the rest of Arabia, and be intended of that Country wherein Madian was. So where God threatneth by the Mouth of the Prophet Ezekiel, That he would lay waste the Land of Egypt, from the Tower of Syene, even unto the Borders of Ethiopia, Cap. 29. 10. that is to say, from one end thereof unto the other, it followeth necessarily, that Ethiopia there meant, must be this part of Arabia, or the Land of Cush, as the bound of Egypt most remote from the Tower of Syene, which all Geographers acknowledge to be in the extreme South parts thereof towards the Cataracts of Nilus. For to expound it, as some do, of Ethiopia in Africk, on the Borders whereof Syene stood; and stood so indifferently betwixt it and Egypt, that Stephanus, an Ancient Writer, makes it very doubtful to which of the two it did belong, were to make the Scripture speak plain Nonsense: As plain as if a Man should say, That the French conquered all the Netherlands from Graveling to Flanders; or that the Sword hath ranged over all England, from Barwick to Scotland. As then we have found this Ethiopia of the Old Testament to be near the Philistines on the one side, and the Land of Egypt on the other; so may we find it to be bounded also on the East, with Babylonia or Chaldea: The River Gibon, which is said to compass the whole Land of Ethiopia, (or the Land of Cush) Gen. 2. 13. being no other than a Branch of the River Euphrates, which falleth into the Lakes of Chaldea. So that the Translation of the Septuagint in reading Chusites, or the Land of Chus by Ethiopia, needs no such alteration or emendation as some men suppose. The Mistakes (whereof there have been many) which rise from hence, not being to be charged on them, or on their Translation, but on the Ignorance of the Reader, or Error of such Expositors, who dreaming of no other Ethiopia than of that in Africk, have made the Sep-ture speak of such things as it never means, and carried these Chusites into the African Ethiopia, where they never were. And yet perhaps it may be said, that the Posterity of Chus, being straitned in their own Possessions, or willing to seek new Adventures, might have crossed over the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia (being but seven Miles broad where narrowest) and mingling with the Sons of Ludim on the other side, might either give the Name of Ethiopians to them, or receive it from them.

Now to go forward with the story, the first great action attributed to these Chusites, or Arabian Ethiops, incorporated with the rest of those mingled Nations, is the expedition of Zerab the King hereof, against Afa King of Judab, drawing after him an Army of a Million, and 300 Charlots of War (the greatest Army ever read of in unquestioned story) but for all that discomfited by the Lord of Hosts, on the Prayers of Afa; and all the Spoil of that huge Army carried unto Hierusalem. After this, Tirbakab, another of these Ethiopian Kings, finding how dangerous the great growth of the Assyrian Kingdom might prove unto him, prepared a puissant Army against Senacherib, then besieging Libna, threatening the Conquest of all Judab, and invading Egypt: upon the news of whose approach, Senacherib's Forces, which were even upon the gaining of Pelusium, the Gate of Egypt, were fain to dislodge and provide for their safety. For tho' Herodotus calls Senacherib King of Arabia, and Assyria, yet was he Master only of those parts of Arabia, which had been formerly possessed by the Kings of Israel, being no more than some few Cities of Petræa, bordering next unto them: or perhaps called so only in respect of those parts of Syria and Mesopotamia, which were sometimes comprehended under the name of Arabia, as before is said. What part they after took in the great War betwixt Nebuchadnezzar, and Pharaoh Neco King of Egypt, is not hard to say. For besides that the same Reasons of State, obliging them to side with the Egyptian, were still in force; their giving Neco leave to pass thro' their Country with his Army, to invade the Babylonians on the Banks of Euphrates, make that plain enough. Now that both Tirbakab and Zera were Kings of this Asia, and not the African Ethiopia, is most clear and evident; partly in regard the Kings of Egypt would never suffer such huge Armies to pass through the whole length of their Dominions: but principally because 'tis said in the holy Scriptures, that Afa having overthrown that vast Army of Zerab, smote all the Cities about Gaza, which formerly had belonged unto these Philistines, but were then possessed by these Chusites and their Associates. After this, either as Confederates, or Subjects, we find them aiding unto Xerxes, in his War on Greece: and like enough it was that in Alexander's March from Egypt towards Persia, they submitted to him, as did all the other Countreys through which he passed. He being dead, Antigonus, one of his great Commanders, sent Antibanius with an Army to bring them in, who being trained into an Ambush was discomfited by them; Demetrius the Son of Antigonus thinking that he had done enough in revenge of that overthrow, by compelling them to sue for Peace. In the time of the Seleucian Race in Syria, we find them Governed by Kings of their own, most of them called by the name of Aretus, of which one was of special note in the declining Fortunes of the Seleucians, for bidding very fair for the Crown of that Country; and being a stickler in the Wars of Jewry. in the time of Hircanus the fourth King of the Race of the Maccabees, to whom, at the request of Antipater, the Father of Herod, he gave hopes of aid; and on those hopes was possessed of Me laba, and other Towns of good Importance, which Alexander the Father of Hircanus had regained from the Syrians, and laid unto the Crown of Jewry, to which, as parts of Iudæa, and anciently possessed by the Tribes of Israel, he might make some claim. Another there was of the same name, and of no less power, whom we find to have been Warred upon by Herod, about the time of the Battel of Actium, and for the most part Vanquished by him; and finally a third of more power than either, mentioned by S. Paul, 2 Cor. 11. 32. as Lord of Damascus. In the flourishing of the Roman Fortunes, the King hereof having first aided Mithridates and Tygranes in the War against 'em, submitted themselves unto Lucullus, being then no nearer to them than Armenia Major. The like they did to Pompey also, being then in Judæa. First vanquished by Ælius Gallus in the time of Augustus; but the Victory not improved to an absolute Conquest, till the time of Trajan, when partly by his personal presence, and partly by the Valour and good Fortune of Palma, his Lieutenant, they were fully vanquished, and brought into the Form of a Roman Province: But so, that they had Kings of their own, (Vassals and Feudataries of the Empire) as in former times; continuing in that condition till the rise of Mahomet. Of which more hereafter.

3. ARABIA FELIX.

ARABIA FELIX, is bounded on the East with the Persian; on the West, with the Arabian Gulf; on the North with a long Ridge of Mountains, which part it from Deserta and Petræa; and on the South with the boundless Ocean. Environ'd on three parts with the Sea, on the fourth with rough, impassable Mountains; in Situation and Figure much resembling Italy.

It had the name of Arabia Felix from the Fertility and happy condition of it, being esteemed the most fruitful and pleasant Country in all Asia, abounding with Myrrhe, Balsamum, Frankincense, Gold, and Precious Stones: by Curtius called Odorum fertilitate nobilis Regio, from the abundance of Frankincense, wherewith enriched beyond all others. Concerning which there goeth a story, that when Alexander in his Adolescence or Boyage, was Sacrificing to the Gods, and cast into the Fire with both Hands, great store of Frankincense and Myrrhe, Leonidas his Governor, bid him be more sparing of those precious and dear Commodities, till he was Master of the Country in which they grew. Which Alexander remembering, when he had brought almost all the East under his Obedience, he sent unto Leonidas a Ship Laden with Frankincense, bidding him from thenceforth to serve the Gods more Liberally. But as well for the reason of this adjunct, as a more perfect Character and Description of it, take this of Ammianus Marcellinus, who describes it thus: 'On the East and South hereof' (saith he) are the happy Arabians: so called because so 'Rich in Corn; as well as plenteous in Cattel, Vines, 'and Odoriferous Spices of all kinds; shut up betwixt 'the Red Sea, and the Persian Gulf, and so acquainted 'with all Blessings, which either Element can afford: 'well furnish'd with Roads and quiet Harbours for Shipping, the Towns of Trade and Merchandize standing 'very thick; the retiring Houses of the Kings, passing neat 'and sumptuous. Besides most wholsom Fountains of 'n edicinal waters, they enjoy divers Brooks and Rivers 'very clear and pure, and a temperature of Air, exceeding healthy; so that whosoever considereth all things 'aright, may well conclude, that there is nothing wanting to the accomplishment of its felicity in the highest 'degree. So Ammianus Marcellinus. To which we need add nothing more to set forth its happiness, than that Danaus in his Comment on St. Augustin's Enchiridion ad Laurentium, is perswaded that it was the local place of Paradise. Dicitur (saith he) Paradisi terrestris Regio pars quædam esse Arabiæ, quæ nunc dicitur Fœlix. What is here said of the Fertility and happy state of Arabia Felix, is not found true in any tolerable degree by the latter Travellers. Nor doth it seem possible to have ever been otherwise. All that part of it that lies between Nagran,
Oman,

Oman, Sochar, and Baharim for thirty two days Journey in the middle of Arabia Felix is Sandy, Mountainous, desolate, and for want of Water very difficult to pass over, saith the Nubian Geographer: The people on the Eastern Coast about Mascat are very poor, even to extremity; and if the rest be like them, it is one of the unhappiest Countries in the World. Tavernier, p. 94. All that Part that lies towards the Red-Sea, on the West side as far as Mecca is found by the Caravans so wretchedly barren, that every Year they are forced to carry their Provisions with them, or the most part of the Passengers would starve in the Journey; so that all the Fertility of this large Country is confined to the S. W. Angle of this Country, which by the Map will appear the best watered with Rivers; and perhaps, to the Countries watered by those Rivers, which are by no means sufficient to maintain the Inhabitants, the Middle Spaces between these Rivers being either Sandy Deserts, or Mountainous. So Spain by the Ancients celebrated as a Country of wonderful Fertility, but not found so in this Age, but as to the far greatest part of it very barren, and not conceivable how it could ever be otherwise.

Now I think it is not probable the Ancients were so much deceived, or willingly deceived us in these Accounts, but rather that either the Earth by long usage is exhausted to that degree, that it can never be repaired; or else that the people of these latter Ages are less industrious than their Ancestors. A Fruitful Country may become uninhabitable by the neglect of it, for want of draining, stubbing, and clearing, as a great part of Egypt, Campania di Roma and Syria have, which were the best peopled parts of the Old World, but are now desolate.

Again, A Barren Country being filled with Industrious people, every Inch of it by great labour and industry is made like a Garden, to produce what the Earth could never yield without that Extraordinary Culture; yet Travellers do commonly celebrate the Fertility of it, if they find it full of Fruits, without considering what it is in its own Nature, nor how much pains the People have spent to make it such. On the contrary, in America, where the Lands have lyen untill'd ever since the Creation of the World, covered with Woods and Bushes (the first State of Spain and Arabia) there is very little or no Barren Lands: The Grass that grow, rotting for the most part on the Earth, cover it with a Coat of Muck of a considerable thickness, but when our Planters have for some time till'd it, and taken off that first Lustre, it is by no Art to be reduced to its former Fertility. Arabia about the Seventh and Eighth Century conquered so many Countries, that the far greatest part of the Inhabitants of it were drawn out in Armies and Colonies into Egypt, Syria, Persia and Palestine; the Remainder that stay'd in it for some Ages, lived on the naturally Fruitful Lands, and in the mean time lost much of the Industry and Agriculture of their Ancestors; so the Earth not being perfectly desolate, as America upon the Matter is, nor well till'd, has put on quite another Face than it appeared with to the Ancients. The Reader may pardon this Digression, because it will raise some useful Thoughts in him, and shew the danger of following Ancient Accounts, without considering the Present State of Countries. But it hath other Names besides this of Felix. By the Arabians themselves called Jeman, and Al-jeman (Ayam corruptly by the Turks) which in that Tongue signifieth the South, or Southern Region. By Virgil it is nam'd Panchaia quasi tota debescens, because of the many chops and chinks which the ardour of the Sun makes in the Sands thereof, though by him much extolled also for its plenty of Frankincense.

Totaque rburiferis Panchaia pinguis arena.
Famed are the whole Panchaia Lands,
For Rich and Incense-bearing Sands.

The people anciently, though more civil than the rest of the Arabians, had yet many strange and barbarous Customs. Adultery amongst them was punished with Death as in other places; but only he was held an Adulterer, which enjoyed any that was not his own Kinswoman, he sue his Sister or his Mother; and so they kept themselves in their own Families; Community of Wives or Women was esteemed no Crime. And of this there is a Tale in Strabo, that the King of this Country had fifteen Sons, and but one Daughter, who according to the Customs heretofore was the Common Wife of all her Brethren; every of which had a Staff of like making, which when he went in unto his Sister he did leave at the Door; and by so doing did forbid entrance unto the rest, till it were removed. The young Lady, wearied with a continual excess of Dalliance, secretly procured a Staff like unto the rest, which when she was desirous to prohibit their accesses to her, she left at her Chamber-door; and by that means did many times enjoy her desired privacy. At last it hapned that all the Brothers being together, one of them departed towards his Sister's Lodgings, where finding a Staff before the Door, and knowing that he had his Brethren in one place together, he accused her of Adultery: But the Truth being made known, the Lady was acquitted, and their Visits afterwards restrained. Of Death Bed they took no care, not so much as of their Children's Birth, but left them to the custody of the next Neighbour. They bragged much of their Nobility, and neglected all Sciences and Arts, excepting only to be great Nobility. Commendable only in the keeping of their Faith and Promises, and in their most punctual. Much of the same Condition are the present Inhabitants, save that less faithful in their Contracts. And by their Law restrained from meddling with the Wives of others, permitted many of their own. Some there are of them which apply themselves to the grazing of Cattel, and the rest to Merchandize, wherein very cautious and cunning; but hating to this day all Mechanical Arts. A Nation from the beginning unmixed with others, till the coming of the Turks amongst them, of which but few, and those disposed of in Garisons: boasting of their Nobility, and glorying in nothing more than their greatest shame; namely, that the False Prophet Mahomet was their Countryman; whose Impieties are here generally embraced, and followed.

Amongst the Rarities of this Country, some account the Phanix, which growing old burneth her self in a Nest of Spices, and from thence a Young one ingegred, one of them only at a time; which after a life of five or six hundred Years, thus reneweth her Kind. But this Tradition, questioned in Former Times by Flory and some others, is now proved a Fiction; contrary both unto Divinity and Natural Reason: Though some of the Fathers made use of it as an Argument to prove the Resurrection against the Gentiles, by whom the Tradition was believed. More common, but of no less observation, is the Ostrich, a Bird which swalloweth all it findeth, be it Stones or Iron. They delight chiefly in the Deserts, in the Sands whereof they lay their Eggs, and then forgetting where they left them, sit on those they meet next. In that respect accounted for a simple Fowl, tho otherwise of Wit enough to preserve themselves; keeping in Flocks, and oftentimes with their Fearful Skreeches affrighting Passengers, to whom they do appear afar off like a Troop of Horsemen. Their Wings, too little for their Bodies, serve them not for flight, but to run more speedily; and by that means not easily caught, though much laid in wait for, for their skins, which the People sell unto the Merchant with their Feathers on them. Nor of less note is the Frankincense, though of common use; almost peculiar to this Country, and here but to those parts thereof which were formerly possessed by the Sabæi: the wood out of which the Gum proceedeth, being about 100 Miles long and fifty fifty broad; gathered only in Spring and Autumn. More of this anon.

The Country is much commended by Ammianus for plenty of Rivers, the Principal whereof are said by Ptolomy to be 1 Betius, 2 Prin, 3 Harman, 4 Lar; but the Modern names thereof I find not. Many fair Lakes and store of large capacious Bays on each coast of the Sea. 1 Sinus Elaniticus, 2 Sachalites, 3 Leanites, 4 Sinus Magorum, 5 Sinus Jebthyphagorum, 6 Messanites, 7 Sacer Sinus, or the Holy Bay; and 8 the Road or Naval Station called Neogilla. Mountains of most Note; 1 Those which are called Melanes, at the entrance of the Persian Gulf. 2 Cabubutra, at the entrance of the Red Sea or Gulf of Arabia, 3 Hippus, 4 Prionotus, not far from the River Prion, from whence so denominated, 5 Climax, 6 The Mountains called Didymi, &c.

Towns of note in ancient time it had very many, no Region affording unto Ptolomy the names of more; and amongst those many commodious Ports for Traffick, the Sea begirting it for the space of 3000 Miles and upwards. Of most Importance and Observation in those times were, 1 Zebum, 2 Badeo, 3 Rhabana, 4 Carman, 5 Manambis, 6 Saba. The Nubian Geographer saith, in his time it was called Mareh, but was then Ruined; of this City saith he, was Belquis the Wife of Solomon: this City stood on the Brink of the Ocean, but about five days Journey North, 7 Are; The Royal Seats of so many several Kingdoms, and therefore honoured by Ptolomy with the Title of Regia. Then there are, 1 Maocofmos, 2 Meara, 3 Negara, 4 Sabbatha, 5 Mapba, and 6 Saphar, which he called Metropoles; as being the head Cities of some several Nations. Amongst the Ports he reckoneth, 1 Sofippus, 2 Trulla, 3 Tretos, 4 Cryptus, 5 Itamos, and 6 Moscha. Among the most noted Empories or Towns of Traffick, 1 Musa, 2 Oceanus, 3 Arabia, 4 Cane. Besides which, there are some which do preserve the memory of their first Plantations, as 1 Saphta, upon the Persian Gulf, so from Sabta, the first Son of Chus. 2 Rbegama, or Regma (as the Greek Copies of Ptolomy have it) so named from Regma or Ruama the Sixth Son; on the same Gulf also, 3 Sabe, on the Shores of the Red Sea. And 4 Sabe Regia, more within the Land, so named from Sbeba the eldest Son of the same Chus, from which the Rich and Potent Nation of the Sabaeans are to be derived. Out of all which, and many others by him named, we shall take more particular notice of some that follow. 1 Musa, a noted Port on the entrance of the Red Sea, frequented anciently by the Ethiopian and Egyptian Merchants, who there laded their Ships with Frankincense, Myrrbe, Spices, and other commodities of this Country, bringing in, in exchange thereof, Saffron, Corn, Wine, Ointments, Purple Dyes, &c. 2 Saba, the Regal Seat of the Kings of the Sabaeans, particularly of that Queen so memorized in holy Scripture: called in the Old Testament the Queen of Sbeba; from her Country and Place of Dwelling; In the New Testament the Queen of the South, because of the Southern Situation of it in respect of Judaea: said there to come from the furthest parts of the World, because there was no part of the World which lay South to the Country of the Sabaeans, over which she Reigned. Situate on a little Mountain, affirmed by Agorhekoides to be καλὴ καλλίστη καὶ ἡ τῶν Ἀραβίων, the most beautiful by far in all Arabia, and the Metropolis of the Rich and Potent Nation of the Sabaeans: Rich in all the Excellencies of Nature, especially in Frankincense, a Gum peculiar to them only, and growing here in a Wood of about 200 Miles long, and 50 broad; not gathered but in the Spring and Autumn, nor then without great care, and many ceremonies. The Country hereabouts from hence called Thurifera, and this sweet Gum appropriated solely to it. Sabæi Arabum propter thura clarissimi; as we find in Pliny; Sals est thurea vinga Sabæis, as it is in Virgil: and finally, — Thuriferos, felicia regna, Sabæos, in the Argonauticks of Valerius Flaccus. It was called also Mariaba, and by that name occurreth in some ancient Writers, 3 Saphar, more towards the Persian Gulf, on the South side of the Mountain Climax, the chief City of the Homeritæ; Adorned in times of Christianity with a beautiful Temple, 4 Sabatba, or Sabota; as Pliny calleth it, seated about the midst of the Country, on the top of an high and lofty Hill, from whence it had a gallant Prospect on the Fields adjoining: anciently large and populous, and strongly Fortified, having no fewer than 60 Temples within the Walls; the Principal Consecrated unto Sabis, the God of their Nation, to whom they Offered the Tythe of their Frankincense, ubi decimas Deo quem Sabin vocant, mensura non pondere capiunt Sacerdotes, as we read in Pliny.

But these, and almost all the rest being grown out of knowledge, there have risen in their rooms, 1 Egra, on the Shores of the Red Sea, near the Bay called Sinus Elaniticus, by Ptolomy called Agra, by the Arabians themselves Algjar: The Port-Town to Medina, from which, about three days Journey distant, 2 Fatbrib, or Fatrib, in the way betwixt Algjar and Medina, the Birth-place of Mabomet; by whom Fortified with a Mud-wall, as his first place of retreat in the beginning of his Fortunes, 3 Medina, commonly called Medina Talmabi, corruptly for Medinathalnabi, that is to say, the City of the Prophet, so called from the Sepulchre of Mabomet, that vile Impostor, which is there to be seen; although not in such an Iron Coffin; or drawn up to the Roof of the Temple, by virtue of an Adamant there placed, as some deliver. The Town situate in a desolate and Barren place, bordering on Arabia Petraea, but of great Trade, Rich, and well Inhabited: The Sepulchre of that false Prophet drawing thither a continual resort of Pilgrims. The Temple gorgeous, having 3000 Lamps in it, which burn continually. The Sepulchre or Tomb enclosed with an Iron Grate, but of no Magnificence or Beauty: covered with a Carpet of green Velvet, which is sent hither yearly by the Grand Signior; the old one being taken off, and cut into innumerable shreds or pieces, and sold for Relicks by the Priests (to such as come in Pilgrimage thither) to their great enriching. About sixty Miles East from Medina, lies the City of Taief, or Taref, which, saith the Nubian Geographer, Pag. 47. though small, is very populous, seated in a well watered Soil, and abounding in Fruits, and especially Grapes, which are dried and Transported to Medina; from hence is brought most of the Diet eaten at Medina. It stands upon Mount Gbazuan, which is the highest, coldest, and most fruitful Mountain in all Arabia, 4 Cusa, the ordinary Residence of the first Caliphs, till the removing of the Imperial Seat to Damascus in Syria; and after that the usual place of meeting for Consultation in Affairs of State, relating to the Peace of this Country, and safety of this People; as Memorable for the Sepulchre of Mortis Hali, the Progenitor of the Persian Sophies, as Medina is for that of Mabomet, 5 Meccha, supposed to be the Mechara of Ptolomy, situate in the like barren Soil, 270 miles from Medina, but of far greater Resort and Traffick: The whole wealth in a manner of this Country, together with the Commodities of Persia and India, being first brought hither, and from hence on Camels backs transported into Egypt, Syria, Palestine, and other parts of the Turkish Empire. Unwalled, and either for that cause, or for concealment of their Fopperies from the eyes of the Christians, it is made death for any Christian to come within five miles of it. Utterly destitute of water, but what they keep in Cisterns, from one shower of Rain to another, or else brought thither with great charge; otherwise pleasantly seated, Rich, and containing about 6000 Families: Every year visited with three Caravans, or Troops of Merchants and Pilgrims, from India, Damascus, and Grand Cairo; who having done their Business and Devotions there, go afterwards terwards in Pilgrimage to Medina also, to the great enriching of both places, 6 Ziden, the Haven-Town to Mecca, from which distant about forty miles, situate on the Red Sea, in a Sandy Soil, unwalled, and much exposed to Wind and Weather; but wealthy, well-built, and of great resort. 7 Zebit, now the Metropolis of the Country, situate about half a days Journey from the Red-Sea, in a large Plain. between too Mountains; a Riveret of the same name passing by it: well Traded for Sugars, Spice and Fruits: The ordinary Residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg, by whom taken not long after. This City is called by the Nubian Geographer, Zabid, and Zebid, and is placed twenty days Journey from Mecca, p. 50. He saith it is a vast, rich, populous City, and the Center of the Trade of Ethiopia, Egypt, and China, p. 24. It stands fifty miles from the Red Sea, 132 from Saana to the S. W. In a temperate Air and a fruitful Soil. 8 Eltor, a Port-Town of this Country, and the only Town where the Christians are suffered to Inhabit. 9 Aden, on the very entrance of the Red Sea, near the Straights called Babel Mandel; supposed by some to be the Madoce of Ptolomy, but more agreeing in situation with the famous Empory by him him called Arabia. The fairest Town of the whole Peninsula, of great strength, both by Art and Nature, well Traded, and well Fortified, having a large capacious Haven, seldom without good store of Shipping, and containing to the number of 6000 Persons. Once a distinct Kingdom of it self, but Treacherously Surprized by the Turks, Anno 1538. and therewith all the rest of the Country: made afterwards the Seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, under whom, and him of Zebet, are supposed to be no fewer than 3000 Timariots. The Turks were not long Masters of Aden before the Arabians Revolted, and put themselves under the Protection of the King of Mocha, a City on the same Gulf, more to the North. The Nubian Geographer saith it was in his time a small, but a Celebrated City, being a Port much frequented by the Ships which Sail d on the Red Sea and the Ocean, and a kind of Center of the Eastern and Western Trade. On the back of it, but at a distance lay a Mountain which reached to the said Seas, and had only two Passages, one to the East and the other to the West. 10 Oran, The Lock and Key of the Southern Ocean. 11 Therna, or Theman, the same, I take it, which our later Travellers call Zeman, situate more within the Land: affirmed by Benjamin the Jew, surnamed Teudelenfis, to be a Town of fifteen miles square, but to have within the walls thereof a great quantity of Ground for Tillage. 12 Zarwal, a retiring place of the Caliphs, when they lived in this Country. 13 Hor, on the Point, or Promontory, called Chorodemus, a Garison not long since of the Kings of Ormus, 14 Muskabat, on the Persian Gulf near the point of Land called Cape Rozelgate: opposite to Surrat in the East-India, and possessed by the Portugals, who have Fortified it with a well-built Castle, for the defence of their Ships and Frigots, which frequent those Seas. Of no great note till the taking of Ormus by the Persians, many of the Inhabitants wherof were since settled here. Tavernier, part 2. p. 16. of his Travels South, saith, The City of Mascate, or Muscate, is seated at the foot of a Mountain by the Sea-side; and has three Rocks at the entrance of the Harbour, which make the Access very difficult, and besides, in Summer, the heat is scarce to be endured: whilst this was in the Possession of the Portuguese, it was the fourth Government depending on the Vice Roy of Goa, and afforded a great Revenue, Ibid. p. 75. But one Aceph-Ben-Ali, Prince of Norennæ (a small Province, but the most fruitful in all Arabia) beat the Portuguese out of Mascate, and afterwards call'd himself King of that City. Ibid. part 2. p. 145. 15 Hardranuit, which was small, and produced some Aloes, but inferiour to that of Zocotora. 16 Merbat, a Mountain and City, famed and much resorted to for Frankincense; of old Sabea. 17 Sanaa, a City seated twenty days Journey from Mecca to the South East, which is one of the greatest and most populous Cities of Arabia, as Nubienfis saith, p. 25. Seated in a Temperate Air, and a Fruitful Soil; 104 miles from Aden, to the N.E. 132 miles from Zebet. 18 Saada, a City in Arabia Felix, between Zebet to the S.W. and Sanaa to the N.E. twenty days Journey from Mecca. 19 Schar, the Capital of Oman, upon the entrance of the Persian Gulf, 450 miles from Muskabat, or Muskabat to the S.E. In ancient times Ships went from this Port to China, Nubi. page 53. Of the Affairs of this Country we shall speak anon; having first took a brief view of the Islands which belong unto it.

4. The ARABICK ISLANDS.

THE ISLANDS which lie round about the Shores of Arabia Felix, and have been anciently accounted as parts thereof, are dispersed either in the 1 Red Sea, 2 Southern Sea, or 3 the Gulf of Persia.

I. The RED SEA (called also by the Ancients Sinus Arabicus, and now Golfo di Mecca) is that part or branch of the Southern Ocean, which interposeth it self betwixt Egypt on the West; Arabia Felix, and some parts of Petræa, on the East; the North East bound of it touching upon Idumea, or the Coast of Edom, Extended in length from the Town of Suez, anciently called Arsmoe, in the bottom of it, to the Straights of Babel-Mandel, where it openeth into the Southern Ocean, for the space of one thousand four hundred miles: in breadth, for the most part, but one hundred, but in some places almost two; the Straights themselves not being above a mile and an half, anciently Chained by the Kings of Egypt, as is said by Strabo; but now left open by the Turk, who is Lord hereof. A violent and unquiet Sea, full of Sands and Shelves; inso much as they who pass in and out, are fain to make use of Pilots which dwell thereabouts, and are experienced in the Channel. Sufficiently famous in all Times and Stories for the Miraculous passage of the Children of Israel, and the drowning Pharaoh King of Egypt. Thevenot in his Travels, page 1. chap. 33. observes, that this Sea is called in Hebrew, the Sea of Rushes, by the Arabs, Rush-el Cal-zem, from Clysmæ, an old Town now Ruined. That it Ebbs and Flows like the Ocean. That before the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope, it was much frequented, but now very little, as being narrow and dangerous. The Geographia Nubienfis observes that the Zenguitæ, which lay between the Kingdom of Abascia or Ethiopia to the South, and Egypt to the North, had Iman (Arabia Felix) to the North, and that the Red Sea was here 600 miles broad, whereas more Northward, Thevenot observes it was not above eight miles over. The Nubian Geographer, page 3. calls it Zogor, makes it sixty miles long, and twelve broad and saith, though it has no living Creature in it, the Water being hot and Putrid, yet small Ships passed upon it.

It took the name of the Red Sea, as some conceived from the Redness of the Sands; as others have deliver'd from the Redness of the Waters: but latter observations have discovered the weakness and absurdity of these Etymologies; the Sea and Sands being coloured here as in other places. By the Grecians it was called Erythræum, which in that Tongue signifieth Red also, not from the colour, either of the Sands or Waters, but from one Erythras, supposed to be the Son of Persus and Andromeda, who commanded the Eastern Shores hereof. And these come nearer to the mark than the others did. For the truth is, it was originally called the Sea of Edom, because it took beginning on the Coasts of that Country: which word in the Hebrew signifying Red, as appeareth, Gen. 25. 30. first given as a nick-name to Esau, and from him afterwards to Mount Seir, or the Land of Edom, Gen. 36. 31. was by the Greeks rendred Erythræum, and and Mare Rubrum by the Latins. Whence the name of the Red Sea became known to all, but the reason of the name to few.

Of the great Traffick which was anciently driven up this Sea, we shall speak hereafter, when we are in Egypt, on the other side of it. Look we now on the Islands which belong to Arabia; as they all generally do; known in the times of Ptolomy by the names of, 1 Adani, 2 Eni, 3 Are, 4 Cardamin, 5 Combusta, 6 Damanum, 7 Hiracum, or the Isle of Hawks, 8 Maliaci, 9 Polybii, 10 Socratus, 11 Timagenis, and 12 Zigana. But by what names now called, and of what note then, is a thing so doubtful, that I dare not offer a conjecture. Late Travellers report almost all of them to be small, desolate, or but meanly Inhabited, described by them under other names. One there is of indifferent largeness, said to be an 125 miles long, tho' but twelve broad, called Dalagu, with a City in it of that name, where they gather Pearls. 2. Then there is Camaran, most extremely hot, of most note for the many spoils there made by the Portugals. 3 Xamoa, the Earth whereof is said to be Red (perhaps to countenance the vulgar Tradition, of calling this the Red Sea from the colour of the Sands or Shores) and the King a Moor. 4 The Samaritan Island, spoken of by Scaliger, Inhabited by a remainder of that People, who as soon as they saw any Stranger Land upon their Coasts, would most Religiously desire him not to touch them. Such other Islands as lie upon the opposite shores, and seem to appertain unto Ethiopia shall find their place in our Description of the African Islands.

II. The SOUTHERN OCEAN, comprehendeth that vast Body of Waters, which from the Eastern Banks of both Ethiopia's, Coast along on the South of Arabia Felix, and so directly Eastward, to the furthest India: In this regard called by some Writers Oceanus Indicus, by others Mare Australe, from the situation; and by some also Mare Rubrum, or the Red Sea, from Erythras a great King (as they suppose) Reigning hereabouts, and giving name not only to the Red Sea (or Gulf of Arabia) strictly and specially so called, but to all the Sea-Coasts also, from the opening of the Bay of Arabia, to the Coasts of India, by them called Mare Erythraeum.

In this vast Ocean Ptolomy placeth many Islands which belong to Arabia, but of little note, viz. two Islands by the name of Insula Agathoclis, 2 Three more by the name of Cocconati, 3. Dioscoris, by Pliny called Dioscurias, with a City of the same name in it. 4 Seven others in the Bay called Sinus Sachalites, by the name of Zenobii, 5 Organa, by Strabo called Tyrrina, memorable for the Sepulchre of Erythras before-mentioned, being a great Hill planted with Trees, 6 Serapias, by Ammianus Marcellinus called Turgana, famed for a Temple of Serapis, the Egyptian Idol. None of them now of any Credit, nor formerly of any great Note, the two last excepted. The Nubian Geographer informs us that near the Streights of Babel Mandel, lies the Isle of Socotora, or Zocotora, great, large, and beautiful, and affording beautiful trees, and amongst them the best Aloes; which Island he saith, was by Alexander the Great, Peopled with Grecians, and in his time, the XII. Century, was possessed by none but Christians. He saith the leaves of these Trees are gathered in July, and the juice being forced out of them, it is in August exposed to the heat of the Sun in Brass pots till 'tis turn'd into that substance in which we see and use it. Paris, 1619. 4to. pag. 25. 5 Chartan. 6 Martan, both Celebrated very much by the same for their Amber, and Oyster, a shell-fish, of which the Arabians made Dishes.

III. On the East side of Arabia Felix, betwixt it and Persia, lieth another large Arm of the Southern Ocean, anciently called Sinus Persicus, or the Bay of Persia, now Golfo di Elkarisso. A Turbulent and unruly Sea, the Southern Ocean breaking in at the one end and the River Euphrates at the other: the continual combating or clashing of which two great Waters, make it so unquiet. Ptolomy placeth in this Bay (but as parts or members of Arabia) 1 Tylus, which Arianus sets at the mouth of Euphrates, Solinus in the Indian Seas, affirming it to be well stored with Vines and Olives: another of this name being placed by Theophrastus in the Bay of Arabia (but probably the place mistaken) affording good Materials for Shipping. 2 Apphana, 3 Tharo, 4 Ichbara; of which nothing memorable. To these some late Travellers have adjoyn'd two others, if not some of the former, under these new names, that is to say, 5 Bayer. This Island is written Bakron, Babaron, and though seated on the Coast of Arabia, is subject to the King of Persia. The Waters in the Island are so salt, that they can be drunk by none but the Natives, so that the Island would be wholly deserted but for the Pearl-Fishery, which maintains the Persian Garrison in it, Tavernier part 2. page 145. And 6 Confiar, where they take the best Pearls in the World, in Beds of Oysters. Other Islands of this Bay (if any) belong to Persia; where, if occasion so require, we shall speak more of them.

To return therefore to the Main Land of Arabia Felix. The first Inhabitants thereof were the Sons of Chus, and the Families which they brought with them. Their Memories preserved in the names of some of the chief Towns and Nations till the daysof Pliny, Ptolomy, and some other of the Ancient Writers. Divided afterwards into the several Tribes or Septs of the Cassanite, Cmaedocolpita, Homerite, Adramite, Elefari, Sachalite, Anarite, Gerraei, Aegwi, Sabaei, Minai, Leanite, Cattabani, Abuceni, and divers others: each Governed seperately, and apart by their several Chiefs; whom they Honoured as in other places, with the name of Kings. One of which spoken of by Justine, named Hierotimus, is said to be the Father of 500 Children. Easie to have been overcome, because so divided, if any potent Neighbour had attempted the Conquest of them: as it is wondrous strange they did not, considering the Richness of the Country, and the many temptations which they had to invite them to it. More worthily deserving the name of Felix, in that never Conquered, than in all the other Rarities and Delights thereof. By Alexander once design'd for the Seat of his Empire, who probably had endeavoured the Conquest of it, having finished his War against the Persians, had he not died in Babylon at his coming back. Nor did the Romans ever extend their Empire beyond Petræa, tho' once Augustus did attempt it; employing in that Action Largus, his Lieutenant in Egypt: One Sames being then King of those parts which lay nearest to him. The Romans at their first entry found no resistance: but when by the extraordinary heat of the Air, and drinking salt waters, they began to grow sickly and diseased, the Arabians fell lustily upon them, and made them return back both with loss and shame. After this nothing done by the Romans to disturb their quiet; nor much done by the Christians to advance their Glories: the whole divided into almost as many Religions, as Principalities and Estates. Most of them Gentiles, but Circumcised, as the Ismaelites, and other Arabians, had been of old; many Jews intermingled with them, and some store of Christians, but those divided also into Sects and Factions. And in this state it stood, when Mahomet first began to broach his blasphemous dotage. By Birth of Jathrip, an obscure Village then not far from Medina: His Father called Abdalla, an Idolatrous Pagan; his Mother named Hemina, as perverse a Jew. Deprived of both his Parents when but two years old, he was left unto the care of an Uncle: who not able to give him Education, nor willing to be at the charge to keep him longer, sold him at sixteen years of Age to the Ismaelites; by whom exposed to sale in the open Markets, he was bought by one Abdalmutalis, a wealthy Merchant.

Merchant. By him employed at first in Drudgery, and fervile Offices, till noting his great Wit, and fitness for better Services, he at last used him as his Factor: sending him with his Camels and Loads of Merchindize into Syria, Persia, Agypt, and other Places, wherein he did behave himself with such dexterity, that he much encreased his Masters Wealth, and his own estimation. Of Person he is said to be low, and withal scald-headed, but otherwise comely to the eye, and of good Aspect. Much troubled with the Falling-Sickness, which Infirmary he made good use of afterwards, affirming that those Fits were nothing but Heavenly Raptures, in which he did converse with the Angel Gabriel. He is said to have been also well skill'd in Magick, by which he taught a white Pidgeon to feed at his Ear, which he gave out to be the Holy Ghost, by whom he was instructed in the Law which he was to publish: but this not till afterwards. By Sorceries, comeliness of Person, and the great knowledge which he had in his Master's Business, he gained so far on the Affections of his Mistress, that on the Death of Abdulmutalis, she made him her Husband. Possessed of all his Masters Wealth, he affected Ease; and being till then of no Religion, or at best a Pagan; he began to hearken unto Sergius, a Nestorian Monk, who flying out of Syria for fear of Punishment (the Heresies of Nestorius being newly both revived and Censured) came into Arabia; where he found entertainment in the House of Abdulmutalis, the Master of Mahomet. By his persuasions, who found him a fit Instrument for the Devil to work on, he began to entertain the thoughts of Hammering out a new Religion which might unite all Parties in some common Principles, and bring the Christians, Jews, and Gentiles, (into which the World was then divided) under one Profession. Resolved on this, he retired himself unto a Cave not far from Mecca, as if he there attended nothing but Meditations: Sergius in the mean time sounding in the ears of the People, both his Parts and Piety. The People being thus prepared to behold the Pageant, out comes the Principal Actor with some parts of his Alcoran (pleasing enough to sensual minds) which he professed to have received from the Angel Gabriel. And finding that this edified to his expectation, he next proclaimed Liberty to all Slaves and Servants, as a thing commanded him by God, by whom the natural Liberty of Mankind was most dearly tendered: which drew unto him such a Rabble of unruly People, that without Fear or Opposition, he dispersed his Doctrines, reducing them at last to a Book or Method.

The Book of this Religion he calleth the Alcoran, that is to say, the Collection of Precepts: the Original whereof they feign to be written on a Table which is kept in Heaven, and the Copy of it brought to Mahomet by the Angel Gabriel. A Book so highly reverenc'd by the Mahometans, that they write upon the Cover of it, Let none touch this but he that is clean. The Body of it (as it now standeth) was composed by Osman the fourth Caliph, who seeing the Saracens daily enclining to divers Heresies by reason of some false Copies of Mahomet's Law, and that the Empire by the same means was likely to fall into Civil Dissention; by the help of his Wife, who was Mahomet's Daughter, he got a sight of all Mahomet's Papers, which he reduced into four Volumes, and divided into one hundred twenty and four Chapters; commanding expressly upon pain of death, That that Book, and that only, should be received as Canonical through his Dominion. The whole Body of it is but an Exposition and Gloss on the eight Commandments.

1. Every one ought to believe that God is a great God, and one only God, and Mahomet is his Prophet. They hold Abraham to be the Friend of God; Moses the Messenger of God; and Christ, the Breath of God: whom they deny to be conceived by the Holy Ghost, affirming, that the Virgin Mary grew with Child of him by finelling to a Rose, and was delivered of him after Birth. They deny the Mystery of the Trinity; but punish such as speak against Christ, whose Religion was not (say they) taken away, but mended by Mahomet. And he who in his Pilgrimage to Mecca doth not, coming or going, visit the Sepulchre of Christ, is reputed not to have Merited, or bettered himself any thing by his Journey.

2. Every man must marry to execute the Dictations of Mahomet. Four Wives he alloweth to every man, and as many Concubines as he will; between whom the Husband setteth no difference, either in Affection or Apparel; but that his Wives only can enjoy his Sabbath Benevolence. The Women are not admitted in the time of their Lives to come into their Churches; nor after death to Paradise: And whereas in most or all other Countries, Fathers give some Portions with their Daughters, the Mahometans give Money for their Wives, which being once paid, the Contract is Registered in the Cadie's Book; and this is all their Formality of Marriage. More of this Theme we shall speak hereafter, when we are in Turkomania, and among the Turks.

3. Every one must give of his Wealth to the Poor. Hence you shall have some buy Slaves, and then manumit them; buy Birds, and then let them fly. They use commonly to free Prisoners, release Bond-slaves, build Caves or Lodgings in the ways for the relief of Passengers, repair Bridges, and mend High-ways. But their most ordinary Alms consist in Sacrifices of Sheep or Oxen, which, when the Solemnity is performed, they distribute among the poor; to whom also on the first day of every year, they are bound to give the Tithes or Tenth part of their gettings in the year foregoing: insomuch that you shall hardly find any Beggars among them.

4. Every one must make his Prayers five times a day. When they pray, they turn their Bodies towards Mecca, but their Faces sometimes one way, sometimes another way, believing that Mahomet shall come behind them, being at their Devotions. The first time is an hour before Sun-rising; the second at noon-day; the third at three of the clock afternoon; the fourth, at Sun-setting; the fifth and last before they go to sleep. At all these times the Cryers kept a bawling in the Steeples (for the Turks and Saracens have no Bells) for the People to come to Church. And such as cannot come, must, when they hear the voice of the Cryers, fall down in the place where they are, do their Devotions, and kiss the ground there.

5. Every one must keep a Lent one Month in a year. This Lent is called Ramazán, in which they suppose the Alcoran was given unto Mahomet by the Angel Gabriel. This Fast is only intended in the day time, the Law giving leave to Frolick it in the night as they best please, for they abstain from Wine and Swines flesh; prohibited in their Law at all times, but never so punctually abstained from, as in the time of their Lent.

6. Be Obedient to thy Parents. Which Law is the most neglected of any in all the Alcoran; never any Children being so unnatural as the Turkish.

7. Thou shalt not kill. And this they keep inviolated among themselves; but the poor Christians are sure to feel the smart of their Fury. And as if by this Law the actual shedding of Blood only were prohibited, they have invented punishments for their offenders, worse than Death it self. As first, the Strappado, which is hanging of them by the Arms drawn backwards, when they are so bound, they are drawn up on high, and let down again with a violent swing, which unjoyneth all their Back and Arms. Secondly, they use to heat up their heels, and with a great Cudgel to give them one or four hundred blows on the soles of their feet. Thirdly, It is ordinary to draw them naked up to the top of a Gibbet or Tower, full of hooks, and cutting the Rope, to let them fall down again; and by the way they are caught by some of the hooks, where they commonly hang till they die for hunger.

8 Do unto others as thou wouldst be done unto thy self. To those that keep these Laws he promiseth Paradise, a place of all Delights, adorned with flowry Fields, watered with Christaline Rivers, beautified with Trees of Gold, under whose cool shade they shall spend their time with amorous Virgins, whose Mansion shall not be far distant. The Men shall never exceed the age of thirty, nor the Women of fifteen; and those to have their Virginities renewed, as fast as lost.

Friday he ordained to be the Sabbath-day, partly to distinguish his Followers from the Jews and Christians, who solemnize the Days ensuing; but principally, because he was on that Day proclaimed King or Emperor, and solemnly so created. Wine and Swines-flesh are the principal things forbidden by the Alcoran: from the last whereof they all unanimously refrain; but on the first they are so sorted, that when they come at it, they seldom go home again unled; insomuch that all the Wines in Constantinople have been thrown about the Streets, and Death made the penalty for any that will presume to bring any more into the City. Mahomet taught them, That every one should be saved by his own Religion; him only excepted, that revolted from the Alcoran unto another Law; but so, that under the Notion of Religion, he means only such as worship the one and only God, excluding by that means the old Idolaters of the Gentiles from the hopes of Salvation. And he taught too, That at the end of the World, all Men that professed any such Religion should go into Paradise; the Jews under the Banner of Moses; the Christians under the Banner of Christ, and the Saracens under the Banner of Mahomet. They compel no Man therefore to abjure the Faith in which he was born, but commend and approve secretly such as they find zealous and constant in their own Religion; yet holding it an especial honour to have daily new Proselytes, they incite them by hope of freedom and preferment, which with many are Motives too much prevailing. Hence I have heard many say, That it is better for a Man that would enjoy Liberty of Conscience, to live in the Countries professing Mahometanism than Papistry: for in the one he shall never be free from the bloody Inquisition; in the other he is never molested, if he meddle not with their Law, their Women, or their Slaves.

The Opinions which they hold concerning the end of the World, are very ridiculous; as that at the winding of a Horn, not all flesh only, but the Angels themselves shall die, that the Earth with an Earthquake shall be kneaded together like a lump of Dough; that a second blast of the same Horn, shall after forty Days restore all again; that Cain shall be the Captain or Ringleader of the damned, who shall have the countenance of Dogs and Swine; that they shall pass over the Bridge of Justice laden with their Sins in Satchels; that the greater Sinners shall fall into Hell, the lesser into Purgatory only; with a thousand the like Fopperies: which it is needless to add here, considering that the Alcoran it self is now extant in English, and every one that lists may read it. A thing so full of Tautologies, Incoherencies, and such gross Absurdities of so impure and carnal mixture, that he must lay aside the use of his natural Reason, who is taken by it, if Force, Ambition, or want of a Christian Education do not lead him on. For if we seriously look into the causes of the deplorable encrease and long continuance of this Religion, we shall find them to be chiefly these. 1 The greatness of the Victories gotten by the Saracens, who were compelled the conquered Nations to receive their Religion. 2 The great Zeal and Diligence of the Arabians themselves, who being a numerous People, and much given to Merchandize, have possessed themselves of all the Sea-Coasts of Africk, from the Streights of Babel Mandel, almost as far as to the Cape of good Hope; of all the Islands in those Seas, and many Factories and good Towns on the Coasts of India: in all which they have settled their Religion also, as a thing inseparable from their Nation. 3. A peremptory restraint of all disputation in any point of Religion, whatsoever it be. 4 The suppressing of Philosophy, and the study of Humane Sciences; the light whereof might easily detect the grossness of their Superstitions. 5 The sensual liberty allowed of having variety of Wives, and as many Concubines as they are able to keep. 6 The promise of the like sensual Pleasures in the other World, with which a sense not illuminated with the Spirit of God, doth for the most part use to be more affected, than with the speculative hope of spiritual happiness. 7 The forbidding of Printing and printed Books, by which the People might come to see the verity and purity of the Christian Faith; the fallhood and impurity of the Law of Mahomet. These last not useful or at least not able to induce belief, if the first had not opened and prepared the way.

For indeed force of Arms was the strongest Argument by which Mahomet himself confirmed, and his Successors in their times have since propagated and dispersed his Doctrine. Strengthened by the resort of that rascal Rabble, which repaired to him, he assaults Medina, pretending a quarrel to the Jews, who had there a Synagogue. Repulsed at first with loss of Men, and a wound in his Face, by which some of his foreteeth were beaten out; there likely to have made an end of his new Religion, if not recovered by his Soldiers for a further mischief. At the next Onset he prevailed, the Battel being fought near a place called Bedez, situate betwixt Mecca and Medina, frequently mentioned in the Alcoran. After which fight he took the City, converting the Synagogue to a Temple for his own impieties: the news whereof so startled the Phylarchia, or Nobility of Mecca, that they armed all their Powers against him, and sped so well in the beginning of the War, that they drove him forcibly from their Territories; which not long after he subdued, and set his chief seat at Mecca. From that his flight, the Saracens began their Computation of Years (as we from CHRIST's Nativity) which they call the Hegyra, which beginneth about the Year of our Redemption 617. (The Hegyra, as to all Chronological Accounts begins in the Year of Christ 622, which some not observing, have caused a Difference of 5 Years in reducing the Years of the Hegyra, to the Year of Christ.) Concerning which time, I cannot but observe that Mahomet compelled devilish Doctrine, beginning his Empire; and Boniface the third assumed his Antichristian Title, beginning his unlimited Supremacy nigh about the same Year. It was called the Hegyra, from the Arabick Hegiratbi, which by the Learned in that Tongue, is rendered by διωγμὸς καὶ τῆς θρησκείας i. e. the Persecution raised about Religion. Joseph Scaliger in his first Edition of his most glorious Work De emendatione temporum, casteth off this Etymology with purum putum mendacium. He will not have it called Ara fugæ or persecutionis, but Ara Hagaranae; because forsooth the Arabians were by some called Hagarens. I believe it would have puzzel'd Joseph with all his Reading, to shew unto us any Æpochæ or Æra, which is taken from the Name of a Nation. And therefore other Reason he giveth us none but this; Nos autem scimus vocem illam primogeniâ significatione ab Hagarenis, non à fuga duci. But time and opposition, at the last reclaimed him from his Error: and in the second Edition of his Work, he is content to follow the common opinion of those Men, whom in the first he whistled off with the famous appellation of mendaces.

But to proceed, it hapned much about this time, that the Saracens revolting from Heraclius the Eastern Emperor, joyned themselves unto him. They had long been displeased with their condition, and now hoped to mend it. Exasperated by Julian the Apostate, when they served in his Wars against the Persian, for telling them when they demanded their pay, that he had more store of Steel than Gold: but then they wanted a fit head to resort unto. Now serving Heraclius in the same War, they were used by his Officers in the same ill manner. Asking ing their pay, the Treasurer of the Army made them this churlish answer, that there was scarce Money enough to pay the Roman and Grecian Soldiers, and must those Dogs be so importunate for their Wages? Provoked herewith, and hearing the fame of Mahomet, they betook themselves to him: who strengthened by ther Forces, and the coming in of the rest of their Country men soon brought the three Arabias under his Subjection. To which, having defeated the Emperor's Forces sent against him, he added some parts of Syria and Aegypt; and returning to Mecca, there died frantick and distempered, in the seventieth year of his Age, and three and twentieth of his Impostures, of which he had spent thirteen at Medina, and the rest at Mecca. His dead Body being kept four days in expectation of a Resurrection, which he promised to perform at the end of three; grown full of stench and putrefaction, was carried to Medina, and there Interred: his Successors out of wicked and worldly policy, keeping up the reputation of that Religion after his decease, which they derided in his life; and calling themselves Caliphs and Vicars General to him, their Prophet, to the Catalogue of which we hasten; made intricate, not more by their own confusions, than by the difference of those names by which they are presented to us by several Writers; according to the times and Languages in which they writ.

The Caliphs or Emperors of the Saracens.

| 622 | 5 | 1 | Mahomet the Impostor, of whom before. |
| 632 | 15 | 2 | Ebubexer , or Uquebar , Mahomet's Father-in-law, and one of his great Captains, supplanted Ali , to whom the Empire was designed by the Will of Mahomet ; and took unto himself the name of Caliph . 2. |
| 634 | 17 | 3 | Haumar , the second of Mahomet's Great Captains, having the Command of the Army under Ebubexer , Succeeded him in the Estate, and added to it Persia , Aegypt , Palestine , with great part of Syria and Mesopotamia . 12. |
| 647 | 30 | 4 | Osman , the third of Mahomet's Great Captains, Husband of Zeineb , his second Daughter; Succeeded under that pretence, and added all Barbary to his Empire. Distressed by the Faction of Hali , and Besieged in his own House, he slew himself in the eighty seventh year of his Age, and the tenth of his Reign. |
| 657 | 40 | 5 | Hali the Kinsman, and next Heir of Mahomet , and the Husband of Fatime his Eldest Daughter, Succeeded on the death of Osman : Murdered by the procurement of Mubavias , near Cusa , in Arabia Felix . |
| 660 | 43 | 6 | Mubavias , having murdered Hali his Son Husem , or Ossan , and eleven of the Sons of that Husem , the twelfth only escaping with Life, (from whom descended the Family of the Alaweci , and the Persian Sophies) assumed the Government as rightful Successor to Osman , whose Widow, the Daughter of Mahomet , he had took to Wife. He Conquered Rhodes , Cyprus , and a great part of Asia Minor , and was the Founder of the Family of Aben Humeya . |
| 681 | 64 | 7 | Gizid , the Son of Mubavias , more skilled in Poetry than in Arms. |
| | | 8 | Abdalla and Marwan , Competitors for the Supreme Dignity; but carried at last by Marwan . |
| 685 | 68 | 9 | Abimelech , the Son of Marwan Establish'd the begun Conquests of Armenia and Mesopotamia . 22. |

After whose death, the Egyptians withdrew themselves from their Obedience due to the Babylonian Caliph , and chose one of their own, to whom all the Arabians , and those of the Mahometan Religion, in Africa and Europe , submitted themselves. Of the Egyptian Caliphs , when we come into that Country. Take now with you the names only of the Syrian and Babylonian Caliphs ; for Story of them I find little or none, the Power being totally in the hands of the Sultans of the several Provinces, and nothing left unto the Caliphs but an Airy Title, the shadow of that Mighty Tree, which formerly had spread it self over most part of the World. |

1255 638 21 Mustatzem, the last Caliph, or High Priest of the Saracens of Bagdet, or Babylon, living in the account of a Prince or Emperor; or looked upon as the Supreme Lord of the Saracen Empire: starved in his Castle of Bagdet, and his whole Posterity rooted out by Allan, or Haallon the Tartar, in the first year of his Reign. Yet there is still remaining a Carak of the old Body, one whom they call Caliph, at whose hands the neighbour Princes use to receive their Diadems and Regalities: for so we find that Solyman the magnificent after his Conquest of Chaldea, Mesopotamia, and Affyria, to have been by one of these poor titular Califs, Crowned King of Babylon. Anno 1513.

This unweildy Body of the Saracen Empire, having thus two heads, began apparently to decline, losing to the Kings of Oviedo and Navarre, a great part of Spain; to the Genoese, Sardinia, and Corfica; to the Norman, Naples, and Sicily; and finally most of their Empire, with their very names, to the Turks and Tartars. For Allan, or Haallon, a Tartarian Captain, starved Mustatzem the Babylonian Caliph, in his Tower of Bagdet, and rooted out all his Posterity, (as before was said:) and Sarracon the first Turkish King of Egypt, brained the last Egyptian Caliph with his Horseman's Mace; leaving not one of Issue or Kindred Surviving. The Office of the Caliphs as to matters which concern their irreligion, (and the supreme determination of the doubts and controversies which occur therein) being now executed in the Turks Dominion, by the Mufy, or Chief Priest of the Turkish Mahometans.

As Mars shewed himself a friend unto those Saracens in their Wars and Triumphs; so also did Phœbus pour down no less Cœlestial Influence on such as addicted themselves to Scholarship. Bagdet in Chaldea, Cairoan, Fes, Morocco in Barbary, and Corduba in Spain, were their Universities: out of which came the Philosophers, Avicene, and Averroës; the Physicians, Rhass, and Me- sue; the Geographers, Leo and Abulfada; and almost all the Textuaries and profound Writers (as Hali, Algazel, Albumazar, &c.) in Astrology, from whom a great part of our Astronomical and Astrological Terms are borrowed.

There is now no Kingdom, Island, or Province which acknowledgeth the Empire of the Saracens, but the Kingdom of Fes and Morocco only: Arabia it felt, the very first Seat of their Power, acknowledging a subjection to the Turkish Empire. For first Petræa and Deserta, being subdued by the Turks, when they Conquer'd Persia, or otherwise following the Fortunes of the present Victor, were afterwards accounted of as Subject unto the Mamaluks of Egypt, who out of that Country and all Syria, had by degrees disseized the Seljuccian Family. And as the Vassals of that Crown, tho' but Subjects at will, they more molested Selimus in his March towards Egypt, by falling on his Rear, and terrifying him with their Night-alarms, than all the Forces of the Mamaluks, in the Field against him. But Egypt being Subdu'd, and the Mamaluks utterly destroyed, some of their Chiefs being gained by Money, and the rest by promise of Preferment; the whole Nation of these wild Arabs swore Allegiance to him: continuing in account as Subject unto his Successors, but in effect doing what they list; Governed as formerly by the Chiefs of their several Clannes, and in their Robberies taking no more notice of the Turk than they do of the Christians. And as for Fœlix, it continued also in a free condition, in respect of any foreign Power; till of late times the Turks and Portugals entrenched upon them. For in the Year 1538. Solyman Bassa, Admiral of the Turkish Fleet against the Portugals, who had diverted the Trade of the Red Sea, and otherwise given offence to Solyman the Magnificent, by aiding the Persians, went with a strong Army to take Diu, a Town and Island of East-India, then in their possession. But being unable to effect it, at his coming back he called in at Aden, one of the best Traded Ports of Arabia Fœlix, invited the King thereof aboard, most Treacherously hanged him, and surprized the City, which has since Revolted. The like he also did to the King of Zibet, the Port Town to Mecca: and by that means got possession of all the Coasts of this Country, bordering on the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; of which the Turks still continue Masters. But in the Inland parts, and towards the Persian Gulf, of no power at all; not suffered to Travel up and down without a Pass from some of the Arabian Chiefs; or if they do, in danger to be set on by the Natives, who brook them not. Some parts hereof which lie next unto the Isle of Ormuz, made one Kingdom with it; but the Kings originally of this Country, by whom the City of Ormuz was first builded: and so continued till the taking of Ormuz by the Portugals, Anno 1622. who since the taking of that Isle by the King of Persia, hold Muskabat, and some other pieces upon this Continent. The residue of the Country Cantoned among a company of petit Princes, as in former times; before Ambition taught them to devour one another. The Turks have now not one Foot of Land in the Happy Arabia, as I have shewn above from Tavernier.

And so much for A R A B I A.

6 CHALDEA. 7 ASSYRIA.

8 MESOPOTAMIA.

THese Provinces, which properly and originally constituted the Assyrian Empire, I have joined together in the Title, because united in the Story and Affairs thereof; though severally to be consider'd in the Description and Chorography of them.

6 CHALDEA.

CHALDEA is bounded on the East, with Susiana, a Province of Persia; on the West, with Arabia Deserta; on the North, with Mesopotamia; and on the South, with the Persian Bay, and the rest of Deserta: Originally called Chasdim from Chesed the Fourth Son of Nachor, the Brother of Abraham. Chesed quoque quartus est, à quo Chasdim, id est, Chaldaei postea vocati sunt, as St. Hierome hath it. But why the Chaldeans should derive their Name from Chesed, being a People long before Chesed's Birth, I am not able to determine: unless he taught them the first Principles of the Art of Astronomy; or was the Author of some signal Benefit unto them, which we know not of. It was called afterwards Babylonia, from Babylon the Chief City of it; and at this Day by Bellonius, Azania; by the Arabians, Kelden; by the Turks, Curdistān.

But the Name of Chaldea sometimes went beyond those Bounds, taking in some part also of Mesopotamia, as appeareth by that passage of St. Stephen, saying, Acts 7. 2, 3, 4. That the God of glory appeared to our Father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran; and said unto him, Get thee out of this Country, and from thy Kindred, and come into the Land which I shall shew thee. Then he came out of the Land of the Chaldees, and dwelt in Charran, &c. Where clearly that part of Mesopotamia, which lay next unto Assyria, where then Abraham was, is included under the Name of Chaldea, or the Land of the Chaldees. Which I desire the Reader to take notice of, because I must make use of this Observation in another place.

The Country by Herodotus said to be so fruitful, that it yielded ordinarily two hundred, and in some places three hundred fold; the Blades of Wheat and Barley being (as he affirmeth) Four Fingers broad. By Pliny it is said of the Babylonians, That they mowed their Corn twice, and seeded it a third time, or else it would be nothing but Blades; and yet so, that the worst of their Land yielded fifty, and their best an hundred-fold increase. Nor is the nature of the Soil so alter'd in long tract of time, but that (as late Travellers have observed) it would in all likelihood attain to its first Fertility, if it were order'd with like care and diligence, as in former times. But what need more be said as to the Natural Fruitfulness and Delights of this Country, than that it pleased God Almighty to make choice of some part hereof for the Terrestrial Paradise or Garden of Eden, in which he placed our Father Adam, at his first Creation? For there that Paradise, by men both skilled in Divinity and Geography, is affirmed to have stood. Yet amongst all sorts of Writers we find different Opinions. Some make Paradise to be a place of Pleasure, and the Four Rivers to be the Four Cardinal Vertues; but these Allegories on the Scripture are unwarrantable. Others place it in the Air, under the Circle of the Moon; and tell us that the four Rivers in the Scriptures mentioned, fall down from thence, and running all under the Ocean, rise up again in those places where they are now found: But this is so vain a Foppery, that I will not honour it with a Confutation. Such as make Paradise local, are divided also into Three Ranks (for I omit the rest) whereof some place it under the Aequator; but this agreeth not with the Bounds prescribed by the Holy Ghost. Some conceive the Four Rivers to be Tigris, Euphrates, Nilus, and Ganges; and that Paradise was the whole World; but this cannot be: For then when Adam was driven out of Paradise, it must also follow that he was driven out of the World, which were most absurd. Those of the soundest Judgments place it here, in an Island which is made by the Rivers Tigris and Euphrates, and some Branches running from them both: The uppermost of which is called Pison, (falsly rendred Ganges) which watereth the Land of Havilah, or that part of the Land of Havilah which is now called Chusistan, or Susiana, a Province of Persia; and the lowermost is named Gibon, (improperly by some translated Nilus) which compasseth the East parts of Arabia Petraea, by the Septuagint for the Reasons above-mentioned, rendred Aethiopia. And this agreeth both with the Position of this Country and the course of those Rivers: For that Tigris and Euphrates (which the Hebrew Text called Hiddekel and Perab) do here join their Streams, is confessed on all sides. Then as for Pison, it is no other than that River by Ptolemy, called Basilus, or Regius; by Curtius more nearly Piso-Tigris, or Pasi Tigris, Perueni: ad fluvium, Pasi Tigrin incolae vocant, as his own Words are. A little Stream, which watering the Land of Havilah, or the Country of the Charvelei, or Chaulasei, or Chaulotæi, (for by these several Names they are called amongst the Ancients, who place them betwixt the Babylonians, and the Nabatheans and Arabian People) poureth it self into the Tigris, and falls together with it into the Gulf of Persia. And finally for Gibon by Ptolemy, called Marfarsis, and by others Marfyrus, it is no other than a Branch of Euphrates, which watering the Land of Chus, or Aethiopia Afiatica, take which Name you will, loseth it self at last in the Lakes of Chaldea.

But though in general the Country was extremely fruitful, yet in some places was it covered with a slimy matter, which the overflowing of the Waters, and the nature of the Soil together, did bring forth abundantly. Used by them in their Buildings, instead of Mortar, than which more durable and binding; and therefore chosen for the Cement of the Tower of Babel, Gen. 11. 3. Some also tell of a Cliff, which opening sendeth out such a stink, that it killeth Birds as they fly over it; and others, of a like open place near a Town called Ain, which continually throweth out Boiling Pitch (named therefore Hell-mouth by the *Moor*s) filling therewith the adjoining Fields; and that herewith the people use to pitch their Boats. But this in some places only, the Country generally being both healthy and delightful, as before was said.

The people anciently were much addicted unto Sooth-saying and Divinations, and no less noted for being Authors of the first Idolatry that ever was practised in the World. Induced unto the last perhaps by the Power of their Kings, who would needs confer Divine Honours upon some of their Ancestors. But to the first inclined by their own Disposition, and the situation of their Country, yielding a fair sensible Horizon (for the Rational is alike in all places, both in Hills and Valleys) and consequently profitable to the observation of the rising and setting of the Stars, whether Heliacal, Acronical, Matutine, or Vespertine, as the Artists phrase it. Whereunto may be added the length of Life in those elder times, furnishing them with the greater measure of experience, concerning the distinct Motions of each several Orb, and the full period of the courses of each several Planet. Certain it is that they grew so noted in this Art, that at the last every Astrologaster, or Figure-flinger, was called a Chaldean. Geneis nomine ad eos homines translato, qui sese illius sapientiae specie venditabant, as Beza has observed in his Annotations. For giving too much credit to them, the People thus flouted by the Satyrist,

Dixerit Astrologus, credent à fonte relatum Ammonis, &c.*

That is to say,

Jove's Oracles no greater credit have,

Than Sooth-sayings of a Chaldee cozening Knave.

The Language which was spoken here, had the name of the Chaldee, or Chaldaean Tongue; of great Antiquity, and sanctified by the Holy Ghost, some Chapters of the Prophecy of Daniel being written in it. So different from the Hebrew in its primitive purity, that the Jews did not understand it, as appeareth by the words of the Officers of Hezekiah, 2 Kings 18 26. desiring Rabshakab to speak to them in the Chaldee Tongue, that the common people of the Jews might not hear his Blasphemies. A further proof may be, That a Man may have some knowledge in the Hebrew, and yet be ignorant of the Chaldee; as many are, no doubt, at this present day. But whatsoever it was in its primitive purity, it altered afterwards when the Jews came to live amongst them, during the Captivity: out of whose long commerce with them, both Nations lost their proper Languages, and fell upon a third, made out of both, which was called the Syriac. Of this we spake before, when we were in Syria and Palestine. And this is now the natural Language of this Country, and its Neighbour Assyria; but with a little mixture of the Greek and Arabick: Not vulgarly spoken elsewhere, for ought I can find; but used by many others in their Sacred Offices, by whom not commonly understood. For in this Language, all the Seëts of the Eastern Christians do associate their Publick Liturgies; that is to say, the Nestorians, Jacobites, Maronites, (for I reckon not the Melchites, who use the Greek Liturgy, amongst the Seëtaries.) The like do also the Indians or Christians of Saint Thomas, the Copties or Christians of Egypt, and the poor remainder of the Christians in the Isle of Zocataria, an Island on the Coast of Africk. Used to those Liturgies, when the Language was more understood amongst them; though now worn out of vulgar knowledge, by the overspreading of the Arabick, Tartarian, and Turkish Conquest. In which the Prelates of these Churches having fallen into the great Error of the Church of Rome: And without taking notice of the alterations, hapning in the vulgar Tongues of those several Nations, which are united under them in one Opinion, keep up a Language in their Liturgies which they understand not; as if the capacities of the People could be sooner raised to the understanding of an unknown Language, than the publick Liturgies be fitted unto their Capacities. The ancient Piety of the Church, and the modern Languages of God's People, are not inconsistent; though out of private ends some have taught us otherwise. But I fear this error (as some others) will not be so easily remedied, as apprehended. From the Tongue in which they celebrate the Divine Offices of their Religion, pass we to the Religion it self, whose Sacred Offices are so celebrated.

The Christian Faith was first preached in this Country by Saint Peter, of whose being in Babylon (the chief City hereof) himself assureth us in the last words almost of his first Epistle: And other business he had none here, but to preach the Gospel. Much persecuted by the Perfians (who were then possessed of these parts) it prevailed at last; Christianity growing up the faster for the cutting down. The Patriarchal See, originally planted in Seleucia, Successor unto Babylon in repute and greatness, if not also in name; the Bishop thereof, by order of the Nicene Council, had the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction of those parts, with the name of Catholick; and the next place in Session, at all publick Assemblies of the Church, next after the Patriarch of Hierusalem. And besides this, the Indians or Christians of Saint Thomas acknowledge him for their Pimate or Metropolitan; as they did afterwards in his right, the Patriarch Muzal. At this present here are some remainders of Christianity, part of them Jacobites, but the most Nestorians; of whom more anon.

Of the chief Rivers hereof we have spoken already; and Mountains there are none to hinder us in our passage forwards: So that without more delay, we may take a view of their principal places. And in the first place, we meet with Babel, in the Hebrew signifying Confusion, famous for Confusion of Languages, which here hapned. For immediately after the Universal Deluge, Nimrod the Son of Chus, the Son of Cham, persuaded the People to secure themselves from the like after-claps, by building some stupendious Edifice, which might resist the fury of a second Deluge. This Counsel was generally embraced, Heber only and his Family, as Tradition goeth, contradicting such an unlawful attempt. The major part prevailing, the Tower began to rear a head of Majesty, 5146 paces from the ground; having its basis and circumference equal to the height. The passage to go up, went winding about the outside, and was of an exceeding great breadth; there being not only room for Horses, Carts, and the like means of Carriage, to meet and turn: But Lodging for Man and Beast, and, as Versfegan reporteth, Grass and Corn-fields for their nourishment. But God beholding from on high this fond attempt, sent amongst them (who before were of one Language) a confusion of Tongues; which hindred the proceedings of this Building, one being not able to understand what his fellow called for.

2 Babylon, on the Bank of Euphrates, the ancientest City in the World on this side of the Flood; first built by Nimrod, in the place destinated to the raising of the Tower of Babel, and by him made the Seat of his Kingdom: Afterwards beautified and enlarged by Semiramis, the Wife of Ninus, one of his Successors; and finally, much encreased both in bulk and beauty by Nebuchadnezzar, who therefore arrogated to himself the whole glory of it, saying in his Pride, Is not this the great Babel that I have builded? Dan. 4. 30. A City of great fame and state, accounted one of the Worlds nine Wonders, and deservedly too.

The compass of the Walls 365 furlongs (or 46 miles) according to the number of the days in the year; in height fifty Cubits, and of so great breadth, that Carts and Carriages might meet on the top of them; finished in one year, by the hands of 200000 Workmen, employed daily in it. Situate on both sides of Euphrates, over which there was a sumptuous Bridge, and at each end of that Bridge a magnificent Palace: beautified also with the Temple of the Idol Bel, and famous for the Penfile Gardens, made with great Charge, and born up with most stately Arches. In a word, so great and vast it was, that Aristotle saith, That it ought rather to be called a Country than a City: Adding withal, That when the Town was taken, it was three days before the furthest part of the Town could take notice of it. Which taking of the Town must be understood of the surprize hereof by the Medes and Persians; and not of the taking of it by the Macedonians, as Pet. Ramus (as great a Clerk as he was) in his Marginal Notes upon the Politicks of that Author, hath most vainly told us. Which, whether it were that there were Gates at the end of every Street, which made it be so long in taking; or that the Babylonians were not awakened from their drunken Feast, in the time whereof it was surprized, I determine termine not. Revolting in the time of Semiramis, the news came to her as she was ordering her Hair: whereupon leaving her head half dressed, she went and Besieged it; never ordering the rest of her Hair, till she had recovered it. How it fell into the hands of Cyrus, we learn out of Xenophon's Cyri-paideia, which was in this manner. The River Euphrates ran quite through the Town, round about whose Banks the Politick Prince cut many deep Channels; into which when the Babylonians were securely merry at a general Feast, he suddenly drained and emptied the River, conveyed his own Forces into the Town all along the dry and yielding Channel, and in a little time made himself Master of it. From the Persians it Revolted in the Reign of Darius Hystaspes, and that Sustenance might not be wanting to the Men of War, they strangled the most part of the Women, being thought in Actions of this quality, not so much as necessary evils. When they had for twenty Months so resolutely defended the Town, that the Persians had less hope than ever of prevailing; Zophyrus, one of Darius's Captains, mangling his Body, and disfiguring his Face, by cutting off his Nose and Ears, fled to the Babylonians, complaining of the Tyranny of his King. They crediting his Words, and knowing his Prowess, committed the Charge of the whole Army unto him, as a Man to whom such Barbarous usage had made the King irreconcilable. But he taking the best opportunity, delivered both the Town and Soldiers into the hands of his Sovereign; which made Darius often say, that he had rather have one Zophyrus than twenty Babylons. Here died Alexander the Great, after whose death the Grecian Captains, regardful rather of their own Ambitions, than the common Loyalty, divided the Empire among themselves; leaving the Body of the King eight days unburied. A wonderful change of Fortune, that he, who living, thought the World too small for his Valour, being dead, should find no place big enough for his Body. After this taking of it by the Macedonians, the Glories and Magnificence hereof began to decline; lessened unto a fourth part in the time of Quintus Curtius the Historian; in solitudinem redacta, reduced to Desolation in the days of Pliny; and being turned into a Park, in which the Kings of Persia did use to hunt, in the time of St. Hierom. That wondrous change occasioned partly by the injury of the time, partly by the neglect of the Macedonians, who removed the Seat Royal of their Empire more towards Greece: but principally by Seleucus Nicator, who offended with the Babylonians, built the City of Seleucia.

Leonard Rauwolf, a Physician of Ausperg, or Ausberg in Germany, who saw the Ruins of this City in the year 1574. thus describes its present state: By a small Village on the Euphrates, called Fulogo, or Fulugo, is the seat of the old Babylon, a day and half Journey from Bagdad; the Lands about it are so dry and desolate that one might justly doubt of the fertility of it, and the greatness of this City, if the vast Ruins still to be seen did not Banish all Suspicion. There are still to be seen some Arches of a Bridge over the River which is near half a mile broad, and exceeding deep: These Arches are built with Brick, and wonderfully compacted. A quarter of a mile beneath the Village in the Plains is the Ruins of a Castle, and beyond that the Ruins of the Tower of Babel, half a German mile in compass, which is now the safe retreat of Serpents and Venomous Creatures, and amongst them of a Lizard with three heads, called by the Persians Eglo, and said to be very Venemous. A little above the fall of the Tigris into the Euphrates, is a City now called Trax, but formerly Apamea. All that Travel over these Plains will find vast numbers of the Ruins of very Ancient, Great, and Tall Buildings, Arched Towers and such like Buildings of wonderful Architecture, which being now for a long time deserted by all men, are in part sunk down into heaps of Stone, and in part are yet standing. There is only one Tower, which is called Daniel's Tower, still perfect, and inhabited by a Family: From it may be seen all the Ruins of this vast City which lie about it, and sufficiently prove the truth of what Ancient Writers have said of the greatness of this City, by their vast extent. So vast a Carkass as this, shows the Mortality of all Human things. Thus far that Author. The Tower of Babel was built on the West side of the Tigris about eight miles above Bagdad, and is now a small Mountain without any entrance, because it was built at first with Bricks only dried in the Sun, each of which is half a yard thick, and three quarters long, between every Course lies a Matt of Canes, as sound as if they had been laid there but the last year. Hacklutt's Travels, Tom. 2. p. 25. and 269. It is very probable these Ruins belong rather to Seleucia than Babylon, by their being seated upon the Tigris, and so near to the City of Bagdad, whereas Babylon stood upon the Euphrates, 300 stadia's from Seleucia to the N. W. or, as Pliny saith, ninety miles, which City is placed at the conjunction of the Tigris and Euphrates, where Felengo is now placed; and it is probable none of the latter Travellers have gone near it, they passing to and fro upon the River, and not cross the Country where the old Babylon stood.

3. Seleucia, the second City of note in all this Country, situate in a place more commodious and healthy, near the meeting of Tigris and Euphrates, and about forty miles more North than Babylon; out of which he drew 500000 persons for the Peopling of it. Nor did this new City Rob the old only of its power and greatness, but also of its very name; being called Babylon in some of the ancient Authors, Βαβυλων περσική πόλις, Μετρόπολις Ζελυία χαλμυλων, as (for one) by Stephanus. In the Primitive times of Christianity, the Bishop of this See was accounted for the Primate of the Chaldeans; with a superintendency over the Christians of India also, as before was said. But this Supplanter was in time brought to ruin also. And

4. Bagdad, a new City raised from the Ruins of it: built near the Foundations of Seleucia by Bugiafer the 20th Caliph of the Mahometans, at the expence (as some write) of eighteen Millions of Crowns; which, because of the many Gardens contained in it, had the name of Bagdad, the word so signifying in the Arabick Tongue. First Built upon the Western Bank of the River Tigris, near to its confluence with Euphrates; but in the year 1095. removed to the other side of the River, by Mustetabar, the 45th Caliph of the Saracens, because less subject to the Inundations of that furious River. But it was reckoned still for the same City, as if built by Bugiafer: by whom being made the Seat of his Royal Residence (whose Successors were from hence called the Caliphs of Babylon) it flourish'd in great Pride and Splendor, till taken and sacked by Allan, or Haalon, a Tartarian Captain, who here starved Musfeatzem, the last Caliph of it, and rooted out his whole Posterity; as if the Caliphate and the City were to end together. But the Town reviv'd again, tho' the Caliph could not; continuing to this day a City of great Wealth and Traffick, but nothing comparable unto what it was, both for Beauty and Bigness; being not above seven miles in compass, and having nothing in the Buildings to be justly bragg'd of: The Nubian Geographer, Page 204. saith, in his time it was a great City, built at first on the west side of the Tigris by Almansur, and when he wanted Room on that side for his Friends to build on (which is nothing likely) he removed his Army to the other side of the River; so that the City after this became very great. The Arabians call it Dar-Affalam, the City of Peace: Almansur the Caliph begun this City in the year of the Hegyra 144. A. C. 761. He had removed the Regal Seat first from Medina to Cufa, but being provoked by an Insurrection of the Inhabitants of that City against him, he removed the Second time, and Built Bagdat in a round form, and compassed with a double Wall, and placed his own Seat, a Castle in the middle of of it. In the year of the Hegyra 369. A. C. 979. it was so Ruined by the Contentions between the Califs, that Adado Daula, the then Calif Re-built the City, Adorning it with new Mosques, Market-places, and cleansing the River, and he also bestowed great Revenues on the Reader of their Alchoran. In the Year, 656. A. C. 1258. the Tartars took this City, and spent seven days in the Plunder of it.

In the Year 1563. It was a small City, but very Populous, and a great Trade, being a throughfare to Persia, Turkey, and Arabia; on the West side over against it, there was then a fair Suburb joyned to it by a Bridge of Boats chained together; at this time it was under the Turks, and it was thought to be two English miles in compass, and the Tygris by a Sluice might be brought round about the Walls, as Mr. Hacklutt observes. Tom. 2. p. 214. 251, 269. Taken by Solyman the Magnificent, with the rest of the Country, it became Subject to the Turks in 1524; from them recovered by Abas the King of Persia, Anno 1625. and again recovered by the Turks; about the year 1638 In which changes it can be no marvel, that she hath lost much of her former splendor. Maintained especially at the present by the Trade of Aleppo, to which, besides such Goods as go up the Water, there pass yearly many Caravans, or Troops of Merchants, each of them having in it some hundreds (if not thousands) of Camels laden with Commodities. For whose safe Lodgings, as they pass, (the ways being generally ill provided for Travellers in those Eastern Countries) there are some Houses of Receipt built at the publick Charge, or by some special Benefactor, to preserve his Memory: most of them strong, and many very fair and lovely, which in the Dominions of the Persians, they call Caravane Rarwes; in the Turkish, Canes. And for communicating the success of their business unto the place from whence they came, they make use of Pigeons, which is done in this manner. When the Hen-pigeon sitteth, or hath any young, they take the Cock, and set him in an open Cage; whom when they travelled a days Journey, they let go at liberty, and he straight flieth home to his Mate. When they have trained them thus from one place to another, and that there be occasion to send any Advertisement, they tie a Letter about one of their necks, which at their return home is taken off by some of the House, advertised thereby of the Estate of the Caravan. The like is also used betwixt Ormus and Balsora. But of this enough.

5. Ctesiphon, on the River Tygris, not far from Seleucia, by whose fall it rose; occasioning the decay thereof, as that did of Babylon. So Pliny, speaking of the fall of Babylon, by the Building of Seleucia so near unto it; then adding, invicem ad hanc exhaurientiam, Ctesiphontem juxta certum ab ea lapidem condidit Parthi. First Built, saith Marcellinus, by Vardanes; afterwards Beautified and Walled by Pacorus, a Parthian King; and by him made the Seat-Royal of the Persian Kingdom. Many times Besieged and Assaulted by the Roman Emperors; but most commonly without Success: and among others by Jukan the Apostate; that bitter enemy of the Gospel, who here breathed out his Soul to Satan in these dying words, Vicisti tandem Galilee. But Vardanes (whosoever he was) cannot of right be called the first Founder of it, who raised it rather from the Rubbish of an old Foundation: this City being the same with that which Moses calleth Calne, and Ezekiel Canneh, Gen. 11. and Ezek. 27. 23. and therefore rightly said by Pliny, to be Built in Chalanthide, or the Region of Chalne.

6. Sipparum, remarkable for the great Trench made near it, to receive the overflowings of Euphrates, which otherwise might have annoyed the City of Babylon: in compass 1280 Furlongs, or 160 Miles; in depth 20 fathoms. A vast and expenceful work; but that nothing was to be admired, when Babylon it self was up and in full Prosperity.

7. Apamia, A City of Seleucus's foundation also, situate at the fall of Pison into the River Tygris.

8. Vologesia, placed by Ptolomy among the Cities of Chaldea, but by Marcellinus in Affyria: Built or Repaired by one of the Vologeses, Kings of Persia, and from him denominated.

9. Bersippa, by Ptolomy called Barsita, memorable for the great Victory which Cyrus the first Persian Monarch obtained here against Nabonidus the King of Babylon, by Scaliger called Darius Medus (of which more anon) whom having vanquished, he pardoned him (as he saith) his life, and gave him the Government of Carmania.

10. Balsora, a Port-Town to Babylon, situate at the fall of Euphrates into Sinus Persicus, and consequently of great Wealth and Trading: the Riches of Arabia, Persia, and some parts of India, being landed here, and so carried to Babylon, and thence up the Water to Aleppo. Supposed to be the City of Theredon, mention'd by Ptolomy; Built or Repair'd by Nebuchadnezzar, and not long since taken from the Turk by Abas, the Persian. After the King of Persia in 1622. had taken Ormus, the English, Dutch, and Portuguese came to this place, and settled their Factories here: Before this time it was subject to the Turk. Frederick Venetus in 1563. finding it in their hands, and in probability it was won about the sametime with Bagdat, viz. 1524. about two Leagues from the City are the Ruins of the ancient City Theredon, or Teredon; the present Pile stands half a league from the Euphrates, and the Tyde runs up beyond it as far as the Fort of Gorno. It Revolted from the Turks some time since, and Abbas King of Persia attempted the Conquest of it after he had taken Ormus, and Amurat after he had taken Bagdat; but the Arabians, with the assistance of the Europeans prevented them from gaining it. Hussen Emir (Prince of Balsora in 1652. made it a free Port for all the World, and Governed it with great Order and Justice, so that it was thronged with all Nations, and was a Center of Trade between the Indies and the rest of Asia: and the West and North as far as Smyrna, Constantinople, and Moscow. He took but four per Cent, and yet was able to lay up three millions of Livres in a year, his principal gain arising from Arabian Horses, Camels, Dates, and Money remitted. The Christians of St. John are very numerous here, amounting to about 25000 Families, but degenerated for want of the Scriptures, which the Mahometans have taken from them: The ill effects of which are excellently described by Tavernier, Book 2. Chap. 8. Avicenna, the great Arabian Physician was born here in Anno Christi 980. and died at Homada, aged 58 years. The Europeans import Spice, Drugs, and export Wheat, Rice, Drugs, and Horses: About the year 1570, it was one English mile in compass, and was walled with Bricks dried in the Sun; in 1583 the Turks had 500 Janizaries in Garison in it, but their chief Strength was in thirty well provided Gallies, Armed with Ordnance. From Ormus it lies 600 miles. See Hacklutt. Tom. 2. pag. 215. 251, 270.

7. A S S Y R I A.

A S S Y R I A is bounded on the East with Media, from which parted by the Mountain called Coartas; on the West with Mesopotamia, from which divided by the River Tygris; on the South with Sustana; and on the North, with some part of Turkomania: So called from Affur the Son of Sem, by whom first Inhabited. But having long since lost that name, as to vulgar speech, it is by Niger called Adrinfa; by Mercator, Sarb; by the Turks, Aizerum.

The Country very plain and level, exceeding fruitful, and abounding in Rivers. For besides Tygris, which washeth one whole side thereof, Ptolomy assigneth to this this Country the Rivers of 2 Lycus, 3 Cyprus, 4 Gorgos; all of good note, and all of them increasing, with their tributary Streams, the greatness of Tigris.

The People were anciently great Warriours, and together with the Babylonians or Chaldeans, commanded a great part of the East; extending their Dominion from the Mediterranean Sea, to the River Indus; inso-much that not the People of this Province only, but of all the Provinces almost of this spacious Empire, had the name of Assyrians. The utmost Bounds of the Assyrian Empire to the West was Mount Taurus, the lesser Asia being Subdued after the fall of that Empire, by Cyrus the Great: yet in Syria, Palestine and Aegypt, it reached westward to the Mediterranean Sea. The Men for all this exceeding Formal in their Habit, wearing long Robes which trailed on the very ground, their Hair long, their Hats or Caps Pyramydal, like the Persian Miters; not stirring out of doors but perfumed with Musk, Rings on their Fingers, and a Scepter in their Hands: and very frequent in their washings, especially after Copulation. As for the Women, it was an Ancient Custom with them to expose the Fairest unto Sale in the open Market; and with the Money given for those, to put off such as were deformed, and not so amiable. And hence, perhaps the Fathers of our times have learnt this Lesson, of giving less Portions with such Daughters as will sell themselves; but greasing the fat Sow (as the saying is) with the addition of some hundreds: which made the merry fellow say, That the Money were a good match if the Wench were away.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by Saint Jude, and took such deep root in that Plantation, that it could never be pulled up; notwithstanding the cruel Persecution raised against it, by the Kings of Persia: who when they saw there was no means to destroy it by Violence, attempted in the next place to corrupt it with Heresie. And to that end, as also to revenge himself upon the Emperor Heraclius, as Great Champion of the Orthodox Belief against Nestorianism, Chosroes the great King of Persia, enforced all the Christians of his Empire unto those Opinions, which he knew that the Emperor condemned; permitting none who were counted Catholicks within his Dominions. By means whereof, and afterwards for want of Preachers to instruct them otherwise (the Saracens having conquered the Persian Empire) Nestorianism prevailed so far, that it extended over all the Countries East of Tigris, as far as India; and Northwards too amongst the Tartars, of which more hereafter. Governed by their own Patriarch, who resideth at Mesul, now the chief City of this Country; and honoured by his People with the Title of Jacelich, mistaken or pronounced amiss for Catholick: an attribute given anciently to all Orthodox Prelates.

The Opinions held by them as Nestorians, were, 1 That there were two Persons in our Saviour, as well as two Natures; but confessing that CHRIST from the first instant of his Conception, was both God and Man: 2 That the Blessed Virgin ought not to be called Our Mother or the Mother of God; but yet acknowledging her to be the Mother of God the Son. 3 That Nestorius condemned for these Opinions in the third and fourth General Councils, was an holy Man; for whose sake they condemned Saint Cyril his professed Antagonist, and all those Councils wherein any Censure was laid upon him. In other points, though differing from the Church of Rome, they are right enough (their rejecting Episcopal Confirmation excepted only,) As 1. In celebrating the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper with leavened Bread. 2. Communicating in both kinds. 3. Enjoying no necessity of auricular Confession. 4. Contracting Marriages in the second Degree of Consanguinity. 5. Permitting second and third Marriages unto Men in Orders, after the Death of their first Wives. 6. Not praying before the Cross, nor giving religious Worship to the Crucifix, or other Images. So much for these Nestorian Sectaries, if so named aright, considering the qualifications added unto their Opinions; now (but corruptly) called Nestorians: the greatest Sect of Christians in all the East.

The solemnities which these Christians use in contracting Marriage, because not very usual, I will here relate: Their Wives they never see till the Day of their marriage, but hearing a good report of the young Woman, negotiate with her Parents for her. Agreed upon the Business, they meet in the Chancel of the Church, wherein there is a partition with a hole in it: the Bridegroom and his Friends standing on the one side; the Bride and her kindred, on the other. When there, the Cassite, or Church man biddeth the Bridegroom to put his Hand thorow the hole into the Partition, and to take his Bride by the Hand, which he doeth accordingly: the Mother of the Bride, with a sharp pointed Instrument, made of purpose, pricking the Bridegroom's Hand all over, with sufficient eagerness. If when he feelth the smart, he lets go her Hand, they take it for a Sign that he will not love her; but if he hold her fast, and wring her Hand till she cry again, they take it for a very good Omen, and are glad they have so well bestowed her. After the Marriage is consummate, if a Male-child be born unto them, the Father loseth his own name, and is called by the name of his eldest Son: so as if the Father's name be Moses and his Son's name Joseph, the Father is no more called Moses but Abba Joseph, or the Father of Joseph. So highly did they reverence Marriage, and the Fruit thereof, Posterity.

It was anciently divided into these six parts, 1 Arraphachitis, bordering on Armenia Major; so called for Arphaxaditis, or the Plantation of Arphaxad the Son of Sem. 2 Adiabene, bordering on Mesopotamia, so called, quasi Adiaphans or inaccessible: because fenced with such unfordable Rivers Tigris and Euphrates, that there was no easie coming to it, Διὰ δυσχερέων τῶν διαβάνων, as it is in Suidas: or rather for Adiavena, from Diavos and Adiavos, the chief Rivers of it (the same which Ptolomy called Lycus and Caprus) as in Marcellinus. 3 Calacine, and Sitacine from Sittace, and Calach, two chief Cities of it; of which more anon. 5 Arbelites, and 6 Apolloniates, from Apolonia and Arbela, two other of the principal Cities.

Here then we have four of the Cities of Assyria brought unto our Hand, 1 Calach, one of those four which Nimrod built in the Land of Assur, Gen. 10. 11. and one of them to which the ten Tribes were transplanted by Salmanassar 2 Kings, 17. 6. and 18. 11. of such esteem in those elder Days, that Calacine as Ptolomy, or Calachene as Strabo most rightly calleth it, did take name from hence. 2 Sittace, situate about two Miles from the Banks of Tigris, in the way from Babylon to Susa. A City when it gave name to the parts adjoining, both great and populous; well seated in a fruitful Soyl, and well shaded with Trees of several sorts; supposed by the situation of it to be that Accad, (or rather built in or near the place of it) which was one of the first four Cities of Nimrod's Kingdom. 3 Arbela, on the Banks of the River Caprus, built as some say by Belus (or Belochus) Priscus an Assyrian King, whence it had the name. Near unto which there is a place which Strabo calleth Κρησσοῦρον, or Cupressum, conceived by some to be the place where Noah framed the Ark. 4 Apollonia, built after the Macedonian Conquest, as appeareth by the name, which is wholly Greek: not otherwise observable, but for giving the name of Appoloniates to the Country adjacent. Add unto these, 5 Gegnamela, situate in the middle space betwixt Lycus, and Caprus, memorable for the last and greatest Battel betwixt Alexander and Darius the King of Persia, who had he made good the Eastern Banks of the River Tigris, might easily have hindred the Macedonians from coming over the River being so extremely swift and violent, that the Macedonians were not able to pass it, but by linking their Hands and Arms together, and making one entire Body to oppose the Current; and therewithal of so great depth, that the Footmen were fain to hold their Bows and

Arrows over their Heads, to keep them from being moistened and made unserviceable. But having miserably lost this Opportunity by the Cowardise of Mazeus, who had the keeping of this Pass, he was enforced to venture all upon a Battel; drawing unto this place an Army of 50000 Horse, 200000 Foot, in their account who speak least of it (for Arrianus makes it above a Million,) opposed by Alexander with no more than 40000 Foot, and 7000 Horse of his Europæans; but these victoriously successful: 40000 of the Persians slain, (but Diodorus Siculus speaks of 90000) with the loss of 300 Macedonians only, as is said by Curtius. In memory of which notable Victory, a mountain near the place of the Battel, which by Alexander called Nicator, known by that name to Strabo, and some other Ancients. 6 Riboboth, another of the four Cities, which Nimrod is said to have built in Assur; by some supposed to be Birrba; an ancient City upon Tigris, and bordering so near unto Mesopotamia, that by Ptolomy it is placed in it. Of which more anon. 7 Rhesen, another of the Cities of Nimrod's building, seated by Moses between Calach and Ninive, Gen. 10. 12. and there commended for a great City. Which Character with the site hereof, have induced some learned Men to think it to be the same which by Xenophon called Larissa; seated by him on the River Tigris much about this place, and said to be a City of such strength and greatness, that it was no less than two Parasangs, or four Miles in compass: the Walls in height a hundred Foot, twenty five in breadth; so strongly cemented, that Cyrus, who besieged it, could never have taken it, if a casual Eclipse of the Sun had not discouraged the Defendants. But whether this conjecture be good or not, we have here Larissa for another of the principal Cities. 8 Ninive, by the Greeks and Latins called Ninus; first built by Nimrod, and called Ninive with relation unto Ninus, his Son or Nephew, after the Example of Cain whose Steps he followed; of whom is said, that he built a City, and called it after the name of his Son Enoch, Gen. 4. 17. I know the building of this City is by some ascribed to Assur, grounding themselves on that of Moses, Gen. 10. 11. Out of that Land went forth Assur, and built Ninive, &c. But I like better of their Judgment, who take Assur in this place for the name of the Country, and not of the Man; making the Text to speak of Nimrod, and to say of him, Et egressus est in Assur, &c. that is to say, And he went forth to Assur or the Land of Assyria, and there built Ninive, Riboboth, and the rest there named. A City so enlarged by some of the succeeding Kings, that it came at last to be bigger than Babylon, in compass 480 Furlongs or 60 Miles; and therefore said in the Book of Jonah, to be a City of three Days Journey in Circuit, as indeed it was: accompting 20 Miles for a Days Journey, according to the common estimate of those elder times; as also of the Greeks and Romans, in the times succeeding. Nor was that of less Strength than Greatness, the Walls an hundred Foot high, and so broad that three Carts might go abreast on the top thereof: and the whole Walls 1150 Turrets, each of 200 Foot in height: So strong, that it was thought to have been impregnable, especially because of an ancient Prophecy, which signified that the Town should never be taken, till the River became an Enemy to it. A Prophecy which induced Sardanapalus to make it the Seat of his War against Belochus, and Arbaces, then in Arms against him; who having besieged it three Years without hope of Success, at last the River overflowing, carried before it twenty Furlongs of the Wall. Which accident so terrified the effeminate King, that he burnt himself in the midst of his Treasures, and left the Town to the Besiegers. Threatened Destruction by the preaching of the Prophet Jonah, it escaped then upon Repentance. But the People going on in their wicked Courses, it was destroyed by Astyages King of the Medes, that it might no longer be an encouragement to the Assyrians to rebel against him, as formerly against some of his Predecessors: and so destroyed, that in the time of Saint Cyril of Alexandria, as himself affirmeth in his Comment on the Prophet Nabum, ὅς μὴδὲ ὅποι πρὸ γέροντος ὁρᾶσθαι λοιπὸν, that one could scarce discern in what place it stood. 9 Mosul at this time, and for long since, the chief of Assyria; seated on the Tigris, and raised out of the Ruins of Ninive: of most note for being the ordinary abiding Place of the Nestorian Patriarch, who either in this City itself, or the Monastery of St. Hermes near adjoining to it, hath his constant Residence. The Nestorians in this City so considerable, both in Power and number, that though it be in the Hands of Mahometans, either Turks or Persians; yet there are numbred in it fifteen Christian Churches, and at least 40000 Souls. A Seat so maligned by the Pope, (whom they commonly call the Reprobate Bishop) for the greatness of the Jurisdiction which this Patriarch hath, that not contented to withdraw the Indians from him, (whereof more hereafter) Pope Julius the third, set up an Anti-Patriarch against him, to whom he gave the Title of the Catholic of Musal also; to whom the Nestorians dwelling in the Northern Parts of Mesopotamia, (if some Writers of the Papal Party may be believed) do submit themselves. Mosul makes a great shew without the Walls, which are of Free stone, but within it is nothing but Ruins, yet it has many Christian Inhabitants, and there is a considerable Trade driven in it. The City is not built on the same side of the Tigris the old Ninive was; the whole Province is called now by the name of this City, and is Governed by Turkish Basha, Tavernier, p. 71. 10 Arzeri of greater strength than Mosul, though of less antiquity than repute; from which the whole Province of Assyria is now called Arzurum. And, 11 Scheberuzal, at this time of the greatest note, as being the ordinary residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg or Bassa; who hath 10000 Timariots, under his Command, to defend this Country, and be ready for any service, as occasion is.

8 M E S O P O T A M I A.

M E S O P O T A M I A, is bounded on the East, with the River Tigris, by whom parted from Assyria; on the West, with Euphrates, which divideth it from Comagena, a Province of Syria; on the North, with Mount Taurus, by which separated from Armenia Major; and on the South, with Chaldæa, and Arabia Deserta, from which last it is parted by the bendings of Euphrates also.

In the Scripture it is called most commonly by the name of Padan Aram, that is Syria Culta; but that name properly belonging to the North-parts of it; Aram or Syria, because inhabited originally by the Aramites, whom the Greeks call Syri; and Padan, or Culta, from the fruitfulness and riches of it, exceedingly plentifully stored both with Corn and Wine, and furnished with all necessities for the Life of Man; in that regard by Strabo called Mesopotamia Felix (The Southern Parts hereof being barren and full of Deserts, not having any herbage in them, ὅτι ἄλλο σινδριν, nor any kind of Tree, as we read in Xenophon; amongst some of the ancient Writers, had the name of Arabia, partly because so like in nature to Arabia Deserta, and partly being planted with Arabian Colonies. The name which comprehends both Parts is sometimes Syria Trans-fluvialis, or Syria beyond the River (Euphrates), of which see 2 Sam. 10. 16. But generally in the Hebrew it is called Aram Narabajim, which the Greeks render properly by Mesopotamia, or the Country in the middle of Rivers: environed by Tigris on the East, and Euphrates on the West and South; the River Chaboras or Aloras, passing also through it. The Latins generally call it by the same name which the Greeks had given it; Priscian only to shew his faculty in Grammar, calling it Medamna; By the Turks it is now called Diarbeck.

As is the Country, such the People, the most Adjective of any we have met with hitherto; able at no time to stand by themselves, but still requiring the addition of some neighbour Nation to be joyned unto them. Nothing thing that they can call their own, their Name, their Language, nor their Country. Beholden for their Name in the North to Syria; in the South to Arabia: the Chaldeans also putting in for a share, and challenging those parts which lie next Assyria, to belong to them. Their Language anciently the Syriack, at this day the Arabick. Their Country successively subjected to the Babylonians, Assyrians, Medes and Persians. From them first Conquered by the Romans, under the Conduct of Pompey; reduced into the form of a Province, by the Emperor Trajan; more fully settled and confirm'd by Aurelianus. But being recovered by the Persians, they fell together into the power of the Saracens, and are now commanded by the Turks. Never appearing of themselves on the Stage of Action, but when once God shewed his Mighty Power in their many weaknesses; and raised them up to be a Scourge to the House of Israel, of which see Judges 3. 8. Hired afterwards by Adadazar, King of Syria Zobab, in his War against David; by whom most shamefully defeated, 2 Sam. 10. 16, 18. Yet notwithstanding memorable in the Book of God, for the Birth of Abraham and Rebecca; the long abode of Jacob, and the Birth of his Children, in that respect affording an Original to the Hebrew Nation.

The Christian Faith was first Preached here by S. Thaddæus, one of the seventy Disciples; Anno 43. upon this occasion. Abgarus the Toparch, or Prince of Edessa, one of the chief Cities of this Country, having been long afflicted with an incurable infirmity, and hearing of the Fame of JESUS, beseeched him by a special Message to come and help him: whereunto our Saviour made this Answer, That he could not visit him in person, the things he was to do, whilst upon the Earth, being to be performed only in the Land of Canaan; but that he would take care of his health in convenient time. Accordingly, not long after his Ascension, St. Thomas the Apostle, by immediate Revelation from our Saviour, sent Thaddæus thither; by whom the Prince was cured, and the Gospel Preached, and many of the Nation Converted to it: the Acts whereof together with the Copies of the several Letters from Abgarus to Christ, and from Christ to him, preserved in the Archives of Edessa, were by Eusebius Translated out of the Syriack, and inserted into the Body of his Ecclesiastical History, lib. 1. cap. 14. Once planted, it found good encrease, continuing in the purity of it till about the year 530. at what time one Jacobus Syrus (so called from his Birth and abode in Syria) took upon him the defence of the Errors of Eutyches, touching the Unity of Natures in Christ our Saviour. Whole followers finding the Patriarchs of Antioch too vigilant over them, removed for the most part further off; settling themselves in Babylonia, and Mesopotamia, where they continued in great numbers, Governed by their own Patriarch, to whom the Jacobites in Syria are also subject, who takes unto himself the Title of Patriarch of Antioch, and is successively called Ignatius, as is the undoubted Successor of that Saint and Martyr; superiour in that regard to the Patriarch of Hierusalem, who is also a Jacobite. The Patriarchal See, fix'd in the Monastery of Saphran, near the City of Merdin; but the Residence of the Patriarchs for the most part, at Caramit. The number of Christians under his Obedience, computed formerly at 160000 Families, reduced since unto 50000. That which they hold as Jacobites, distinct from all other Christians is, 1. The acknowledgment but of one Nature, one Will, and one Operation, (as there is but one Person) in Christ our Saviour. 2. In signing their Children before Baptism, in the Face or Arm, with the sign of the Cross imprinted with a burning Iron. 3. Retaining Circumcision, and using it in both Sexes. 4. Affirming the Angels to consist of two Substances, Fire, and Light. And 5. Honouring the Memory of Dioscorus (of Alexandria) and Jacobus Syrus, condemned by the Ancient Councils. The Points wherein they differ from the Church of Rome:

1. Not enjoying the People the necessity of Confession to a Priest, before they admit them to Communicate.
2. Not admitting Purgatory, nor Prayers for the Dead.
3. Administering the Sacrament of the Eucharist in both kinds.
4. Allowing the Marriage of Priests; And
5. Teaching that the Souls of Men deceased, are not admitted presently to the Vision of God, but remain somewhere in the Earth, to expect Christ's coming. In which last, (setting aside the determination of the place) as they have many of the Fathers concurring with them; so to the first (touching the unity of Natures in our Saviour Christ) they have of late added such qualifications, as possibly may make it capable of an Orthodox sense.

Chief Rivers of this Country (besides Tigris and Euphrates, of which more hereafter,) 1 Chaboras, which rising in Mount Masius, passing directly South, falleth into Euphrates; as also doth 2 Singarus, by Pliny called Masca, arising out of the Mountain Syngarus; which is but the more Western part of the said Mount Masius. Which names of Masca, Masius, and the Masini, (being the name of a People dwelling thereabouts) shew plainly that they go upon very good grounds who place Masch, or Mesech, one of the Sons of Aram, in these parts of the Country.

It was divided anciently into, 1 Anthemasia. 2 Chalcitis. 3 Caulanitis. 4 Accabene. 5 Ancorabitis. And 6 Ingine: each part containing several Cities or Towns of note. These six when Conquered by the Romans, reduced unto two Provinces only, viz. 1 Mesopotamia, lying on the South of Mount Masius, or the head of Chaboras; and 2 Osrhoene, on the North: This last so named from one Osrhoes, the Prince, or Governor of these parts in the time of the Persians, as Procopius telleth us.

Chief place of the whole is, 1 Edessa, the Metropolis of Osrhoene, situate on the River Scirtas, which runneth through the midst of it, not far from the fall thereof into Euphrates. Memorable for the story of Abgarus, before related, among Church Historians: and in the Roman Histories, for the death of the Emperor Caracalla, slain here by the appointment of Macrinus, Captain of his Guard. The occasion this. The Emperor conscious to himself of his own unworthiness, employed one Martianus to enquire among the Magicians in the Empire, who was most likely to Succeed him: by whom accordingly advertised that Macrinus was to be the Man; The Letters being brought to Caracalla, as he was in his Chariot, were by him delivered with the rest of the Pacquet to the hands of Macrinus, (who by his Office was to be attendant on the Emperor's Person) that he might open them, and signifie unto him the contents thereof at his better leisure. Finding by this the danger in which he stood, he resolved to strike the first blow; and to that end entrusted Martialis, one of his Centurions, with the Execution; by whom the Emperor was here killed as he withdrew himself. Levanda vesica gratia, as my Author hath it. So impossible a thing it is to avoid ones Destiny; so vain a thing for any Prince to think of destroying his Successor; and therefore it was very well said to Nero, in the times of his Tyranny, Omnis licet occideris, Successorem tuum occidere non potes, that though he caused all the Men of Eminence to be forthwith murdered; yet his Successor would survive him, and escape the blow. But to return unto Edessa, in following times it was made one of the four Tetrarchies of the western Christians, when they first Conquered Syria, and the Holy Land: the two first Governours or Tetrarchs, successively Succeeding Godfrey of Bouillon in the Kingdom of Hierusalem. But in the year 1142. it was again recovered by Sanguin the Turk, Father of Noradine, Noradine Sultan of Damascus; and by the loss thereof, no fewer then three Arch-Bishopricks withdrawn from the Obedience of the See of Antioch.

Erassia. The Greeks Re-built this City, and called it Callirrhoe from the fair Streams about it, or the Fountains in it. In the Roman times it was called Justinopolis: It is now called Rhoa, Orpha, Urpha, and Urf. It is by St. Jerome said to be the Erech, or Urex. Built by Nimrod, Gen. 10. in Abraham's time called Haran, or Charan; rebuilt by Seleucus King of Assyria, A. M. 3653. Taken by the Saracens first, Anno Christi 637. lost to the Turks in 1142. or as some others say, in 1150. This City was the Seat of Zenobia, one of the most famous Queens that has lived since the Creation; it is after all a great City at this day, and the Capital of Diarbeck, or Mesopotamia.

2. Cologenbar, another strong piece adjoining, Besieged on the taking of Edeffa, by the same Sanguin, who was here stabbed in a drunken quarrel by one of his familiar friends; and the Fort saved for that time.

3. Nisibis, situate somewhat to the East of Mount Masius, called also Antiochia Migdonia, from the River Mygdonius, which runneth through it, and afterwards Constantia, from Constantius the Son of Constantine. A City of great note in those elder times, a Roman Colony, and the Metropolis of the Province of Mesopotamia, properly and specially so called: which being Besieged by Sapores the King of Persia, (Constantius Ruling in the East) and in no small danger to be lost, was gallantly defended by James, the then Bishop of it, whom Theodoret calls not only, Episcopum Civitatis, sed Principem & Ducem, not the Bishop only of the City, but the Prince and Captain of it, lib. 2. cap. 31. So little inconsistency was there found in those early days, betwixt the Episcopal Function and Civil Business, that the Bishops were not interdicted from the Acts of War, when the necessities of the State did invite them to it. The City not long after most unworthily delivered to the said Sapores, by the Emperor Jovinian; which drew along with it, in short time, the loss of the Province. It is at this day a considerable City, and an Arch-Bishop's See, and the Capital of a Turkish Prefecture, called a Sanguack, and now call'd Nesbin by the Turks.

4. Ur, Seated on the East of Nisibis, betwixt it and Tigris; and so placed by Ammianus who had Travelled this Country; conceived to be the Birth-place of Abraham, and called Ur of the Chaldees, Gen. 11.28. either because the Chaldees were in those days possessed of the place, or because the name of Chaldaea did comprehend also those parts of this Country which lay towards Tigris, as was shewn before. For that the place from which Terah the Father of Abraham did return to Haran in Mesopotamia, was rather situate in this Coast where Ur is placed by Ammianus, then betwixt the Lakes of Chaldaea and the Persian Gulf, where most Writers place it, may appear probable for the reasons which are here subjoyned. 1 Because it is said Joshua, Chap. 24. 12. That Terah the Father of Abraham, and the Father of Nachor, dwelt on the other side of the Flood; that is to say, on the further side of the River Euphrates and that to ἀπ' ἑξῆς as the Septuagint; ab initio, as the Vulgar Latine, in the first beginning. Which cannot be understood of any Ur, placed on, or near the Lakes of Chaldaea, those being on this side of that River. 2 Because all the rest of Abraham's Ancestors from Phalg downward, were seated in the Northern parts of Assyria, and Mesopotamia; and it were strange that Terah should be planted so far from the rest of his Kindred. 3 Because from Ur in Mesopotamia, near the Banks of Tigris, the way to Canaan (to which Terah did intend to go) was directly by Haran; whereas if he had dwelt (as some say he did) by the Lakes of Chaldaea, his way had been directly West thro' Arabia Deserta, and not to have Travelled with his Family so far North as Haran, and then to have fallen back as much Southward, as he had gone Northward, crossing Euphrates twice with his Herds and Cattel. 5 Haran, the place to which Terah did remove, when he went from Ur; and from which Abraham did remove, when he went towards Canaan, so named in memory of Haran the Son of Terah: but called afterwards by the name of Carrae, and by that name well known to the Roman Writers for the death of Crassus, that wealthy Roman. Whose Estate (besides the tenth which he offered to Hercules, and three Months Corn distributed amongst the Poor) amounted to 7100 Talents which comes in our Mony to one Million 331250 l. But all his Wealth could not preserve him from the Slaughter, slain near this City with the routing of his Army also, by Herodes King of Parthia: of which briefly Lucan,

Assyrias Latio macularit sanguine Carros.
Which may be Englished to this purpose,
By a defeat lamented Crassus stains
With Roman blood the Assyrian Carrae Plains.

Called the Assyrian Carrae by Poetical licence, because the Assyrians formerly had been Lords thereof. And no less memorable was it in the times foregoing, for a famous Temple of the Moon, Worshipped here (but in no place else) under both Sexes; some honouring it as a Female Deity, then called Dea Luna; and others in the shape and dress of a Man, and called Deus Lunus. But with this Fortune and Success, as saith Spartianus, qui Lunam foemineo homine putabat nuncupandum, is mulieribus semper inserviat that they who Worshipped it in the form of a Woman, should be always subject to their Wives (I troth there were but few of that Religion) qui vero Marem Deum crederet, is Uxori dominetur: but he that Worshipped it as a Man, should preserve the Mastery. 6 Amida, near the River Tigris the Metropolis of Mesopotamia, when one Province only, and before it fell into the hands of the Romans; much beautified by Constantius Son of Constantine, by whom named Constantia. But that new name dying with him, the old revived: of great strength, as a Frontier Town against the Persians, and by them much aimed at. Honoured of late times with the residence of the Patriarch of the Jacobite Christians, as the chief City of this Province; for this cause also made the dwelling of the Pseudo-Patriarch of the Nestorians (or Nostranes) of the Popes Election; and the chief Seat also of the Bassa or other Officer, governing this Country for the Turks, by whom called Caramit, or Rara Amida, that is to say, Amida the Black, because it was Walled with black stone. This City is called Diarbequir as well as Caramit, by the Turks, and from it the whole Province is called Diarbeck. It is situate (saith a late Traveller, who saw it) on the right side of the Tigris, upon a rising ground, and is encompassed with double walls, strengthened with sixty Towers. It has three Gates, one of which has an Inscription in Greek and Latin, with the name of Constantine in it; It has two or three fair Piazza's and a beautiful Mosque, which was once a Christian Church. The Soil about it is good, yielding Bread and Rich Wine in abundance, and very cheap. The City is well Peopled, having in it about 20000 Christians. The Bassa of this place is one of the Visiers, and is able to bring 20000 Horse into the Field. Anno Christi 359, the Romans received near this place a great Defeat from Sapores, King of Persia, who took this City from Constantius (and Julian, Rebelling soon after against him) forced him to a dishonourable Peace, in the year 361. which was the last year of Constantius's Reign. Tavernier, page 104. The Turkish Governour a Beglerbeg, has a Revenue of 1200660 Aspers. Rycant, page 52 7 Phalga, or Phaliga, at the meeting of Chaborus with Euphrates not far from Carrae, mentioned by Stephanus, and Arrianus; and

and by Ptolemy mistakingly called Ibarga; the Seat or first Plantation of Phaleg, one of Abraham's Ancestors. Serug, another of them, giving name to 8 Sarug, about a days Journey off from Haren, spoken of by some latter Writers. 9 Syngara, on the River so named, a fortified City in the times of Ammianus, by whom mentioned, Lib. 20. 10 Bezabde, mentioned by the same Author, by whom said to have been a very strong Fort, seated on a pretty high Hill, and bending towards the Banks of Tigris, before whose Times it had anciently been called Phanicha. Both these places were taken by Sapor King of Persia, in the Year 360. 11 Verta, supposed to have been the work of Alexander the Great, circled with Walls, environed with Half-moons and Bulwarks, and made unaccessible; in vain besieged by Sapor the Persian King, after the taking of Bezabde. The same perhaps with the Birtha of Ptolemy. 12 Merdin, not far from which in the Monastery of Sapbran, is the Patriarchal See of the Jacobite Sectaries. The Cities of this Province that are now in being are recorded thus by Tavernier, p. 142. Bir. 2 Car-emir or Caramit, and Diarbequir. 3 Ourfa. 4 Mosul. 5 Gezire, and 6 Merdin. Bir is in probability the same with Urtu or Birtha; above it is seated on the East side of the Euphrates, and Passengers cross to it in Ferry-Boats. The Inhabitants call it Berygeon; it is large, and built on the Brow of an Hill; below upon the River stands a Castle, which has one Tower that scowrs the River with 8 or 9 Culverins; in the highest part stands another Castle, in which the Governor resides, who is an Agá, and has under him a Garison of 200 Janizaries, and 400 Spahies: The City is small and ill built, but it has plenty of Bread, Wine, and Fish; Tavernier, p. 67. Hackluit, Tom. 2. p. 213, 251. Ourfa is described in Edeffa; Mosul is placed above by our Author in Affyria. Gezire is a small City, 20 Miles N. of Nesbin, built upon an Island in the Tigris, over which there is a Fair Bridge of Boats, and it is under a Beggar Prince of its own: Their best Trade is Galls and Tobacco, which grow in vast quantities in the Plains of Taurus, from whence it is brought to this City, and so transported thence into Turky. These Two Merchandizes make this City exceeding Rich. 6 Merdin lies in the Confines of the Greater Armenia, 20 German Miles from Caramit to the East; it is a little City built on a Mountain well walled, having a Fair Fountain replenished from the Castle, which stands on the North side of the City; on a Commanding Ground in it lives a Basha, who has under him a Garison of 200 Spahies, and 400 Janizaries, Tavernier, p. 69. The Nubian Geographer reckoneth 7 Cusa, as a City of this Province, which is by others ascribed to Chaldea; this was anciently a great and a populous City, and was the Residence of the Caliph, before they built Bagdat, renowned also and much frequented by the Persians, because Ali the Son in-Law of Mahomet was buried here, who is their Patron, and to whom they made Pilgrimages yearly; but the latter Kings of Persia have turned their Devotion another way, to avoid paying Tribute to the Turks, by which the City is become very small and poor, and almost desolate, it wanting Provisions and good Water, Tavernier pag. 62. The first Inhabitants of these Countries, though united from the first beginning under the same Princes and Form of Government, came from several Families; all the Three Sons of Noah concurring as it were in this Plantation. From Nimrod, Ham, and others of the Posterity of Chus the Son of Ham, came the Babylonians; with whom Chesed the Son of Noah, of the House of Sem, intermingling Families; or being the Author of their Language, or of some other signal Benefit, gave to them the Name of Casdim, whence came that of Chaldeans. From Affur, Arphaxad, and those of Arphaxad's Posterity, intermingled with the Sons of Mash the Son of Aram, came the Mesopotamians and Affyrians. And that Japhet also and his Children may put in for a part, the Neighbourhood of the Indians and Arabians descended from him, makes it probable.

But whatsoever Parents they descended from, Nimrod the Son of Chus, made to hold with them, as to bring them under his Command; planting in Chaldea, the Cities of Babylon, and Uruk, in Assyria, Mosul, Rebim and Calach; and finally Babylon (if that were Babylon, as some think it was in Mesopotamia). By these strong Forts he curbed the Nations, and assured his Power; being the first that altered the Paternal Form of Government, and drew unto himself the Government of several Nations, not paying any dependance upon one another. The Foundation thus laid by him, his Successors soon raised the Building to a wondrous height, advancing the Assyrian Empire from the Mediterranean Sea to the River Indus, and that too in a shorter time than could be imagined, but that the World was then divided into petty States, not cemented together with the ligaments of Power and Policy. For so there be little found of Belus the Son of Nimrod but that he spent most part of his time in draining the Marshes, and making firm Ground of those vallies which lay near to Babylon, which were Works of Peace; yet by these and the like Works of Peace, he so settled his Affairs at home, that he gave his Son Ninus the better opportunity to look abroad; who mightily improved his Empire, and was the greatest and most powerful of all that Line, extending his Dominions from the River Indus, to the Mediterranean; and from the Caspian Sea to the South Ocean. His Successors we shall find in the following Catalogue of

The Affyrian Monarchs.

A. M.

- 1798 1 Nimrod, called by some Saturnus Babylonius, the Son of Chus, and Nephew of Cham, was the first who altered the Paternal Government, and usurped Dominion over others; making Babylon his Imperial City.
- 1845 2 Belus or Jupiter Babylonius, the Son of Nimrod, whose Image was worshipped by the old Idolaters under the Name of Bell and Baal. 62.
- 1907 3 Ninus, the Son of Belus, conquered Armenia, Syria, Media, Bactria, and the Persian Provinces; and removed the Imperial Seat to Ninive, by him much beautified and enlarged. 52.
- 1959 4 Semiramis, the Wife of Ninus, subdued the Arabians; but invading the Indians also, she was vanquished and slain by their King Stauvobates. Of this great Lady it is said, That she was born in Acalon, a Town of Syria, and exposed to the Fury of Wild Beasts. But being born not to die so ingloriously, she was brought up by Shepherds, and at full age presented to the Syrian Vice-roy, who gave her in Marriage to his only Son. Going with him to the Wars, she fell in acquaintance with Ninus, who liking her Person and Spirit, took her to his Bed. This bred in him a greater Affection towards her, so that he granted her at her Request the Command of the Empire for Five Days; making a Decree, That her Will in all things should be punctually performed: Which Boon being gotten, she put on the Royal Robes, and (as some Writers do report) commanded the King to be slain. Having thus gotten the Empire, she exceedingly enlarged it, leading with her an Army consisting of one hundred thousand Chariots of War, Three Millions of Foot, and half a Million of Horse. A Woman in whom there was nothing not to be honoured or applauded.

ed, but her insatiable Lust : in which, if the Greek Writers say true (as we have no reason to believe it of so gallant a Woman) she was very guilty.

3126 38 Sardanapalus, by Eusebius called Tonoscoes, the last King of this Race. Of which, being 38 in all, there is scarce any thing remaining but the very names, registred in this order by Berosus, or rather by Frier Annus a Monk of Viterbium in Tuscany, who hath thrust upon the World the Fancies of his own Brain, under the Name of that Ancient Historian. The chief Kings of note after Semiramis, were,

1. Ninus, or Zameis her Son ; who by his Deputies and Lieutenants subdued the Arians, Bactrians and Cassians, but was otherwise a man of effeminate and unkingly Carriage. And therefore is conceived to be the Elder Bacchus, so much celebrated amongst the Grecians.

2. Belus the Second, who recovered that Country which afterwards was called Judea, to the Assyrian Empire, from which it had revolted in the time of his Predecessor, (on the defeat of Amraphel, one of his Lieutenants, by the Sword of Abraham;) and subdued many other Nations.

3. Belochus Priscus, the Tenth King, who by some Writers is said to be the Author of Divination by the flying of Birds, called Auspicium : For of Sooth-saying there were in all four kinds.

2. Auspicium, ab Aras inspiciendo, in which the Sooth-sayers observed whether the Beast to be sacrificed came to the Altars willingly, or not : whether the entrails were of natural Colour, exulcerate &c. or whether any part were wanting. All Histories afford variety of Examples in this kind ; I need give no particular Instance. A kind of Divination said to be practised first by the Tuscans, or Hebrurians ; instructed in the knowledge thereof by one called Tages, who appearing to certain Plough-men out of a Furrow, taught them this Mystery, and so vanished.

3. Tripudium, so called quasi Terripudium, and Terripavium, from the trembling or shaking of the Earth, was a conjecture of future successes, by the rebounding of Crumbs cast unto Chickens. We have an Instance of this in the Life of Tiberius Gracchus, who being seditiously busie in promoting the Law Agraria, was forewarned by the keeper of his Chickens to desist from that Enterprize ; because when he had thrown the Crumbs to the Coop, there came out but one of the Chickens only, and the same without eating went back again ; which was taken for a sign of Ill-luck, as the greedy devouring of them had been good : But Tiberius slighting the Advertisment, and pursuing his Design, was the same day slain.

4. Augurium, so called ab avium garritu, was a Prediction from the chirping and chattering of Birds ; as also from the Sound and Voices heard they knew not whence, nor on what occasion. In which latter kind the death of Cæsar was divined from the clattering of Armour in his House ; and the poisoning of Germanicus by the sounding of a Trumpet of its own accord. In the former, an Owl screeching in the Senate-house, was deemed ominous to Augustus ; and a company of Crows following Sejanus to his House with great noise and clamour, was judged to be fatal to that great Favourite ; and so it proved.

4. Manitus, the Thirteenth King, who revived again the ancient Discipline, corrupted by the slothfulness and effeminacy of his Predecessors, and by the terror of his Name awed the Egyptians.

5. Ascades, the Eighteenth King, more absolute in Syria and the Western Parts, than any of the Kings before him.

6. Sardanapalus, the last King of this Race, who being wondrous effeminate, and utterly unable to govern so great an Empire, gave opportunity to Arbaces, his Lieutenant in Media, to conspire against him. By whom, associated by Belochus Governor of Babylon, he was besieged in the City of Ninive ; and there reduced unto such Extremities, that gathering his Treasures all together, he burnt himself and them in one Funeral Pile. Eosolum factum virum imitatus, as is said by Justin. The Treasure which he is said to have burnt with him, amounted to one hundred Millions of Talents of Gold, and a thousand Millions of Talents of Silver ; which in our English Money comes to Twenty Thousand and Five Hundred Millions of Pounds. A Mass of Money, which as it must be long in gathering, so probably it had not seen the Sun in many Years, and therefore grown rusty, might require a Fire to purge it. This Sardanapalus afforded it, it may be, to end his Life with that, in which he placed his Summum Bonum. It may be in spite unto his Enemies, and it is possible it might be in policy, that so great a Treasure not falling to the possession of his Foes, might so much the more disable them from making resistance against, or detaining the Empire from his next rightful Successors. For it is of all things most foolish, both to lose our Treasure, and with it to enrich our Adversaries. On which consideration the Spaniards fired their Indian Fleet at Gades, and the Genoese theirs at Tripolis, that their Lading might not come into the possession of their Enemies, the English and Mahometans. After the death of this Sardanapalus, Arbaces took Media, and Persia, with the confining Provinces ; Belochus strengthened himself in Assyria, Chaldea, and the adjacent Regions, his Kingdom being called the new Kingdom of Assyria.

The new Kings of Affyria, and Chaldaea.

- A. M.
- 3146 1 Phul Belochus, the beginner of this new Monarchy, or Race of Monarchs.
- 3194 2 Phul Assur, destroyed Galilee, and subdued the Kingdom of Damascus; the same who is called Tiglath Pileser in the Holy Scriptures.
- 3217 3 Salmanassar, who Destroyed Samaria, and Ruined the Kingdom of Israel, and carried the ten Tribes to perpetual Captivity. This is the Nabonassar of the Chronologers.
- 3227 4 Senacherib, whose Blasphemous Host was vanquished by Angels from Heaven, and he himself murdered by his two Sons, Adramelech and Sharezer. 7.
- 3233 5 Assarhaddon, who Revenging his Father's Death on his Brothers, was Deposed by his Deputy of Chaldaea, and the Seat-Royal transferred from Ninive to Babylon. 10.
- 3243 6 Merodach Baladan, Governor of Eabylon. Succeeded his Master in the Throne, conceived by some, to be the Mardocempades of Ptolomy; by others, to be also the same King who by his Captain Holofernes did so plague Judaea.
- 3283 7 Ben. Merodach, the Son of Merodach Baladan. 21.
- 3304 8 Nabopolassar, who vanquished Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt. 25.
- 3339 9 Nabuchodonosor the great, by some called the Hercules of the East, who Conquered Egypt in the life of his Father; with whom he Reigned for a time, and mightily enlarged the City of Babylon. He joyned also with Astyages King of the Medes, in subverting the proud City of Ninive; and in the eighteenth year of his Reign destroyed Hierusalem, and carried the People Captive unto Babylon. But in the last seven years of his Reign he was so Distracted, that he lived not much unlike the Beasts of the Field; according to the Word of God spoken by Daniel, Chap. 4. during which time his Son Evilmerodach, his Daughter Niccoris, with Niglissat her Husband, and Laborasoradach their Son, Governed his Empire as Protectors; and therefore are by some reckoned as Kings. Finally, Nebuchadnezzar having recovered his Senses, was again restored unto the Throne; and died, when he had Reigned in all forty four years.
- 3383 10 Evilmerodach, the Son of Nebuchadnezzar, slain by Astyages King of the Medes. 26.
- 3409 11 Baltassar, Son of Evilmerodach (the Nabonidus of Berosus) a Prince of a dissolute and cruel Nature, was in the latter end of his Reign Assailed by Cyaxares the Son of Astyages (whom the Scriptures call Darius Medus) and by Cyrus the Persian: by whom he was slain in the seventeenth year of his Reign, and the Empire of the Babylonians was transferred to the Medes and Persians.

A. M. 3426.

That this was the end of Baltassar, is the common opinion. But Josephus Scaliger in his learned and industrious work, De emendatione temporum, maketh him to be slain in a Tumult by his own People: who Elected into the Empire a Noble-man of the Medes, called in Prophane Stories, Nabonidus, in Divine, Darius Medus; who after a 17 years Reign was slain by Cyrus King of the Persians. But by the leave of so worthy a Man, this cannot hold good. For the Lord by his Prophet Jeremy, had pronounced (Chap. 27.) That all Nations should serve Nebuchadnezzar, and his Son, and his Son's Son; whereas Nabonidus was a Prince of strange Blood, and so the Nations were not to serve him: and in Baltassar, the son's-son of Nebuchadnezzar, was this word accomplished. But let us examine his Argument, and withall the scoffs which very prodigally he bestoweth on such as maintain the contrary opinion: N. r. o. Chronologorum, the whole rout of Chronologers: boni & diligentes viri: good simple meaning men; & addunt alia nihil veriora; are his first Complements. Ut igitur quod Chronologorum est, omnes recipiant, &c. therefore that they may repent their ever being Chronologers, he bringeth in Berosus, cited by Josephus, in his first Book against Apion. But Berosus there maketh Nabonidus (to whom he saith the Kingdom of Baltassar was by the People delivered) to be a Babylonian, and not as Scaliger would have him say, a Noble-man of the Medes; neither can the Authority of Berosus countervail that of Daniel who, in Chap. 6. telleth Baltassar, that his Kingdom should be divided among the Medes and Persians. His second Argument is drawn from the nature of the word, δ' αὐτῶν τῶν ἀσσυρίων, as it is in the same Chap. and Darius the Mede took the Empire, by which word took is implied (saith he) not a forcible Invasion, but a willing acceptance of the Empire offered. To this we answer, that Darius indeed took the Empire quietly and willingly, being offered unto him by Cyrus, and his Army consisting of Medes and Persians, who according to the Word of God, had taken it from Baltassar, Darius being then absent. Quid si probavero (saith he) cum cognominatum fuisset Medum? He hath yet one trick more than all these; and Medus must not be the National name, but the fir-name of Darius; which he proveth out of a fragment of Megasthenes, cited by Eusebius, in his work De Preparatione Evangelica, where he is called Μέδης, συβασιτὴς ἑσται Μέδης, &c. an argument of all others the most slight and trivial. For besides that Μέδης may there as well be the name of his Nation, as of his Family; and besides that it thwarteth the places of Jeremy and Daniel, already quoted; it is diametrically opposite to another place of the same Daniel, in his ninth Chapter, where he is called, Darius, of the Seed of the Medes. Of this Darius more anon when we come into Media. As for Nabonidus, questionless he was the same with Baltassar. For besides that Josephus and Berosus attribute to either of them the Reign of 17 Years, the same Josephus (who might best know the truth in this case) telleth us that Baltassar was by the Babylonians called Nabonidus, a name not so great a stranger to Nabonidus, as Scaliger's Darius, or Herodotus's Labinitus. But in this we must pardon Joseph. Scorn and Contradiction was a part of his Essence. For had he not been in some things singular, in all peremptory, he had neither been a Scaliger, nor the Son of Julius.

But leaving Joseph to the singularity of his own conceits, we find nothing done by the Affyrians or Chaldeans after this Subjection, which might denote them to have been once the Lords of so great an Empire. Successively enslaved by the Medes, Persians, and Macedonians; then by the Persians again, afterwards by the Saracens, next by the Turks, a third time by the Persians, once again by the Turks of the Ottoman Family, unto whom now subject: never endeavouring to assert in the way of War, or Opposition, either their ancient Reputation, or their native Liberties; but suffering themselves to be won, lost, fought for, and again recovered by their quarrellsome Masters; as if they had no Title to their own Country, but were born to follow the Fortunes of all Pretenders. The reason of which is principally to be ascribed to the form of Government used amongst the Persians. Which was so despotical and absolute, if not tyrannical, that they held all the People Conquered by them in the nature of Slaves, not suffering any to grow great in a state of Inheritance, or to enjoy any place of Power and Profit under them in the Conquered Provinces, but at the pleasure of the Prince; as it is now used among the Turks of the Ottoman Empire. By means whereof, the Great Men having no Alliance among themselves, and as few Dependants among the People, were never able to make head against the Conqueror; but in the fall of the present Prince fell, together with him: it being a good Rule of Machiavel, that where the Ancient Nobility is in good regard, linked in Alliances with themselves, and well respected by the common and inferior People; there it is difficult for the Invader, though a Conqueror, to win a Country, and harder to keep it being conquered. But on the other side, where the Nobility is quite worn out, and the Prince doth hold his Subjects in the nature of Slaves, there both the Conquest will be easie, and soon assured. For to what purpose should the Subjects resist the Conqueror, or stand any longer to their King, than he stands to himself, when they are sure the Conqueror can lay upon them no heavier burdens than they were accustomed to before, and have withal a flattering hope, that their new Masters may be gentler to them than their former were? It fares no other wise with them than with Esop's Ass, which refused to take the opportunity of an escape from the hands of the Enemy, by which he was taken, because he knew it was not possible they should lay more load upon his back than his old Master made him bear. To which Condition the Chaldeans and Assyrians being brought by the Persians, and never accustomed to the taste of a better Fortune, have followed the same Successes as the Persians did, falling together with them from one hand to another: the particular account of whose estate we shall find in Persia; taking this only for the close, That when Solzman the Magnificent had discomfited Tamás King of Persia, and taken the great City of Bagdat, Caramit, Merdin, and the rest, both in Assyria, Chaldea, and Mesopotamia, submitted to him without any resistance, and received his Garisons. And for a confirmation of his estate, he received at the hand of the Caliph of Babylon (who by an old Prerogative had the Nomination, or Confirmation, at the least, of the Kings of Assyria, and the Sultans of Egypt) the Royal Ornaments and Ensigns, An. 1534. incorporating by that means those Regions into his Estates, and making them Provinces of his Empire; in which he left a Beglerbeg at Bagdat to Command in Chief, and divers Sanziacks in their severall and respective Provinces. And tho' the Persian Kings have since taken and are still possessed of some places of Importance in them; yet I account them in regard of the said Investiture, and the long possession following on it, for Provinces of the Turkish Empire: as I do Media of the Persian, tho' some pieces of it be possessed by the Turks.

MOUNT TAURUS.

MOUNT TAURUS is a constant and continual Ridge of Hills, which extend from the Mediterranean to the Indian Seas; running through the whole length of Asia, from West to East, and dividing it, as the Aequator doth the Globe, into North and South. It was called Taurus from the word Tur or Taur, which in the Syriac and Chaldean signifieth a Mountain; the common name of all high Mountains being made peculiar unto this, by reason of its greatness and continued length: yet so, that it had other names also in some parts thereof, according to the Regions and Nations by which it passed, and on which it bordered. The Course whereof is thus set down by Sir Walter Rawleigh: premising only, that it beginneth in the Province of Lycia, a Region of Asia Minor, near the Mediterranean. These Mountains (saith he) which sunder Cilicia from the rest of Asia: the less, on the North thereof are called Taurus; and where they part it from Comagena a Province of Syria, they are called Amanus. On the East side of the River Euphrates (which forceth it self a way through it) it sometimes resumeth the name of Taurus, as in Strabo's three first Tables of Asia, and sometimes taketh the name of Niphathes, as in the fourth: retaining that uncertain appellation, so long as they bound Armenia from Mesopotamia. After the River Tigris hath also cut them asunder, they continue the name of Niphathes altogether, until they separate Assyria and Media, but then they call themselves Coatras: altho' between the upper and lower Media, they appear not always, but are seen discontinued, and broke in pieces: such parts of it as are found in the middle of that Country, being called Orantes; those which lie more towards the East being named Coronus, out of the Southern parts whereof issueth the River of Bagradus, which divideth the ancient Persia from Caramania. Continuing further Eastward by the name of Coronus, they give unto the Parthians and Hyracians, their proper Countries; and afterwards change themselves into the Mountains of Scriphi, out of which riseth the River Maurgus. And now beginning to draw towards the end of their Course, they first make themselves the South Borders of Bactria, and are then known by the name of Parapamisus; and after take unto themselves the name of Caucasus, where the famous Rivers, Indus, Hydaspes, and Zarædrus, have their first beginnings. In this point do they hold their heads exceeding high, to equal the Mountains of Imaus; whom they encounter within the 35, 36, and 37 Degrees of Latitude, and the 140 Degree of Longitude: known by no other name than this, till finally they terminate their Course in the Indian Seas. So far, and to this purpose, that noble Gentleman. It may be added hereunto, that though the ancient Writers could trace the course of this Mountain, no further than the meeting of it with Imaus; yet latter Observations follow it to the Wall of China: the parts beyond Caucasus being not known by the names of Delanguer, and Naugricor. But this is to be understood only of the main Body of these Mountains, which hold on in an even course from West to East; not of those Spurs and Branches of it, which shoot either to the North, or South: such as are the Anti-Taurus in some parts of the lesser Asia; the Gordian Hills, and the Montes Moschici, with those which Pliny calleth Pariedri, others Pariardri, in Armenia Major; and that of Caboras, which sheweth it self on the North-east of Assyria, with divers others.

In such a continual Course of Mountains it must needs be that many fierce Nations did inhabit in former times, not easily subdued, nor so soon reduced unto civility as such who were possessed of Places less defensible, and fitter for commerce and traffic with the rest of Mankind. And they continued in these late times, the last which were brought under by the Turk and Persians, the mightiest est Monarchs of those Parts ; though bordering on, or totally environed with their Dominions. Two Kingdoms they afforded of long continuance : one towards the West, where it closeth with the Mountains of Anti-Taurus, and divideth Syria Comagena from Armenia Major ; the other towards the East, separating Media from Hyrcania. For want of other names to describe them by, we will call the first the Kingdom of Aladules, and the last the Kingdom of Babaman ; according to the names of the two last Kings.

1 The Kingdom of ALADULES contained that part of this Mountainous tract which beginning in or about Anti-Taurus, extended it self as far towards the East, as to the Banks of the River Tigris, where they part Mesopotamia from Armenia Major. Inhabited by a People naturally very fierce and warlike, more famous for nothing than their want of all things ; who as Men dwelling in a rough and barren Country, could little profit themselves by Husbandry : and therefore gave themselves to grazing, breeding on their Pastures some store of Horse and Camels which they sold to others, but especially maintaining themselves and their Families by hunting and stealing. Supposed to come originally from the Cappadocians, and Armenians of the less Asia, which by long and continual Wars in the former Ages, were forced to forsake their dwellings, and for safety of their Lives to fly to these unpeopled and desolate Mountains. Where searching every Hill and Dale, and following the Opportunity of Springs and Rivers, but chiefly the mildest Temperature of the Air, and most cheerful Aspect of the Sun, they built in many places poor Villages, and afterwards some better Towns. The principal of which is named Maras, so called as it is conceived from the River Maras, which rising out of the Mountain Calen, passeth by the same, and not far off falleth into the River Euphrates : Near unto the Confines of this Kingdom, lies the ancient City, now call'd Orpha, of old Edeffa, as is supposed, because as yet there remain certain Monuments in Latin Letters, erected by Baldwin King of Jerusalem, and Brother of Godfrey the first King of the Western Christians, who is said to have taken Edeffa, and there to have Reigned. Not far from thence is also the ancient City of Amida, now call'd Carimida, seated between the two great Rivers of Euphrates and Tigris in Mesopotamia, now called Diarbeck. Knowles. So that this small Kingdom lies on the North of Mesopotamia, in the Confines of Armenia.

When it was made a Kingdom first, it is hard to say, the Kings hereof being mean and inconsiderable in the eye of the World, not worth the conquering ; and wanting power to conquer others and enlarge their territories : nor indeed worthy any King but one of their own, who could content himself with reigning over Rocks and Mountains. The last was Aladules, so much spoken of in the Turkish Histories and by them called the Mountain King. Conceived by some Writers to have been the Author of such a Paradise, as we shall find described when we come to Drangiana, a Province of Persia ; and by that means grown formidable to his neighbouring Princes. But that which made him most really and truly known, in the Stories of the former times, was the stout Opposition which he made against the Turks, in their Wars with Persia. He had before given no small check to the proceedings of Bajazet the second, in his conquest of the Carmanian Kingdom ; and no less troubled Selimus the Son of Bajazet, in his Eastern Wars, impeaching : he could the greater of the Ottoman Family : Fought with by Schirvan, he overcame and his grand with a great deal of Courage killed Aveny, Shirvan raised him to the throne, and seeing his Army terrified by the host of the Turks, he was slain to him. But being at last taken, and put to Death by the command of the Turks, his head was converted to a Prize of War, and sent to the Turks, and continued to this Day. See his Turkish History, 1693.

2 The Kingdom of BABAMAN was in a more towards the East, and east the Mountains which divide Media from Hyrcania, as before was said. The Mountains in these parts so high, that Travellers at the end of a two Days Journey, may discern the mountain Region of the Air to be beneath them : exceeding troublesome to ascend, about 50 Miles in height when once got to the top, but more dangerous by reason of the Rocks and precipices, in the going down : full of inhospitable Streights, and so cold and barren, that were not Sovereignty a temptation above all Resistance, no Man would take upon him the command of so poor a Kingdom. And yet in this extremity of height and cold, there is great quantity of Sulphur, which makes it sparkle in the Night, like the Hill Venerius, in Italy, by means whereof here are many Hot-Baths, three of them walled about, two open ; to which resort unbound and decrepit People, in very great Multitudes. The chief Town of it Lary-Jo, in the ordinary Road or Pass betwixt Omael, the last Town of Hyrcania, and Darmian the first of Media. But the Kings Seat was in a Village called Reyna, where he had a Castle so built upon the best Advantages of Art and Nature, that it seemed invincible ; adorned above with Gardens, Flowers, and most pleasant Fruits ; and furnished beneath with a Rivulet of purest Water, which pleasantly passing thorow the Castle, fell into the Valleys. A Castle of so large a Circuit, that besides the King's Family or Court, it was able to admit a Garison of 10000 Men.

The last King hereof was the foresaid Babaman, derived from a long descent of Royal Ancestors, comparing for antiquity with the Persian Sophies : who though ill-neighbourd on both sides, by the Tartarian on the one, and the Kings of Persia on the other ; yet had they with great Fortune, Policy, and Valour, maintained their Royalities against all Pretenders. But Abas the late Persian Sophy, having either conquered or reduced Hyrcania, picked a Quarrel with Babaman ; pretending that by the opportunity of his situation he might rob his Caravans, hinder his Progress towards the Hyrcanian Sea, and turn into other Channels all the Streams or Rivers, which rising from Mount Taurus, watered and enriched his Persian Territories. And though Babaman never had attempted any of the things objected ; yet it was cause enough of Quarrel that he might so do : and therefore is besieged in his Castle of Reyna, with an Army of 30000 Men. Finding no possibility to prevail by force, the General of the Persians proceeds by Treachery, invites the old King into his Camp under Colour of Parley, and by this means drew his two Sons out of the Castle to the Parley also. Whom having got into his Power, he first caused their Heads to be cut off ; and after making use of their Seals and Signers, obtains a surrender of the place, and with it the possession of this mountainous Kingdom, Anno 1601. or thereabouts, united ever since to the Crown of Persia. This Relation is transcribed from Mr. Herbert's Travels into Persia, Pag. 108.

O F TURCOMANIA.

TURCOMANIA is bounded on the East, with Media, and the Caspian Sea; on the West, with the Euxine Sea, Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor; on the North with Tartary; and on the South, with Mesopotamia, and Assyria. So called from the Turcomans or Turks, who from hence made their first Expedition for the Conquest of Persia, and after spread themselves over all those parts of Europe, Asia, and Africk, now in their Possession. A Country which consisteth of four several Provinces, each Province having to its self its particular Story; and therefore we must look upon it, as it is now divided into those four Parts, that is to say, 1 Armenia Major, or Turcomania properly and specially so called; 2 Colchis, now called Mengrelia; 3 Iberia, now named Georgia; and 4 Albania, which they now term Zuiria.

1 ARMENIA MAJOR.

ARMENIA MAJOR is bounded on the East, with Media, and some part of the Caspian Sea; on the West, with the River Euphrates, which parteth it from Armenia Minor, in the lesser Asia; on the North, with Colchis or Mengrelia; and on the South, with Mesopotamia, and some part of Assyria.

It was called Armenia, as some say, quasi Aram Mini, or the Mini of Syria: but as others say, quasi Har Mini, that is to say Mons Mini, or Montana Miniadis: the Mini, or Minni, being a Region of this Tract, mentioned by Jeremy the Prophet, Chap. 51. 27. and by him placed betwixt Ararat and Askenaz, which shew the situation of it to be hereabouts. Major which add to it for distinction sake, to difference it from Armenia Minor: and now it is called Turcomania, as the first seat in which the Turcomans or Turks did fix themselves, after their eruption out of Scythia.

The Country in the most part overspread with Hills, Branches of those huge Mountains of Taurus, and Anti-Taurus; but intermixt with fertile and delightful Valleys, liberally furnished with Cattel, and good store of Fruits, though much subject to deep Snows, which do much annoy it. The Riches of it not to be better estimated than by the frankness of Tigranes, once King hereof: Who being fined by Pompey at 6000 Talents, not only very readily laid down that Sum; but added of his own accord to every Roman Soldier 50 Drachmas of Silver, 1000 Drachmas to each Captain, and to every Colonel a Talent. For though Tigranes had added some part of Media, and the whole Kingdom of Syria, unto his Estate; yet those being new Acquests, and not fully settled, were not much likely, for the present, to enrich his Coffers: new conquered Provinces being for the most part more chargeable than beneficial to the Victor.

The People are generally great bodied, of comely personage, and patient of all kind of labour; good Archers, when put to it, but careless of honour got by War; merry, desirous to be at ease, and apt to be soothed. The Women tall, but homely, of a manly look, most of them skilful at their Bow, or some other weapon. Their Families for the most part great, the Father and all his Posterity to the third and fourth Generation, living under a Roof; after whose Death the eldest, whether Son or Brother, hath the chiefest Rule. In diet and cloathing all alike, and in most Places they are said to be very industrious; painful in Tillage, and well seen in Manufactures, especially rich Tapestries, Grograins, and watered Chamlets: with which they traffick into most Cities of the Turks and other Mahometans; priviledged, as they say, by a Charter under Mahomet's own Hand, above other Christians, and upon that occasion more dispersed in the Eastern Countries than any Nation in the World, the Jews excepted.

They have a Language of their own, which they call the Armenian, not only used amongst them in common talk, but in sacred Offices: the Scriptures being translated into that Language also; and that, as the People do affirm, by the hand of St. Chrysostom, at such time as (on the solicitation of the Empress Eudoxia, his most eager Enemy) he was confined to the lesser Armenia, by the Emperor Arcadius: to whom also they ascribe the invention of the Armenian Character, or Letters still in use amongst them.

They received the Christian Faith by the preaching of St. Bartholomew, and were anciently of the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople, as a Province of the Pontick Diocese; which together with the Asian Diocese, and that of Thrace, were by the Council of Chalcedon laid unto that Patriarchat. But falling into the Opinion of Eutyches, touching one nature only in CHRIST our Saviour, they withdrew themselves long since from the Communion of the Greeks, whom they hold in greater detestation than all other Christians, and chose two Patriarchs of their own, of whom more anon. Other Opinions which they hold besides those of Eutyches (which yet they labour to make capable of an Orthodox sense;) and those wherein they differ from the Church of Rome, as 1 Denying Purgatory, and Prayers for the Dead. 2 Admitting none to be made Priests except those that be married. 3 Denying the Body of Christ to be really under the Species of Bread and Wine. And 4 Rebaptizing such as come to their Communion from the Latin Churches; Are these that follow, in which they differ also from most Churches else, viz. 1 In receiving Infants to the Lord's Table, immediately after Baptism. 2 In abstaining from unclean Beasts. 3 In fasting on Christmas-Day. And 4 In holding their Children over the Fire, as a necessary Circumstance in Baptism; because John the Baptist told the People which followed him, that CHRIST would Baptize them with the Holy Ghost, and with Fire; in which place he meaneth not material Fire, but the lively Purgation of the Holy Ghost, according to the nature of Fire. The Church of this Sect is governed by two Patriarchs; whereof the one hath under his jurisdiction this Turcomania, comprehending 150000 Families, besides very many Monasteries: and the other hath under him the two Provinces of Armenia the Lesser, and Cilicia, comprehending 20000 Families, or thereabouts: The first residing anciently in Sebastia, the Metropolis of the greater Armenia; the second originally at Meliten, the Metropolis of Armenia Minor; but of late at Sis, a small City, not far from Tarsus in Cilicia. Both honoured with the Title of Catholiques, and having under them to the number of 30 Bishops.

Chief Rivers of this Country, 1 Araxes, which rising out of Mount Abos, an Armenian Mountain, first runneth Eastward as far as Media, and then bendeth it self towards the North: and after a long Course is divided into two Branches; whereof the one faileth into the Caspian Sea, the other into, 2 Cyrus, another great River of this Country. The Fountain of this last in Mount Caucasus in the furthest North of Turcomania; and falling into a Lake, there meeteth with, 3 Cambyjis, another great River of these parts; and so together hasten to the Caspian also. 4 Euphrates, by the Turks called Frat, by the Hebrews Perab, famous in Scripture for its watering the Garden of Eden, hath its Fountain in the hills, which they call Niphates, as it is said by Strabo. A River of great length and swiftneſs. For having forc'd it self a paſſage through the Mountains of Taurus, it runneth in the West of Mesopotamia, with a ſtream ſo violent, that they who go by water from Bir to Birrah, a Town on the North-west of Mesopotamia, to the City of Bagdat, are ſain to come back again by Land, ſelling thoſe Boats for eight Crowns which they bought for fifty at Bir; it is gathered firſt into one great ſtream, being above that City divided into ſo many branches that it is called the River with a thouſand heads, but it being here as big as the Thames at Lambeth, it is here firſt called the Euphrates. Hackluit Tom. 2. Page 269. At Apamia, a City of Chaldaea, it is joyned with Tigris, with which the greateſt Branch of it paſſeth through the City of Babylon and ſo into the Persian Gulf, the reſt of it being cut into many Channels, for fear it ſhould overflow and drown the Country, are quite loſt in the Lakes of Chaldaea. 5 Tigris, a ſwifter ſtream than that whence it had the name; the word in the Median Tongue ſignifying an Arrow. A River of ſo ſtrong a courſe, that it paſſeth through the Lake Thonilis, without mixture of Waters, and affordeth the Armenians an eaſie paſſage to Bagdat: who on a few Rafts born up with Goat-fkins, blown full of wind, and boards laid upon them, make their Voyage thither. It is called Hiddekel, in the Scripture, one of the four Rivers which watered the Garden of Paradiſe; ſituate in an Iſland made by the embracement of this River and Euphrates, with their ſeveral branches, riſing originally out of the Lake of Thelpitis in Armenia Major, where now we are. It is preſently almoſt ſwallowed by the gaping Earth; and paſſing under the huge bulk of Taurus, breaketh forth again; and compaſſing the Eaſt parts of Mesopotamia, which it divides from Aſſyria, meets with Euphrates, as before. Of which its firſt and ſecond Birth thus the Poet Lucan,

*At Tigriſin ſubito tellus abſorbet hiatus,
Occuſoque tegit curſus; rurſuſque renatum
Fonte novo flumen pelagi non abnegat undas.*

That is to ſay,

Tigris, ſoon ſwallowed by the thirſty Earth,
Finds there a Burial where it had its Birth:
But breaking out at a new Spring, vouchſafes
With the Salt Sea to mix its ſweeter waves.

At Carna, a Caſtle ſeated on a Point of Land, the Tigris and Euphrates joyn. The River in this place is nine Engliſh Miles broad; and ſo high the Tides of the Ocean reach, and it is Navigable both ways with eaſe. The overflowing of the River makes the Country produce plenty of Corn, Rice, Pulſe, and Dates. Hackluit Tom. 2. Page 270.

Mountains of moſt note, are. 1 Abos, glorying in the Fountains of the great River Araxes. 2 Periarges, as Ptolemy, Partedri, as Pliny calleth it, a branch or ſpur of the great Mountain Taurus. 3 Uluceſpes, another branch of that great Mountain. 4 Some part of Anti-Taurus. 5 The Mountains called Montes Moſchici, more towards the North, abutting upon Cappadocia, and the Euxine Sea, which name they took from Meſech, or Moſoch the Son of Japhet, preſerving the remembrance of his Planting there. 6 Niphates, one of the Spurs of Taurus, out of which the famous River Euphrates is ſaid to iſſue. 7 The Gordian Mountains, conceived by many Learned Men to be the Mountains of Ararat, on one of the tops whereof, called Barni, the Ark of Noah is moſt generally affirmed to reſt. Affirmed by many ancient Writers of the Chriſtian Church, and countenanced not only by Joſephus and ſome others of the Elder Hiſtorians; but by the Septuagint themſelves: who in the 37th Chapter of Iſa. v. 38. and 2 King 19. 37. have rendred Ararat by Armenia. And be it ſo, let Ararat be Armenia, and conſequently the Mountains of Ararat be Armenian Mountains: yet doth it not follow hereupon, that the Ark reſted on the Gordian Mountains, or any other of this Country, as they would conclude. We may infer as Logiceſte, for ought I can ſee, that the Garden of Eden muſt be looked for in Armenia alſo, becauſe ſituate in the circlings of Euphrates, and Tigris, two Armenian Rivers. Thoſe Rivers have indeed their Fountains in Armenia Major, but compaſs not the Garden of Eden, till after a long courſe they encounter each other in the ſpacious Plains of Babylonia. And ſo thoſe Mountains, though they have the name of the Mountains of Ararat or Armenia, becauſe there firſt grown to a diſcernable and ſuper-eminent height above all the Mountains of thoſe parts, became not the reſting place of the Ark, till after a further courſe towards the Eaſt, they were grown to their full height; which is in thoſe parts of it betwixt Scythia and Persia, which are called Mount Caucasus: not that Mount Caucasus which lieth on the North of Colchis, and Iberia, out of which the River Cyrus is ſaid to riſe; but that which lieth on the Eaſt ſide of the Caspian Sea, where Mount Taurus and Imaus do croſs each other. But of this elſewhere.

It was divided heretofore into many Provinces, the Principal wherof had (I grant) its name from the Gordian Mountains, called in ſome Writers, Cordia; from whence the Province had the name of Gordiana, but moſt commonly called Corduene, Bordering on Aſſyria. The Kingdom once of Zarbicus, who ſiding with Lucullus againſt Tigranes King of Armenia, was by Tigranes Murdered with his Wife and Children; but honoured by Lucullus with a ſtately and Magnificent Funeral. 2. The Second Province of note is called Cotacene: near the Montes Moſchici. 3 Toſarene Bordering on the River Cyrus. 4 Colthene, on the Banks of Araxes. 5 Sophene, near the turnings of the River Euphrates: miſtook by ſome induſtrious and knowing men, to be the Syria Soba of the Holy Scriptures. 6 Baſſine, on the North-west, near the Springs of that River. But what Cities did belong to each I find no where ſpecified.

Thoſe of moſt conſequence in the whole, 1 Artaxata, by Florus called Caput Gentis: of moſt eſteem in thoſe times, and the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Armenia from its firſt Foundation. Built by Artaxes, one of the Progenitors of Tigranes, at the perſwaſion of Annibal, whiſt he abode in his Country: who liking the ſituation of the place, drew on it the Model of a ſtrong and gallant City, according to which Platform it was preſently built, taken, and ſacked by the Romans, as a daughter of Carthage, by Corbulo in the time of Nero, it never could revive again to its former ſplendor. In the middle Ages called Eſechia, and at this day Coy, or Coim, Choim; if not Built rather out of the Ruins of it. A City memorable for two great Battels near unto it; the firſt between Lucullus on the one ſide, againſt Antiochus and Tigranes on the other; wherein the Romans were Victors: the ſecond between Selimus Emperor of the Turks, and Hysmael the Persian Sophy; wherein the Turks were Conquerors, Anno 1514. A Victory which he bought with the loſs of 30000 of his beſt Men, and ſuch a Terror to the whole Army, that the Turks to this day call it the only day of Doom. The Field adjoining to the Town wherein this Cruel Battel was fought, called the Chalderan Fields. Coy, Coim, Choim, which is here ſaid to have ſprung out of the Ruins of Artaxata, is an obſcure place, not mentioned to my knowledge in any Traveler, or Map, whiſt others ſay, Teſus, or Miccherian, or one of them was the Ancient Artaxata. That ancient City

City was however, seated for certain upon the Araxes, a River of Armenia. 2 Sebastia, now Suassia, seated on Euphrates, where it meeteth with the Mountain Taurus; the Residence of the Patriarch of the Armenians, at their first separation from the See of Constantinople; the Metropolis at that time of all Armenia: so named in honour of Augustus, whom the Greeks call Sebastos. But of late divested of that Dignity, the Patriarchal See, by reason of the fierce Wars raging in this Country, betwixt the Persians and the Turks, being removed to the Monastery of Eomeazin, near the City of Erivan in Persia; in the Dominions of which King, these Armenian Christians live in great abundance, by the name of Jelpbelins. 3 Tigranocerta, beautified and enlarged, if not first Founded by Tigranes above-mentioned; by whom replenished with People of several Nations, whose Countries he had taken from them, and enriched in a manner with the wealth of all his Kingdom: there being no Armenian, either Prince or Peasant, who sent not somewhat towards the adorning of it. But taken by Lucullus without great resistance, those several Nations not agreeing amongst themselves; and therein besides other Treasure, no less than 8000 Talents in ready Money. The City situate near a River, which Tacitus calleth Nicesorius. 4 Arsamesata, by Pliny, called Arfimote, on the Banks of Euphrates. 5 Cholna, so called in memory of Hul, or Cbul, the Son of Aram, one of the first Planters of this Country. 6 Baraza, by the Emperor Leo much Enlarged and Beautified; dignified with the new name of Leontopolis, and for a while made the Metropolis of the Province. 7 Arsarata, by Strabo called Arxata. 8 Theodosiopolis, built on the foundation of some of the more ancient Cities, by the Emperor Theodosius, and of him thus named. 9 Colonia, the strongest and most defensible City hereof, when possessed by the Romans. 10 Clamassum, a strong Town on the Banks of Euphrates, taken by Selimus the first in his way towards Persia, and therewith livery & seisin of the rest of this Country, since wholly Conquered by his Successors. 11 Chars, not far from the same River also, supposed to be the Chorsa of Ptolomy, of which not long since the Ruins only; but in three weeks so Repaired and Fortified by the Turks, Anno 1579. that it is thought to be Impregnable. 12 Thessia, giving name of old to the Lake Thespitis, and to the Region called Thespites, but now not in being. 13 Armining now of greatest name, and esteemed the Metropolis of this Country: situate in that part of the Lake of Vaslan (the Mariana palus of the ancient Writers) which lieth next to this Country: and by that well fortified: the only City of Armenia possessed by the Persians, who are the Lords of all that Lake, of which more hereafter. 14 Van, both for natural situation, and the works of Art, accounted by the Turks for their strongest Bulwark in these parts against the Persians; and for that cause well Garisoned, and as well Munitioned.

The Principal Cities in it at this day are Erivan, or Irvan. 2 Nacchivan. 3 Zulpha (now Ruined) and 4 Van. 1 Erivan is a great City, but ill built, seated in a Plain between two Rivers. This City is supposed to be the ancient Artaxata, being seated as that was, between the Araxes and Mount Ararat: This City has been taken by the Turks and Persians as the Fortune of the War favoured them, but in 1635. it was finally united to Persia, Sir John Chardin page 245. Tavernier page 13. 2 Nacchivan lies 21 Leagues from Erivan to the South; it contains about 2000 houses, and has had many more, which are now rebuilding, it is now under the Persian King, but has been miserably harassed by the Turks, Chardin page 345. Van, in 1664. was a great City, seated on a Lake of the same name, and has in it a strong Fortrefs, or Castle, seated on a Mountain which is in the hands of the Turks; in 1636. it was Besieged by the Persians but without effect, Tavernier page 106. Zulpha was laid desolate by Abbas King of Persia, and the Inhabitants removed to Hispban, where they built a great Suburb of that name; but the old City is since began to be rebuilt and repeopled with a few Armenians.

This Country was first planted by Hul or Cbul the Son of Aram, and by Mesech one of the Sons of Japhet, who with their Families or Colonies possessed the same: the one leaving the remainder of his name in the Montes Moschici; the other in the Town called Cholna, and the Region called Colibene by Ptolomy, Cholsabene by Stephanus. Advanced to the honour of a Kingdom as soon as any, that of Babel excepted: Ninus the Third from Nimrod, finding Barzanes King hereof, whom he forced to acknowledge his Superiority, and to aid him in his Wars against Zoroaster the King of Bactria. Kings of most note in times succeeding, (for we have no constant Catalogue of them) were 1 Araxes, who being Warred on by the Persians, was promised Victory by the Oracle, on the Sacrifice of his two fair Daughters. Willing to satisfy the Gods, and yet spare his Children, he Sacrificed two of the daughters of Miesalcus, a Noble-man of this Country: by whom in Revenge hereof his own daughters were slain, and himself so closely followed, that swimming the River then called Helmus, he was therein drowned, and thereby gave unto that River the name of Araxes. 2 Artaxa, the founder of the great City Artaxata; spoken of before. 3 Tigranes, the most mighty King that ever Reigned in Armenia, to which he added by his Prowess, Galatia, and a great part of Cilicia, in Asia Minor, the whole Countries of Media, Syria, and Phoenicia: but siding with Mithridates, whose daughter he had Married, against the Romans, he was by Lucullus overthrown in two great Battels, and outed of the greatest part of his Dominions. Hearing that Pompey had succeeded Lucullus in Command of the Army, and trusting more to his goodness than a Wise Man would, he put himself into his power: by whom condemned in a great sum of Money for the Charge of the War, and stripped of all the rest of his Estates, he was suffered to enjoy Armenia Major, Syria being made a Province, Sophene given to Ariobarzanes King of Cappadocia, Media left unto it self, and the lesser Armenia conferred on one of his Sons, who being found guilty of some practice with the King of Parthia, was carried Prisoner into Rome, and his Country brought into the form of a Province. 4 Artavasdes, circumvented by Marc-Antony, who led him Prisoner to Rome, but (catenis ne quid honori ejus deesset aureis, as the Historian tells us of him) it was in Chains of Gold for his great honour; giving Armenia to one of the Sons of Cleopatra. And tho' 5 Artaxias recovered his Fathers Kingdom, yet he and his Successors held it but as Vassals of the Roman Empire: the Senate after that confirming, and sometimes nominating the Armenian Kings. Continuing in this Estate till the time of Trajan, it was by him reduced to the form of a Province (made after that a part of the Partick Diocese) who adding Mesopotamia also unto his Dominions, made Tigris the Eastern border of his Empire, which Augustus thought fit to limit with the Banks of Euphrates. But long it held not in that form, being Governed by its own Kings, as it was before Trajan's time, in the Reign of Constantinus, Julian, and the Emperors following, whom they acknowledged and revered as their Lords in chief, till the time of Justinian the second, (he began his Empire Anno 687.) when Subdued by the Saracens. Recovered by that Emperor, but soon lost again, it continued subject to the Saracens till the breaking in of the Turks, An. 844. of whom more anon. The greatest part of the Turks emptying themselves into Persia, and other Countries which they took from the Eastern Emperors; the Christians of Armenia began to take heart again, and to have Kings of their own, by whom Governed, till again Subdu'd by Occadan, or Heccata the Son of Cingis, the

the first Cham of the Tartars. Nor did the Tartars make so absolute a Conquest of it, as to extinguish either Christianity or the Race of the Kings, Haithon, surnamed Armenius, Reigning after this, and going in Person to Mongo, the great Cham of Tartary, 1257. And in our own Chronicles, in the Reign of K. Richard the Second, we find mention of one Leon an Armenian King, who came hither to sue for aid against the Turks; by whom then dispossessed of his Estates, by Uffan Cassanes, one of the Princes of this Country, (of whom more hereafter) who had the fortune to obtain the Crown of Persia, Anno 1472. it was made a Province of that Kingdom, and so continued till the year 1515. when Conquered by Selimus the First, and by him made a part of the Turkish Empire; more fully settled and assured in the Reign of Amurat the Third, who by causing many Forts and Garisons to be planted in it, made the Conquest Absolute.

The Arms of this Kingdom, when a Kingdom, Governed by Princes of its own of the Christian Faith, were Gules, three heads of a Buck, Argent Crowned, Or.

2. COLCHIS. MENGRELIA.

COLCHIS is bounded on the East with Iberia; on the West, with the Euxine Sea, and part of the Tartars Precopenses; on the North with Tartary, from which parted by those vast Hills, which the Romans called Caucasi; and on the South, with Armenia Major, from which separated by the Montes Moschici.

The reason of the name I find not. Nor can yield unto Bochartus, who fetcheth the Original of the Name and Nation from Casubim, one of the Sons of Mizraim, the Son of Cham, the Etymology of the name being too much wrested, and Aegypt too far off to give a being to Colchis in those early days; tho' possibly in times succeeding, the Aegyptians hearing by the Greeks, of the Wealth of the Country, might send Colonies of their People thither, as to other places. It is now called Mengrelia.

The Country said to be very fruitful, if the care of the Husbandman were not wanting. Their Vines they plant at the feet of great Trees, which twining about the Arms thereof lade them full of Grapes: with which, and other fruits rising from the Earth, they used of late times to furnish the Store-houses of their Kings, for want of ready Money to fill his Coffers, their Tributes being paid in such Commodities. Formerly of great fame for abundance of Gold, found in the sands of their Rivers issuing from the Caucasian Mountains. The thing affirmed by Appianus in his Mithridatica; χρυσόφορος ὃ ἐκ τῶ Κανχίδου ποταμοῦ καὶ τῆς ἱστύριας ἀσφαλίδος, Many of their Springs saith he, which come out of Caucasus, carry veins of Gold. The like saith Strabo also, and some other Ancients With which, and out of their Rich Mines both of Gold and Silver, the Kings hereof were so well furnished with those Metals, that the Furniture of their Chambers were all of Gold, and the beams of their Lodgings were made of Silver. But now so destitute of both, that the People for want of money to buy and sell with, are enforced to barter their Commodities, and change one for another.

The People at the present very Rude and Barbarous; so inhumane and void of natural affection, that they sell their Children to the Turks. The better sort of them much given to Belly-cheer, dancing, and singing loose Sonnets of Love and Dalliance; using much Wine in their entertainments, which the more their Guests drink, the better welcome; enflamed wherewith they offer them for a Cooler, their Wives or Sisters, with charge to yield them all content, esteeming it no small credit to them if it be accepted. Nor are the Women much averse from the entertainment, whether to please themselves or obey their Husbands, let them tell that can.

The Christian Faith was first here planted in the time of the Emperor Justinus, by whose persuasion Tamus

Prince of the Colchi, then at the Court in Constantinople, became a Christian; and being Baptized, was returned back into his Country with the Title of King. But Cabades the King of Persia much offended at it, proclaim'd War against him; which hindred the farther progress of the Gospel, till the year 860. About which time Methodius and Cyril, two Reverend Men, were by the Patriarch of Constantinople employed in this Service; which they successfully effected. In that regard they hold to the Communion of the Church of Greece, and belong to the jurisdiction of that Patriarch, to whom conform in most dogmatical points of their Religion, and in many practical. And though they have a distinct Language of their own, which hath no affinity with the Greek, yet do they celebrate Divine Offices in the Greek Tongue, and follow the Rituals of that Church; which few of em understand any better than the vulgar Papists of France, Spain, or Germany do the Latin Service. Whether it be that they have no Learned Men among them, either to Translate their old Liturgie, or to compose a new; or that they hold all alterations in Religion to be matters of danger; or that Ignorance is the best Mother of Devotion (as is thought by others) I am not able to determine.

The chief Rivers of this Country are, 1 Hippus, 2 Cyanæus, 3 Chæristus, all rising out of the Caucasian Mountains, and falling into the Euxine, 4 Phasis, the principal of all, rising out of the Montes Moschici, or Armenian Mountains, and there call'd Bos. Navigable with smaller Vessels a great way up into the Country, and with great Ships eighteen miles from the Sea. Memorable among the Ancients for the Landing of the Argonauts in the mouth thereof; and those delicate Fowl called from hence Phasides, or Phasiani (Pheasants) which they brought with them into Europe.

As for this Expedition of the Argonauts, being the most remarkable action in those elder ages of the World, when Piracies and Depredations were accounted for Heroical Virtues; 'twas no other than the adventure of some Noble Græcians, for the Gold of Colchos. The Age wherein it happen'd, was about the 11 year of Gideon, the Judge of Israel. The chief Adventurers, Jason, Orpheus the famous Poet, Castor and Pollux the Sons of Tindarus, Telamon and Peleus, the Sons of Æacus, and Fathers of Ajax and Achilles, Laertes the Father of Ulysses, Amphiarus the Sooth-sayer, Hercules, Theseus, Meleager, with many others of like note. These moved with the great noise of the Wealth of Colchos, and the Riches of King Ætes, then therein Reigning, resolved upon a Voyage thither, Embarked in a Ship called Argo, (whence the name of Argonauts) whereof one Typhus was chief Pilot. Passing the Hellepont, Propontick, and Thracian Bosphorus, they came into the Euxine Sea: and after many difficulties and strange Adventures (which such Knights Errants could not chuse but encounter with) they Landed in the River Phasis, and came to the King's Court, and there were kindly entertained But finding the Kings Treasures to be too well guarded to be took by force (said by the Poets to be kept by a Dragon always waking) they practised with Medea, the daughter of Ætes, to assist them in robbing her Father. Who being in Love with Jason, on promise of Marriage with him assented to it: by whose Artifices (which the Poets call Magical Charms) the Guardians being circumvented, and the Treasure gotten, they all, together with Medea, embarked again, and after a long and tedious voyage returned into Greece. This is the substance of the Story; which being the greatest and most notable voyage which the Græcians, in those early days had undertaken, occasioned the Poets to advance it to the highest pitch, and to disguise it with many Fictions, and ingenious Fancies: but not without some ground entituled to the Golden Fleece (which they make the end of the design.) For the Rivers as before was said, having Golden Sands, which fell down from the Mountains (as in many other parts of the world they are found to have) it was the custom of the People to lay many Fleeces of Wool in the descent of those Rivers, in which the grains of Gold remained, tho' the Water passed through; which Strabo witnesseth to be true.

But leaving these Adventurers to pursue their Fortunes, let us go forward to survey the Colchian Cities; the principal whereof, 1 Dioscurias, a Town of great wealth and Trade, founded by Amphitus, and Telchius, two Spartans the Charioteers of Castor and Pollux and so named in honour of their Masters, whom the Greeks call Διόσκουροι: which two Spartans passing further East, were afterwards the Founders of the Nation from them called Heniochi, or the Chariot-drivers. A Town of such resort by Merchants from most parts of the World, that here were spoken 300 different Languages; insomuch that the Romans (as Pliny saith, were fain to maintain here 130 Interpreters for dispatch of Business, and Negotiating with the Merchants 2 Sybaris, the Seat-Royal of the Colchian Kings, about nine miles from which was the Temple of Mars, to which Medea is reported to have brought the Argonauts. 3 Siganeum, near the mouth of the River Cyanæus: as is also 4 Æa, by Ptolomy called Æapolis, an Egyptian Colony, planted here by Sesostris (in the time of Rehoboam the Son of Solomon) at what time he attempted, but without success, the Conquest of Colchis. 5 Neapolis, so called from the newness or foundation of it, when that name was given. 6 Phasis, so call'd from the River upon which it is situate, retaining both the site and name to this very day: the ordinary Residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg, by whom called Phassum. 7 Alvasi, a well Fortified place. More in the Land are placed by Ptolomy 8 Mechelessus. 9 Syrace. 10 Zadris. 11 Zurium. &c. not much observable in old Story, nor now known at all.

The first Inhabitants of this Country, most probably, came out of the neighbouring Armenia, and therefore the Posterity of Hul, or Chul, from whence perhaps the name of Colchis, to whom in tract of time some Colonies out of Ægypt, (a Sea-faring People) moved with the great fame of the riches and wealth hereof, did adjoyn themselves: the Colchians on that ground, (or from some part of his Army left there by Sesostris) being said by Ammianus Marcellinus, to be the ancient off-spring of the Ægyptians. The most ancient of their Kings was Ætes, spoken of before; who entertaining Phryxus flying out of Greece from the fury of his Step-dame Ino, with great store of Treasure, occasioned the Argonauts, as well in way of revenge, as in hope of booty, to make that famous expedition for the Gold of Colchos, disguised under the fiction of the Golden Fleece. Of most note after him, Selaucus, and Esibopes, who first discovered the rich Mines of Gold and Silver; of which Metals they made all their Utensils, even the Beams of their Chambers. The same whereof drew thither Sesostris, the great King of Ægypt, who being vanquished in the Field, was fain to lay aside all those hopes which he brought with him thither, and return back to Ægypt in worse state than he came, but that he left behind him an Ægyptian Colony in the City of Æa, which after occasioned others of that Country to repair hither also. Living in peace and unmolested from this time forwards, they were unhappily engaged by Tygranes of Armenia, to side with him against the Romans; and in his overthrow gave such advantage to the Victor, that Orodes the King of Colchis was fain to submit himself to Pompey, to dismiss his Forces, leave his fastnesses, and finally to redeem his peace, by sending him a Bedstead of purest Gold, and many other rich Presents. After this, the Romans had here their Agents, and received hence some annual profits, but never brought it to the form of a Province. Distressed between the Persians and Constantinopolitans, they had much ado to stand upright; tho' betwixt both they kept themselves in a kind of Liberty: as of late times, betwixt the Persians, Turks, and Tartars, their too potent Neighbours. But at the last, An. 1579. Amurath III. to make the safer passage for his Forces into Georgia, sent Uluzales his Admiral, with a great Fleet into the Euxine Sea, who coming up the River Phasis, took the City of Phassum, Fortified it, and laid so certain a Foundation of future Conquest, that though the Mengrelians did not long after demolish some of his Fortifications; yet they were afterwards repaired, and Phassum made the Seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, as it still continueth.

Colchis is at this day called Mengrelia, and is divided as some say, into three small Kingdoms of Royolets, viz. Imaretta, the King of which is the true Sovereign of the whole Country, the second is Mengrelia, properly so called, and the third Guriel; to which some others have added Abassa, or Aivogassa. They are Christians by Profession, but so ignorant, that their Bishops and Clergy have lost the true form of Baptism. The Kings, Great Men, and Bishops sell their People to the Turks and Persians for Slaves, which, with the perpetual Wars among themselves, and with their Neighbours, have reduc'd them to the most dismal state of Poverty and Desolation that can be imagined. Sir John Chardin, who was amongst them is of opinion, the reason why the Turks will not (as they easily might) make a Conquest of these People, is because they find more advantage to keep it as a Nursery of Slaves, than once for all to subdue them. For the Bounds and Dimensions of these small Kingdoms the Reader may better have recourse to my Geographical Dictionary, or Lexicon, than to swell this Book with things of that nature, which are scarce worth his time, Tavernier page 125. 126. Arch-Angel, Lambert, and Sir John Chardin have given large Accounts of the Manners, and Government of the Mengrelians, but I have none of them at present by me.

3 I B E R I A.

IBERIA is bounded on the East, with Albania; on the West, with Colchos; on the North, with the Caucasian Mountains; and on the South, with the Montes Moschici; by the first Mountains parted from Sarmatia Asiatica, and by the last from Armenia Major.

It was so called from the River Iberus, which running through it, falleth at last into the more noted River Cyrus. But is now called Georgia; and that as some say, from St. George the Cappadocian Martyr, whom here they have in great Reverence, as their tutelar Saint and Patron; as others say, from George a Cappadocian Bishop, by whose Preaching they were brought unto Christianity, and some again will have them called properly Gordians, and corruptly Georgians, from their near neighbourhood to those Mountains: But the most probable Opinion is, as I conceive, that they took this name from the Georgi, whom Pliny reckoneth amongst other of the Caspian Nations. Tho' to say truth, the name of Georgia extendeth somewhat farther than that of Iberia, as comprehending also that part of Armenia Major which lies next to Media, and the whole Country of Albania, if I guess aright.

The Country, for the greatest part, is covered with Mountains, Woods, and Thickets; and in that regard Unconquerable for the difficulty of the Mountainous passages: yet notwithstanding it is very fruitful in many places, having many fertile Plains, and wealthy Valleys, well watered, and of greater increase to the Husbandman, if he be not wanting to himself in care and industry.

Of the old Iberians it is written, that they were a very warlike Nation, and us'd to set as many Pillars about the grave of a dead man, as he had slain enemies in his life: as also that those of the same Tribe or Family had all things common, he being the Ruler which was eldest: and that some of them did derive themselves from the Children of David begotten on the wife of Uriah, for that cause never Marrying out of their Kindred. The present Georgians very Warlike, strong of Body, and valorous in Fight, for a long time defended themselves and Country

Country from the Turks and Persians, with great prudence making use of the one against the other; But over-powered by the vast multitude of Turks breaking in upon them, they have lost many of their best Forts, and much of their Liberty.

The Christian Faith was first here planted in the time of Constantine the Great, by means of a Christian Captive Woman (such extraordinary ways doth God find out to promote his Gospel) who being of a most devout Life, and exemplary Piety, had by her Prayers to CHRIST restored a young Child to health, which was thought past cure: and healed the Queen hereof of a desperate malady, when no help of Physick would prevail. Whereupon the King sent Ambassadors to Constantine, desiring Ministers and Preachers to be sent to Iberia, to instruct the People in the Faith, which was done accordingly. Since that time Christianity hath flourished in this Country without interruption; though by Mahometans and Pagans, on all sides encompassed: agreeable in doctrinal Points to the Church of Greece, whose Rituals also the People do to this Day follow. Not Subject for all that to the Patriarch of Constantinople, (though of his Communion) but to their own Metropolitan only: who hath under him about 18 Bishops, and resideth for the most part, in St. Katherine's Monastery on Mount Simas. By means of which remote dwelling of their principal Pastor, Mahometanism hath got some footing, and Jesuitism began to creep in amongst them. The occasion of which last was this.

About the Year 1614. the Persians making an inroad into this Country, took the City of Cremen, and therein Cetaba, the Mother of Prince Teimurazes; whom, leading her Captive into Persia, and not able to prevail with her to turn Mahometan, they most cruelly murdered. Some of the Jesuits then travelling in those Countries, and willing out of that sad accident to advance the fame of their Society, together with the Catholick Cause, cut off the Head of a dead Man whom they found in the way, anointed it with Oyl and Odours, brought it into Georgia, and signified unto the Prince, that they had with them the Head of the blessed Martyr Cetaba: desiring leave to live in some Monastery, and have the keeping of the holy Relique committed to them. This easily believed, and granted, the Head was placed with great honour in the Church of St. George at Aberdail; much resort to it from all parts by diseased Persons: whom if past cure, the Jesuits sent home again, prescribing them in the way of preparation a long time of Repentance; if curable by outwards means which they applied, the cure was presently ascribed to the holy Relique. Grown famous by this means, they gained many Proselytes to themselves; and had no small hope of prevailing on Prince Teimurazes to submit himself to the Pope, as the Vicar of CHRIST. When in the heat of all their Glories, a Letter cometh from Maacra, a Lady attendant on the Princess, (but then living in Persia, as a Slave or Bondmaid) signifying that her Master by her perswasion, had got into his power the Body of his Mother Cetaba; which he might ransom if he pleased: two Travellers withal, who came out of Persia with the Jesuits, reporting what they see them do with the Dead Man's Head. By which means the Imposture being discover'd, the Body of the Queen was sent for, the false Relique was call out of the Church, and the false Jesuits into Prison, and next out of the Country.

Rivers of note I find not any, either in Ptolomy, or any of our modern Writers, but what are touched upon before, except only the River of Iberus spoken of already, from which the Country is thus named. The whole in general so destitute of Waters, that Pompey in his March this way against the Albanians, was fain to carry 10000 Bladders filled with Water for the use of his Army.

Places of most antiquity and importance in it, 1 Ar-taxissa, 2 Vasada, 3 Lubium, 4 Armaftica, all named by Ptolomy; this last by Pliny called Harmastis. 5 Cremen, the chief City now possessed by the Georgians. 6 Cachete, honoured with a fair Church, the most beautiful of all the Country, dedicated by the name of Saint George. 7 Triala, where are to be seen the ruins of a large City and many Churches; by what name anciently called, I find not. 8 Altuncala, or the Golden Castle, a strong Fortrefs, and the ordinary residence of the Georgian Princes, since the time of the Wars betwixt the Persians and the Turks. 9 Archibulech, a strong Castle taken by Selmar, the Magnificent in his Wars against Tamars King of Persia, and ever since holden by the Turks. 10 Telus, a large and capacious Town, forsaken by the Georgians at the coming of Mustapha, General of Amurath the third, against the Persians: who liking the situation of it caused it to be repaired and fortified, planted thereon an hundred Pieces of Ordnance, and left therein a Garrison of 600 Soldiers. Sir John Chardin, pag. 208. who saw it lately, saith, It was then in the hands of the Persians, being seated at the bottom of a Mountain, upon the River Cur, Kbur, Cyrus, encompassed on all sides, but the South, with a strong and beautiful Wall, and the South side is secured by the River. It has 14 Christian Churches, but never a Mosque, because the Christians will not endure it; and the Persians are too wise to exasperate their Frontier People, who can with ease call in the Turks to revenge the Injuries of their Religion. The Bishop's See and Palace is now in this City. This City is well peopled, and full of Strangers, on the account of Trade. It was twice taken by the Turks, viz. under Ighmac II. and Solyman his Son. When or how it was recover'd by the Persians, I have not yet read. Telus is from Scamaetri 8 Leagues, as Struys saith, p. 249. 11 Lori, distant from Telus about two Days Journey of a Carrier's Pace, strengthened with a lofty Castle, environed with deep Ditches, and a thick Wall, amounting to a Mile in compass. Seized on by Ferat Bassa, the Successor of Mustapha, who repaired the Walls, planted thereon 200 small Pieces of Ordnance, and Garisoned it with 7000 Turks for Defence thereof. 12 Tomanis, a short Days march from Lori, the Country lying betwixt both, full of rich Fields and Pastures, abounding with Corn, Fruit, and Cattel. Nigh unto which the said Ferat raised a new Fortrefs, for the better command of the Streights and Passages, leading from thence to Lori, and so to Telus, (the Key of Media or Sirvan) the Wall whereof being 1700 Yards in compass, he caused to be planted with 200 Pieces of Artillery, and with incredible Diligence cut down a thick Wood which lay before it, which otherwise would have been a receptacle of Thieves, or Enemies. 13 Glisca, 14 Bascapan, possessed and fortified by the Turks, to make good their footing in this Country. But possibly most of these strong-holds now possessed by the Turks may be within the bounds of Armenia Major, and Albania, tho' within the Country of the Georgians; the name not being limited to Iberias, as was said before. I do not find that any of them are now extant; and it is probable, as they were built by the Turks to secure the possession of this Country against the Persians, so they were all destroyed by the latter, after Telus fell into their hands, which I reckon was in the Reign of Sba Abbas.

The first Inhabitants hereof were such who were brought hither by Tubal, the Son of Japhet, from whom this People at the first, as Josephus hath it, had the name of Thobeli. But that name growing out of knowledge, the Nations in it of most note were the Tikarini, Mossynaci, Chalybes, and of less esteem, the Biseri, Sapner, Macrones, &c. united at the last in the name of Iber, from the River Iberus, of which Pliny speaketh, the principal of all this Country. Too fruitful of increase for so narrow a dwelling, some of them put themselves to seek their Fortunes; when after long wandering they fell upon the Coast of Spain next the Pyrenes, where they staid themselves; giving the name of Iberus to the chief River there, and of Iberia to the Country; Of which more before. Such of them as remained behind continued an unconquered people, under the government of their own Kings, till the time of Tigranes, King of Armenia. By whom invited to his aid against the Romans, they came in accordingly; and in his Fall discomfited by Lucullus in three several Battels, were fain to stand upon their guard as well as they could: first holding fair with Pompey, who succeeded Lucullus in his charge; but breaking out again on a new Temptation, they were encountered by him: In which Battel 9000 of their Men being slain, and 10000 taken, they were constrained to sue for Peace; not otherwise to be obtained till Attaces, the King of these Iberians, gave his Sons for Pledges. After this Endurance to the Roman and Gracian Emperors, till the fatal Inundation of the Saracens had so weakened that Empire, that the Kings hereof acknowledged no more subjection to those of Constantinople, till Constantinople it self became the Imperial Seat of the Ottoman Family; in whose Quarrels with the Persian Sophies, this Country began to suffer a new Invasion; some Towns and Forts of it being taken by Solyman, in his March or Passage against Tamas. Afterwards in the Time of Amurath the Third, who set his Mind most eagerly on the War with Persia, a great part of it was subdued by Mustapha, the Turkish General: who inviting the Widow Princess and her Two Sons to come to his Tent, sent the young Princess to Constantinople; and by that means had opportunity to assure his purposes. And though the Persians did their best to assist the Georgians, yet proved they but a kind of miserable Comforters, as much punishing or plaguing this poor Country with their Aids, as the Turks by their Armies: So that now it stands divided betwixt the Grand Seigneur, and its Natural Princes, the Georgian Princes holding the greatest part, but the Turks being in possession of the strongest Holds; kept by them under colour of securing their way to Persia; for which this Country is indeed but unhappily seated. The Turks are now intirely beaten out.

A L B A N I A.

A L B A N I A is bounded on the East with the Caspian Sea; on the West with Iberia; on the North, with the Caucasian Mountains; on the South, with the Moscibici: So named from the Albani, who did once inhabit it; and of late called Suiria but reckoned in these last Ages as a part of Georgia.

The Country of so rich a Soil, that without the least labour of the Husbandman, the Earth doth naturally and liberally afford her store; and where it is but once sown, will yield two or three Reapings. But being ill Husbands on it in former Times, they occasioned Strabo to give them this Note for a remembrance. That they needed not the use of the Sea, who knew no better how to make use of the Land. The People anciently so simple, that they could not reckon above One Hundred; ignorant of Weights, Measures, and the use of Money. Old Age they had in high esteem, but held it utterly unlawful to make speech of the Dead. And of these Pliny doth report, That they were gray-headed from their very Youth, and could see as well by Night as by Day: The verity of which last may be somewhat questionable. But withal, they are affirmed to have been a stout and courageous People, strong Bodies, patient of Toil and Labour, as they are at this Day. And well the men may be courageous and stout, when the Women are so truly masculine. Of whom it is affirmed by Authors of undoubted Credit, That they were exercised in Arms and Martial Feats, as if descended lineally from the Ancient Amazons, whom Plutarch placed in this Tract; reporting some of them to be aiding to these Albanians, in their War with Pompey: which possibly might be no other than some of the more noble Albanian Dames.

Principal Rivers of this Country, 1 Soana, giving name to the Soani, one of the Nations of these parts mentioned by Pliny. 2 Cæsius. 3 Gerrus. 4 Albanus, whence perhaps the name of Albani came unto this People. 5 Cyrus, (by Plutarch called Cyrnus) spoken of in Armenia Major, but more properly belonging to this Country; because herein it hath its Spring, and the greatest part of its course also. For rising out of the Mountain Caucasus, which shuts up this Province on the North, it passeth thorow the midst of it, till it come to the Borders of Armenia, where it beginneth to bend more towards the East; and having received into its Channel all the former Rivers, besides many others of less note, falleth with twelve Mouths into the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. This River was a long time the Boundary between the Turks and Persians. Mountains of note here are not any, but what are common unto them with other Nations: The Montes Moscibici on the South, and Caucasus upon the North, being rather common boundaries betwixt several Nations, than peculiar unto any one; though from the last the Iberians, and these Albanians, be in some Writers called Caucasice Gentes.

Cities and Towns I find many in it, but little of them more than their very Names: 1 Chabata, by Pliny called Cabalaca, and honoured with the Character of Insignis Albanie urbs, the most noted City of this Country. 2 Albana, so called from the River Albanus, upon which it was seated. 3 Teleba. 4 Nomechia. 5 Thelbis. 6 Getara, near unto the Influx of the River Cyrus. How these are called, or whether any thing be remaining of them, I am not able to say. The chief now being, and worthy to be so accounted, is the City of Derbent, situate near the Caspian Sea; from which to Teflis, a City spoken of before, remain the Foundations of a high and thick Wall; affirmed to have been built by Alexander the Great, to defend these Parts against the irruptions of the Northern unconquered Nations. The Town invironed with two Walls, and so defended by difficult and narrow passages of the Rocks, that it is not easily accessible; but taken for all that, by Mustapha.

Muſtaſpha the Turkiſh General, Anno 1577. and made the ordinary Residence of a Turkiſh Baſia: Conceiv'd to be the Caucaſiæ Porta of the Ancients, which Pliny honoureth with the Title of Ingens naturæ miraculum: By Egeſippus, for the ſtrength of it, call'd Porta Ferrea; with reference to which by the Turks call'd Demir-can, the word ſignifying in their Language, A Gate of Iron. This City is now under the King of Persia: Mr. Jenkenſon, who ſaw it in 1562, ſaith it is an old City, ſeated on an Hill call'd Ciſtow, walled with very high, and thick Free-ſtone Walls; Hackluit, p. 1. p. 345. Strays a Dutchman, who ſaw it in 1670, ſaith, It lies ſtreched from Eaſt to Weſt about two Engliſh miles, the Caſpian Sea waſhing its Walls, and was then the ſurtheſt City the Perſians had on this ſide, and their Frontier againſt the Ruſs and Tartar, pag. 225. It had then a Garriſon of 1200 Perſians, but was going to decay, the lower Ward next the Sea being all turned to Gardens; the middle Ward inhabited by none but Perſians, and a few Jews, who dealt moſtly in Slaves. The Upper-Ward was a Fortrefs furniſhed with Braſs Cannon. Thus far, and much more that Author hath concerning this old and almoſt ruined City. The other places of this Tract are either of no account and eſtimation, or elſe are ſpecified before amongſt the Cities and good Towns of the Georgians, of whoſe Country this is now a part: yet we may add, 2 Sabran, upon the Borders of Media. 3 Sancta Maria, North of Derbent; both of them on, or near the Banks of the Caſpian Sea.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Country ſeem to have been of the Plantation of Geſher the Son of Arum, and Nephew of Japhet, whoſe Memory was long preſerved in the City of Getara, before mentioned: So call'd by him, or ſome of his Poſterity in remembrance of him. The people living ſomewhat out of the Common Road, were little troubled with Invaders from Foreign Parts; neither the Perſians nor Macedonians looking ſo far North. Nor poſſibly had the Romans taken notice of them, had they not engaged themſelves with Tigranes firſt, and afterwards with Mitridates: Falling on Pompey with an Army of 40000, and well beaten by him, they were content to ſue for Peace. But finding that the Iberians alſo had took up Arms, they engaged again; levying an Army of 12000 Horſe, and 90000 Foot, in which Oroetes their King, with his Brother Cofis, were in perſon preſent. And though they had made good the Banks of the River Cyrus; yet being ill armed, and for the moſt part only with Skins of Beaſts, they made but ſmall reſiſtance againſt the Romans: notwithstanding the gallant charge of Cofis, who aſſaulted Pompey, and had the honour to be ſlain by him in the place. After this overthrow, and their giving Pledges unto Pompey for their Good Behaviour, we find little mention of them in the Stories of the Roman Empire, till the Time of Trajan; who having conquered and reduced Armenia Major to the Form of a Province, reſolved to ſhew his Power to theſe Neighbouring Nations: and to that end impoſed a King on the Albani, of his own appointment, and made the Kings of Colchis and Iberia, do their Homage to him. In Times ſucceeding no News of them; either becauſe remote from the Stage of Action, or ſerving under the command of ſome greater Nation, where their name occurs not. Conquered by Orcades, or Hocata, the Chieſ of Tartary, together with Georgia, and Armenia they were a while ſubject to that Empire: and paſſing in ſucceeding times by the name of Georgians, did partake of the ſame Fortunes with them. Now at the mercy of the Turk, who by reaſon of the ſtrong footing which he hath gotten amongſt them is become a dreadful Neighbour to them; if not acknowledged by them for their Lord in chief. They are altogether ſubject to the Perſians, and not at all to the Turks.

Thus having taken a ſurvey of all the Provinces of the Turkiſh Empire, both in Europe and Aſia, and touch'd upon the means by which they are poſſeſſed of Egypt, whereunto all the reſt of their hold in Aſrick, ſerves but for an acceſſory, we will now look upon the Story of this People, their firſt original, the great ſucceſs of their Affairs, the Princes under whoſe command they have made theſe Conqueſts: Which having done, we will proceed to a Deſcription of the Perſons, Manners and Conditions of the Turks themſelves, their power and policy, with other things conſiderable in ſo great an Empire.

And firſt for the Original of the Turkiſh Nation, they were moſt probably the Deſcendants of thoſe Turſæ, whom Pliny and Pomponius Mela place about the Fens of Maſotis. Of whom thus Mela, ſpeaking of the Gelani, a Scythian people, Juxta Thyſageta, Turcæque, vaſtas ſylvas occupant, clu-turque venando, &c. Next unto them (ſaith he) live the Thyſageta, and the Turce, poſſeſſed of vaſt Woods, and maintained by hunting; and then a rough and deſart Country with continual Rocks, as far as to the Arympeians. And Pliny muſtering up the Barbarous Nations of thoſe parts, joins the Tuſſageta (or Thyſageta) with the Turks, and placeth them next the Arympeians, as Mela doth, uſque ad ſolitudines ſaltuoſis vallibus aſperas, ſpreading themſelves unto the rough Deſarts and woody Valleys: Not known by action (tho by name) till the time of Tiberius the ſecond, who began his Empire Anno 577. when preſſing hard on the Avares, a Neighbouring Nation, they compelled them to forſake their Seats, and paſs into Europe; where they made themſelves Maſters of Pannonia, now call'd Hungary. In the Time of Heraclius, we find them, with other Barbarous Nations, at the Siege of Conſtantinople, in 619, but under the command of the Perſians. After which they began to ſet up for themſelves, and in the Year 763, made a Road into thoſe Countries which we laſt deſcribed; and loading themſelves with Prey and Booty, returned turned home again. But liking better of these Parts than their own Poor Dwellings, in the Year 844. they brake once more thorough the Caspian Streights; and passing through Iberia, seized on Armenia Major, and there fixed themselves, giving it the name of Turcomania: In which wide and spacious Country they roamed up and down, without any certain Habitation, removing their Herds and Families from one place to another, as they had formerly been used to do in the Fens of Albion; and as the Tartars and Wild Arabs do until this day. And so they lived a poor and contemptible Nation, till Mahomet the Sultan of Persia, rebelling against his Lord and Master, the Caliph of Babylon, called in these Turks unto his aid; and by their help obtained a signal Victory. The Victory obtained, the Turks desire their Wages and a fair dismission; but could speed in neither, the Sultan being loath to part with such a necessary mischief till his Affairs were better settled; and therefore shutting up the passages of the River Araxes, which he before had opened for them. Provoked wherewith, under the conduct of Tengrolpix their principal Leader, they began to spoil and waste the Country; a multitude of needy People, and some of the discontented Soldiers coming daily to them. Assaulted by the Persians, in the first Battle they not only got a notable Victory, but such store of Armour, Horses, and other necessities, as made them able to encounter with the Sultan himself: whom having overthrown and slain in the second Fight, Tengrolpix is by both Armies proclaimed Sultan, or King of Persia, in the year 1030, or thereabouts.

There were at this time amongst the Turks two most noted Tribes; the Seluccian, and the Oguzian. Of the Seluccian, Tengrolpix, Cutlu Moses, Melech and Ducat were the Heads; of which, Tengrolpix as the chief of that Clan or Family was settled in the Throne of Persia: Cutlu Moses, furnished with an Army against the Christians, possessed himself of a great part of Asia Minor: Melech and Ducat, by the like favour of their Cousin the Persian Sultan, were vested into the Cities of Aleppo and Damascus, with their several Territories. But the Line of Tengrolpix and the rest being all wore out, as hath been shewn in our Description of Syria, and Anatolia, the man of most Nobility amongst the Turks, was Ottoman the chief of the Oguzian Family; Nephew of Solyman Prince of Alachan, a small Territory in the Realm of Persia. Which Solyman flying the fury of the Tartars when they conquered Persia, was drowned in crossing the River Euphrates, as he passed with his few Subjects towards Asia Minor, the best place of refuge for his Nation; leaving the Chief-ship of his Tribe to Etbrogul his Son, who obtained of the last Aladine of the Seluccian Family, the Village of Saguta in Bythinia, for himself and his small handful of people. To him succeeded his Son Ottoman, in the Year 1280. who to revenge some Injuries done unto his People by the improvident Christians, took from them Castle after Castle; and in the end possessed himself of the City of Nice, not long before the Imperial Seat of the Græcian Emperors. Emboldened with such great Successes, and hearing of the death of Aladine the Second, whom he acknowledged for his Lord, he took unto himself the Title of Sultan, Anno 1300. from which before he had abstained. To this time, and these small beginnings we must reduce the first foundation of the Ottoman Empire; increased unto its present greatness by the courage and good fortune of these Princes following.

The Kings of the Turks of the Oguzian, or Ottoman Family.

1320 1 Ottoman, or Osman the Son of Etbrogul, the first Turkish Sultan of this Line, added to his small Territory the greatest part of Phrygia, Bythinia, and some part of Pontus. 28.

- 1328 2 Orchanes, took the City of Prusa, and made it his Residence; and was the first that had footing in Europe, where he got Gallipolis, and other pieces.
- 1350 3 Amurath, won the Thracian Chersonese, the strong City of Adrianople, with the Countries of Servia, and Bulgaria; where he was slain by a Common Soldier in the Fields of Cossova. 23.
- 1373 4 Bajazet, made himself Master of a great part of Thrace, Macedon, and Achaia. He was taken Prisoner by Tamerlane, and brained himself in an Iron Cage, in which the Insolent Conqueror used to carry him. 26.
- 1402 5 Solyman, The Eldest Son of Bajazet, succeeded in the peaceable possession of the Turkish Provinces in Europe; but passing with an Army into Asia, for the recovery of those parts thereof usurped by Mahomet his youngest Brother, he was forced again into Europe, to make head against Musa Bajazet his Third Son (employed by Mahomet in that diversion) who having there vanquished and slain him, Anno 1406. succeeded for a time in the Throne at Adrianople.
- 1404 6 Mahomet, the youngest Son of Bajazet, a vigilant and active Prince, first wrested from his Brother Isa (Bajazet's second Son then living) the City of Prusa, with the Dominions thereunto belonging, thereupon taking to himself the Title of King or Sultan, by degrees recovered all which his Father had lost unto the Tartars. Afterwards making use of Musa, for the supplanting of Solyman, he followed him presently into Europe, where he fought with him, vanquished and slew him, about the year 1416. Thereby uniting in his own Person the whole Turkish Kingdom, which he enlarged with the more absolute Conquest of Dacia, part of Sclavonia, and the rest of Macedon. 17.
- 1416 7 Amurath II. subdued from the Constantinopolitan Empire, all Achaia, Thessaly, Epirus; he shook the State of Hungary, and died before the Walls of Croy. 34.

The Ottoman Emperors.

- 1450 8 Mahomet II. surnamed the Great, and first Emperor of the Turks, conquered the Two Empires of Constantinople and Trabezond, Twelve Kingdoms, and Two Hundred Cities. 31.
- 1481 9 Bajazet II. subdued the Caramanian Kingdom, and part of Armenia, and drove the Venetians from Morea, and their part of Dalmatia. 31.
- 1512 10 Selimus, having poisoned his Father, subverted the Mamelucks of Egypt; bringing it, together with Palestine, Syria, and Arabia, under the Yoak of the Turks. 7.
- 1519 11 Solyman II. surnamed the Magnificent, surprised Rhodes, Belgrade, Buda, with a great part of Hungary, Babylon, Affyria, Mesopotamia. 48.
- 1567 12 Selimus II. an idle and effeminate Emperor, by his Deputies took from the Venetians the Isle of Cyprus; and from the Moors, the Kingdom of Tunis and Algiers. 8.
- 1575 13 Amurath III. took from the disagreeing Persian, Armenia, Media, and the City Taurus; and the Fort Garriso from the Hungarians. 20.

1595 14 Mahomet III. took Agria in Hungary; which Kingdom in all likelihood had been lost, if he had pursued his Victory at the Battel of Keresztur. Never but then in any Battel, and then so frightened, that he durst never see the face of an Army afterwards.

1603 15 Achmet, who the better to enjoy his pleasures, made Peace with the German Emperor, and added nothing to his Empire. 15.

1618 16 Mustapha, Brother to Achmet succeeded, which is a Novelty, never before heard of in this Kingdom; it being the Grand Seigneur's common Policy to strangle all the younger Brothers: howsoever this Mustapha was preserved either, because Achmet being once a younger Brother, took pity on him, or because he had no issue of his own Body, and so was not permitted to kill him.

1618 17 Osman, or Ottoman II. Succeeded his Uncle Mustapha; and being unsuccessful in his War against Poland, was by the Fanizaries slain in an uproar, and Mustapha again restored: yet long enjoyed he not his Throne; for the same hand that raised him, plucked him down again, and seated young Amurath in the place.

1623 18 Morat (or Amurath the IV.) Brother of Osman, of the age of 13 years, Succeeded on the second Deposition of his Uncle Mustapha; who proved a stout and Masculine Prince, and bent himself to the reviving of the ancient Discipline. To the great good of Christendom, he spent his Stomach on the Persians, from whom he recovered Babylon.

1640 19 Ibrahim, the Brother of Morat, preserv'd by the Sultaneſs his Mother in his Brother's life; and by her power deposed again for interdicting her the Court. He spent a great part of his Reign in the War of Crete, against the Venetians; but without any great success.

1648 20 Mahomet IV. Son of Ibrahim, now reigning: Lord of all this vast Empire, containing all Dacia and Greece, the greatest part of Sclavonia and Hungary, the Isles of the Ægean Sea, and a great part of the Taurican Chersonese in Europe; of all the Isles, and Provinces which we have hitherto described in Asia; and in Africk of all Egypt, the Kingdoms of Tunis and Algiers, with the Ports of Suacem and Erocco. Nor is their stile inferior to so vast an Empire, Solyman thus stiling himself in his Letter to Villerius Great Master of the Rhodes, at such time as he intended to Invade that Island: i. e. Solyman King of Kings, Lord of Lords, most high Emperor of Constantinople and Trabezond, the most mighty King of Persia, Syria, Arabia, and the Holy Land; Lord of Europe, Asia, and Africa; Prince of Mecca and Aleppo, Ruler of Jerusalem, and Sovereign Lord of all the Seas and Isles thereof.

1687 21 Solyman III. Brother of Mahomet the IV. Ascended this Throne by the means of a Tumult in the Army, Novemb. 8. 1687. Mahomet IV. was a Prince that was guilty of as few, and as tolerable Vices as any of his Predecessors. He was neither excessively Ambitious or Covetous, and to all his Subjects he was Mild and Merciful, but he was a soft and Effeminate Prince, and delighted more in Hunting than in War, or the trouble of a State-Council; so that his Government was for the most part managed by his Prime Vizers, in which the Son Succeeded the Father, contrary to the Maxims and Usage of this Government. In the Year 1682. this Prince was engaged in a War with the Emperor of Germany, and sent an Army of 100000 Men to Besiege Vienna in 1683. which was Baffled, and lost all their Tents, Cannon, and Ammunition, and soon after Vienna; the next Year the Emperor Besieged Nax-Haus, but could not take it. 1684 Buda was Besieged, but not Taken; In 1685 Nax-Haus Besieged again, and Taken; in 1686 Buda also was Taken after a second Siege, and a great part of Hungary with it. The next Year the Turks lost to the Germans, the Battel of Mohatz. And in the mean time, they had lost to the Venetians the greatest part of the Mores, so they fell into a general Dependancy and Dissatisfaction, and nothing would serve them but the Deposing their Prince, who had angered God and their Prophet, by breaking his Faith with the Emperor of Germany; and tho' Mahomet had a Son at Age to Succeed him, yet they set up Solyman his Brother, who was then about 45 years old, tall, and of a strong Complexion: He had lived 40 years in Prison, and conversed more with Books than Men, or Business; so that he had never yet appeared at the Head of an Army; nor have their Affairs been at all bettered by this Change, but they have since his Reign lost the remainder of Hungary, Sclavonia, Serbia, Transylvania, Moldavia, and Wallachia, and might have been driven over the Bosphorus into Asia, if Lewis XIV. of France, in the Year 1688 had not began a War upon the German Empire to save this.

1691 22 Achmet II. Succeeded his Brother, being set up by the French Faction at Constantinople, out of a double design, the first of which is, that the Great Men might under him Govern as they pleased, he being a Person utterly incapable of being the Governor of his People; the Second is, That the French Party might carry on the War against the Germans, how much soever it tended to the Ruin of the Ottoman Empire. The Deposed Sultan was exposed dead, the 4th of January 1692 and 93. and immediately after, the same day, sent away to Constantinople to be Buried. The Factions and Discontents running high at that time, because the War was continued, and the present Sultan having a Son Born this Summer, 'tis probable this Death was not Natural, and will be attended by other Tragick Deaths of his Children.

1695 23 Mustapha, Son of Mahomet IV. Succeeded Achmet his Uncle, who died, as was said, of a Dropsie at Adrianople, January 6. 1694, 95. in the 33d. of his Age. He is reported to have left an Infant Son of about an year old, who was of necessity to be set aside; There had been so much wrong done to Mahomet IV. and to his Family, (for he was a Good and Gracious Prince, and Reigned with more Clemency than any of his Predecessors) that the Great Men feared nothing more than to fall under that Branch of this Royal Family again; but now both the Brothers were thus quickly gone, there was a necessity for it: And he began his Reign with the Death of most of the Enemies of his Family; and then in Person took the Field against the Emperor, and had good Success in his first Campaign, which may be supposed to have much revived the drooping and dejected Minds of his Subjects, who by a long Series of Misfortunes were reduced to a mighty ebb of Valour. The truth of this Conjecture time will shew, it being now not one full year since he ascended that Throne.

As for the Persons of the Turks, they are generally well Complexioned, of good stature, proportionably compacted, no idle talkers, nor doers of things superfluous; Hot and Venereous, Servile to their Prince, and Zealous in their Religion. They nourish no hair upon their heads, except it be a tuft on the top of their Crowns, by which they think that Mahomet will snatch them up into Paradise at the day of Judgment. For which reason they keep on of all sides, tho' never so poor, accounting it an opprobrious thing to see any men uncover their heads; saying, when they dislike of any thing which they see, or hear, I had as lief thou hadst shewn me thy bare skull. In their familiar Salutation they lay their hands on their Bosoms, and a little incline their Bodies; but when they accost a Person of Rank, they bow almost to the ground, and kiss the hem of his Garment. Walking up and down they never use, and much wonder at the often walking of Christians. Biddulph relateth, that being at his ambulatory Exercise with his Companion, a Turk demanded of him whether they were out of their way, or their wits? If your way (quoth the Turk) lay toward the upper end of the Cloister, why come you downwards? if to the nether end, why go you back again? Shooting is their chief Recreation, which they also follow with much laziness, sitting on Carpets in the shade, and sending some of their Slaves to fetch their Arrows. They prefer, as they pass the streets, the left hand before the right, as being thereby made Master of his Sword with whom they walk. As they shave their Heads, so they wear their Beards long, as a sign of Freedom; but their Slaves keep theirs shaven and close cut.

The Women are of small stature, for the most part ruddy, clear, and smooth as the polish'd Ivory; as neither afflicted with the weather, and often frequenting the Baths: of a very good Complexion, seldom going abroad, and then Masqued; Lascivious within doors, pleasing in matters of incontinency, and they are accounted most Beautiful which have the greatest eyes, and are of the blackest hue. Every Turk is permitted to have four Wives, and as many Slaves as he is able to keep; yet are they to meddle with none but their own, the offending Woman being drowned, and the Man dismembred. These Women live in great awe and respect of their Husband, never sitting with him at the Table, but waiting till he hath done, and then withdrawing into some Room. If their Husband hath been abroad, at his coming in they all rise from the stools whereon they sat, kiss his hand, and make an obeysance, and stand as long as he is in presence. The Children which they have, they carry not in their Arms, as we do, but astride on their shoulders; they live immured from the sight of the World: and permit not their Male Children, no not their own Sons, to come among them, after they are twelve years old. From their Husbands they cannot be divorced, but on special occasion: but the Husbands may put away their Wives, or give them to their Slaves, when, and as often as they list. Far better is it with the Sisters or Daughters of the Sultan; to whom, when her Father or Brother bestoweth her on one of the Bassas, he giveth her a Dagger, saying, I give thee this Man to be thy Slave or Bedfellow; if he be not Loving, Obedient, and Dutiful unto thee, I give thee here this Canzharre or Dagger, to cut off his head. When they are Married, their Husbands come not to Bed unto them, till they are sent for, and then also they creep in at the Beds-feet. That ever any of their Ladies made use of their Daggers, I could never Read. Only I find, that Luizus Bassa, the chief Man of the Empire next the Sultan himself, and of him very much beloved, having given his Wife, which was Sister to Solyman the Magnificent, a box on the Ear, was on complaint by her made, thrust from all his Honours, Banished into Macedon; and had doubtless been slain, if the Emperor's Love, and his own Merits had not pleaded for him. And this is all the Prerogative of the Sultan's Daughter; her Sons being accounted as meer and ordinary Turks only, and never being preferred above the rank of a common Captain, for fear they should be apt to harbour some aspiring thoughts.

The better sort of the Turks use the Sclavonian Tongue, the Vulgar speak the Turkish Language; which being originally the Tartarian, borrowed from the Persians, their words of State; from the Arabick their words of Religion; from the Græcians their words or terms of War; and from the Italians, their terms of Navigation.

They were formerly Idolatrous Pagans, and were first initiated into Mahometanism, when they got the Sovereignty of the Persian Scepter. The degrees in their Religion are, 1 The Saffi, or Novices. 2 The Calfi, or Readers. 3 The Hogi, or writers of Books; for Printing they use not. 4 The Napi, or young Doctors. 5 The Caddi, whereof there is at least one in every City to judge of Offences. 6 The Mudrossi, who use to oversee the Caddis. 7 The Medlis, or Principal Church-Governor under the Musti. 8 The Cadelescais, whereof there are only three; one of Greece, the other for Anatolia, the third for Egypt and Syria; and these sit with the Bassas in the Divano, to determine of temporal Suits. 9 The Musti, whose Sentence in Law and Religion is uncontrollable. He abaseth not himself to sit in the Divano, nor affordeth more Reverence to the Emperor, than he doth to him.

His Forces are either for the Sea or the Land. His Sea-forces are great in regard of his spacious Sea-coasts, vast Woods, and number of Subjects. He never suffered but one memorable defeat, which was that at Lepanto; yet the next year he shewed his Navy whole and entire. Gallies are his only Vessels, which being unable to cope with Ships of any bigness, were not only the occasion of that overthrow, but also have heartned the Florentine, with six great Ships of War only, to swagger in the Seas; so that for more safety, the Tribute of Egypt is of late sent to Constantinople by Land. The Captain Bassa, or Admiral, notwithstanding, with a Navy of 60 Sail, makes a yearly progress about the Seas and Sea-Towns, to annoy roy the Enemy, suppress Pirates, collect his Tributes, and to redress the Abuses committed in the Maritime Towns, belonging to the Admiralty. Which Annual Circuit is begun in May, and ended in October. This Defect in the Turkish Navigation has lost him the Empire of the Sea, and will (by God's Blessing) in a short time deprive him of all his Islands, and in probability of Europe too. The Turks have a Superstitious Proverb, That God has given them the Empire of the Land, which is stable and fixed; and the Christians the Empire of the Sea, which is fluid and inconstant: And this is perhaps the Principal Reason why they never built any great Ships, or since the Battel of Lepanto endeavoured to recover the Dominion of the Seas.

Their Land-forces are either Horse or Foot. They which serve on Horse-back are either the Spahi or Asapi; these latter serving to weary the Enemies, and dull their Swords with their Multitudes; of whose Bodies the Janizaries use to make Mounts, whereon to assault the Wall of a besieged Town; and are by them so contemned, that a Janizary once sold two of them for a Sheeps-head: As for the Spahi, they, till they are inrolled into Pay, are of the same Original and Education with the Janizaries; and called by the same name, Azamoglans. Their Pay is ten Aspers a day. The Turk is able, and doth maintain 15000 Horse at little or no cost, which no other Prince can do with 14 Millions of Gold. For wheresoever any parcel of Land is conquered, it is divided into divers parts, and committed to the manuring of divers men, whom they call Timariots. These are to pay unto the Emperor certain Rents; and at their own charges to send to his Wars so many Horse, excellently appointed for the Field: And which is the chief point of their Service, to keep in awe the Subjects in all parts of his Empire. For being, as they are, dispersed in all quarters of his Dominions, the people can no sooner stir, but these will be assembled, and fall upon them. These Timariots are in all accounted 719000 fighting men, whereof 357000 have their abode in Europe, and 402000 in Asia and Africa. Were it not for these Timariots, as the Turks saying is, no Grass would grow where the Grand Seigneurs Horse hath once set his Hoof; for if the care of manuring the Ground were committed to the Peasants, and not to Military men, the greatest part of this Empire would grow waste and desolate. These Timariots were instituted by Ottoman, the first Turkish King of this Family; and a curse by him laid on them that should annihilate the Institution. The name is derived from the Turkish word Timar, signifying a stipend.

But the Nerves and Sinews of this warlike Body, are the Janizaries; who by original being Christians, are chosen by the Turkish Officers every five Years, out of his European Dominions; and so distributed abroad to learn the Language, Customs, and Religion of the Turks; afterward according to their strength, will, or disposition, placed in divers Chambers. They of the first Chamber are preferred, some to be Chiausies, such as go on Embassies, and execute Judgments; others to Sanziacks, or Governors of Cities; some to be Bassas, or Commanders of Horsentien; and others to be Beglerbegs, (i. e. Lord of Lords) to command the rest in general. They of the other Chambers are the Janizaries, or Prætorian Soldiers of the Guard; to whose Faith and Trust the care of the Emperor's Person is committed. The rithing of these young Springals is, as we have said every fifth Year; and oftner sometimes, as occasions serve. By which means he not only disarmeth his own Subjects, and keepeth them from attempting any stir or innovation in his Empire: but spoileth all the Provinces he most feareth, of the Flower, Sinew, and Strength of their People; choice being made of the strongest Youths only, and fittest for War. These, before they are inrolled in pay, are called Azamoglans, and behave themselves with much submissiveness towards their Seniors and Governors: but when once they are honoured with the Title of Janizaries, they grow by degrees into an intolerable pride and haughtiness. Till of late they were not permitted to marry, neither now can any of their Sons be accounted any other than a natural Turk, (whom of all the rest they account the basest) the eldest only excepted: To whom this Privilege was granted by Amurath the third, when he came to the Crown. They are in number 40000, of which 16000 are always resident in Constantinople. In this City they are diversly employed, being as Constables to see the Peace kept; as Clerks of the Market, to see to the Weights and Measures; as Officers, to arrest Common Offenders; as Warders, to look to the Gates, and guard the Houses of Ambassadors, and to travel with Strangers for their more safety; in which charge they are very faithful. Their Pay is but five Aspers a day, and two Gowns yearly; neither are their hopes great, the command of 10, 20, or 100 men being their greatest preferment: yet are they very obsequious to their Captain or Aga, who is in place inferior to the meanest Bassa, tho in power perhaps above the chiefest. For the crafty Turks join not Power and Authority; and if they observe the Janizaries to love and respect their Aga, they quickly deprive him of Life and Office. The Founder of this Order was Amurath the first, Anno 1365. their greatest Establisher, Amurath the second: The name signifieth young Soldiers.

Now concerning these Janizaries, we will farther consider, 1. The sway they bear in designing the Successor. 2. Their Insolency towards the Emperor and his Officers. 3. Their Behaviour in the vacancy of the Throne. And 4. Their Punishments.

1. Concerning the first, I never find any particular sway the Janizaries carried, in the designation of their Emperor, till the death of Mahomet the Great: when the Bassas having chosen Cercut the Son of Bajazet, were over-ruled by the Aga and his Janizaries, who more inclined to Bajazet his Father, and Son to Mahomet. Tho' I am not ignorant that when this Mahomet succeeded in the Throne, the Joyful Acclamations made by the Soldiers, was accounted the chiefest sign of his secure and perpetuated Establishment. But the chief Instance of their Power herein, was the inthronizing of Selmas the First, who being but the Seventh Son of this Bajazet, was not only prefer'd by them before his Brethren in his Father's Life-time; but by their Aids also he severally mastered them, and in the end poisoned his Father. To omit other Examples, even of late, Anno 1622. they slew the young Emperor Orman, drew his Uncle Mustapha out of Prison, and established him in the Royalty.

2. As for the next, the first Example in which I find them peccant toward their Prince, was at the beginning of the Reign of the above-mentioned Bajazet; when hearing of the intended death of Achmet Bassa whom they loved, they broke open the Court Gates, and told the Emperor, They would teach him, like a Drunkard, a Beast, and a Rascal as he was, to use his Great Place and Calling with more Sobriety and Discretion. Not long after, conceiving further displeasure against the said Bajazet, they shook their Weapons against him, and refused to take him into the midst amongst them; and were not, without great and vile submission on his part, appeased. Against Selmas the first they also mutined; when being resolved to winter in Armenia, for the better pursuit of his Victories against the Persian, he was by them forced to turn home unto Constantinople. Against Solyman they mutined so violently, that they compelled him to displace Rustan, his chief Bassa or Favorite. Against Amurath the Third, for placing over them a new Aga, they so strongly opposed themselves, that first they set fire on Constantinople, and burnt therein besides Shops, and Ware-houses, twenty five great Inns, seven Temples, and 15000 Houses : and in the end constrained him to give them money, and to yield also into their hands two of his chief Counsellors, by them supposed to be their Adversaries, whom they drew about the streets. Finally, (to omit the tumult 1622. above-named) in the year 1600. they grew so discontented with Mahomet the third, that they not only threatned to destroy the Principal Officers of the Court, and the banishment of the Sultane's his Mother, but the deposing of himself also.

3. Now for the third, I find it to have been the custom of these Fanizaries, between the Death of an Old Emperor, and the beginning of a New, to commit divers Insolencies; as the rifling of the Houses of the Jews and Christians, among whom they dwell; the murdering of the Bassas, and principal men about the Court, whom they suspected not to have favoured them; and a number of the like outrageous mischiefs. Of these we find frequent mention, as after the death of Amurath the second, and Mahomet the Great : at which last time the Merchants at Constantinople, being natural Turks, escaped not their ravenous hands; neither could Mahomet-Bassa avoid the fury of their Swords. This spoil they took for so certain a due, that if they were disappointed of it, they would presently raise Commotions both in Court, Field and City; unless some present satisfaction were made them. To this end, Achmet distributed among them two millions and a half of Ducats, Selimus the first, two millions; others made an increase of their daily pay. But Selimus the second, distributing among them 100000 Sultanies only, was by them prohibited to enter into his Seraglio, till he had enlarged his bounty: and the Great Bassas were rapped about the Pate with their Cavaliers, for perswading them to quietness. Now to prevent the dangerous and factious Liberty, which in the vacancy of the Empire was usually committed, the Death of the old Emperor was with all secrecy concealed, till the arrival of the new. To omit others, I will instance in the deaths of Mahomet the first, and Solyman only. This Solyman died at the Siege of Siget in Hungary, which was so cunningly concealed by Mahomet-Bassa the space of twenty days; that before the Fanizaries knew of it, his Son Selimus had possessed himself of Constantinople, and came also to their Army then in retreat homewards. For this Mahomet privately strangled the Physicians and Apothecaries, which knew of his Death; commanded the Soldiers to go on in their Siege; and divers times shewed them the Emperor sitting in his Horse-litter, as (being troubled with the Gout) he used to do: and when the City was taken, marched home with his dead Body, sitting still in the same manner. So after the death of Mahomet the First, the Bassas of the Court called their Divanoes as formerly they used; gave order for the levying of an Army, as if some War were intended; and the King's Physicians went up and down with their Potions, as if they had him still in cure. But the Pensioners and Fanizaries misdoubting the matter, with all eagerness desired to see him; which when the Bassas durst not deny, they appointed the next day for their visit. The next day, the body was apparelled in Royal Large Robes; placed in a Chair at the end of a long Gallery, and a little Boy cunningly set behind him, to move the Kings hand to his head as if he should stroke his beard, as his manner was; which signs of life and strength the Soldiers seeing, held themselves contented and so was his death concealed the space of 41 days.

4. As for the last, These insolent and unsufferable pranks committed so commonly by these masterful slaves, so exceedingly stomached Bajazet the second, that he secretly purposed with himself, for curing so dangerous a disease, to use a desperate remedy; which was to kill and destroy suddenly all the Fanizaries. It is like that this Bajazet, being a Scholar, had read how Constantine the Great had called the Prætorian Soldiers, and destroyed their Camp, as men that were the causes of all the stirs in his Empire, and whose pride was come to an intolerable height: and having the same cause to destroy his Fanizaries, hoped to have done it with as much ease and safety as the other did. But they having notice of the Plot, for the time continued so united and linked together, that he durst not then attempt it; and afterwards siding with his Son Selimus, cast him out of his Throne into his grave. Since which time the Emperors never durst punish them openly; but when any of them proved delinquent, he is sent privately in the night-time to Pera over against Constantinople: where by the way he is drowned, and a Piece of Ordnance shot of, to signify the performing of the Sultans command. Since our Author wrote, there seems to have been a formed but secret design carried on to soften and by degrees bring under the Fanizaries; to this end the Children of the Fanizaries and natural Turks are more often taken up than those of the Christians: And these are better used, and having Relations and Friends, make use of them to raise themselves the sooner. So that Personal worth and valour is now less regarded and encouraged: There is also a Feud kept up between the Spahis and the Fanizaries which has occasioned great slaughters on both sides: In the Siege of Candia, vast numbers of the Fanizaries perished, and as it was thought by the design of the Sultan and Prime-Vizier. And in this War in Hungary vast numbers of the Fanizaries have perished, so that they have been supplied as they could be had out of the Turks, brought up in a quite different way, so that the Fanizaries that now are, have nothing but the name and pay of the old Fanizaries; yet they are still as mutinous and insolent as before, but growing into contempt at home and abroad, and perhaps with them will fall the Turkish or Ottoman Empire.

Now for the Emperors themselves, we will consider them in matters of Pleasure, in matters of Ceremony, and in matters of State; the last being considerable in three main points, which are, the murdering of their Brethren, the removing of their Sons, their Revenue; and therein a touch of their Government. To these we will add, what apparent symptoms may be observed to prognosticate the standing, decreasing, and increasing of this puissant Monarchy.

For the first, he hath not so few as 500 (sometimes 1000) choice Virgins kept in a Seraglio by themselves, all Slaves born of Christian Parents, and indeed the Rarest Beauties of his Empire. When he is disposed to take his pleasure with any of them, they are all ranked in a Gallery; and she is by the Aga of the Women prepared for his Bed, to whom he giveth his Handkerchief. She that beareth him the first Son, is honoured with the title of Sultane's, (Queen-Mother we may call her.) neither can he make any of them free, unless he marry them. When the Sultan dieth, all his Women are carried into another Seraglio, where they are strictly looked to, and liberally provided for, and not seldom are bestowed by the succeeding Sultan, on his Great Bassas, and such as he chiefly favoureth, which is a principal honour. They are attended on by Women and Eunuchs; these being not gelded only, but deprived of all their Genitals, and supplying the uses of Nature with a Silver Quill; which inhuman custom was brought in among them by Selimus the second, because he had seen a Gelding cover a Mare.

2. These Ceremonies are either performed by them, which is for the most part the building of a Mosche only to help to the Salvation of their Souls; or towards them by others, which are most apparent in the entertainment of Ambassadors. For when such come to his presence, they are led between two of his Courtiers, and coming before the Throne (on both sides whereof the Bassas sit with admirable silence, resembling rather Statues than (men) they bow themselves to the ground with all humility: laying their hands on their breast, but never uncovering vering their heads, (which as was noted before) is counted an undecency. When they are to depart, they go all backwards; it being accounted very irreverent to turn their back-parts toward a Prince so glorious. The reason why they are thus brought in between two, is said to be for their greater honour, but is indeed a fear they have, lest the Grand Seigneur, under the pretence of a Salutation, or the delivery of an Embassie, should be stabbed. Which wariness they have used, ever since the time that Miles Cobelatz, a Serbian, scrambling from among the slain at the battle of Cassova, and being admitted to the speech of Amurath the first, the Author of that overthrow, stabbed him into the belly with his Dagger.

3. Amongst all the Jars and Discontents that be, none have been with more Unkindness begun, or more Eagerness prosecuted, than those of Brothers; and that not only in private Families, but in the stems of Princes, the multitude of Pretenders being the Original of most Civil Wars. To prevent these publick Emotions, the Emperors of Habsburg use to immure up all their younger Children in the Hill Amara; the Persians do put out the Eyes of their younger Brothers, and the Turks do murder them. Strange and horrid courses, whereby to avoid the fear of a War in the State, they stir up a War in their own Bowels. The first amongst the Turks that began this barbarous cruelty, was Bajazet the first, on his Brother Jacup; whom immediately after his Fathers death, he strangled with a bow-string: this being the only instrument of their Fratricide, because thereby none of the blood royal of Ottoman is spilt on the ground. After him, Mahomet the Great caused his young Brother, then at nurse, to dye the death; and was not without much ado persuaded from being the Executioner himself. Amurath the third, caused his five Brethren to be at once strangled before his face; and Mahomet, his Son, no fewer than nineteen in one day. By this course they imagine their own Estate to be infinitely secured, as knowing that Mustapha a younger Son, stirred a Rebellion against Amurath; and Zemes, against Bajazet, both the second of those names: that Solyman, Musa, and Isa, severally afflicted Mahomet the first; and Corcut, Selimus, the first of these names also. But yet they will not know, that nothing sooner putteth their younger Brothers into these acts of Hostility, than an inevitable certainty of a violent and unnatural Death: whereas were they but sure of Life, and a Liberal and Princely Maintenance, it is more than probable, they would rest content, as in other Kingdoms the younger Princes do. And notwithstanding their barbarous Policy, they are not quite free from fear, as knowing the Counterfeits have heretofore much disturbed the quiet of their Predecessors: for thus we find Amurath the second to have been vexed by one, that took upon him the name of Mustapha, elder brother to Mahomet then late deceased; who was much furthered and aided by the Greek Princes. This hath been one of the vulgar policies of Princes to kindle flames of sedition in their neighbours Countreys. In the infancy of the Roman Empire we find a counterfeit Agrippa, after that a counterfeit Nero; and before them, two counterfeit Alexanders in Syria. But never was Realm so often troubled with these Mock-Kings, as England: a counterfeit Richard the Second, being made in the time of Henry the Fourth; a counterfeit Mortimer, in the time of Henry the Sixth; a counterfeit Duke of York, a counterfeit Earl of Warwick, under Henry the Seventh; and a counterfeit Edward the Sixth, under Queen Mary. To prevent these walking Spirits, Mahomet the Third laid out the dead Bodies of his Father and nineteen Brethren, as a common Spectacle for all that passed by, or would come to behold them. Of late indeed the Grand Seigneur Mustapha miraculously escaped the Bow-string twice; 1 When his Brother Achmet, and 2 When Osman his young Nephew were made Sultans; and was the first in this Empire that ever did succeed in the collateral Line, as Ibrahim the late Sultan was the second on the death of Morat or Amurath the Fourth, his elder Brother. And in 1687, Solyman; in 1691 Achmet Brothers of Mahomet the Fourth, succeeded in the Life of their Brother, who has Children of his own, which is likely in a short time to embroil that Empire in a Civil War.

4 The removing of the young Princes is done for three Reasons: 1. To wean them from the pleasures of the Court. 2. To train them up in Arms, and inure them to hardness. 3. And principally to avoid the danger of a Competitor, whereof old Princes are especially jealous. The common places destinated to this Princely exile, are Amasia, in Cappadocia; Magnesia, in Lydia; and such like Towns of Natolia. Neither do the old Sultans by such a great distance think themselves secure altogether; but carry a vigilant eye over their Sons Education, and have intelligence of almost every particular thought, the least suspicion being cause sufficient to destroy them. So we find Mustapha, Son to Solyman, the hopefulest branch that ever sprang from the Ottoman tree, to have been shamefully strangled by the command of his Father: upon a rumour only of a Marriage, which he was said to have negotiated with the Persian King's Daughter. When these Princes are once settled in the Government, it is a crime meriting no less punishment than death to depart thence and come unto Constantinople, before their Fathers death; or unless they are by their Fathers sent for. Of this we have a Tragical Example in Mahomet, a Prince of great hope, Son to Bajazet the second: who desiring to see the fashion of his Fathers Court, left Magnesia, to which he was by his Father confined; and attended by two or three Gentlemen, came in the habit of a Sea-faring man to Constantinople, and having obtained his desire, he returned to his charge. This strange action being quickly divulged abroad, and by divers variously interpreted, stirred such jealousies in the suspicious head of his old Father, that he took order not long after to have him secretly poisoned.

5. As for the ordinary revenue, it consisteth either in money received, or money saved. The money saved, is first by the Tartars, of whom he commands continually 60000 to attend him in his wars, without any pay but the spoil of the Enemy. And secondly by the Timariots, who nourish and bring into the Field more Horse than any Prince in Christendom can keep (as we have already said) for 14 Millions of Gold. The money received (according to Boterus) is only 15 millions of Sultanies, which is nothing in respect of so great an Empire. The chief reason whereof is the tyrannical government of the Turk, which deterrs men from tillage, merchandize, and other improvements of their estates; as knowing all their gettings to lye at the Grand Seigneurs mercy. His extraordinary revenue is incredible. For besides that no Ambassador cometh before him empty-handed; no man is Master of his own wealth, farther than it stands with the Emperors liking: so that his great Bassas are but as sponges, to suck up riches till their Coffers swell; and then to be squeezed into his Treasury. These men, as he advanceth without envy, so can he destroy without danger: no man here hoping for partakers, if he should resist, as not being ignorant that one mans fortune is built on the desired overthrow of another. Such riches as they gain, if they hap to die naturally, return to the Emperors Coffers, who giveth only what he pleaseth to the Children of the deceased. These Bassas have in their particular Provinces, their Divanors, or Law-Courts, where justice hath been administred formerly with great integrity but now not a little corrupted; yet the comfort is, that such as miscarry in their right, shall without delay know what to trust to: and the Bassas upon complaint to the Emperor, are sure to die for it. Over these Bassas (the chief of whom is the Vizier Bassa, or President of the Council) preside two Beglerbegs, one for Greece, the other for Natolia.

6. Concerning the present state of the Empire, many judge it to be rather in the wane, than the increase; which judgment they ground upon good reasons, whereof these are the chief.

1. The Body is grown too monstrous for the Head, the Sultans since the death of Soyman never accompanying their Armies in person (except Alerat, or Amurat the Fourth) but rioting and wasting their Bodies and Treasures at home.

2. The Janizaries, who have been accounted the principal strength of this Empire, are grown more factious in the Court, than valiant in the Camp; corrupted with ease and liberty, drowned in prohibited Wines, enfeebled with the continual converse of Women, and fallen from their former austerity of discipline.

3. They have of late given no increase unto their Dominions; and as in the paths of virtue, Non progredi est regredi, so in Empires, by violence gotten, when they cease to be augmented, they begin to be diminished.

4. Rebellions have in these latter times been in this Empire strangely raised, and mightily supported; which Commotions the former Sultans were never acquainted with.

5. The greatness of this Empire is such, that it labour-eth with nothing more than the weightiness of it self, so that it must in a manner needs decline, Pondere pressa suo, overburthened with its own mightiness. For as in a natural body, a Surfeit killeth more than fasting; so in the Body Politick also, too much extent of Empire doth sooner draw on a ruin, than either too little, or a mediocrity. There lies some objections to this Fifth Reason, because the Assyrian, Persian, and Roman Empire were much greater than the Ottoman ever was; and the Macedonian, tho divided into Four Parts, did yet subsist many Ages after it began to decline. But there is one thing to be said of this Ottoman Empire, that is not true of any of the rest; The Dominions of it are much too great for the People. The Turks have destroyed more rich and populous Cities, after they were possessed of them, and have desolated more fruitful Provinces than any Government that ever was before them in the World; so that their Dominions being great and far distended, they are not able to find people to occupy, or Soldiers to defend them; and this is the true Reason the Germans and Venetians have had such prodigious success against them in the present War.

6. The Sons of the Grand Seigneur, whose bravery of mind is ever suspected by their Fathers, are nursed up (contrary sometimes to their natural Inclinations) in all effeminacy; which once rooted in them in their youth, doth always after subject them to the softness and baseness of Libidinous Pleasures.

7. They have lost much of that fear and terror, which formerly their very Name did carry with it; insomuch that not the Venetians only have by Sea often mated, and once overthrown them; the Hungarians withstood their greatest Forces for the space of 200 years by land; the Polonians forced them to dishonourable retreat and composition; but the poor Prince of Transylvania did divers times discomfit them, with the death of many of their Bassas: The Florentine with six Ships only, intercepteth their Trade; and the poor Emir of Sidon held it out against them many years together.

8. By the avarice and corruption reigning in the Court, all Peace and War, all Counsels and Informations, all Injuries and Favours being now made saleable. And

9. It is visible and apparent, that their Empire was long since at the highest: Et naturaliter quod procedere non potest, recidit, as Vellius hath it, When an Empire can ascend no higher, by the ordinary course of nature it must have a fall. All these are more than probable Prognosticks of a sinking Monarchy: and yet there is a greater than any of these, that is to say, the present State of Affairs. The young Emperor Mahomet the Fourth, now reigning is but a weak Staff to support so vast an Empire, considering not only the infinite casualties, to which children are naturally subject; but the dangers which he may justly fear from a Rebellious Soldiery, and a Factious Court. Who by the Murther of one Emperor, and the deposition of two, have made themselves so formidable, but withal so odious in the sight of the Imperial House, that there is no way left to save them from a merited Vengeance, but to translate the Empire to some other Family; tho by the rooting out of this. Which whensoever it shall happen, either by the natural death or unnatural destruction of the present Sultan, it will draw with it an extermination of the Ottoman Race, which I look on as a matter not to be avoided, except by Miracle. Supposing then the Line of Ottoman to fail (as it is most probable that it will) what will become of this vast Empire? Three there will be to offer at it, viz. the Crim-Tartars, the Jagizaries, and the Bassas. And first the Crim-Tartar may plead a composition, made by his Ancestors, with the Princes of the Ottoman Family; which is, that he supplying them with 60000 men at his own charges, when their occasions so require, should on the failure of the Heirs Males succeed in this Empire. Besides which, he may hope for no small succours, not only from the rest of the Tartarian Princes, but even from the Great Cham himself, to recover his Estate herein, if with-holden from him; thereby to add to the present greatness and renown of the Tartars, the access of such a spacious Empire. 2. The Bassas may conceive no small possibilities of dividing this great Empire among themselves, partly by the Example of Alexander's Captains, who after their Master's death (there being yet some of the Blood-Royal remaining) parted amongst themselves not only the new gotten Provinces which they had conquered from the Persians, but even the Kingdom of Macedon, his old Inheritance: partly by an Example in their own Histories; by which it appeareth, that after the death of Aladine the second, Caraman, Sarachan, Cnidin, Carasus, and the rest of the more powerful Commanders, divided among them the whole Turkish Kingdom in the Lesser Asia: and partly by the opportunity which they have as Governors in their several Provinces, and having so many Bands of Soldiers under their command, which may easily invest them as Proprietaries in those Estates, of which they have already such a fair possession. And so we find the Sultans, or Provincial Governors, or the Caliphs of Babylon to have done before them. 3. The Janizaries may also build their hopes on as fair foundations, as being the Sword and Buckler of the Ottoman Empire; got, and maintained by their valour chiefly. Who to excite them to the Enterprize, have the example of the Prætorian Guards of the Roman Empire (a body far more Politick and better compacted than this is;) who out of their own Company created the far greater part of the Roman Emperors, neither the Provinces or Senate daring to oppose them in it. But above all Examples, that of the Mamelucks of Egypt doth make fairest for them; who were born of Christian Parents, as these are; appointed for the Guard of the Sultans, as these are; purposely entertained and inured to the Wars, to take from the natural Subjects the use of Arms, as these are; men of approved Valour, and the chief Bulwark of that Kingdom against the Christians, as these are; and then why may they not be like them in this last attempt, for sitting in their Masters Throne, as these Mamelucks did? Add hereunto, that they are already (in a manner) possessed of Constantinople, the head Town and heart of the Empire; and their hopes are not vain. For my part I hold them to be the men most like to carry it, unless the Princes of Christendom laying aside private malice, join all in Arms to strip this proud Peacock of his Feathers: and (upon so blessed an advantage) to break in pieces with a rod of Iron, this insolent and burthensome Monarchy: A thing rather to be desired than expected. But this by way of supposition, and as in a Dream, I awake again. See Bernier, p. 72, 73, 74. foretelling the ruin of this and the other Two Mahometan Empires, Persia and Indo-

The Emblem of this Empire (or Arms of it) is the Croissant, or Half-Moon; but how Blazoned I cannot tell you; nor are the Learned yet resolved on the beginnings of that bearing. Some derive it to them from the Eastern Gentiles, who worshipped the Moon under both Sexes, as we learn in Scythians. Some make it common to them with the other Mahometans; and they derive it from a pretended Miracle of Mahomet; who to shew his Power, is said to have made the Moon fall into his lap in two pieces, and to have restored her whole again to the Heavens. Others are of opinion, that it was taken by the Grand Seigneur at the winning of Constantinople; Ut signum videlicet gentis penes quon Orientis imperium esset. And of this mind is Justus Lipsius, induced thereto as it seemeth, by the figure of the Croissant, born in some old Byzantine Coins. A pretty plausible conceit; and therefore till we have a better, may pass as currant as the Money.

And thus much I thought convenient to insert in this place, concerning the original, proceeding, and continuance; the natural dispositions, policies, and forces of the Turks: This being as the only Province which retaineth their Name; so both the first they were possessed of, and the last which they have fully conquered of all their Dominions. Which said, we must here take our leave of the Turkish Empire, and once again of the Roman also, of which the River Tigris and the Caspian Sea were the utmost bounds; not meeting again with either of them, unless by accident (or some unprofitable expeditions) till we come to Aegypt, and there we shall hear farther of them.

The Reverend Dr. Heylin wrote thus of the Turkish Empire about the Year 1647, or 48. at which time their Fortunes were rather at a stand than declining; yet he and other Politicians did even then foresee their approaching Ruin: Since that time their good and evil Fortunes have promoted the Fall of it to that degree, that it is indeed a Miracle if ever this Empire recover what it hath lost. And it is now my business to shew by what step this is come upon them within a little more than forty years.

Sultan Mahomet the IV. was at the time of his Father's death a Child but of seven years of age; the government and tuition of him was thereupon put into the hands of his Mother: This was so ill resented by Kiossem his Grandmother, who had been the Betrayer and Murderer of his Father, that she formed a Party against him in his Infancy: which being defeated by Kuperlee, the then Prime Visier, Kiossem was put to death, and he established in his Throne. The Infancy of this Prince, and the Merit of this Action so fixed Kuperlee, that he enjoyed the Office to his Death, and left it to his Son after him, which never happen'd before. This great Man finding the Spahies and Janizaries at deadly enmity, and his Master young, employed the one against the other to ruin all he suspected, and in the mean time bred the Prince in a soft effeminate manner to secure his own Greatness: The consequence of which was, that he became a luxurious and unwarlike Prince, given wholly up to his Pleasure.

The War of Candia had been begun in the Life of Sultan Ibrahim his Father in the year 1645. and tho the greatest part of the Island was then reduced, yet Canea held out, and the Venerians being Masters at Sea, not only relieved it with ease, but stopped up the Passage of the Archipelago, frequently took the Succours sent to the Island from the Continent, and defended the Town till the year 1669. In this Siege the Janizaries spent the Janizaries so very freely, that it was generally said, he designed the ruin of the whole Order. But however this Siege manifestly brought a Contingency upon the Osman Empire, or at least discovered it.

In the year 1672, there broke out a War between the Emperor of Germany and the Turks, and that year they took New-Hampel that year, yet the next year the Turks the Rash they received so great a defeat, that they were glad to come to a Peace with their Emperor upon their own Terms, having lost the flower of their Army by an Accident, more being drowned than were slain by the sword, a rainy night having made the River unpassable.

In the year 1673, the Poles obtained a great and signal Victory over the Turks on their own side of the Niger, in which there perished 20000 of their best men, and amongst them 5500 Janizaries, and they lost 2000 Pursses of Silver, 25000 Wagons of Provisions, and Ammunition, and all their Cannon and Baggage: This humbled the Pride of the Turks, and taught the Poles to despise them.

Being thus prepared for Ruin, in the year 1683, they began a War upon Germany with the Siege of Praga; in which they were finally batt'd, after they had lost in the Siege 48544 Men, besides what were lost in the Buliel and three days siege after this; all their Tents, Cannon, and Ammunition: After this they have had one continued Chain of Misfortunes, all Hungary, almost Transylvania, Sclavonia, the Morea, a great part of Dalmatia are lost, and tho they have recovered Sovia, yet is their Possession very precarious and uncertain, and so many of their own Subjects are revolted from them, as in a few years will be able to maintain a great part of the War against them.

They have lost three great Battels since, at Strigonium, Mohatz, and Salankment; they have deposed their Sultan without any cause but that of his Misfortunes, and set up Two Brothers one after the other, that were bred in Prisons till they were above forty years of age, and by consequence are never capable of being made fit for Government: They have suffered the French to get such a footing in their Court and Counsels, as will in all probability ruin them if the War goes on, or a Peace should follow: They have in a tumultuous way ruined all their rich, great and valiant men that have escaped the Swords of their Enemies: They are divided into irreconcilable Factions in the Army, Court and Cities, so that which way soever a man turns his Eyes, he can see nothing but symptoms of Ruin.

In this state of Affairs nothing was so much their interest, as to have made a Peace in 90, 91, and 92. but the French by their Intrigues have prevented it, tho the whole body of the Nation see how much it is their Interest: So that they seek Peace most ardently, and it flees from them, whilst they only fight to enrich their Enemies, and desolate and undo their own people.

May God of his Infinite Goodness put an end to this Cursed Empire, which having done more mischief to Mankind, and laid more Countries desolate, than all that ever went before it.

And thus much of T U R C O M A N I A.

MEDIA and PERSIA.

These I have joyned together also, because the affairs thereof have been so united, in making up the second of the four great Monarchies, and running the same Fortunes ever since: that they are hardly to be parted in course of Story, tho' each must have unto it self a distinct Choreography. First then we begin with Media.

MEDIA is bounded on the East, with Parthia, and some part of Hyrkania, Provinces of the Persian Empire; on the West with Armenia Major, and some part of Assyria; on the North with the Caspian-Sea, and those parts of Armenia Major, which now pass in the account of Georgia; and on the South with Persia. So called from Madai the Son of Japhet, by whom first Planted and Possessed, after that general dispersion made at Babel, known by this name among the Ancients, both Greeks and Romans; but at this time Sheirwan by the Turks and Persians: the word signifying in the Language of this Country, a Milky Plain.

The Country of a large extent, and of so different nature, as one would think it not the same. The North parts lying betwixt Mount Taurus and the Hyrkanian Sea, very cold and comfortless: So Barren, that for the most part they make their Bread of dried Almonds, and their Drink of the juice of certain herbs. Fruit-trees they have but few, and those but of Apples; nor any droves of tame Cattel, as in other places, their Food being generally on Venison, or the Flesh of wild Beasts took in Hunting. But on the South side of the Taurus, the Soil is very rich, and the Country pleasant, plentiful both of Corn and Wine, and all things necessary; full of fat Pastures, some of them so large in compass, that 50000 Horses do graze upon them. Mandeflo in his Travels, page 10. observeth that most of the Maps that have yet (in 1638) been made at Persia are very defective, because they put the Caspian Sea too high to the North, and consequently allow it a greater breadth from North to South than it really hath, for they put the City of Resht in 41 degree, whereas it lies in 37. and Gameron, or Gambroon in 25. which lies in 27. So that between them is but ten degrees, whereas Botero allows it eighteen degrees.

The People anciently great Warriors, as those who Ruined the great Empire of the Babylonians; and laid upon themselves and their own Virtue, the foundation of the second Monarchy. But being not long after incorporated into the same Empire with the Persians, have not only ever since followed the same fortunes with them, but participate of their nature also: and therefore we shall hear more of their Character, when we come to Persia. Poligamy anciently among them, so far from being esteemed a sin, or an inconvenience, that it was a punishment for the common Villager to have less than seven Wives; or the Woman, if of Noble Birth, fewer than five Husbands. In their Wars they use commonly to envenom their Arrows with an Oyl or Liquor, made of a bituminous water called Napht, whereof there is great plenty, both here, in Persia, and Assyria. The Oyl call'd Oleum Mediacum, from this People only, because their invention; and by them most mischievously used. The Arrow which was anointed with it, being shot from a flacker Bow, for a swift and strong motion took away its virtue) did burn the flesh wherein it fasten'd, with so great a violence, that nothing but dust could mitigate the fury of it; water increasing rather than diminishing that malignant flame.

The Christian Religion was first here planted by S. Thomas, but never had the happiness to be so universally embraced, as in other places; always opposed and suppressed, either by Paganism, in the time of the old Persian Kings: or by Mahometanism, since the first Conquest of this Country by the Power of the Saracens. Some Christians yet there be among them, either of the Armenian, or Nestorian Sects, (as in all other parts of the Persian Empire) the specialties of whose Religion have been elsewhere spoke of. Here live also very many Jews, indulged the free exercise of their Religion: many which are descendants of those Tribes which were transplanted hither by Salmanassir. But the Religion generally embraced and contended, is that of Mahomet, according to the Sophian or Persian Sects; the Language of which Nation they do also speak, tho' they had a Language of their own, different from that of the Parthian, Elamite, or Persian, as appeareth Acts 2. 9. where they are reckoned as distinct.

Mountains of chief note, 1 Orontes. 2 Coronus. 3 Chaboras, the boundary betwixt Media and Assyria. 4 Jasonium. 5 Lagoas, all of them (except Chaboras only) the disjoynted branches of Mount Taurus: which is here more broken and divided, than in any part of his course besides.

Out of these flow their principal Rivers. 1 Amandus, 2 Strata, and 3 Carindas, of greatest eminence in this Country, in the time of Ptolomy, but otherwise of no great account or observation. 4 Canac, the divider of this Province from Armenia Major, but whether any of the former under this new name, I am not able to affirm. Add hereunto the great Lake, now called Argus, (by the Persians Vasthlan) but by Strabo named Martiana Palus, situate in the confines of Assyria, Media, and Armenia; of the fish whereof dried by the Sun and Wind, and sold into divers other Countries, the People of these parts raise a great commodity.

In former times it was divided into many Provinces, the principal of which, 1 Tropatene. 2 Charomithene. 3 Darites. 4 Marciane. 5 Amariace. And 6 Syro-Media. These and the rest reduced to two in the latter reckonings, viz. Atropatia, and 2 Media Major.

1. ATROPATIA is that part hereof, which lieth betwixt Mount Taurus and the Caspian Sea. So called from that Atropatus, Governor of these parts in the time of Darius, the last Persian Monarch, who so Valiantly held out against the Macedonians. The Tropatene, (as I take it) of the ancient Writers. A Barren, Cold, and Unhospitable Country, as before described; and for that cause allotted for the dwelling of many of the Captive Israelites, brought hither by Salmanassir when he Conquered that Kingdom: their numbers being found so great in this Northern Region, that Benjamin the Jew reckoned no fewer than 50000 of 'em in one City only, which he calleth by the name of Madai. And that great numbers of 'em were transplanted hither, appeareth by that passage, 2 Kings 17. 6. where it is said, that they were placed in Halab and Haber, by the River of Gozan, and in the Cities of the Medes. Now Halab or Chalab seems most probably to be that Region of Assyria which

Ptolomy

Ptolemy calleth Chalatene, in the North of that Country, towards Media, Habor, or Chabor, to be that Mount Chaberus, which parteth this Country from Assyria, in which Mountainous tract there was in those times a City of the same name also. Betwixt which City and the Banks of the Caspian Sea, I find in Ptolemy the City of Gauzan, in the 40th. and 40 min. of the Northern Latitude: in which there are apparent footsteps of the name of the River Gozan, upon whose Banks it was most likely to be seated.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Hamadum, by Benjamin the Jew, called Mudai, replenished in his time with Families of the Captive Israelites. 2 Gauzan, another dwelling of those Tribes spoken of before. 3 Mandagarsis, of which nothing extant but the name. 4 Gelan, inhabited by Gelæ of the Ancients, whom the Greeks call Cadusii. 5 Bochu, more towards the Caspian Sea, hence called Mare de Bochu. 6 Eres, a place of great strength, but possessed by the Turks, and made the Residence of some of their Principal Officers: Taken by Mustapha General of the Turkish Forces, in the time of Amurath the Third, and by him Fortified as the Gate and Entrance of this Country. 7 Sumachia, or Shamaki, betwixt Eres and Derbent, taken by Osman Bassa, at the same, Anno 1578, and made the Residence of a Beglerbeg, Anno 1583. Conceived to be the Cyrnopolis of Ptolemy, by the Persians called Cyrekbat; bearing the name of Cyrus the great Persian Monarch, by whom Built or Beautified. Remarkable at the present for a Pillar of Flint-stones interwoven with the heads of many of the Persian Nobility, most Barbarously slain by one of the late Sultans, and this Pillar here erected for a Terror to others. Scamachi, or Sumachi, Samachi, Syropolis, is so handsomely seated in a Valley, that it is not visible till one is within Canon-shot of it. It is called by the Persians, Circumbate, and by the Arabians, Chycleth: In former times this was a place of some Strength, but in the Wars of Sebac-Abbas King of Persia, it was Dismantled and made a Village, to prevent the Turks from Neasting again in it, yet the Wall on the North side is still standing too, it has a Mote, but easily to be passed, and five Gates, which are shut every night, though to no purpose. The streets are narrow, and the Buildings low, consisting of Clay, Twigs, daubed over, and Planks, yet it hath a rich Market stored with Silks, Cottons, Furs, Cloath of Gold and Silver, Tapestry, &c. It was rebuilt in 1670. being entirely ruined by an Earthquake in 1667, (this shews the true reason why the Houses are no better): Struyis page 238. Olearius saith, it had once 5000 houses, but was destroyed by the Turks: The Persians Re-built it in 1637. it had about 900 Houses, page 222. In the Year 1573. before it fell into the Turks hands it was the fairest City in all Persia, Hackluit, Tom. 1. pag. 347.

2. MAJOR MEDIA, or MEDIA specially so called, is that part hereof, which lieth on the South of the Mountain Taurus. Commended by the Ancients for one of the goodliest Countries in all Asia: the Fields (saith Ammianus) yielding abundance of Corn and Wine, for their fatness and fertility very rich, and no less pleasant for fresh Springs and clear veins of Water, where one may see plenty of green Meadows; and in them a breed of generous Horses, which they call Nisæi, Mounted by as Valiant and Generous Riders, who with great Jollity use to go unto the Wars, and Charge Furiously upon the Enemy. The Men commended by Polybius (ἡ τὰς ἀρετὰς ἀνδρῶν, &c.) as well as the Country.

Cities of most note in it, 1 Ecbatana, of as great antiquity as Babylon; for we find that Semiramis the Wife of Ninus, in a War made against the Medes, who had then Rebelled, taking an affection to the place, caused Water-courses to be made to it from the further side of the Mountain Orontes, digging a passage through the Hills, with great charge and labour. Destroyed by the injury of Time, it was re-edited by Deioces the 6th King of the Medes; and afterwards much beautified and enlarged by Sennacherib, Successor unto Alexander in his Assyrian Conquests. For Beauty and Magnificence little inferior to Babylon, or Ninive, before described. In compass 100 or 200 Furlongs, which make about 24 Italian Miles. The Walls thereof affirmed in the Book of Judith to be 70 Cubits high, 50 Cubits broad, and the Towers upon the Gates 100 Cubits higher; all built of hewn and polish'd stone, each stone being six Cubits in length, and three in breadth. But this is to be understood only of the innermost Wall, there being seven in all about it; each of them higher than the other, and each distinguished by the colour of their several Pinnacles, which, gave unto the eye a most gallant Prospect. From which variety of Colours, it is thought to have the name of Aghath, or Agbatbanu. In former times the ordinary Residence of the Monarchs of the Medes and Persians, in the heat of Summer; as Susa (the chief City of Susiana) in the cold of Winter: The Royal Palace being about a Mile in compass, was built with all the Cost and Cunning that a stately Mansion did require: Some of the Beams thereof of Silver, and the rest of Cedar; but those of Cedar strengthened with Plates of Gold. Said by Josephus to be built by the Prophet Daniel, which must be understood no otherwise in the truth of Story, than that he oversaw the Work-men, or contrived the Model, appointed to that Office by Darius Medus, to whom the Building of the same is ascribed by others. Neglected by the Kings of the Parthian Race, it became a Ruin. 2 Tauris, situate in or near the Place of Ecbatana, out of whose Rubbish it was Built. Distant 150 miles from the Caspian Sea, under the shadow of Orontes, now call'd Baronta; but opening Southwards, towards a large and spacious Campaign, in compass about six miles, and beautified on the South-west with a large and pleasant Garden, the work of Sultan Tamas, who resided here often: the Buildings for the most part of Brick, with flat Roofs, (as generally in the East) well Peopled, as containing 200000 persons of all Sorts and Sects. Of great Trading, till Subdued by the Turks, by whom it was thrice taken within very few years, viz. by Selimus I. Anno 1514. by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1530. and by Osman Bassa, General of Amurath III. 1585. But this last finding it too chargeable always to be Garisoned, and not otherwise Tenable but by Force, pulled down the Walls, and built a large and capacious Citadel: both Town and Citadel recovered by Emir-Hamze Mirza, Prince of Persia, and Father of Sultan Sopky, Anno 1614. after it had been for an hundred years a continual prey unto the Turks. Sir John Chardin estimates the Inhabitants of Taurus now to be 550000 Souls, page 352. Tavernier page 20. Minadoi, page 311. 3 Arsatta, so named by Ptolemy, and by the name conjectured to be built by some of the Parthian Race. Ruined long since, but more beautifully revived than ever in the present. 4 Casbin, raised from the Ruins of that Town. Situate in a fair and open place on the Banks of a little River, which serveth it for household uses, but not for Traffick. Exceedingly enriched by the removal of the Court from Tauris hither, in the time of Tamas; partly invited thereunto by the richness of the Soil, and the commodiousness of the Place; but chiefly that he might without danger attend the Turks, who began to encroach on his Dominions. In compass about seven miles, beautified with a large Market-place, many stately Mosques, and the Sultan's Palace: this last adjoining to the first, convenient enough, but neither of great State nor Beauty. In 1585 Abbas King of Persia removed the Royal Seat to Ispahan, which together with the unhealthfulness of the Air, in Summer for want of Sinks to carry away the filth, makes the City decline; yet Sir John Chardin estimated the Houses to be 12000, and the Inhabitants 100000. page 278.

Tavernier,

Tavernier page 26. Hackluit, tom. 1. pag. 398. Struys, page 304. See the Lexicon Geographicum. 5 Rages, or Raga, mentioned in the Book of Tobit, so called from Reu, or Ragau the son of Phaleg, the Founder of it: situate near the spacious Plain, so memorable for the great breed of Horses spoken of before; and therefore in that Book called the Plain of Rages. Repaired afterwards by the Greeks, it was named Europus, and so stands in Ptolomy. 6 Nassruan, supposed by some to be the Artasata, more probably the Nasuana, of the ancient Writers: A place much aimed at by the Turks in their Persian Wars. 7 Ardoville, on or near the Banks of the great Lake Argis, spoken of before: The Birth-place and chief Seat of Guine, and Aider, the first Authors of the Sophian Sect; and the Burial-place of Sultan Hyfmael, the first Persian Sultan of that Line. 8 Sultania, about six days Journey from Tauris, environed with high Mountains; the tops of which continually cover'd with Snow, may be seen far off: Founded by Alyaptu, the Eighth King of the Sixth or Tartarian Dynasty, and by him made the Royal Seat of the Persian Sultans, whence it had the name. But Ruinated by the Tartars, it retaineth nothing now of its former splendor, but the Mosques, or Temples (one of them the fairest in the East) which the Tartars spared. 9 Troyan, in the Territory of Sultania, situate in a large Plain, but not far from the Mountains; beautified with a fair Market-place, many pleasant Gardens of private men; and one belonging to the King, environ'd with a Wall of greater circuit than the City. 10 Turcoman, in the middle way betwixt Taurus and Casbin. 11 Damoan, at the foot of Taurus, a Town of 200 Houses, not here considerable, but for the signification of the name; which is said to signify a Second Plantation: And being situate at the foot of so high a Mountain, occasioned some of the Jews to think that the Ark rested not far off, as perhaps it did. 12 Marrant, in the extremity of the Country, but of lesser note.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Posterity of Madai, as before was said; Ragau the Son of Phaleg taking up those parts, which lay next Affyria. Divided in long tract of Time into several Tribes, as the Cadusii, Amariacii, Margasi, Sagartii, Delryces, Tapyri, and some others. Governed by Kings immediately from the first Plantation; for we find that Pharnus King hereof, was overthrown and slain by Ninus the Grand-son of Nimrod. After this made subject to the Affyrians, their Kings were only Titular, at the best, but Homagers, perhaps no better than Provincial Governors under that great Monarchy. Of most esteem among 'em was that Arfæus, who with an Army of 800000 Men (if the number be not mistaken) encountered the Cadusii, by whom Discomfited, and Slain. But the Cadusii so broken, that they were fain to put themselves under the power of the Persians, and so continued till the time of Arbaces, the last of these Provincials, and the first Monarch of the Medes. He living in the time of Sardanapalus, had the chance to see his Lord and Master in a Womans Dress, Spinning among his Concubines, and otherwise behaving himself in a Brutish manner; which so moved him, that he resolved to be no longer subject to so vile a Monster. Communicating his thoughts unto Belochus, Governor of Babylon, and well seen in Astrology, he was encouraged to proceed; and sped so well, that having made themselves Masters of Ninive, the Imperial City, (though Sardanapalus for a time put them shrewdly to it) they divided betwixt them his Estates. To Belochus fell Affyria and Babylonia, with the Provinces on the West of Tigris: To Arbaces, Media, and the rest, which now make up the Kingdom of Persia. But being a mild-Prince, and desirous by fair and gentle means to assure his Empire, he confirmed the Persian Satrapæ in their former Governments; reserving nothing to himself but a Titular Sovereignty. Of whom and his Successors more, when we have taken in the rest of the Provinces.

P E R S I A.

P E R S I A is Bounded on the East with India; on the West with Media, Affyria, and Chaldea; on the North with Tartary; on the South, with the Main Ocean. So called from Persis the predominant Province of it, that which gave Law to all the rest: as that is said to do from Perfæus, the Son of Jupiter and Danae; affirm'd by the Grecians to have Conquer'd these Eastern Countries, and to have left his name to this. Of which thus Isidore, Persæ populi à Perseo Rege sunt vocati, qui à Græcis in Asiam transiens ibi barbaras gentes gravi diturnoque bello perdomuit, & victor nomen subactæ Genti imposuit. In the Scripture it is constantly called Elam, till the time of Daniel the Prophet, from Elam, the Son of Sem, who was planted there. But after that the Medes and Persians had subdued Babylon, and transferred the Supreme Monarchy to themselves, we find this People called by the name of Paras, (whence the name of Persian seems to come) the word Paras (or Pharas) signifying as much as Horseman. Given therefore to this Nation, as 'tis supposed, from an Edict of Cyrus, who not only taught them the art of Horsemanship, but set forth a Law, that it should be a Reproach to any man to go on foot, Sive multum sive parum itineris esset conficiendum, whether the Journey that he had to go were long or little. Called sometimes also Achæmenides, from Achæmenides the Son of Perles, one of the first known Kings hereof; and by that name, (Non tot Achæmeniis armantur Sula Sagittis) they occur in the second of Propertius. Where by Achæmenia Sagittæ, he means Persian Arrows.

It is of very great extent, stretched out in length from the 82^d. degree of Longitude, to the 120, being 38 degrees in all; and in breadth from the 23^d degree of Northern Latitude, to the 43^d. being 20 more. According unto which position, with reference to the Heavenly Bodies, we shall find it seated under the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth Climates: the longest Summers-day in the Southern parts, being thirteen hours almost three quarters, and fifteen hours one quarter in the parts most Northwards.

The Country not alike in all places, as it is impossible it should in so great a compass. But generally it is of a pure and wholesome air, the high hills shading it on the one side from the heat of the Clime under which it lieth; and the warmth of the Sun, wherewith encompassed, cherishing a great part thereof. And so it is affirmed to be by Quintus Curtius; Regio non alia in tota Asia salubrior habetur; temperatum Cælum; hinc perpetuum jugum opacum & ombrosum, quod æstus levat; illinc mare adjunc-tum, quod modico tempore terras fovet. Then for the Earth, it is by reason of the great heat of the Sun, very dry and Sandy, in many places destitute of Water; in the South parts thereof few Rivers, and not many Lakes; by consequence neither well peopled, nor manured, for the greatness of it: Men loving to Inhabit (and I cannot blame them) where they may have the use of Water. Which notwithstanding, it is furnished with all necessities both for life and pleasure; one part affording that which the other wanteth, as shall be shewed in the description of the several Provinces.

The People anciently were train'd up to the Wars, but chiefly unto Archery, from their very Childhood. Indulged the liberty of having as many wives as they pleased; they never saw the Children begotten of them, until five years old. At that age sent unto their Fathers, they were taught presently to handle the Bow and Arrows. Upon this ground we find the Bow of Elam mentioned by the Prophet Jeramy, Chap. 4. and the Quiver of Elam by the Prophet Isaiab, chap. 22. 6. as the Arms peculiar to that Nation, or most used among them. They were good Horsemen also, and well skill'd at their Dart and Slings, till wealth and ease, and the pride of so great an Empire made them wholly feminine: depriving them of of those abilities both of Mind and Body, wherein they did excel most Nations in their harder times. In all their Fortunes very obsequious, if not servile, to their Kings and Princes; in whose presence it was a crime to spit: but to deny obedience unto his Commands an offence so heinous, as was not to be punished with less than the loss of Life, and want of Burial. In this observance of their Kings, follow'd, if not outstripp'd, by the modern Persians. A Race of Men affirmed to be cunctorum hominum mitissimi, the most Meek or Patient of the World, especially compared with those of the same Religion, the Turks and Tartars. Not haters of Learning, as the Turks, but studious, many of them in Physick and Astronomy; most of the better sort much delighted in Poetry, which they give their minds to. For the most part addicted to Hospitality, Magnificent in Expence, Lordly in their Compliments, Fantastical in their Apparel, Maintainers of Nobility, and desirous of Peace. Such as apply themselves to Trades, and Mechanick Arts, prove excellent in the making of Silks, and Cloath of Gold: those which betake themselves to War, proving very good Soldiers, as the Turks have found unto their cost, who by their long Wars against them have got nothing but blows. The Women said to be neat and cleanly, truly loving, gorgeous in Attire, and delightful in the sequesterations of Pleasure.

Their Religion at the first was Paganism, wherein directed principally by the Priests or Magi, Men of a strict, austere life, forbidding outward Ornaments, and the use of Gold; making the Ground their Bed, and the Herbs their Food; their whole time spent in Offering to the gods the Prayers and Sacrifices of the People, as if they only might be heard; or else in Divinations, and foretelling of things to come; from whence the name of Magick and Magician are derived unto us. Studious in the knowledge of God and Nature, and therefore called by Suidas, not only Philosophy, lovers of Wisdom; but Philothei, the lovers of God. Of such esteem, that as Cicero telleth us, the Persian Kings were not admitted to the Throne, till they were trained up in the Discipline of the Magi: and of such power and intimacy in the Royal Court, that one of those Magi, on the Death of Cambyses possessed himself of the Persian Monarchy. In a word, such as the Druids were to the Galls and Britains, the Gymnosophists, or Brachmans, to the ancient Indians, and the Chaldeans in the Empire of Babylon; the same, if not of greater sway in Affairs of Moment, were the Persian Magi. And Persians they must be, if Magi; none but the Natives of that Country being to be admitted of that Society; tho' by a Metaphor, applied to the Professors of the same Arts, tho' of other Countries, as those which came from the East to Worship Christ, are by St. Matthew called Magi (Mat. 2. 1.) though they came from Arabia.

The People then were Gentiles as to their Religion; and besides other gods which the Gentiles worshipped, they were great Idolaters of the Fire; which they offer'd Sacrifice unto in time of Peace, and carried it with them as their Tutelar Deity in the time of War. At what time (especially if the King were there in Person) it was born in the very Front of their Army, attended on by their Priests, and followed by a Train of Boys, all cloathed in Scarlet, to the number of 365. according to the number of the days of the year. In this Equipage, with a great deal of Pomp besides, did Darius set forwards to Fight with Alexander, at the Battel of Iffus in Cilicia. A Superstition derived from them to the Medes and Assyrians, their next neighbouring Nations, and not extinguished to this day in some parts of this Country; in which many of these Fire-worshippers are still remaining. But from a god, it grew in time to be a Gentleman-Usurper, and to attend on Kings, and persons of greatest Eminence: used to be born before the Emperors of Rome, as a point of State. Insomuch that Commodus, though fallen out with his Sister Lucilla, permitted her notwithstanding to enjoy her Seat in the publick Theatre, καὶ οὕτως περιπατοῦσα ἐν τῷ θέατρῳ a fire to be born before her, as in former times, as we are told by Herodian.

The Christian Faith was first planted in the Provinces of the Persian Kingdom, by St. Thomas the Apostle, and held in all points answerable to those of the Catholick Church, till Sapor to despise the Emperor Constantine, a right Orthodox Prince, Commanded that all the Christians in his Dominions should conform themselves to the Opinions and Tendencies of the Nestorian Sect, by that means universally spread over all these Provinces. With whom here live now intermingled some Armenian Christians, who with their Patriarch removed hither, when their own Country was made the seat of a long and miserable War betwixt the Armenians and the Turks; but found not here so safe a dwelling as they did expect: 1200 of them being slain by Abbas the late Persian Sultan, on a suspicion that they went about to reconcile themselves to the Pope of Rome, whom he held to be more inclinable to the Turk than to him) in the year 1609. Which notwithstanding (so miserable a condition do these Christians live in) he suffered two Convents of Augustine and Carmelite Friars, to be settled at the same time, even in Spaw-bain it self, and many Jesuits to live peaceably up and down the Country, which serve for little else than to give intelligence. The Fury of Abbas King of Persia was temporary as to the Armenians; towards the latter end of his Reign, observing the great advantages that attended a Foreign Trade, he employed some of his own Persians that way, but they proved prodigal, and spent the Stocks he had trusted them with out of his Treasury; then he encouraged his Armenian Subjects, and they proving more Prudent and Fortunate, are become the Richest, and the greatest Traders of all the Eastern Countries, and send their Factors and Merchandizes into Tartary, Indostan, Turkey, Russia, and as far West as England and Holland. The vast Riches they bring to the Crown and People of Persia, make them now beloved by all Parties, and they live more splendidly and happily than any of the other Subjects of that Kingdom, enjoying the free Exercise of their Religion, adorning their Churches with great Bravery, of which they have ten at Zulpha, and two at Isfahan, the Capital of Persia, of which the first is a great and Magnificent Suburb, Inhabited by none but Armenians. In this place lives their Patriarch in a splendid manner, and many of their Festivals are so Magnificently celebrated, that the Kings of Persia have been pleased to honour them with their Presence, and send them besides a considerable Sum of Money towards the expence. This Suburb is about four English Miles square; the Houses are better built than those of the Persians, and their Children inherit Lands; so that they are the Freest, Richest, and most respected Subjects of Persia. Struys, page 325. Tavernier Lib. 4. Chap. 7. The latter faith they have fifteen, or sixteen Churches at Zulpha. Here are also many Jews dispersed over all the Provinces of this Empire, allowed their Synagogues, and publick places of Assembly. But the Religion publicly Authorized and Countenanced, is that of Mahomet, imposed on this Country by the Sarazens, when by them Subdued: differing in some points from the Turks, especially about the true Succession of that false Seducer (of whom more anon;) the cause of the long Wars betwixt those Nations.

As for the Persian Language, it is very Ancient, supposed to be as old as the Confusion of Babel: some words whereof, by Daniel and Ezra which lived in the Persian Court, have been made use of in some parts of the Holy Scripture. A Tongue which still hath left some remainders of it, in the Language of the Modern Persian, (as those of judgment in this Tongue have delivered to us) notwithstanding so long tract of time, and the Conquest of this Country by the Greeks, Arabians, Turks and Tartars. Not spoken only in this Country, nor limited within the Provinces of the Persian Empire; but used also in the Court and Camp of the Great Mogul, and some parts of Zagathay; and were not vulgar unto all, studied and understood by persons of more eminent sort, as the Latin by the Gentry of these Western parts. Infomuch as he that hath this Language, may travel over all the East without an Interpreter.

Rivers in the South parts there are but few, as before was said, and those few not navigable; by consequence of little note or estimation. The principal of those that be, are 1. Eulæus, the chief River of Susiana, emptying it self into Sinus Persicus: a River of so pure a Stream, that the great Persian Kings would drink of no other Water. The Northern parts more plentifully stored with that Commodity, as having in it the famous Rivers of 2 Ochus in Bactria, a River of the greater note amongst the Ancients, because it was navigable; opening with a fair Channel into the Caspian Sea, to which it hastneth from Mount Taurus: and so doth also 3 Oxus in Margiana, a fatal bound to these great Neighbours. A River which the Persians have seldom passed to enlarge their Dominions, but they received some notable overthrow at the hand of the Scythians; and when the Tartars made over it under the conduct of Saba the Cham of Zagathay, for the invasion of Persia, they were shamefully beat back again by Elymael Sophy. Nor is it less memorable in old stories, for the famous passage of Alexander over it, in pursuit of the Murderers of Darius. For having followed Bessus to the Banks of this River, and not knowing how to pass over his Men, there being neither Ships upon it, nor Timber near at hand to build them, he caused a great number of Bags and Bladders to be stuffed with straw, and so in Three Days transported his Army. So that I may truly say with his own Historian, Unum id Consilium quod necessitas suggesserat, iniit; necessity is the best Author of fine Inventions. 4. Zioberis in Hyrcania, which rising out of the same mountainous Tract (as the Two last mentioned) after a long course above ground in the open light, hideth himself again for the space of 38 Miles, and then breaketh out at a new Fountain, and falleth into 5 Rhadaga, another chief River of those parts. And this Alexander the Great found to be true, by casting Two Oxen into the River Zioberis, which by the current of the stream were carried under the ground, and brought to light where the River had its rise again. 6. Hidero, by what name known unto the Ancients I am not able to say, but of great note amongst Modern Travellers, for the fall thereof into the Sea: so steep and strong, that the people are said to sacrifice or banquet under the Fall thereof, the stream so violently shooting over their Heads that it never wetted them.

Mountains of most note, are those which pass by the name of Taurus; which having left Medi on the West, passeth thorough the Northern Provinces of the Persian Empire, dividing Parthia from Hyrcania, and Paropamisus from Bactria, and Aria from Margiana. Known by the names of Coronus, the Scribian hills, Paropamisus, Caucasus; whereof more, as occasion serveth, in their proper places.

It is divided into the particular Provinces of 1 Susiana, 2 Persis, 3 Ormus, 4 Carmania, 5 Gedrosia, 6 Drangiana, 7 Arachosia, 8 Paropamisus, 9 Aria, 10 Darthia, 11 Hyrcania, 12 Margiana, 13 Bactria. Which we will severally survey in the Chorography and story, till we have joined them all together in the Persian Monarchy; and then pursue the History as conjunct and fashioned into the Body of one Empire.

1. SUSIANA. CUSISTAN.

SUSIANA is bounded on the East, with Persis; on the West, with Babylonia, or Chaldæa; on the North, with Assyria; on the South, with a Branch of the River Tigris, and some part of the Gulf of Persia.

It was so called quasi Cusiana, or the Land of the Cusites, from Chus the eldest Son of Ham, and the Grandson of Noah, by whose Son Havilah it was first peopled; and therefore called in Scripture, The Land of Havilah; this being that Land of Havilah, which the River Pison is said to encompass, in the Book of Genesis. The difference betwixt them is, that that Land of Havilah lay on both sides of the River Euphrates (which the Country of Susiana doth not) and was the Eastern Bound of the Ismaelites, Amalekites, and other Nations intermingled in those parts of Arabia. For whereas Saul is said in 1 Sam. 15. 7. to have smitten the Amalekites from Sur to Havilah, that is to say, from the Red Sea to the Gulf of Persia, it must be understood of Havilah in the first extent; but neither of Havilah in the East Indies (so called from a Son of Jocktan), or of that part of Havilah which lay on the East side of Euphrates, and is that Susiana, in which now we are: it being no where found that Saul was so great a Traveller as to see the Indies; or of such puissance as to force a passage through the Countries of the Chaldeans and Babylonians. But the name of Havilah being lost, that of Cusiana or Susiana did still remain; preserved to this day in that of Chusestan, by which now called.

The Country memorable in the Scriptures for Gold, Bdellium, and the Onix-stone; which doth abundantly set forth the richness and commodities of it: Bdellium being a Tree (for of the other Two nothing need be said) about the bigness of an Olive, yielding a certain Gum very sweet to smell to, but bitter of taste; which in time hardneth to a Pearl, as Eugubinus and Beroaldus have delivered to us.

Divided anciently into many particular Regions, or at least known by several Names in its several Quarters. For where it bordereth upon Tigris, it was called Melitene; Cabandone, where it toucheth upon Persis; where it confined on the Elymaeans, it had the name of Cissia; and near the Wall or Ditch called Vallum Pasini, it was called Characene. Watered besides Eulæus, and Tigris before spoken of, with the Rivers Orontes and Masæus; with that Branch of the River Tigris which Ptolemy calleth Basilæus, Curtius, Pasi-Tigris, and the Scriptures, Pison.

Chief Cities hereof, 1 Aracca, spoken of by Ptolemy, the same which the Scriptures call Erech, and one of the Four which Nimrod built in the first beginning of his Empire, Gen. 11. Remembred by Tibullus for the Fountains of Naphtha (of which the Medians made their Oyl spoken of before) a bituminous Liquor, easily taking fire, but not easily quenched. Of which thus the Poet;

Ardet Areccæis aut unda perhospita Campis.

Where by unda perhospita, he meaneth that bituminous Liquor called Naphtha, issuing from the Fields of Erech, as the Learned Salmasius hath observed in his Notes on Solinus. 2 Susa, The Shusan of the Book of Hester, and Nebe-mia; honoured with the residence of the Persian Monarchs in Winter, as Ecbatana in Summer. Situate on the River Eulæus, by the Prophet Daniel called Ulai. Built, as some say, by Memnon the Son of Tithonus, slain by the Thebælians in the Trojan Wars: the Walls whereof, as Cassiodorus hath reported, cemented with Gold. But howsoever, it was doubtless a magnificent City, and of infinite Wealth, Alexander finding in it 50000 Talents of Gold

Gold uncoined, besides Silver Wedges, and Jewels of inestimable value. Memorable for the great Feast here made by Abaſuerus, of 183 days continuance for his Lords and Princes; imitated by the Persian Sultans to this very day; who with a Royal Feast of the like continuance do annually entertain their Nobles. Now nothing but a ruin, and perhaps not that. Herbert, pag. 140. saith, it is now called Valdac, and that it lies upon the River Chofes, which falls into the Persian Gulf near Balsora: In what Estate it is he saith not, only he intimates, that it is an heap of Ruins. The Chofes or Choazpes was of such esteem, the Kings of Persia would drink no other Water: With its Mianders it encompassed Suſhan, saith that Gent. 3. Elymais, the chief City of the Elimai, by Ptolemy (unless his Copies be corrupted) mistakingly called Eldimai. Situate on the Banks of Eulens also, near the Border of Persis (the Nation of the Elamites, or Elymai taking part of both Provinces.) Of great note anciently for a sumptuous Temple of Diana sacrilegiously ransacked by Antiochus, of which see 1 Mac. 6. 2. and of such wealth, by reason of the concourse of Pilgrims thither, that Severus Sulpitius calleth it Oppidum opulentissimum, a most opulent City. 4. Sela, on the Banks of Eulens also; reckoned by Ammianus amongst the most eminent of this Province: so named from Selab, the Son of Arphaxad, who first planted there. To whom the building of the City of Susa is ascribed by Eusebius, in his Hexameron, Σαλα ἀφ' ἑ Σου-σωνοῖ, are that Author's Words; perhaps more truly than to Memnon: and unto whom the Original of the Cossæi, whom Ptolemy placeth in this Tract, is referred by Eusebius. 5. Tarſiana, another of the Cities mentioned by Ammianus (who takes notice only of the chiefest.) the same no doubt which Ptolemy calls Tariana, and joins next to Sela. 6. Agra, upon the Banks of Tigris, not far from Erech. But there is little left of these, but what is to be found in the Ancient Writers; now hardly visible in their Ruins. The Towns of most note now remaining, being 7 Faarooone, inhabited for the most part by Jews, of which here are no fewer than a thousand Families; supposed to be the descendants of those whom Salmanasser transplanted out of the Kingdom of Israel. 8. Saum. 9. Casa, of which little memorable.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Chusites of the House of Havilah, the Son of Chus; an evident footstep of whose name we have in the Chavilæi, whom Pliny placeth in this Tract; by other Writers called the Chaulotæi & Chaulasii, as before was noted, with whom were joined in the first plantings of this Country, the Cossæi and the Susiani, descended from Sala the Son of Arphaxad; and the Elimæi, the Posterity of Elam the Son of Sem. Betwixt the Two last Nations long and frequent Wars, till the Kings of Babylon or Aſſyria composed the differences, by making both subject to their Empire. After this nothing memorable in the story of it, till the transplanting of the Ten Tribes into the Regions of Aſſyria, and the Cities of Media. At which time, as many of the Israelites were removed hither; (so many of this Nation were sent out (with others) to possess themselves of the void places of those Tribes. Called Cutbeans by the Jews, because the most considerable number of them came from this Province. called in the Scriptures, Cush, by Josephus, Cutba; and by him reckoned for a Region of Persia, as indeed it was, the Time when he lived considered; different only in the Dialect or Form of Speech: That Country which the Hebrews called Chus, being named Curb by the Caldeans; by the Persians, Cuzestan; that Name continuing to this Day.

2. P E R S I S.

PERSIS hath on the East, Carmania; on the West, Susiana; on the North, Mediana; and on the South some part of the Persian Bay, or Sinus Persicus, which took name from hence. The reason of the Name we have had before; this being the predominant Province which in time gave both Name and Law to the rest of this Empire. It had anciently been call'd Ceplene, but now most commonly by the Name of Fars, or Pharſiſtan; more near to Pharas, the old Name of it, both in the Arabick and Hebrew.

Such parts hereof as lie towards the North are cold and hilly, not apt to bear either Fruit or Corn, in any plenty. Some Emeralds they find there, but not very clear. Those parts which lie towards the Persian Gulf, of as bad a nature, tho of different quality; sandy and hot, and beareth little Fruit but Dates, and few Trees but Palm. But betwixt both there lieth a rich and pleasant Country, abounding with Corn, Fruit, and Cattel; great store of Roses, of Rose-water consequently: where-with, and with those Skins which we call commonly by the name of Cordovans from another occasion, they use to furnish all the adjoining Provinces. And to make up the Character of a happy Country, to which nothing wanteth, it is well stored with Lakes and Rivers; the chief whereof are, 1 Bagradas which divideth this Province from Carmania. 2 Rhogomanes, by some called Araxes, now Bindimir, on whose Banks stood the renowned Perſepolis. 3 Orontes, dividing Persis from Susiana, where it falls into the Bay. 4 Briſoana, ending its course in the same Sea also.

Mountains of note I find not any, but those which part this Region from Susiana: Not known by any special name (for ought I can find;) but of sufficient note for the difficult passages out of one Country into the other, called Pylæ Persidis, defended by Ariobarzanes, a Noble Persian, against Alexander the Great; who was here very handsomely beaten, and forced to save himself by a close retreat. And tho Alexander was shewed a By-path afterwards, whereby he fell on Ariobarzanes ere he was aware: yet he was taught by this hard Lesson, that if those who kept the straits of Cilicia, and the Banks of Tigris and Euphrates, had made like resistance, he had not bought the Persian Monarchy in so cheap a Market.

It was divided anciently into 1 Parſicine, bordering on Media. 2 Mardiene, joining on the Gulf or Bay of Persia. 3 Misdia, lying betwixt both. Each of which, with the several Nations intermingled here as in other places, had their several Cities. The chief whereof 1 Auſſuza, seated on the Bay betwixt the mouths of Bagradas, and Briſoana. 2 Jonacapolis, on the same Bay also, near the influx of Rhogomanes, or Araxes. 3 Axima, more within the Land, now called Lanſilla. 4 Marrasium. 5 Obroatis, or Orebatis, as some Copies have it. 6 Pasarracha, in the Greek Text of Ptolemy called Pasacrada, and Pasagrada by Qu. Curtius. Memorable for the Sepulchre of Cyrus the first Persian Monarch; which violated by a Soldier of Alexander's, in hope of finding some rich Booty, he met with nothing but this modest Inscription, Cyrus ego ſum qui Perſicum regnum conſtitui: quicunque ades mortalium, ne mihi tantillum telluris inuideas, qui corpus meum obtegitur. The Sacrilegious Soldier, though a Macedonian, put to death by Alexander. 7 Perſepolis, the chief City of this Province, and of all the East, called therefore Regia Orientis by Qu. Curtius; situate near the Banks of the River Araxes, and built for the most part of Cypres Wood, the Walls of the Houses being made of Marble, digged out of an adjoining Mountain: Affirmed by Diodorus Siculus, who at large describes it, to be the richest and goodliest City in all the World. And well we may believe him for the richness of it, Alexander finding here 120000 Talents in ready Money for his own share, after the Soldiers had made what Spoil they lifted of Coin, Plate, Bullion, Images of Gold and Silver, and Jewels of unspeakable value. But the chief Beauty of it was the Royal Palace, built on a Hill, environ'd with a treble wall, the first of 16 Cubits height, the second of 30, the third of 60, all of them of black polished Marble, with stately Battlements, and in the Circuit of the whole Palace an hundred Turrets; which gave to the beholders far and near a most goodly Prospect. Nor was the inside of less Beauty than the outside of Majesty: the Roof thereof shining with Ivory, Silver, Gold, and Amber; and the Kings Throne being wholly composed of Gold, and the richest Pearls. But Rich and Stately tho' it were, and one of the greatest Ornaments of the Eastern World, it was by Alexander in a drunken fit consumed with fire, at the instigation of Lais that infamous Strumpet; as in revenge for so many Cities of the Greeks, which the Persians formerly had burnt in the Grecians Wars. And though Alexander in his sober sense did repent him of it, and gave order that it should be re-edified; yet did it never rise to its former height, the Conqueror dying shortly after, and that purpose with him. So Ruined in the Age of Quin. Cur. (who lived in the time of Claudius Cæsar) that he professeth, vestigium ejus non inveniri nisi Araxes amnis ostenderet, that no footsteps of it had been found, if not shewn and pointed out by the River Araxes. on whose Banks it stood. But by the fall thereof rose, 8 Sbiras, now the chief City of this Province, situate in a fair large Plain hemmed about with Mountains, under one of which it is pleasantly seated; in compass about nine miles, well Built, and Beautified with fair Gardens and Magnificent Mosques: two of which larger than the rest, are made more eminent by the addition of two Spires or Steeples covered with a painting of Gold and Azure; the Fabricks for the most part of Mosaick work, as light also by night as day, by reason of a thousand Lamps burning nightly in them. A City (as is said by a Modern Traveller) which for good Wine, pretty Women, pleasant Fruits, and a gallant People, may hold comparison with the best in Persia. Herbert, page 60, 65. The whole Description is from the said Author, but abridged. See also Struys, page 336. 9 Moyoun, on the North East of Sbiras, delightfully situate among the Woods and fruitful Pastures, and Blessed not only with good Wine, but wholesome Waters; of which last, few parts of Persia have much cause to Brag. 10 Bannaraw, on the South west of Sbiras towards Carmania, chiefly remarkable for the Ruins of an ancient Castle, situate on the top of a lofty Mountain. 11 Goyuam, a Town of a thousand Houses. 12 Berry, of no great bigness, but of most esteem, by reason of a fair Mosque, a School for the Arabick Tongue, and the Sepulchre of one of their false Prophets; of which the Persians, besides Mahomet, and Mortis Ali, do acknowledge many.

The first Inhabitants here were of the Posterity of Elam the Son of Sem, and such who under his Conduct were settled here; called from hence Elamites, in the usual style of Holy Scriptures; by the Greeks and Latins, Elymæi: who spreading themselves into Sustana, and by degrees also into other Provinces, became so considerable, that the name of Elamite and Elam were of great Renown: having a Language to themselves, distinct from that of the Medes and Parthians, as is apparent Acts 2. and comprehending under that appellation, the adjoining Regions, as appears plainly in the eighth of the Prophet Daniel, where Susa is said to be in the Province of Elam. How the name was changed into that of Persia, hath been shewn before. Such as continued in this Province, divided into the Tribes of Mesabata, Rapsi, Hippokagi, Suzæi, Megores, and Stabæi, were at first under the Command of their own Princes only: among which Cberdorasman is of greatest fame, who having the conduct of some Adventurers of this Nation, Associated himself with Amraphel the Leader of some Assyrian Troops: and by the name of the Kings of Elam and Assyria invaded Palestine, subdued the City of Sodom, took Lot Prisoner, and in the end were overthrown by the Forces of Abraham. Of no Note after this Expedition, till the time of Perfes the Father of Achæmenes, who being Provincial Governor of these Countries under Sardanapalus, joyned with Arbaces and Belochus in the War against him: and by the Victory, got for himself the Dominion over those Estates, which he had Ruled for the Assyrians; with reference to the Kings of Media as the Supreme Lords. Whose Successors, till the time of Cyrus, take in order thus:

The KINGS of PERSIS.

1. Perfes, from whom perhaps the name of Persis may be more properly derived, than either from Perseus the Son of Danae, or the Son of Perseus by Andromeda.
2. Achæmenes, from whom the Persians had the name of Achæmenii, and the Succeeding Kings were called Achæmenides.
3. Cambyfes, in some places of Herodotus, called also Darius.
4. Cyrus, from whose second Son named Tecispes, descended that Darius, the Son of Histaspis, one of the seven Persian Princes, who got the Kingdom on the expiration of the present Line, and the extirpation of the Magi; of which more hereafter.
5. Cambyfes II. the son of Cyrus.
6. Cyrus, II. surnamed the Great, son of Cambyfes, and of Mandane the Daughter of Astyages King of Media: who joyning with Cyaxares, or Darius Medus, overthrew the Babylonian Empire; and translated thereby the Supreme Power to the Medes and Persians. Of which more hereafter.

3. CARMANIA. KHERMAN.

CARMANIA is bounded on the East, with Gedrosia, and some part of Aria; on the West, with part of Persis, and the Gulf of Persia, from hence call'd also by the name of Sinus Carmanicus; on the North with Parthia, and on the South with the main Indian Ocean. So called from the Carmani, a chief People of it; but the reason of that name I find not. It is now generally called Cbyrman; those parts of it which lie next to Parthia, which Ptolomy calleth Carmania Deserta, being now named Mingia, and by some Dulcinde.

The Country for the most part barren, and but ill Inhabited. That part which Ptolomy calleth Carmania Deserta, being truly such; a Wilderness or very Desert, having in it neither Town nor Village, but some scattered Houses, and those but ill provided of food and necessaries, full of unprofitable Sands, destitute of Water, and of a very hot and unhealthy Air. And though the other part hereof which lieth towards the Ocean, hath a Sea Coast of above 200 Leagues in length, and many Rivers emptying themselves into it, yet are they not the Richer by it, the Shores being full of Rocks, and the Rivers small; so that they neither have good Port, nor safe coming to it. The best Commodities hereof (besides their Manufactures) are Dates, Myrrb, Arsenic, some few Mines of Silver, more of Brass and Iron, and good store of Alabaster. The Inhabitants hereof were anciently called Ichthyophagi, because they lived lived wholly upon Fish, the Country yielding little else for the life of Man. Carmani sine veste, ac frugibus, sine pecore ac sedibus, piscium cute se velant, carne vescuntur, præter capita toto corpore hir sunt. The Carmanis (saith Pomponius Mela;) have neither Fruits nor Raiment, nor House nor Cartel; but Cloath themselves with the Skins, and feed themselves with the flesh of Fishes; hairy, not only their heads, but over all their Bodies also. Where by the way, Ammianus Marcellinus must be out in his Informations, who telleth us of these very Carmanis, that their Country, though far less than that of Arabia Felix, and far more obscure, was as well replenished with Rivers; and for fertility of Soil not inferior to it. But we must understand the one of the best parts of Carmania, the other of Deserta only.

Amongst the Rivers which he reckoneth of greater name than the rest, he mentioneth. 1 Saganus. 2 Sagareus, and 3 Hydriacus. Of which Saganus only is named by Ptolomy, the other Rivers, or the same under divers names, being 1 Dara, 2 Andanius, 3 Cathrarpus, 4 Achindana, 5 Salarus, (the Zagareus, as I take it, of Ammianus) 6 Caudriaces, 7 Soramba, and 8 Samidace, most of them falling into the Gulf of Persia, few Navigable, or of any use in the way of Trading.

Mountains of most note, 1 that called Semiramis, from some exploit of that great Lady; 2 Strongilus, so named from the roundness of it; and 3 a continu'd ridge of Hills, dividing this Country from Gedrosia:

Places of most observation in it, 1 Canbarus, 2 Agria, 3 Tisa, honoured by Ptolomy with the names of Cities; 4 Cirza, and 5 Bocabarta, two Port Towns; 6 Alexandria, bearing the name of that great Conqueror, who here, or hereabouts, kept his Bacchanalia, whereof more anon. 7 Portospana, by Ammianus called Ortospana, and by him reckoned among the fairest and richest of all the Country. 8 Armuzza (or Armuzium, as Pliny calleth it;) on the shore of the Gulf, giving name to a Promontory near adjoyning, and to the noble Isle of Ormuz, of which more anon. 9 Ganbroone, not long since a poor Village; but since the fall of Ormuz (from which not above nine miles distant) grown a Populous Town, consisting at least of 1000 houses. The goodness of this Port hath since the Reduction of Ormuz raised it to a City of great Trade. The Dutch, English, Arabian, and Persian Merchants meet and Trade here for Stuffs, Velvet, Taffata, Raw Silk, &c. It is seated upon the Persian Gulf, in the Latitude of 27. between two good Castles, and at the entrance of the Haven there is a square Redoubt, with four pieces of Canon upon it, the Fortifications of the Castles are Antique, with round Bastions, but well furnished with Cannon. The Haven is convenient, affording good Anchorage at five or six Fathom Water. The Streets are narrow, irregular, and not kept clean. The Air is hot and unwholesome, the Winds turn round every day. It Rains very seldom here, as in 32. not in three years before, so that they have neither Grass nor Herbs, but what they nourish in the Gardens, by watering them three times a day, Mondeffo, page 10. Kermish, a small Island supplies them with Fruits and Fish, plentiful and Cheap, but their greatest want is of Spring-water, which they fetch two Leagues from the City. Sbiras Wine is scarce and very dear, brought hither only in Bottels. Mondeffo was here in 1638. Herbert, page 48. This Town in Winter is well Inhabited by the Persians, Indians, Arabs, and Jews, and by the English, Dutch, and Portuguese, but in Summer they fly away to avoid the intolerable heat. Struys, page 349. has the Prospect of this Town. The English ought to have half the Customs, but in 38 had but the tenth, which in 71 were worth 40000 l. per Ann. but then they consented to take 3000 l. per Ann. 10 Fasques, at the opening of the Persian Gulf, into which it looketh, whence the Promontory of it, called Carpota, is of late named Caspat laques. 11 Carmania, the Metropolis or Mother-City of the Province, in former times of good esteem; and now of passing good repute both for Cloath of Gold, and the making of the best Scimitars. A Weapon, (wheresoever made) of such value among the Alaborians, and so esteemed of by the Turks, that at the overthrow of the Navy at the Battel of Corsu, Anno 1574. most of them who were taken Prisoners threw their Scimitars into the Sea, for fear the Christians should be Masters of such excellent weapons. It is now called Chyrmun, by the name of the Province, as in former times; with very little difference from the ancient name. 12 Lar, more within the Land towards Persia, seated in a barren and inhospitable Country, full of huge heaps of Sand, both loose and dangerous, moved and removed as the wind setteth, into Plains and Mountains: without Grass, Water, Herbs, or any other necessities for the use of Travellers; the City being served with Rain-water only, entertained with great joy when it falleth, and kept in Cisterns. The City notwithstanding large, and of good capacity, containing not long since to the number of 5000 Houses: of which the greatest part, in the year 1590. were thrown down by an Earthquake: Now most remarkable for a fair Market-place of about 180 paces square, a goodly Mosque, adorned with Mosaic work, and a strong Castle seated on the top of an Hill, furnished with great plenty of Ordnance, brought hither from Ormuz. This once a Kingdom of it self, or the head City of a Kingdom, acknowledging no subjection to the Persian Sophies, till Conquered to that Crown by Emangoli Chawn, Duke of Sbiras, who sent hence as much Treasure as was said to load 700 Camels; and put to death the poor King with his whole Posterity, Anno 1604. or thereabouts. Herbert, page 52. Tavernier page 253. Struys, page 346. 13 Tecoa, or Dea-chow, a Town of the Jurisdiction of Lar, not far from which is a huge Wall cut out of a solid Rock by incredible Labour, which served formerly both for a Boundary and Defence of that Sandy Kingdom against the Persians.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof, were the Posterity of Sabta, the Son of Chus, who wanting room on the Coast of Arabia-Felix, where they were first planted, passed over into Sophia (from them so named) an Island of the Persian Gulf, and afterwards into the Main Land of Carmania, where they Built, and gave name unto the City of Sabus, which we find in Ptolomy. Divided in some tract of time into the several Nations of the Sozotæ, Aræ, Charadræ, Chelonophagi, Cabadinæ, and Pasagardæ.

Neither the People nor the Country memorable in the way of Story; but by Accident only: it being here that Alexander, being returned out of India, kept his Bacchanalia, in imitation of Bacchus, who first Conquered that Nation. Night and day he was continually Feasting with his Friends, on a Scaffold drawn with eight Horses; his Companions following in their Chariots: Some adorned with Purple and Silk; others with Flowers and green Boughs; themselves wearing Garlands on their Heads, and carrying their carousing Cups in their Hands. In this Army there was neither Helmet, Sword, Arrow, or Buckler seen: all their Armour was Cups, Barrels, and Flagons; their Skirmishing, Eating, Drinking, Laughing, and Singing. Attended they were by Minstrels, playing on their Flutes; by Women Dancing, Boys Shouting, all playing the drunken Fools most naturally. Thus March'd they through the Country of Carmania, in as great dissoluteness as if BACCHUS himself had indeed been there, and led the Mummery; and for seven whole days this sottishness continued. So that Catullus well observeth, Si quid vitæ saltem adversus comestantes animi fuisset, nulle bercula viri, modo & sobrii, septem dies rum crapula graves in suo triumpho capere potuissent: a Thousand Thousand Persians, sober and well provided, had their Hearts been answerable to so good an opportunity, might have destroyed this drunken Army, and redeemed at once the Honour of their Country, and their own liberty.

O R M U Z.

OR M U Z, not so much memorable for the greatness, as the Wealth, and the conveniency of the situation of it, is an Island situate in the entrance of the Persian Gulf: Commanding not long since, over some part of the Continent of Carmania, and some few Towns of Arabia Felix, and most of the Islands of the Bay. And therefore before we come to speak of the Isle it self, we must take a brief survey of the Sea or Bay called Sinus Persicus, according to our method in other places.

SINUS PERSICUS, the Gulf or Bay of Persia, so famous, so full of Islands, and so much frequented (I use the words of Ammianus Marcellinus) beginneth at Harmozonta, (the same which Ptolemy calls Armusa) a Cape or Promontory of Carmania: from which unto a Cape or Foreland of Arabia Felix, which the Inhabitants calls Maces, the Passage is so strait and narrow, that one may very easily see to the opposite shore. The Strait once passed, the Bay beginneth to open and enlarge it self, as far as the City of Teredon (now called Balsora) where Euphrates after many downfalls is lost in the Sea. The whole Gulf measured by the Shores, of Orbicular form, in compass 20000 Furlongs, (or 2500 Italian Miles) in all the Coasts and sides whereof the Villages and Towns stand exceeding thick, affording frequent passage to and fro for Shipping: So far, and to this purpose he. To which description of his, so exact and punctual, our late Navigations have not added much but the change of Names: the whole Bay being now called Mare Elkerisse, and the Entrances thereunto the Streights of Balsora; these last so called because they opened the way to the Town of Balsora, the most noted Empory of those parts in the times foregoing.

Chief Isles hereof, besides those on the Arabian Shore, of which we have already spoken, are 1 Taxiana, on the Coast of Susiana. 2 Tabiana. 3 Soptha. And 4 Alexandria, or the Isle of Alexander, on the Shores of Persia. Of which that which is called Soptha, seems to take name from Sabta the Son of Chus, planted upon the opposite shore of Arabia Felix; and therein giving name to the City of Saptha, which we find in Ptolemy: And finally joyning to Carmania, there are the Islands called, 5 Sagdana, the chief Town whereof was anciently named Milus; and 6 Vorochtha, situate at the very mouth of the Streights, now called Ormuz, by the name of the Town and Promontory of Armuzia, in Carmania, near adjoining to it, and unto which it did in former times belong. 7 Kismich three Leagues from Gambroon, fifteen Leagues long, and three broad. It is so Fertile that it supplies Gambroon with all sorts of Fruits, Grapes, Damascens, Oranges, Lemons, Melons, Cucumbers, &c. in great plenty, and cheaper than in any other part of Persia. Mandislo, page 11.

This Island situate as is said, at the mouth of the Gulf or Bay of Persia, is in compass about thirty miles, stony, and full of Rocks, in a manner barren of all necessities except Salt wherewith their very Rocks are covered, and of Salt-stones many Houses built. So destitute of all things fitting for the Life of Man, that the Inhabitants had all their Victuals, even the very Water which they drank, from some of the adjoining Countries. The Air so hot in time of Summer, that the people rest themselves in Caves covered over with Wood, where they stand or sit in Water up to the Chin; and have Loop-holes in the Tops of their Houses to let in the Wind. Which notwithstanding, in regard of the situation, it was of late one of the richest Empories in all the World; the Wealth of Persia and East-India being brought hither, and conveyed hence up by Water to the River Euphrates, and so by Boats, or on Camels Backs to Aleppo, Alexandretta, Tripolis; from whence dispersed into all the Countries on the Mediterranean, and to some beyond.

The people hereof in their Persons, Habit, and Religion, participate somewhat of the Arabians, but most of the Persians. Mahometans for the most part, of the Sophian Sect: The rest but few in number, of the Christian; to which converted by the preaching of Father Gasper, a Portugal Jesuit, since the settling of that Nation there.

The chief and only City was of the same name with the Island, founded some seven hundred years ago by one Mahomet Dranku, descended from the Kings of Saba in Arabia Felix: who, with many Families of the Sabæans, passed over the Streights into Carmania, and the Isles adjoining, and liking the situation of this Island, built this City in it, which he called Ormuz, or Armuzium, according to the name of the Town and Promontory upon which it lieth. The City seated at one end of the Isle, about two Miles in compass, well built, and adorned with a fair Marketplace, some Churches, and a well fortified Castle, furnished with all necessities to maintain a Siege. By reason of its wealth and resort of Merchants, grown to such esteem, that it gave occasion to this Distich;

That is to say,

Were all the World a Ring, this Isle alone
Might of that Ring be thought to be the stone.

It was first under its own King, whose Dominion extended also into some part of the Continent on either side, and over all the rest of the Islands within the Gulf. Teixera writes, That in the 10th. Age, Scach Mahomet, the Son of an Arabian King having reduced all the Provinces upon the Persian Gulf, as far as Balsara under him, he passed over into this Island, and laid the foundation of this City; Schabadin Mahomet the XI. King of Ormuz died in 1278. and Seyfadin Reigned there when the Portuguese took it. Mandislo, page 13. His Revenue of no great yearly value till the coming of the Portugals hither, by whom it was Discovered, under the Conduct of Albukerque, Anno. 1506. Who having Fortified some part of it for their own Defence, and made it the Staple of their Trade for the Indian Merchandise, so enriched the same, that the Revenues of those Kings (though Vassals and Tributaries to the Portugals) amounted to 140000 Seriffs yearly. In this flourishing state it stood till the year 1622. when Abbas the Sultan of Persia having received some affront at the hands of the Portuguese; or desirous to remove the Trade of Ormuz to some Port of his own, gave order to Emangoli Chawn, the Duke of Sbiras, to lay Siege unto it, with an Army of 15000 Men. Who seeing no hopes of mastering it by his Land-Forces only, furnished himself with the Ships and Cannon of some English Merchants, to whom he promised many things, which he never performed. For being once Master of the City, he destroyed it utterly, removing the Ordnance to Lar, the Wealth thereof to his own Treasury of Sbiras, the Materials of the Houses to Gombroon, spoken of before: the Portuguese and Christian Natives passing over into Muskabat, in Arabia Felix. Since which time though the

the English Captains that ventured in it, were disappointed of the spoil which they did expect; yet so much honour hath been given by the King of Persia to the English Nation, that their Agent who resideth at Gombroon, takes Custom of all Strangers which do Traffick thither. To the Year 1671. these Customs were worth 40000 l. per An. and duly paid to the English East India Company: That Year the Company being involved in a War with the Great Mogul of Indostan, they consented to take 3000 l. per An. in lieu of these Customs; which I suppose will never be removed again; this was all they got by that Indian War.

GEDROSIA. CIRCAN.

GEDROSIA is Bounded on the West, with Carmania; on the East, with Cambaja, or Guzarat, a Province of India; on the South, with the Main Indian Ocean; on the North with Drangiana, and Arachosia. The Reason of the Name I find not. Now by Mercator, called Gest; by Castaldus, Circan.

The Country Desolate and Barren, like the worst part of Carmania, much destitute of fresh water, and covered over with loose Sands, dangerous to the Natives and Stranger both. Some Rain they have, but not sufficient to allay the Heat and Drought which they suffer under; and yet by reason of that heat it affordeth in some places Nard and Myrrh, with some other Spices. Some Brooks here are, or rather Torrents, which falling from the Hills do somewhat qualify the indisposition of the Soil, and make it Habitable; The chief of which was called Arbius anciently; the Chief Mountain, Batius.

Towns of most Name in it, 1 Rbagiana, Honoured by Ptolomy with the name of a City; and 2 a Port, or Harbour called Mulierum Portus, or the Haven of Women. 3 Arbis, upon the Banks of the River Arbius, presented to us also by the name of a City. 4 Musarna, the chief of Musarna, a Chief Tribe of this Country. 5 Parsis, or rather, Easis, as the Greek Text hath it, the Metropolis of the whole Province in the time of Ptolomy. 6 Gest, the chief City at the present; but for nothing memorable.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Masarna, Bordering on Arachosia, the Parfiræ, towards Carmania, the Rhamna on the Borders of India, and the Orbitæ, or Arbituri, on the shores of the Ocean. The Country of no note in preceding times, till made Famous by the Follies of Alexander: who finding by the hard bout which he had with Porus, that there was little hopes of the Conquest of India, would needs make a fruitless Voyage to see the Ocean. And having satisfied himself with the sight of that Furious Element (as if his very seeing it had sufficiently Subdued it to him) landed his Army on this Coast. Where in his March, for want of Victuals, Water, and other Necessaries, he lost more Men in the vast and uncomfortable Desert of this Country, than in all the Military Services he had put them to; the Army which he carried with him into India, amounting unto 15000 Horse, and 120000 Foot; whereof hardly the fourth part came back to Babylon. So dearly did he pay for his indiscretion.

DRANGIANA. SIGISTAN.

DRANGIANA hath on the South, Gedrosia; on the North and West Bounded with Aria; on the East, with Arachosia. So called from Drangius, now Ilment, the chief River of it; the Modern name thereof being Sigistan, from Sige, the now principal City.

The Country very Hilly, and so closed with Mountains, that the River above-named is scarce able to force its passage thorough them. Of no great Beauty to Invite, or Reward a Conqueror, yet with the rest brought under the great Persian Monarchs; the Tunes of which Crown they have always followed. So meanly planted, that Ptolomy findeth in it but ten Towns of Name; the chief whereof, 1 Arbis, mistook perhaps for Agriapæ, and if so, then the Mother City of the Agriapæ, whom Curtius placeth in this Tract. 2 Prothaspia, by some of the Ancients called Ibradag, the Metropolis of this poor Province; much boasted of by the old Inhabitants hereof, who had seen no better, (as Country Villagers use to brag of the next Market-Town) and said by Ammianus to be Rich, and of high Renown, the quality of the place considered. Still of some note among the Natives, by whom called Sistan. 3 Arivada. 4 Pharaza, of which nothing memorable. 5 Sige, now of Credit in this Country, from hence called Sigistan. 6 Timocani. 7 Mulebet, the chief seat of the Kingdom of Aladine, or Aleadine, who had here a Fools-Paradise of his own, of which more anon.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Batii, and the Daraudæ, from which last, the greatest of the two; the Country might perhaps be called Originally Darandiana; abbreviated to Daradiana, and at last corrupted easily into Drangiana. But I offer this only as a conjectural. They were called also by some Writers by the name of Arabians; and that, as Ammianus thinks, because they descended from that People: but I think rather from a branch of the River Arabus, which parteth this Country from Gedrosia. For I conceive the Arabians were too wise to forsake their own Country, and go so far, to get so little by the Bargain. Together with the rest of the Persian Provinces, subdued by Alexander; who being in this Country, hapned on the discovery of the Treason intended against him by Philotas the Son of Parmenio, the most Renowned of all his Captains. After this, little memorable till these latter days, when it grew famous by means of Aladine, a Seditious Persian, Lord of the Valley of Mulebet, spoken of before; who there made a terrestrial Paradise, which he promised to all his Partizans; but the Company growing too great for the safety of the Kingdom, they were quickly dispersed; and Aladine, with his Fools-Paradise, both taken away together, Ann. 1262. Some attribute this Fiction of Paradise, to Aladenes, the Mountain King of Taurus, Vanquished by Selim I. The whole Story is this, out of Paulus Venetus. Aladine Inhabited a Valley in this Country, the entrance into which he Fortified with a strong Castle, called Tigado. Hither he brought all the Lusty Youths, and Beautiful Maidens of the adjoining Provinces. The Women were confined to their Chambers, the Men to Prison, where having endured much Sorrow, they were severally cast into dead sleeps, and conveyed to the Women: by whom they were entertained with all the Pleasures Youth and Lust could desire, or a sensual mind effect. Having enjoyed this happiness a whole day, they were in a like sleep conveyed to their Irons. Then would Aladine inform them how they had been in Paradise, and that he could seat them there Eternally, if they durst hazard themselves in his Quarrels. This when they had sworn to do, they were destinated to the Massacre of such Princes as were like to prove his bad Neighbours; and they accordingly did Execution. But neither he, nor Aladenes, were the first who trained up their followers in the Arts of Murder. One there was before either of them, whom the Writers of those times call the Old Man of the Mountains, inhabiting the Mountainous parts pirts of Tyre and Sidon; and from thence sending his Disciples on the like Temptations, to make away the Western Princes whom he stood in fear of, during the course of the Holy Wars. For out of his School came those Wretches who Murdered the Count of Tripolis, being in the Church at his Devotions, and desperately flew Gonrade Marquess of Montferrat, walking openly in the Market place at Tyre; and with like carelessness of their own lives, dangerously wounded Prince Edward (after King of England) sitting in his Tent. These the Italians call Assassines (whence the word to Assassinate) imitating thereby a desperate Cut-throat, but the reason of that name is not yet agreed on: mistakingly by some Latin Writers of the darker times, called Arfacida, and their Commander Rex Arfacidarum, as if descended from Arfaces, the Founder of the Arfacidan Race of the Kings of Persia.

ARACHOSIA. CABUL.

ARACHOSIA hath on the West, Drangiana; on the East, a Branch of the great River Indus; on the South, Gedrosia; and Paropamisus, on the North. So called from Arachosia, the chief City of it; but now best known by the name of Cabul, the name of the chief City at present.

Of the Country I find little spoken, but that it is watered with a Branch of the River Indus, or rather with some nameless River which falleth into it. By the overflowings whereof is made a Lake, which Ammianus calleth Arachotoscrene, by Ptolomy called Arachotos; after the name of Arachotos the chief Town of it, near to which it is.

Towns here were once thirteen, whose names and situation we find in Ptolomy, but little or nothing of them in other Writers. The principal, 1. Arachotos, on the Lake so named, said to be built by Semiramis in her March towards India, and by her to have been named Cephene. 2. Alexandria, or (for distinctions sake) Alexandria Arachosiae, the work of Alexander the Great, in his like March against the Indians: Built at the foot of one of the Branches of Mount Taurus, shooting towards the South, and Peopled with a Colony of 7000 old Macedonian Soldiers, far spent with Age, and with the Travel of the Wars, whom he left there to inhabit it, his Army being here recruited with the Forces that had Served under Parmenio, consisting of 12000 Grecians and Macedonians. It is now called Cabul, accounted the chief City of it, and in that capacity gives the name of Cabul unto all the Province. Tavernier, who saw this City, saith it is a large City, very well Fortified, and is the place to which the Usbeck Tartars Yearly bring about 60000 Horses to be sold. It lies 110 Leagues from Candahar to the North East, and 125 from Ateck, part 2. page 44. 3. Arbaca, seeming by the name, to be the work of one Arbaces; but whether of Arbaces the great King of the Medes, I am not able to say. 4. Choaspa, near some River of that name, as I conjecture; there being besides Choaspes the chief River of Media, another of that name also in India: and probably another hereabouts to give name to this Town. 5. Phoclis. 6. Sigara. 7. Damania, of which I find nothing but the names. 8. Sim, now a Town of Name among them, but not much observable.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Pargyetae, call'd also Arimaspa, and Euergetae, a powerful Nation of themselves, brought under the Command of Alexander by means of Ammenides, sometimes the Secretary of Darius, whom he made their Governor. And besides them the Syeri, Rophitae, and the Eoritae; which three made up the main Body of the Aracosians, committed by Alexander to the Government and Command of Menon. Following after this the Fortunes of the Per- sian Empire, they changed their Masters as that did, till the coming of the Tartars. Since that time Governed for the most part, by a King of their own, especially since that dividing of the Kingdom of Persia amongst Tamerlane's Children. Some of which held it as a distinct Estate, by the names of the Kings of Cabul; till growing great by the Conquest of some parts of India, they took unto themselves the name of the Great Mogul: Now Lords, not only of this Country, but of the greatest part of India on this side of Ganges; of whom we shall speak more when we are in India; that being the chief Seat of their Power and Empire.

SABLESTAN.

PAROPAMISUS is bounded on the South with Arachosia; on the North with Bactria, from which parted by the main Body of Mount Taurus, which is here called Paropamisus, by the name of the Country; on the East, with some part of India; on the West, with Aria. So called quasi Paropaneus, from the resemblance which it hath to an Island, begirt on all sides almost with Rivers: In which respect by Ptolomy called Propanisus, and not Paropamisus; by which last name the Latins for the most part call it; some of them Paropamissus, with a double ss. But that name being lost long since, it is now by some called Dache, by others Candahar, but most commonly Sablestan.

The Country Mountainous and Hilly, here and there intermixt with Valleys: the Mountains of great height, and exceeding Barren; the Valleys indifferent Fruitful, but so overshadowed with those Hills, that the clearest day in some places seems but like a twilight. The People as obscure as their Country, scarce known to any of their Neighbours in the time of Alexander; the Barbarous Nations nearest to them esteeming them unworthy of their acquaintance. Agreste hominum genus, & inter Barbaros maxime inconditum, as it is in Curtius.

Rivers of most note herein, 1. Oxus, (of which before) which rising out of Mount Caucasus, passeth Northwards, and afterwards divideth Bactria from Sogdiana. 2. Dargamanis. 3. Coacus, both owing their Original to some of the branches of Mount Taurus. Which chain of Hills beginning hereabouts to draw towards their height, are towards the West called Paroetes, where they give being to the River Dargamanis, before-named: more Eastward they have the name of Paropamisus, and Caucasus, they are properly called where they are thwarted by Imaus, in the very point as it were, where Scythia, India, and the Persian Territories do encounter each other. The Hills in that place mounted to so great an height, that from the tops thereof, the Stars appear much greater than in other places; the rising and setting of which are from hence easily discerned. Made memorable by the Fable of Prometheus, who is said to have been bound here by command of Jupiter; on which, Vinctum Prometheus fuisse antiquitas tradit, saith the Historian. Prometheus is indeed by the Poets feigned to have stoln fire from Heaven, and to have made a man of clay: for which Presumptuous fact, Jupiter bound him on the hill Caucasus, where a Vulture continually fed on his Liver. But according either to the truth of Story, or their guess at least, who make some story the ground of every Fable, Prometheus being a very wise man, instructed the dead and claiely carcases of others in Wisdom; and that being very desirous to learn the nature of the Stars, (which is the fire he stole from Heaven,) he made the highest part of Mount Caucasus his Study: where the inward care he had to accomplish his desire, might justly have been compared to a Vulture gnawing on his Entrails; and of this Opinion

Places of most consideration in it, 1 Naulibis, and 2 Ortestpana, both named by Ptolemy, and reckoned by Ammianus for the most famous of this Country. But in what their fame consisted I cannot find. 3 Parfiana. 4. Gazaca. 5 Doroacana. 6 Bagarda, all named by Ptolemy, but not else observable. 7 Candabar, now the Metropolis of the Country, a Town of great Trade, by reason of the situation of it on the Borders of India; in that respect, giving to the whole Country the name of Candabar. By which name reckoned for a Kingdom, and used among the many Titles in the Style Imperial. Nothing considerable of it in the Course of Story, but that being once brought under by the Persian Monarchs, it followed the Fortune of the rest till these latter times; when the Persians being overlaid by the Tartars, it became subject to some Kings of the Race of Tamerlane, Reigning in this Province, till brought under by the Kings of Cabul, of the same Extraction. Finding those Kings intent on the Conquest of India, they freed themselves from all Subjection to that Crown, and had Kings of their own, till the year 1600. or thereabouts; when the last King, unable to defend himself against Abdusa, King of the Usbeques (a Tartarian People, but Subject in some sort to the Crown of Persia) surrendered his Kingdom to Echebar the Great Mongul (descended from the old Kings of Cabul) whose Dominions border close upon it. Recovered to the Persian Crown by Mirza the Son of Abas, and the Father of Sophy the now Sultan; a Prince of much Gallantry, but of more Misfortunes: the Persian Sophies, since that Conquest, using the Title of King of Candabar in the Regal Style. This City and Kingdom submitted to the King of Persia, upon Condition their Governor should always be of the Royal Family. In the Year 1651. Sba Geban, the Great Mogul sent his Eldest Son with an Army of 300000 Men to Besiege this City, the greatest part of which Army perished in the Expedition, yet he could not take the City. The two following years it was again Besieged by them with the same ill Success; and ever since it has remain'd in the peaceable possession of the Kings of Persia. Tavernier lib. 5. cap. 24. where the curious Reader may see a Plat of this remote City. Bernier, in his History of Indostan, page 57. calls it, That Strong and Important Place, which is the Capital of the Noble, and Rich Kingdom of Kandahar, which yields a great Revenue to the Prince that bath it. Vide page 113.

9. A R I A. E R I.

A R I A is Bounded on the East with Parapamisus; on the West, with Partbia; on the North with Margiana; and on the South, with Drangiana, from which last parted by the Mountain Bagoas. A name in old times given to the Province of Media, especially by the Grecians, till changed (as they say) into Media, on the coming thither of Medea. For so Pausanias, among others, Περσικομένη ἢ εἰς, τὴν λεγόμενὴν πρὸς Ἀσίαν, πρὸς ὀνόματι τῆς ὀνόματι καλεῖται Μέδου ἀπ' αὐτῆς, i. e. coming into the Country then called Aria, she caused it after her own name to be called Media; but the name of Aria was not lost, tho' it were removed; remaining proper to this Country till these later Ages, now changed with little alteration, into that of Eri.

The Country much subject unto heats, environed with Deserts, Heaths, and Forests; yet near the Mountains which defend them from the heat of the Sun, they have some fruitful Champagnes, bearing very good fruits, and among others, a strong Wine, and of long continuance; keeping both taste and colour above 80 years. They have also here a Drug somewhat like to Myrrh, and a kind of Saphyr, but not right.

Rivers of note I meet with none but that which Ptolemy calleth Arias, by the name of the Province, making a Lake of the same name; the Fountain of which River he maketh to be in Paropamisus, and the fall thereof in the said Lake: the waters of it first increased by a nameless Stream, falling from the Mountains, called Serphu, being that part of Taurus which divideth this Country from Margiana.

Anciently it was populous and well Inhabited, containing above 30 Towns of name and note. Those of most consequence, 1 Aria, on the Banks of the River Arias, the Seat of the Arii, whom Pliny speaketh of in this Tract, but whether they received this name from the Province, or bestowed their own name upon it, I determine not. 2 Bataxa. 3 Sotera. 4 Orbitana. 5 Sarmigana. 6 Artacanda, by Strabo called Artacana. 7 Nisibis, mentioned both by Ptolemy and Ammianus. 8 Alexandria, bearing the name of the Great Conqueror, by whom planted and made a Colony of his Macedonians for the better awing of the Country, which by some former Rebellions had been troublesome to him. But these, and most of those remembred by Ptolemy, being grown out of knowledge, there remain now of special note, 9 Heri, or Eri, seated not far from the place of the ancient Aria, but much superior to it in strength and greatness. Said by Maginus to be in compass 13 miles, and so plentifully stored with Roses, that the Inhabitants of the Country call it the City of Roses. Naturally of a strong situation, compassed about with a very good Wall, and watered with deep Channels, conveyed unto it by Tamerlane, that most puissant Tartar, by whom either Founded or Repaired. The truth is, the City is built on an Island in the midst of the River, and so must be of difficult access. The Province of Heri is a part of that of Corassian and is not named in the Maps of Persia. This City is famous for Tapistry, and is much frequented by the Indian Merchants, who pass through it in their Journeys by Land to Persia. Olearius in his Travels. It is seated in the Lat. of 36. 20. 10 Safuar, a place of good importance, and the second in esteem next to Heri it self.

The old Inhabitants were the Masdarami, Nisæi, Astareni, the Cassirotae, Obares, Drachamae, Borgi, Paranti, &c. united altogether in the name of Arians, by that name subject to the Persians, and subdued by Alexander. Against whom, when they had Rebelled, and were worsted by him, they were compelled to betake themselves to the strength of a Cave, seated upon the top of an inaccessible Rock, and with small Force easily defended. But to Alexander nothing was impossible. For piling up a great Mass of Timber equal to the mouth of the Cave, when the Wind served opportunely, he put fire unto it, and by that means so filled the Cave with fire and smok that some of them were stifled, some half burnt, and the rest forced to yield to the Victor's mercy. Nor was this the only action of note during that Rebellion, tho' it was the greatest. The Common Soldiers also had this honour in it: Saribarzanes, a Persian, whom Alexander had trusted with the Command of this Province, had drawn them unto this Revolt, and became their Head. Who, to express his Courage in the sight of the Arians, challenged the proudest He of the Macedonians, to a single Combat. The Challenge cheerfully accepted by one Erignis, one of the most aged in the Army: and saying aloud, Ostendam quales milites Alexander habet, he valiantly charged upon the Rebel, and at the second venew slew him. The Arians after this trial of their disabilities, remained in quiet, taking the same Fortunes as the rest of the Persians did in their change of Masters. Of late by Mabomet Codubanda, it was aliened for a time from the Crown of Persia, and given to Sultan Abas his second Son; who took unto himself in his Fathers lifetime the Title of the King of Heri. But coming to the Crown by the Murder of his elder Brother, and the Death of his Father, he united Heri once again to the Regal Diadem; but kept it as a distinct Title in the Royal Style.

10. PARTHIA. HIERACH.

PARTHIA is bounded on the East, with Aria; on the West, with Media; on the North, with Hyrcania; and on the South, with that part of Carmania, which by Ptolemy and others of the Ancients, was call'd Deserta: The reason of the Name we shall see anon. But that Name being laid aside, it is now called Arach.

The Country walled, as it were, round with Mountains, and in most parts overgrown with Woods: by which defended from those heats to which otherwise it would be subject; it produceth many things of necessary use for the life of the people; but nothing for riot and excess. In other places where the shade of the Wood is wanting, the whole Country is in a manner but a Sandy Desert, dangerous to Travellers, and impassible even with the help of Guides; the Sands continually driven from one place to another, taking away all Tracks of a beaten way. For which cause there be certain Castles at each three Miles end built at the King's charge, as well for the direction as the reception of Passengers; and Causeys of many Miles in length, in some other places, for their better travelling; the Sands of each side of them so loose and light that if a man should fall aside, he were lost remediless.

The people anciently were very courageous and stout, as commonly they are in all barren Countries, and were withal of a Scythian Extract and Original; exceeding spare of Diet, and good reason for it: the Countrey not affording any superfluities; but otherwise much given to pleasures, allowing themselves plurality of Wives and Concubines. Good Horsemen, and to that so used, that they consulted of all Business, both private and publick, when they were on horse-back. Such lovers of the Wars, that they accounted no man happy after his decease, but who died in Battel; esteeming of all others but as Fools or Cowards. Their Soldiers for the most part Slaves, whom they trained up unto their weapons and to manage horses: in so much as of 50000 horse which the Parthian King had in the Field against Marcus Antoninus; there were not above 800 Free men. But their greatest Fame consisted in the handling of their Bow and Arrows, esteemed the best Archers in the World, and not undeservedly; having the art of shooting backwards, and making their Retreat or Flight more terrible than their Chase or Onset. Whence that of Seneca;

The Parthians slight

Doth most affright.

Which, with the manner of their fight, more copiously described by Lucan thus:

Fugna levis, bellumque fugax, turmaque fugaces,

Et melior cunctis leo quam pellere miles.

Illi a terra dolis, nec Martem cominus unquam

Aula pati virtus, sed longe tendere nervos.

Which I find thus Englished to my hand;

Light Skirmish, fleeing War, and scattered bands,

And better Soldiers when they run away,

Than to cut off an Enemy that stands.

Their crafty Gall-traps on the Ground they lay,

Nor dares their courage come to down right-blows,

But fight best farthest off, most trusting to their Bows.

From hence it was that M. Crassus, in his Expedition against them, being told by an Astrologer, That his Enterprise would prove unprosperous, by reason of some Ill Aspect which he had found in Scorpio; Tush man (said he) I fear not Scorpio, but Sagittarius. And to these Warlike Exercises of Horie and Archery, the Temper of the Air and Soil gave no small advantages; the dry air seasoning their Bow strings, and their large Fields affording them full Room to train their Horses. Caelum enim quod fecum est, nervos intentos facit; Regio tota plana est, & ob eam rem equis accommodata, as it is in Dion. But this is to be understood not of Parthia only, but the whole Country of Persia; subject at that time to the power of the Parthian

Kings. Next to these Parthians, the English have been looked on formerly, as the ablest Bow-men; having gotten by their Bow and Arrows as many notable Victories over the French, as the Parthians ever did obtain upon the Romans. But at this time, Archery both here and elsewhere, is quite laid aside, the Gun silencing all offensive Weapons; how justly I determine not. The Point hath been long since debated betwixt Sir John Smith, and Sir Roger Williams; many great Wits appearing upon either side; and the sum of their several Arguments drawn up together by Sir Clement Edmunds, in his Judicious Observations upon Caesar's Commentaries, to which the Reader may repair for his satisfaction. All I shall say is only this, That Victories as great as any in those Elder Days, have been obtained with far less Bloodshed, since the Gun came up, than in any of the Times before it.

The Religion of this people hath suffered under the same changes with the rest of Persia, but they have a Language of their own, mixt of Medes and Scythian. For which besides the Testimony of human Authors, we have the Authority of Scriptures; where the Parthians, Elamites, and Medes are named as Nations of a several Language, or a different Dialect at the least, Acts 2.

Rivers of note I find not any, nor any Mountains proper and peculiar to them: Coronus part of the great Mountain Taurus, lying in common betwixt them and Hyrcania; as Masderamus doth betwixt them and Aria, and the Hills called Parchoatras, betwixt them and the Deserts of Carmania. So that for want of such known Landmarks, the finding out of their ancient Cities would be very difficult, if any learned Antiquary should undertake it.

The Country anciently more populous, the Towns and Villages thicker set than they be at the present, many Cities, and 2000 Villages having been overthrown with Earthquakes. In Ptolemy we find the Names of 25 of the Cities, distributed into the Four Provinces or Tetrarchies of Camiscene towards Hyrcania; Parthiene, bordering on Media; Paracanticene, confining on Aria; Tabiene, neighbouring Carmania. The principal of which, and of those that are now in being, 1 Genonia. 2 Charax. 3 Artacana. 4 Apamia, which by the Name seems to have been of the foundation of Seleucus. 5 Dardamana. 6 Syndaga. 7 Pasacarta. 8 Hecatompyle, the Royal City, so called from the number of an hundred Gates in the Walls thereof, by which we may conjecture at the ancient greatness: The Parthians, which had seen no greater, calling it by the glorious Name of Half the World. 9 Hispan, commonly called Saphan, or Spawhawn, raised out of the Ruins of Hecatompyle; and as that was, the Regal City for these parts. In compass about nine Miles, of figure round, and seated in the midst of a large and capacious Plain; beautified with many pleasant Gardens, goodly Bathes, and handsome Mosques. But the greatest glory of it lieth in the Market place of Medun, quadrangular in form, but the sides unequal; cloistered about, and well stored with Merchandize of all sorts, but Druggs especially: The Court or Quodrigle, serving for Horie-races, and other warlike Exercises which are done on horse-back. On the West side a Magnificent Mosque, built of White Marble five Yards high, and the rest above that of Brick; curiously interwoven with Arabic Poesies. In the midst a fair Conduit, wherewith they purify themselves when they go to their Prayers. On another side the Royal Palace, wrought in the Front with Antique Works; the Floors on the inside covered with rich Persian Carpets, and the Roofs chargeably embossed with Gold and Azure. Herbert, p. 82. Others make it eight German Miles in compass, and to contain 18000 Houses, and 500000 Inhabitants; the Walls of it are ill built, ill kept, and out of repair. It has Gardens of Twenty Acres of Ground, which makes the City much greater than it would otherwise be. See Olearius and Thevenot, Tavernier, pag. 143. Struyt, pag. 315. Ist. 32. 26.

10 Jelphaz, on the other side of the River on which Spawbawn is Seated, as the Burgh of Southwark is to London; wholly Inhabited (at this time) by Armenian Christians, from hence called Jelphelines; who live here in great freedom, both for Person and Conscience, but that their Poll-money is tax'd at an higher rate. 11 Croom a right pleasant and healthy City, well Built, of large Streets, and seated on the Banks of a small, but delightful River, issuing out of the Coronian Mountains, near to which it standeth. Consisting at the present of 2000 Families, but anciently, as may be gathered from some Ruins, of far greater compass. Much honoured by the Persians for the Sepulchre of Fatima, the daughter of Mahomet, from whom the Sophian Sect and Princes do derive their Pedigree. 12 Casham, a Rich and pleasant City, about sixty miles from Spawbawn, well built, and Peopled by a number of Artizans; who for the making of Silks, Satins, and Cloath of Gold, are in great esteem. Beautified amongst other things with a stately and magnificent Caravans-Raw, built by Sultan Abbas, for the reception of Strangers, whether Merchants or other Travellers, but fit to entertain any Prince of Asia. The City of no great Age, the work either of Ussan-Cassanes, the Armenian, who got the Crown of Persia, in the year 1470. or at the highest of Cassum, the Son Axan, and Grandson of Tangrolipix, the first Turk here Reigning; from one of which it had this name. 13 Tawgebawt, where the Persian Kings have a house of Pleasure, of no great receipt, but for the cost and ornaments of it, and the delectableness of the Gardens adjoyning to it, not yielding to any in this large Empire: and for Grots, Ecchoes, Labyrinths, and the other excellencies of Art, perhaps not followed in the world; especially considering that it standeth in the middle of a Sandy Desert.

The Parthians were originally a Scythian Nation Bannished their own Country, and glad to plant themselves in this barren Region; calling themselves by the name of Parthians, which in their Language signifieth as much as Exiles. A People so obscure and poor, either not knowing, or not caring for the use of Money, that none of Alexander's great Captains would vouchsafe to be their Governor; but let it lie as an Appendix of Media, to the Kings whereof it had originally been subject; till one Philip, a man of small regard, took the place upon him. Falling at last, with the rest of Alexander's Asian Purchases, into the hands of Seleucus, it was Governed by the Lieutenants of the Syrian Kings, till the time of Seleucus Callinicus, the fourth of that House. During whose Reign, Arfaces a Noble Parthian, provoked by some Indignities, slew the Governor, and took the Estate upon himself; perswading all the rest of the Provinces to do the like: and thrived so well in his design, that he not only gained the Kingdom of Parthia, but united to it all the Provinces lying on the East of Euphrates. Of whom and his Successors, more in the story of Persia. After this nothing singular which concerns this Province, but that as this Arfaces did recover the Persian Liberty from the Power of the Greeks; so Gempfar, one of the Sultans of this Province also, redeemed (tho' but for a little time) this Parthia and the parts adjoyning, from the Yoke of the Tartars, as shall be shewn in prosecution of the Persian History.

11. HYRCANIA. DIARGUMENT. MESENDRAM. CORCUM.

HYRCANIA is bounded on the South with Parthia; on the North, with the Hyrcanian, or Caspian Sea; on the East, with Margiana; and on the West with Atropatia, or Atropatene, (as Ammianus calleth it) the North part of Media. Divided from Parthia by the interposition of Coronus, part of the main Body of Mount Taurus. The way through which, said by the Persians to be cut out at one blow, by the Scymiter of Mortu Hali, their second Mahomet, is not above forty yards in breadth, in the broadest parts of it; the hills on both sides rising to the very Clouds: With small strength easily defended against mighty Armies, and possibly may be the same which the Ancients called Porte Caspiae, before described.

It took the name of Hyrcania, from Hyrcania; a large and spacious Forest betwixt it and Scythia; sometimes called Caspia also, from the Caspia, a chief People of it: Of whom it is reported, That when their Parents came to the age of 70 years, they used to shut them up, and starve them; as being then no longer useful to the Commonwealth. But both those Names growing out of use, it is by Alexander called Diargument; by some late Travellers Mesendram; by some others, Corcum.

Those parts hereof which lie towards the South, are said to yield abundance of Wheat, Wines, Figs, and Fruit: those toward the Caspian Sea, as plentiful of Grass and Pasture. But betwixt both, nothing in a manner but continual Forests; and those so intricate and thick, that it is a matter of no small difficulty to find passage through them. Full, as most other Forests are in those Eastern parts, of Panthers, Leopards, Lions, Tigers: These last of such an horrible fierceness, that it grew into a Common Proverb used of cruel Men, that they had sucked an Hyrcanian Tiger, Hyrcanæque admorant ubera Tigres, as it is in Virgil.

Principal Rivers of this Country: 1 Ziobert, spoken of before. 2 Maxera or Mazeras, mentioned by Pliny, Protony, and Ammianus. And 3 Secanda; all falling into the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. A Sea which had the names of Caspian and Hyrcanian, from the Caspia and Hyrcania bordering next to it; now from the Town of Bochu in Atropatia, called Mare di Bochu. Fashioned in an Oval Form, the length thereof from North to South 700 miles, and 600 miles from East to West. Stormy and troublesome, by reason of those many great Rivers which fall into it from all the Provinces adjoyning: Which notwithstanding, it hath no visible commerce with the Ocean, nor doth it at any time overflow its Banks, finding some passage under ground to discharge it self of those vast streams of water, which are poured into it. Well traded by the Moscovite Merchants; who having the command of the River Volga (which with 70 mouths doth open into this Sea) sail over it, and land at Parabant, or some other of the Port-Towns, where they trade for Silks. Some Islands here are in it, but not many, or of any great Fame; but only that they served the Nations which lay near it for a place of retreat, in time of the Tartarian Tempest under Tamerlane; as the Isles of Venice did to the Italians, at the coming of Attila. This Sea doth neither Ebb nor Flow, as all those Seas do that have Communication with the Ocean. It hath in a manner never a safe Harbor: Manguslave on the Tartarian Shoar, is yet the best. It is generally very shallow, and full of Flats, which make it Tempestuous and Dangerous. In many places the Water is fresh, and in others as salt as our Seas. See Olearius, Hacklutt. To. 1. Page 243. 328. 334. Struys. The Nubian Geographer, p. 6. Bobun's Geographical Dictionary in Hyrcania. Herbert 95.

Places of most consideration, 1. Hyrcania, once the Metropolis of the Province, and so called by Protony; still extant, but of less esteem, and still called Hyrcan. 2. Tambrace, in old times of the greatest strength, and most defensible; but taken by Antiochus Magnus in the War against Arfaces the Parthian, for the recovery of those Countries then revolted from him. 3. Adrapa. 4. Mafaca. 5. Anarofa. Of which we find the names, amongst others, in the ancient Writers. 6. Asbaraffe, two miles from the Sea, in a spacious Plain, containing about 2000 Houses; and now of most reputation of all this Province, by the long residence therein of Abas, the late Persian Sultan, who built there a magnificent Palace, and another two miles off at a place called Abassabaur. The furniture whereof besides costly Carpets, in Plate and Jewels, at such time as Sir Dodmore Cotton was there Ambassador, is said to have been valued by a knowing Merchant, at twenty millions of pounds. But I fear the Merchant had more skill in Silks than Jewels: such a vast sum to be expended on the Furniture of one Palace only, being beyond the possibility of the Revenue of the Persian Sophies; hardly amounting towards all charges to five millions of Crowns. Herbert's Travels, page 94. This Embassie was made in the year 1626, and 27. and Tho. Herbert Esq; was one of his Retinue, and wrote a Relation of his Voyage, which was Printed in 1634. And out of it Dr. Heylin took the greatest part of what he has concerning Persia. It was reprinted lately with Additions, by the Author, who was then said to be living, but I have not seen this second impression; but all my Quotations refer to the first Edition. 7 Farabant, on a Navigable Arm of the Caspian Sea; for Beauty, Wealth, and Greatness, of most note in this Country. Well Traded from all parts of this Inland Sea, especially by the Russian Merchants, as before is said, whose Ships come hither in March, and return in July; it being from hence to Astrachan but ten days Sail. Beautified with goodly Gardens, a Royal Mansion of the Kings, and a spacious Market-place. Herbert page 96. page 105. All the other places here mentioned are in the following pages. 8 Chiacoporo, near the Sea also, but on the Banks of a River; the water whereof is said for eleven months to be fresh and sweet, and for the 12th month very salt. 9 Barfrushdee, twelve miles from the Sea, well furnished with wood and water. 10 Omoal, a Town of about 3000 houses, seated on the North side of Taurus in a pleasant and fruitful Soil; resorted by the People of so many Nations, that seven Languages are there commonly spoken. Once Larger, as appeareth by some Ruins, than it is at the present; by some conceived to be the Nabarca of the Ancients, honoured in those times with an Oracle. 11 Strava, a Town of great Traffick, for Raw Silks especially. 12 Mesandra, whence the whole Province (or rather the parts adjoining to it) hath the name of Mezendrum.

The old Inhabitants hereof, besides the Caspii, were the Maxerae, Astabenii, Chirindi, and the Arstenses, united in the name of Hyrcans. in the time of the Persians; and by that name well known at the coming of Alexander. Against whom they so defended themselves by tying the boughs and twigs of their trees together, that it was impossible for him to come at them, till with incredible pains and labour he had caused their Woods to be cut down: at sight whereof the People, who supposed the King had too much other Business, and of more importance, than to put himself unto that trouble, did submit unto him. Falling to the share of Seleucus, they were the first People that were gained by Arfaces, and joyn'd with him in recovering their former Liberty; tho' they got nothing by the Bargain but the change of their Master. In all times since they have been looked upon as Members of the Persian Empire, till the Conquest of it by the Tartars; in the distractions of whose great Empire after Tamerlane's death, it fell to some Princes of his House, who Governed here under the Vassalage and Protection of the Tartars of Zagathy. Recovered not long since to their old Obedience by Sultan Abas; who for the better settling the affairs hereof, removed the Seat-Royal from Spawbawn, to which before he had transferred it from the City of Casbin, to Ashtarasse, then a small Town, now the chief of this Country.

12. MARGIANA. TREMIGEN. J E S E L B A S.

MARGIANA is bounded on the West with Hyrcanis; on the East, with Bactria; on the North with part of Tartary, from which severed by the River Oxus; on the South, with Asia, divided from it by the Mountains. So called from the River Margus, which runs through the Country: but is now named Tremigen, and Jeselbas.

The Country environed with Mountains, and in most places of it full of Sandy Deserts. But where it is watered with the Rivers Arias and Margus, it is very fruitful, stretching it self into a large and spacious Plain, containing in the circuit near 200 miles. The Plain once compassed with a Wall by Antiochus Soter, King of Syria; more memorable for the huge stocks of Vines which are said to be in it, as big in bulk as two men can fathom, and sometimes bearing bunches of Grapes two Cubits long. The more to be admired, in regard there is no other place near unto it where the Vine will grow. And if the Ark rested on the top of Mount Caucasus, as it is most probable it did; why may not this be some of the remainder of that first Vineyard which was Planted by Noah, when he descended from these Mountains, as is affirmed by the constant tradition of the People which inhabit here?

The People mixt of Scythian and Persian breed, partaking of the fierceness of the one, and the behaviour of the other; conform unto the Persians in Religion, Language and Apparel; distinguished from them in the colour of their Turbants only, which are commonly green, and therefore by the Persians called Jeselbas, or Green-caps: the Turbants of the Persians being always red.

Chief Rivers of this Country are, 1 Margus, the peculiar River of it, which rising out of the foot of the Mountains, and passing through the midst of the Province, receiveth into its Channel the River, 2 Arias hastening out of Aria; and so together lose themselves in 3 Oxus, dividing the Margians from the Tartars: out of the joynt streams of which several Rivers, is made a large Lake, now called Sabacamber, but anciently, Palus Oxiana, from the principal River.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Alexandria or Alexandria Margianæ, for distinction sake; one of the six Towns built by Alexander for defence of this Country: called afterwards Seleucia from Seleucus; next, Antiochia, from Antiochus Soter, King of Syria, by whom Fortified with a very strong Wall. It is now called Indion, and esteemed the chief of the Country. 2 Jasonium, seated on the confluence of Margus, with a nameless River, issuing from the Seripbian Mountains. 3 Nigæa, as the printed Books of Ptolomy call it, but mistook for Nissa, or Nysæa. 4 Argadina. 5 Rhæa, of which nothing memorable. 6 Maran, near which Ismael, the first of the Sophian Race, discomfited the Forces of Saba, Cham of Zagathay.

The old inhabitants hereof were the Massagetes, and the Parni, taking up the mid-lands; the Derbicæ bordering upon Oxus; and the Tapyri, dwelling towards the East. United by the name of Margians, they were subdued by the Kings of Persia, from whom won by Alexander to to his Empire; who to assure himself hereof built six Cities in it, two towards the South, and four towards the East; all situate on the tops of hills, and built at such convenient nearness that they might afford Succour to each other, as occasion served. After this nothing singular in the Story of them, involved in the same fortunes with the rest of Persia, till Persia was Conquered by the Tartars. Since which time, tho' the rest of the Persian Provinces were freed from the Tartarian yoke by Gempas the Soldan of Parthia, and King of Persia for a time; yet part of this Province, and of Bactria, are still Subject to them.

13. BACTRIA. CHORASIN.

BACTRIA or BACTRIANA, is bounded on the West with Margiana, on the East and North with the River Oxus, dividing it from Sogdiana; on the South, with Paropamisus, from which parted by the hills so named, and the mountain Caucasus. It took this name from Bactria, the chief City of it, and is now called Chorasin, but by some named Battrer.

The

The Country towards the River Oxus, is for the most part well manured, and affordeth plenty of Wheat, and all sorts of Fruits, excepting Olives, Rich Metals, and some precious Stones; as Emeralds, Chrysolites, and Jacinths. Plenty of Pastures there be also, well stored with Cattel, and those of bigger bulk than in other places. But the greatest part hereof to the South and West, is nothing but a sandy Desert; and by reason that the sands are driven up and down by contrary winds, no tract or beaten way is to be discerned: Insomuch as Travellers rest all day, and take their Journey in the night, that they may guide themselves by the course of the Stars, as upon the Sea; not without great danger of being lost or buried, whilst alive, in that sandy Ocean.

The people heretofore a puissant and warlike Nation, not without great difficulty conquered by the Affyrians, nor with less by the Persians; always in Arms, cruel, and resembling the Scythians, whose near Neighbours they were: And (which may very well pass for their greatest virtue) Mulum à Persarum luxu abhorrentes, abhorring naturally from the Persian Luxuries. But withal unnatural to their Parents; whom when old, they cast unto their Dogs, kept for that purpose, and called Canes Sepulchrales, or Burial Dogs. The Women gorgeous in Apparel, and proud of Gesture, but prodigal of their Bodies to their meanest Slaves. The Men to this day do retain their ancient stoutness; but hard beset betwixt the Persians and the Tartars, who severally pretend a Dominion over them.

No Province of the Persian Empire hath so many Rivers. The principal of which are 1 Artamis, and 2 Zariaspes, mingling streams together; as do also, 3 Ochus, and 4 Orgomanes, all four contributing their waters to the River Oxus. Of Oxus, being rather a Boundary betwixt the Persian and the Tartar, than rightly proper unto either, we have spoken already.

Towns of most observation in it, 1 Bactria, the Metropolis, or the chief City of it, situate at the foot of the Mountain Sogdii, giving the name of Bactria unto all the Province. It is now called Bochor, and still keeps the dignity of the Metropolis: The Seat of the Chief Priest or Bishop of the Mahometans of Zagathay (to which this City, and great part of the Country also doth now belong) having here his Residence, in Power and Reputation equal to the King himself. Well fortified, and stored with all military Provisions: The Birth-place (as Maginus saith) in these latter Ages of Avicenna, that learned Philosopher and Physician; and in the first Ages, of Zoroaster the more learned Astrologer. Bogbar (saith Mr. Jenkenston, a famous English Merchant and Traveller, who was in this City in 1558.) is seated in a low Land, surrounded with an high Wall of Earth, in which are divers Gates; It is great, but the Houses are mostly built with Earth, except the Temples, and some few houses which are of stone. There is a small River passeth through it, but the Waters are not wholesome. It was heretofore under the Persian, but when he was here, it was Subject to a Tartarian Prince, who was at cruel Wars with the Persians, because they wear hair on the upper Lip, which the Tartars count a great Sin, and for it call the Persians, Caphers, i. e. Hereticks. The King was very poor, and a great Tyrant, and seldom, or never Reigned above two or three years before he was slain, or driven out. Heretofore (saith he) there was great resort to this City by the Caravans of India, Persia, Baigh, Russia, and Cathaya, and whilst he was there, there came some Merchants from Bengala with Linnen and Cottons. It is from Cathaya, nine Months Journey by Land. Lat. 39. 10. The King of Samarcand Besieged this City soon after this Gentleman left it, Hackluit Tom. 1. page 331. This City in the Maps is called Bochara, and the Trade of it at that time was wholly Ruined. 2 Eubusmi, once the Regal Seat, and therefore honoured by Ptolomy, with the Title of Regia. 3 Zaripse, or Charipse, the chief City of the Charispæ, a great Tribe of this Country. 4 Charracharta, mentioned by Ptolomy and Ammianus: these two, upon the River Oxus. 5 Eucratidia, Built, or Repaired by the Macedonians; as the name, being merely Greek, doth seem to intimate. 6 Alicodra, as ancient as the rest, but of no great note in the course of business. 7 Istigas, of a later date, but of greater beauty than any of those before spoken of: Superior to Bochor in Elegancy, State, and Greatness, though not in Dignity; and held by some to be the pleasantest of the East.

This Country was as soon peopled as any since the general Deluge. It had not else been possible that Zoroaster, King hereof in the time of Ninus, and by him assaulted, should bring into the Field an Army of 400000 Men, of this, and perhaps some other of the Neighbouring Provinces, as most credible Writers say he did. Encountering Ninus, with this Army he prevailed at first, and slew of the Affyrians near an hundred thousand. But Ninus having better opportunities of recruiting his Forces, invaded him a second time with an Army of 1700000 Foot, and 20000 Horse (the greatest on Record in all Ages since that time, except that of Semiramis:) with which he overcame Zoroaster, slew him in the Field, and united Bactria to his Empire. Unto this Zoroaster is ascribed the invention of Astronomy, but on no good ground; that Art or Science being studied before the Flood, (if Setb's Pillars mentioned by Josephus, be of any credit:) And therefore probably no otherwise to be ascribed to Zoroaster, than as to the Reviver of it; or because he first committed that unto writing, which he had received by Tradition; or because he brought those confused Notions which he had received from others, into rule and method. He being slain, and Bactria his chief City taken by the wit of Semiramis, then the Wife of Menon, (but on the merit of that service made the Wife of Ninus) the Bactrians became subject unto the Affyrian Kings, after to the Monarchs of the Medes and Persians. In the expiring of which great Monarchy, Bessus a false and cruel Traytor, did command this Province: And having villanously slain Darius, his Lord and Master, assumed unto himself the title of King of Persia, under the name of Artaxerxes. But being betrayed by Spitamenes, one of his Confederates, by him delivered unto Alexander, and by Alexander put to a cruel death: The Bactrians became subject to the Macedonians, and in that right unto Selucus and the Kings of Syria. But long it held not in that state; one Theodarus, who formerly had the Government of it for the Syrian Kings, taking unto himself the Title of King, and the Possession of the Country, about the same time that Arfaces and the Parthians made the like Revolt. Wrested from his Posterity by one Euthydemus, the Recovery of it was attempted by Antiochus Magnus: and the whole cause put to the trial of a Battle. In which, tho' Antiochus had the better, and shewed more personal Valour in it than any time after: yet he was glad to come to a composition, and left to Euthydemus, both the Crown and the Country. Made not long after an accession to the Parthian Kingdom, it continued part thereof whilst that Kingdom stood; and in the time of Ptolomy (as long time before) had for the chief Tribes or Nations of it, the Salataræ, and Zariaspa towards the North; the Contani, or Coamoni (as Pliny calleth them) dwelling in the South, the middle parts being taken up by the Thocari, said to be gens magna; the Scordæ, Savardii, Maricæ, Tambixi, Amarispæ, and others of as little note. In the often changes and alterations of the Persian State, one of the last Nations which submitted to the new Pretenders, and at this time so neutral betwixt the Persians and the Cham of Tartary, that it is not wholly under the power of either. More averse from the Persian Government, since the alteration of Religion made there by Hyssmach, and the rest of the Sect of Mortis Hali: these Bactrians being of the old Race of Mahometans, which which adhered to Haumar, Osman, and Abubecker, as the true Successors of their false Prophet, and therefore ill-affected to the Sophian Faction, whom they call commonly Caphers, or Hereticks, for the innovations by them made in the Law of Mahomet.

Thus having taken a survey of those several Provinces, which constitute the Persian Empire, and shewn by what means they were first united into one Estate, we must next look upon the names and actions of those mighty Monarchs, who have successively, and from time to time enjoyed the Sovereignty. By what good chance Arbaces from a Deputy or Lieutenant of Media, obtained the Diadem for himself, we have shewn before: And we have shewn how liberally he enfeoffed the Vice-Roys of the several Provinces (which in the division made betwixt him and Belochus, fell unto his share) in the propriety and command of those Countries which before they held. Nothing reserved unto himself, and his Posterity, but the Title only; and perhaps some acknowledgments made to them, as the Lords in chief. Nor left he less liberty to his own Medians, than to the rest of the Provinces; which turning to licentiousness was so hurtful to them, that they were glad at last of that wholesome severity, which Deioces, a more Lordly King, began to exercise: who taking to himself a guard, building the Royal City of Ecbatana, and fortifying some other places of importance, first brought the people under the command of Law; in that regard not unfitly called by Herodotus, the first King of the Medes.

KINGS of the MEDES.

A. M.

- 3146 1 Arbaces, at first Governor of the Medes, under Sardanapalus the Assyrian; but joyned with Belochus, overcame his Master, and was the first Founder of the Median Monarchy. 28.
- 3174 2 Mandanes, the son of Arbaces. 50.
- 3224 3 Sisarmus. 30.
- 3254 4 Medius, by some called Artyras. 25.
- 3279 5 Cadiceus, whom some call Arbianes. 13.
- 3292 6 Deioces, the Founder of Ecbatana, and the Legislator of the Medes, whom he first brought under the command of Law and a Regal Government; the former Kings having left the Reins so loose on the Necks of the people, that they seemed to Reign by Courtesy only; and had no more Authority amongst their Subjects, than any of the mean Lords had upon their Vassals. 40.
- 3303 7 Phraortes, a Man of great Prowess and Fortune: He made all Asia stand in fear, and compelled the Persians to be his Tributaries; but was after overtopped by the Scythians. 22.
- 3331 8 Cyaxares, united to his Empire the Saracens, and the Partians. The King was so overlaid by the Scythians, who in the Reign of Phraortes, had broke into Media, that he was little better than their Rent-gatherer. But having endured them for above two years, he Plotted their final Extirpation, and committed his Design to the Nobles, who willingly gave ear to it. One night they invited the chief of the Scythians to a Banquet; where having well Liquored them, and put 'em all to the Sword, the baser sort willingly returned homewards. 40.
- 3371 9 Astyages the Son of Cyaxares, who having Married his Daughter Mandane to Cambyses, the Tributary King of Persia, dreamed that she had made as much water as drowned all

Asia: hereupon he commanded Harpagus, one of his Noble-men, to see the Child kill'd; but he loathing so cruel a fact, committed the charge of executing the King's Commandment, to Mitridates the King's Herdsman. He preserved the Life of the young Infant, to whom he gave the name of Cyrus, whose Fortune at last lifted him up to the Kingdom of Persia: when abhorring his Grandfather for that intended Cruelty, he both bereft him of his Kingdom, and confined him in Hyrcania, when he had Reigned thirty five years, A. M. 3406. 35.

3406 10 Cyaxares II. In the Scripture called Darius Medus, Son to Astyages, at the Age of 52 years Succeeded his Father. For Cyrus, pretending no quarrel to his Uncle who had never wronged him, left him the Kingdom of Media, and took unto himself the Sovereignty of Persia, which before was Tributary to the Medes; not making any other alteration in the State of Media.

At this Division of the Median Empire, as Torniellus in his Annals (and that not improbably) is of opinion, it was also agreed on, that Cyrus should take the Daughter and only Child of Cyaxares to Wife; that they should both joyn together in subduing their Neighbours; that whatsoever they won, should belong to Cyaxares, (who was even then an old Prince) during his Life; and that Cyrus should be his Heir. In the twentieth year of their several Reigns, they took Babylon, slew Baltazar, and destroyed the Empire of the Chaldeans. This Action the Scriptures attribute wholly to Cyaxares, who is by them called Darius Medus; whereof St. Hierom alledgeth three Reasons: 1. Ordo ætatis. 2. Regni. 3. Propinquitatis. 1. Darius was the Elder. 2. The Empire of the Medes was more famous than that of the Persians; and 3. the Uncle ought to be preferred before the Nephew. We may add to these three, the composition above-mentioned, made between these Princes, at the beginning of their Reigns on the death of Astyages. The Greek Writers attribute the Victory only to Cyrus, and that on three Reasons also. The Persians desirous to magnify Cyrus their own Country-man, gave him all the Glory of the Action; and from the Persians the Greeks had it. Secondly, Cyrus was only employed in the Siege, (Darius then being absent) and by his Valour and Conduct was the Empire of the Chaldeans Ruined. And Thirdly Darius lived not fully two years after this great Victory; so that before remote Nations had taken notice of the Conquest, Cyrus was actually in the Throne. Josephus only in the 12th Chapter of his 10th Book, curteth the thread even between these two Princes; and telleth us that Darius, with Cyrus his Ally, destroyed the Estate of the Babylonians. Ἐπὶ τοῦτον (Ναβοαδνηλον) στρατεύουσι ὡς ὅτε δ' ἐπεσὼν βασιλεὺς, καὶ δαρείῳ ὁ μνηστὴρ, καὶ πολιορκουμένῳ αὐτῷ, &c. That this Darius Medus of Daniel is the Cyaxares of the Greeks, is more than manifest. For Josephus in the place above-cited, telleth us, ὅς τ' ὦν Ἀστυάγου υἱὸς καὶ ἑταῖρον πατρὸς ἑλλήσιν ἠκαλεῖτο ὄνομα That he was Astyages's Son, and is otherwise called by the Greeks: now ask the Greeks what was the name of the Son of Astyages, and Xenophon will tell you, that it was Cyaxares. As for the name of Nabonidus, which Joseph Scaliger in spite of Reason, and the whole World of Chronologers, would thrust upon this Darius Medus, we have already refuted it: tho we are not ignorant that Helvicus and Calvisius, two most worthy Writers, have followed him, as in all his Canon, so also in this particular Error: But to proceed unto the course of the Persian History; after the death of this Cyaxares, Cyrus Succeeded in his Throne, and the Empire of the Medes was incorporated into that of the Persians, (as it hath ever since continued) if not Subject to it.

The

The first Dynasty, or Race of the Persian Monarchs, of the House of Achemenes.

Note that Helvicus, and Isaackson place the beginning of Cyrus, A. M. 3391. Sir John Marsham, in 3402.

- 3406 1 Cyrus, who having vanquished Astyages, united to the Empire of Persia the whole Kingdom of Media; the Countries of Armenia, Phrygia, Lydia, some part of Arabia, and all the Provinces possessed by the Babylonian and Assyrian Monarchs. After which Victories, he was slain by Tomyris, a Queen of the Scythians, as some Writers say; others affirming, that he escaped alive (but wounded) out of the Battle, died in his own Kingdom, and was buried at Pasagarda, a Town of Persia. This Cyrus is Magnified by Xenophon, as Aeneas by Virgil, and Ulysses by Homer. Before the time of this Prince, no part of the lesser Asia was Subject to the Eastern Empire; and by consequence, it was very little known to the Greeks; but this Conquest of Phrygia and Lydia made them better inform themselves of the same, which hapning just as the Sacred History of the Bible was upon a conclusion; The Greeks took up and continued the History; and but for this, that part of the History of the World had in all probability been lost. 29.
- 3434 2 Cambyfes, the Son of Cyrus, Subdued Psammiticus King of Egypt, which Country he united to his Empire. Having a mind to Marry his own Sister, he was told by his Lawyers, that they knew no Law which admitted such Marriages; but that there was a Law, that the Persian Kings might do what they listed. This King was a very bloody Tyrant. 7.

Cambyfes, at his Expedition into Agypt, constituted Patzathes, one of the Magi, Vice-Roy in his absence. He hearing of the King's death, conferred the Kingdom on his own Son Smerdis, making the People believe that he was the Brother of Cambyfes; a matter of no difficulty, considering how retirement from the publick view, was a chief point of the Persian Majesty. But the Nobles either knowing the true Smerdis to be slain, or suspecting the overmuch retiredness of the new King, began to search out the matter. Otaues had a Daughter, which was one of the King's Concubines: Her he commanded when the King took next his pleasure with her, to feel whether he had any ears; for Cambyfes (in I know not what humour) had cut off the ears of this Magus. This commandment she obeying, found out the falshood. The Seven Princes informed of this Impostor, joyned together, and slew this Pseudo-Smerdis, in the 8th Month of his Reign. This done, to avoid contention, they agreed among themselves, that the Seven Princes, meeting on the Palace-green, should acknowledge him for King, whose Horse before the rising of the Sun first Neighed. The evening before the day appointed, the Horse-keeper of Darius, the Son of Hystaspes, brought his Master's Horse into the Green, together with a Mare, which the Horse then Covered. In the Morning the Princes met; and Darius's Horse knowing the place, and longing for his Mare, Neighed lustily: on which the Princes presently acknowledged Darius for their King.

The Restoring of the Kingdom.

- 3443 3 Darius Hystaspis, one of the seven Persian Princes, descended from Cyrus the fourth King of the Persians, thus Elected King, took Babylon (which had Revolted) by the ingenious fetches of Zopyrus, and over-ran all Asia, and some part of Greece, where he was overthrown at the Battel of Marathon. 36.
- 3479 4 Xerxes, to Revenge the Overthrow of Marathon, attempted to subdue the Greeks, by whom he was overthrown in the Naval Battel of Salamis; and that Famous and Honourable Exploit of the Grecians, at Thermopylae. 21.
- 3500 5 Artaxerxes Longimanus, was he who sent Ezdras to Re build the Temple of the Lord; and received Themistocles, being Banished from Athens. This also was he, as some would have it, whom the Scriptures call Abasuerus, the Husband of Hester; tho others chuse rather to place that Story in the time of Xerxes. 44.
- 3544 6 Darius II. Surnamed Nothus, in whose time the Egyptians Revolted, and chose a King of their own. 19.
- 3563 7 Artaxerxes II. from the greatness of his Memory surnamed Mnemon; under whom hapned that famous retreat of Xenophon, with an handful of his Grecians, through most of the Provinces of this Empire; by which they shewed the way to the Macedonians, how easie a Conquest they might make of that Mighty Empire. 36.
- 3599 8 Ochus, A great Tyrant, but a Valiant Prince, recovered Egypt, subdued Syria, Cyprus, and some part of India, and was at last slain by Bagoas, one of the Eunuchs of his Chamber. 26.
- 3625 9 Arses, the Son of Ochus, most Villanously Murdered by the same Eunuch, for fear he should Revenge the Death of his Father. 4.
- 3629 10 Darius III. Governor of Armenia, and Cousin-german of Ochus, before his coming to the Crown, named Codomanus, by the means of the said Bagoas made sole Monarch of Persia: But being Vanquished by Alexander the Great, in the three Battels of Granicus, Cilicia, and Arbela, the Empire of the Persians was transferred to the Grecians, A. M. 3635. 6.

The certain Revenues of this Great Monarchy, seem to have been 14560 Talents; for so much the last Darius received yearly. But what the casual and extraordinary Intrado was, is not easie to say; tho' manifest it is, and demonstrable by many strong and evident reasons, that they far exceeded the certain. For first, the Persian Monarchs were Kings of 127 Provinces. Secondly, Darius offered to Alexander for the Ransom of his Mother and two Daughters, 30000 Talents of Gold. Thirdly, Alexander found in the Treasury of Damascus, 2600 Talents; in that of Susa, 50000 Talents of Gold uncoin'd; in that of Pasagardus, 60000 Talents; in that of Ecbatana, 26000 Talents; in that of Persipolis, 120000 Talents; in all 204600 Talents; besides the infinite Riches of the Treasury of Babylon, yielded into his hands by Bagophanes, and other places of note, not particularly specified: an huge and most unspeakable sum; Fourthly, in that the Gold and Riches which Alexander, now a Conqueror, sent from Persia to Macedon and Greece, (besides which, every Captain and Common Soldier had provided and laid up for his own Maintenance) loaded ten thousand Mules, and five thousand Camels.

For the fixing in one View the True Succession of the Eastern Princes, I shall here transcribe the Canon or Catalogue of the Kings of Assyria, Media, and Persia, according to Mr. Dodwell's Copy, which is the most Ancient Collection, and Fountain of all True Chronology.

The rest of the Kings in this Table belong to Egypt; where it shall be continued. This being the most Valuable Piece of Antiquity now extant, as to Chronology.

After this overthrow of the Persian Monarchy, the Persian Nation lay obscure 535 years, viz. from the 3635 year of the World, to the 228 year of CHRIST: of which time they were 83 years under the Syrian Successors of Alexander; and 452 years under the Arfacidan Kings of Parthia. Μακρὰ δὲ Δακρίων, &c. as Herodian. For after Darius had lost his Kingdom to Alexander the Macedonian, and after the Victor himself was dead also, the more potent Captains divided Asia among them: But Discords often arising, and the Macedonians puissance, by these often Broils, not smally broken. Arfaces, one of the Parthian Nobility, perswaded the Barbarous people of the East, and among them the Persians, to cast off the Greek Yoke, and stand for their Liberty: he himself taking upon him the Title of King, and investing himself with a Diadem, A.M. 3718. The Persians by this Revolt got little or nothing, having indeed not changed the Tyranny, but the Tyrant only: These Parthian Princes Lording it with as high an Insolency as ever the old Persian Monarchs, or the Kings of Syria did before. From this Arfaces, all the rest of his Successors, and those too of the Family of Artabanus, or second Race of Parthian Kings, took that name upon them: as the Roman Emperors that of Cæsar, or the old Egyptian Kings the name of Pbaraob. Their usual Style was Rex Regum, or King of Kings: and by that Style with Arrogance and Insolence enough, Vologes thus inscribed his Letters to Vespasian the Roman Emperor, viz. Arfaces, Rex Regum, Flavio Vespasiano: giving himself the Title of King of Kings, but the other nothing but his bare names only. To which, Vespasian without taking notice of the Parthian's Pride, returned his Answer to him with this Superscription, Fl. Vespasianus Regi Regum Arfacidis: whether with more scorn or modesty, it is hard to say. They also called themselves the Brethren of the Sun and Moon, which were the chiefest gods they worshipped. Great Princes questionless they were, and kept the Romans harder to it, than all the Kings and States in the World besides: whose Names and Acts occur in these following Catalogues of

2. The Arfacidan or Parthian Race of the Kings of Persia.
A.M.
- 3718 1 Arfaces, the Founder of the Parthian Family.
3741 2 Mithridates, or Arfaces the second, assaulted by Antiochus Magnus with an Army of 120000 men, but without success. 3761

- 3761 3 Pampatius.
 3773 4 Phraartes, the Son of Pampatius.
 3783 5 Mithridates II. Brother of Phraartes, subdued the Medes, and extended his Empire to Euphrates.
 6 Phraartes II. slain in a War against the Scythians.
 3857 7 Artabanus, Uncle to Phraartes the second.
 8 Pacorus, the Son of Artabanus.
 9 Mithridates III. Brother of Pacorus.
 3903 10 Horodes, Brother of Mithridates, whom he overcame, and caused to be slain in his own sight. He also vanquished M. Crassus, and slew 20000 Romans; and because Crassus was reported to be wondrous covetous, he caused Molten Gold to be poured down his Throat. A miserable death, but in respect of the Divine Providence, a most just revenge upon him for his Sacrilege, in robbing the Temple of Hierusalem, as he marched towards the Parthians. The overthrow, and the disgrace which thereby happened to the Romans, was not long afterwards recompensed by Ventidius, one of the Lieutenants of Mark Antony the Triumvir, who slew great numbers of them in a pitched Field, and amongst others, Pacorus the King's Son: The day of the Battle being the same in which Crassus had before been vanquished. After this Victory, for which Ventidius had the honour of a Triumph (and the first Triumph that ever the Romans had held for a Parthian Victory) he was in a fair way to have ruined this Kingdom, to have shrewdly shaken it at the least, had not Antony in an envious humour called him from that service. Finally, Horodes was slain by his Son Phraartes.
 11 Phraartes III. a valiant Prince, but wicked and cruel, as the Murther of his own Father and many of his Brethren doth clearly evidence. Against him marched Marcus Antonius with a populous Army, which wanted little of an absolute overthrow; of 16 Legions, scarce six returning home in safety. This King submitted himself and Kingdom unto Augustus, restoring the Roman Ensigns, and freeing the Captives taken at the defeat of Crassus. The only Mark of the Parthians Subjection was their receiving Kings at the appointment of the Senate and Emperors of Rome; which also was of no long continuance.
 12 Phraartes IV. Son of Phraartes the Third, whom he slew and succeeded.
 13 Horodes II. Son of Phraartes the Fourth, slain in a conspiracy.
 14 Vonon, substituted in the place of Horodes, but outed by 15 Tiridates, who was also dispossessed of his life and Kingdom by Artabanus, the people flocking to him as a man of courage, and being offended with the Two last Kings, because they either had received the Kingdom, or at least the Confirmation in it, from the Roman Emperors. Which Artabanus, tho descended either from a Female, or some of the Collateral Line of the former Family; yet being not direct Heir thereof, he is looked on as a stranger to the Blood of the Arfacidae the Family of Arfaces, giving place to that of this Artabanus, of which Family we have the names of Twelve Kings successively reigning: The most considerable of them being Cbofroes, the eighth King of this Line, from whom the Emperor Trajan gained Armenia, and Mesopotamia, adding them to the Roman Empire. Members whereof they did continue till regained to the Persian Crown, by Sapores the ninth King of the next Persian Dynasty. But for those Twelve Kings of this House, they are these.

The Third Dynasty of the Kings of Persia, and the second of the Parthian Race.

 6 Artabanus II.
 7 Pacorus.
 8 Cbofroes.
 9 Parthaspates.
 10 Vologesius II.
 11 Vologesius III.
 12 Artabanus III. The last King of this new Race of the Parthians, whose overthrow by the valour of Artaxerxes the first Persian King of the fourth Dynasty, occasioned the Translation of the Diadem to the natural Persians; after it had continued in Two Parthian Families, for the space of 470 years. Which Translation, as it was wrought by the unresistable power of God, who only hath the disposing of Crowns and Scepters; so in the way of second causes it may be principally referred to the Barbarous Massacre of this people, by Antonius Caracalla the Roman Emperor; who having negotiated a Marriage with the Daughter of this Artabanus, and going (as he gave it out) to solemnize the Nuptials, was met by the old King accompanied with the flower of his Nobility, and the choicest of his Soldiers, and other Subjects, in Triumphal Ornaments. Which honourable Train was no sooner come near his Army, but he commanded his Soldiers (on a Watch-word given) to put them all to the Sword, the King himself hardly escaping with his life. Caracalla being dead, and Macrinus succeeding in the Throne, the Parthians set upon him to revenge that slaughter. But understanding after a long fight of three days continuance, that Macrinus had slain Caracalla, they made peace with him; but were so weakned and unable to hold their own, that it made the Persians once more think of recovering to their own Nation the Regal Power. For Artaxerxes, a noble and generous Persian, (his Name perhaps suggesting some high Thoughts unto him) did so well husband the opportunity, that he slew Artabanus the last King of the Parthians, and once more brought the Royal Seat into Persia. Yet was not this so easily effected, the Parthians notwithstanding their former losses, maintaining another cruel Fight for three days together: so difficult was it to vanquish that Nation when their Forces were broken; impossible when they were entire. Artaxerxes, proud of this success, sent a peremptory Embassy to Alexander Severus, the then Roman Emperor, to have all the Provinces of Asia, which had formerly belonged to the Persian Monarchy, re-delivered to him: a matter not so easily granted as demanded. For Severus to suppress so insolent an Enemy, marched towards Persia with an Army Romanly appointed; which, to find his Enemy more work, he divided into three parts: whereof the first was to march into Media, the second into Persia, the third himself led in the Midway between both, to succour both, or be succoured by both, as occasion required. But his device succeeded not happily; for his two Armies being by the Persians broken, he with much danger and hast retired back with the third. This was a good beginning for the Persian Kingdom; the establishment followed not long after: Valerianus the Emperor being vanquished, and taken Prisoner by Sapores, the second King of this Race. So that now the name of the Persian grew so terrible to the Romans, that Constantine the Great transplanted many of the Colonies and Garisons of the North-west parts of the Empire, into the East, to keep the Persian from growing too far upon the Roman Provinces; and removed also the Seat of the Empire nigher unto them, from Rome to Constantinople. And thus having shewn the Beginning and Establishment, the Foundation and Building of the new Kingdom of the Persians, take along with you the Catalogue of their Kings, until they once more lost the Sovereignty of their own Nation, and became Slaves again to more barbarous Masters.

 629 25 Adbesir.
 26 Sarbatus.
 27 Barnarius.
 630 28 Hormisda II the 28th and last King of the Race of Artaxerxes, or the fourth Dynasty: of whom besides the Two first Kings, whose Acts are spoken of before, the most remarkable were, 1 Vararanes the second, in whose Time Carus the Emperor passing over Euphra- tes, and laying siege to Ctesiphon was there slain by a Thunderbolt. 2 Narjes, the Son of Vararanes, who first disconfited Galerius, one of the Cæsars, in the Empire of Dio- clesian, and totally ruined his Army: for which Galerius being forced to Lacquey it by the Emperor's Chariot in his Purple Robes, was so highly shamed, that to recover his credit he set upon Narjes once again, routed him, and took Prisoners his Wives and Children. 3 Sapores the second, the Son of Misdates, who began his Reign be-
 his Wife with Child: which Child the Magi having signified by their Art to be a Male, the Persian Princes caused the Crown and Royal Ornaments to be set upon his Mother's Belly, acknowledging him thereby for their future King. A great and puissant Prince he proved, holding continual War with Constantine, and his Successors till the death of Valens; and gaining from them the best parts of Mesopotamia: but withal a great Persecutor of the Christians, of whom no fewer than 20000 are said to have suffered in his time. 4 Isdigertes, a Prince so esteemed of by Theodorus, the Eastern Emperor, that he made him Protector of his Empire, during the minority of his Son Theodosius: which Trust he royally performed, and was a great Friend unto the Christians in his own Dominions. 5 Cabades, first outed of his Kingdom by Za- maspes, and restored again, was the first Persian King who permitted the free exercise of the Christian Religion. He slew Zachabes, a King of the Huni, coming to his Aid against the Romans, because he had before promised to assist the Emperor; and rooted the Manichean Sect out of his Estate. 6 Cosroes the Son of Cabades, surnamed the Great, a constant Enemy to the Romans; from whom he conquered a great part of Syria, and took and sacked the City of Antioch. But finding the War brought home to his own door, by Mauritius, who was afterwards Emperor, and his own Countries in a flame, he took such thought of it, that he died of a Fever. 7 Cosroes the Second, as great an Enemy to the Emperor Heraclius, from whom he took all that was left of Mesopotamia, Syria, and the Holy Land, with the City of Hierusalem it self; most of it recovered by Heraclius: in despite of whom he caused all the Christians in his Kingdom to turn Nestorians. 8 Hormis- da the second, the last of the Dynasty, who being first weak-ned by Civil and Domestick diffentions, was vanquished by Haumir and his Saracens, Anno 634. burying so the Glory of this Renowned Nation in the Grave of Oblivion, or at least Subjection.

The Saracenic Caliphs, having added this Kingdom to their large Empire, appointed here their Deputies, whom they honoured with the name of Sultans; not one Supreme for the whole Kingdom, but several Governors or Sultans for each several Province: called by new names, and moulded into many Toparchies, as Chorazan, Mouzcna- bar, Usbeck, and I wot not what; the Sultans acting of themselves, and warring upon one another, as their humours led them, without relation to the Caliph or Lord in chief. During which bustles it so hapned, that Mahomet, the Sultan of Persia (so called because he was the chief in Command and Power) picking a quarrel with his Neighbour the Sultan of Babylon, (Isafirus he is called in some Christian Writers, by whom taken or mistaken for the Caliph himself) made War upon him. But finding him countenanced and supported by the power of the Caliph, invited the Turks, then possessed of some part of Armenia
Major, to come to his aid: by whose means he overthrew the Caliph's Forces, and might have got the Sovereignty of Persia unto himself, if he had used his Victory and his Friends with any tolerable discretion. But denying to pay these Turks their Wages, and send them home he occasioned them to make head against him, under the conduct of Tangrolipix, their principal Leader; to whom being once in Arms, several discontented persons of the natural Persians, did unite themselves. Encouraged with which addition, and being furnished with Horse and Armour, and other necessities, by the spoil of the Country, they gave battel to the Sultan himself: whom having vanquished and slain, Tangrolipix by the joint consent of both Armies is made King of Persia, the Founder of

The Fifth Dynasty, or the Turkish Race of the Kings of Persia.

- 1030 1 Tangrolipix, of whom sufficiently before.
 2 Axan, the Son of Tangrolipix, by whom Culu Mo- ses, his near Kinsman was sent with great Forces against the Christians; whom he dispossessed of a great part of Asia Minor.
 3 Balak, Sultan of Persia, in the beginning of the Wars in the Holy Land, undertaken by the Western Christians; against whom he is reported to have sent his Forces. Of whose Successors I find nothing till the Time of 1198 4 Cassanes, The last King or Sultan of the Turks, vanquished in the year 1202. by the Cham of Tartary. Which makes me very apt to think, that after the death of Axan, or his next Successor, the Turks lost the Sovereignty of Persia, tho they kept the possession of some parts of it; the Sovereignty thereof being recovered by the Caliphs of Ba- bylon: and that it was so held by both, till the Tartars dispossessed the one, and destroyed the whole Progeny of the other, as before was noted.
 And this I find to be the Opinion of Benjamin Tudelensis, a Learned Jew, which had travelled most part of the East, to whose Judgment herein
 I subscribe as most sound and rational.

The sixth Dynasty, or the Tartarian Race of the Kings of Persia.

- 1260 1 Haalon, or Ulab-Kubkan, by Ogata the great Cham, made King of Persia; exterminated the whole Race of the Caliph of Bagdet.
 1266 2 Hakkakaton, the Son of Haalon.
 1282 3 Nicador Oglan, by Haalon called Tangador, who made himself a Mahometan, and was named Hamed, the Brother of Hakkakaton.
 1284 4 Argon-Khon, the eldest Son of Hakkakaton.
 1292 5 Gemotukhon, Brother of Argon-Khon.
 1295 6 Badukhon, the Uncle of the last, of which three there is little memorable.

1296 7 Gazun, the Son of Argon-Khon, who made Cashin his Imperial See.

1305 8 Alyaptu, who transferred the Court to Taurus, and is said to have been the Founder of Sakania, a chief City of Media; the Brother of Gazun.

1317 9 Abusaid, Son of Alyaptu, the last of the Race of Hialon, that Reigned in Persia. After whose death, Anno 1337. (being the 736th of the Mahometan Hegira) the more Potent Princes of the Tartars seized on the several Parts and Provinces of it; every one calling himself King of that Part or Province which he was Possessed of. And amongst them Gempus the Sultan or Souldan of Parthia, (tho' a Persian born) put in for a share, and made himself Master of his own Province, and some parts adjoining: made on that Ground by some of our Christian Writers (who very imperfectly have transmitted to us the affairs of this Country) the sole King of Persia. In this Confusion it continued till the coming of Tamerlane, who like a furious Whirlwind, driving all before him, composed the differences, by getting all unto himself. But as Philosophy doth teach us, that no violent motion is of long continuance; so the course of Business, and the success of Actions may instruct us also, that a Kingdom forced to bow under the Command of a Prosperous Army, is not so well assured to the Victor, but that the fury of the War once past, it may return again to its former Liberty, or open a more easie passage to some new Invader. And so it fared with the Conquests and Successes of Tamerlane, whose Issue quickly lost this Kingdom, and almost all the rest of his other Purchases: leaving but little memory of their names and actions. For partly by his own imprudence, in Cantoning his Estates among his Children; and partly by the weakness of his Successors in the Realm of Persia this Kingdom did relapse immediately to the same confusions in which he found it; having almost as many Sovereign Kings as Provinces. Most of them Homagers perhaps to the Kings of the House of Tamerlane, and those who afterwards Succeeded in the Title of Kings of Persia, of the Turcoman or Armenian Dynasty: not yet reduced unto this Crown, notwithstanding the great and prosperous successes of the Sophian Family. But for the Kings of the Race of Tamerlane, who only in their times had the honour to be called Kings of Persia, (and well enough content with that:) such as they were, we find them in this order following.

1405 10. Mirza Charock, the fourth Son of Tamerlane, succeeded by his appointment in the Realm of Persia.

1447 11 Olegbegg, Son of Mirza Charock, vanquished and slain by his own Son.

1450 12 Abdalatife, slain not long after by his Soldiers.

1451 13 Abdulla the Son of Olegbegg, and Brother of Abdalatife, vanquished by 1453 14 Abusaid II. descended from Moroncha, the third Son of Tamerlane, succeeded on the death of Abdulla.

1461 15 Zeuzes, whom some call Jooncha, others, Ma-laonchres, discomfited and slain in Battel by Ussan-Cassanes, Anno 1472. which was about 70 years from the death of Tamerlane.

The seventh Dynasty of the Turcoman, or the Armenian Race of the Kings of Persia.

1472 1 Ussan-Cassanes, by some called Azymbeyus, by others more truly Ozem-Aizambeck, was the Son of Tracheton, one of those poor Armenian, or Turcoman Princes, dispossessed by Rajazer the First, and restored by Tamerlane. Encroaching on his Neighbours, he was warned to desist by Zeuzes, last Persian King; with whom encountering in a pitch'd Field, he overcame him, and got that Kingdom by the Victory.

1478 2 Jacub, the second Son of Ussan-Cassanes, having put by his older Brother, attained the Throne, and repulsed the Marmalucks out of Mesopotamia and Assyria, which they had Invaded. He was after Poysoned by his Wife.

1490 3 Jularar, A Kinsman of Jacub's succeeded him in the Estate; which he held only three years, and then left it to 1493 4 Raisinger, A Prince of the same Blood; who living in Adultery with the Wife of Jacub, had conspired his death. 2.

Mahomet the Impostor, and first Emperor of the Saracens, by his Last Will and Testament, bequeathed the succession of that Estate to Hali his near Kinsman, and Husband of Fatima his eldest daughter. But Abuderer, Haumar, and O'man, three powerful men, and the chief Commanders of the Army in the time of Mahomet, successively followed one another in the Supreme Dignity. After their death, Hali enjoyed that Honour for a little while, supplanted first, and afterwards vanquished and slain by Muharras, a great Man of War, who succeeded in it: and to secure himself therein, slew Hafson or Offen, the son of Hali, and eleven of the Sons of that Offen XII. called Musa Ceredine, escaping with life. From him descended lineally one Guine, the Lord of Ardeville in Media; who considering that there had been no Caliph in long time before, began to plot the establishing of that high honour in his own Family, as the right heirs to it. A man of so great reputation among the People, that Tamerlane having made a Conquest of Persia, thought it no dishonour to his greatness to bestow a friendly visit on him. Dying, he left his hopes and projects to his Son, called Aider, who afterwards for the purity of Religion pretended by him, had the adjunct of Tzophy; the word so signifying in that Language: who also prov'd of such esteem and power with all sorts of men, that Ussan-Cassanes, the first King of the Armenian, or Turcoman Race, thought fit to make him Husband to one of his Daughters. But on the contrary, Jacub the Son of Ussan, and some of his Successors, seeing him grow unto such power and estimation with the common People; and fearing what he could do, and not what he would do, endeavoured to depress him by all means that might be. Which he not able to remedy, as the case then stood, practised to add unto his Party under the popular pretence of reforming things that were amiss in their Religion; and grew so powerful in the end, that he gave Battel unto Rustan and Alamat, the two last Kings of the former Race. But Alamat having got the Victory, caused him to be slain; and delivered Hysmael and Solyman his two Sons, into the hands of Amazar, a chief Commander of his own, by him to be kept in perpetual Prison. But Amazar, a man of a more ingenious disposition, afforded them not only liberty, but also good education: insomuch that Hysmael Sophi, a towardly young Gentleman, undertook Revenge for the death of his Father, which work he fulfilled, having overcome and slain King Alamat, and his Son Elwan. After this Victory, he being Crowned King or Sbaugh of Persia, altered the form of Religion: making Hali and himself the true Successors of Mahomet, but condemning Abuderer, Haumar, and O'man, with the Turks, as Rebels and Schismaticks.

Hence proceeded the Bloody Wars, which to the Persians loss, have hapned between them and the Turks: the Persians burning whatsoever Book or Monument they find concerning those three; and the Turks holding it more Meritorious to kill one Persian than seventy Christians: Strius in his Commentaries, writing purposely of the acts of Hysmael, saith, that the Jews on some fond conceit, were perswaded that he was the Messia they had so long looked for: But it proved quite contrary, there never being a Prince that more vexed and grieved 'em.

The

The 8th Dynasty, or Sophian Race of the Kings of Persia.

- 1505 1 Hyfmael Sopbi, the Founder of this Family, overthrown by Selimus the First, in the Calderan Fields. 20. The Father of this Prince was one Aidar, a Cheik, or Lawyer, and this Hyfmael Sopbi was the 3d. Son of Aidar, and became King of Persia by the Conquest of Azimont his Master near Taurus.
- 1525 2 Tamas, the Son of Hyfmael, vanquished by Solyman the Magnificent, who took from him the Countries of Chaldæa, Affyria, and Mesopotamia, with some part of Media. 53.
- 1578 3 Aider, the 2d Son of Tamas obtain'd the Kingdom, Imprisoning his Elder Brother; but his Cruelty being much feared, he was made away by the practice of Periancona his own Sister, having only Reigned fifteen days.
- 4 Hyfmael II. Eldest Son of Tamas, restored unto his Father's Throne; but Murdered with the privity of his Sister also, who found him of too rough a nature for her to Govern; having Reigned near two years.
- 1579 5 Mahomet Codabanda, advanced to the Throne by his Sister's Faction, (as being of a milder and more tractable nature) at his first entrance caused her to be Beheaded for the former Murders. During his time, not fully settled in the State, Amurath III. by his Lieutenants won from him almost all Armenia, Media, and great part of Georgia. 7.
- 1585 6 Abas, the 2d Son of Mahomet, having Treacherously practised the death of Mirza, his elder Brother, succeeded his Father, recovered almost all which the Turks had gained, and added the Kingdoms of Ormus, Heri, Candabor, and Hircania, to the Crown of Persia. This Prince, by the help of the English won the strong City of Ormus from the Portuguese, in the Year 1622. After which he opened a Trade to all Nations by Sea and Land into his Kingdom, which has at once enriched and softned this once Martial Nation.
- 1628 7 Sophy, the Nephew of Abas by his Son Mirza. (whose eyes he caused to be put out on a false suspicion) at the Age of fifteen years succeeded: committed by his Grandfather during his Minority. to the Protection of Emangolt, Chawn, or Duke of Shiras. A Prince, who since he came to Age hath had a good hand against the Turks, attempting the recovery of Bagdat and other places, which had been taken from them in the time of Abas. In the Year 1638. the Turks won the City of Bagdat, soon after which there was a Peace made between the Turks and Persians, which has lasted ever since.
- 1642 8 Shah Abas II.
- 1666 9 Shah Sepbi, or Sopbi II. The now Reigning King of Persia. These two last Princes have had no Wars with the Turks, and have been so Bridled by the Moguls on the other side, that they have not attempted to recover Bagdat from the Turks. but have like the Turks, degenerated into a soft, effeminate Sloth, which hath in a great degree unmanned this once fierce Nation.

The Government of these Persian Kings, tho' it be Despotic and Severe, hath a great deal less of the Tyrant in it, than any other of the Mahometan Kings or Princes: these cherishing their Brethren, maintaining Nobility among them, and encouraging Industry; which makes them to be better served than the Turks, or Tartar: to both whom they are far inferior both in Power and Treasure. Their Officers of State, and Men of principal Employment, for the most part Eunuchs (as generally in all the Empires of the East:) such persons being thought most trusty, because abstracted from the obligations of Wife and Children, they study more the Princes Service than their own advantages. Their Forces consist most of Horse, to which they are inclined more generally, than to serve on Foot, and yet the greatest Body of Horse which they have brought at any time into the Field, came not to above 30000; but those well furnished and appointed; maintain'd on Lordships and Estates after the manner of the Turkish Timariots. The Foot Soldiers of his own Countries but poor and raw, and very seldom stand their ground; that defect being for the most part supplied by Mercenaries. The inconveniency of which being found by Sultan Abas, he served himself of Children bought of Christian Parents near the Euxine Sea (from whence the Egyptian Sultans had their Marmalucks;) whom they call by the name of Cozal-Bessas, or Red-Caps so nam'd from the colour of their Turbants; trained up by them in their Religion and Warlike Discipline, as the Turks their Fanizaries; yet far inferior to the Turks, against whom if they have prevailed since the time of Abas, they may ascribe the greatest part of their good fortune to those Divisions and Rebellions, which in these late times have been frequent in the Turkish Empire. And as for their Sea-Forces, they are inconsiderable. For tho' they have large Sea-coasts both on the Persian Bay, the Caspian Sea, and the Southern Ocean; yet are they very poor in Shipping: suffering the Muscovite to ingross the Trade of the Caspian Sea; the Portugals, to manage that of the Southern Ocean; as formerly that also of the Persian Bay, till the taking of Ormuz.

The Revenues of this Kingdom in the time of Hyfmael the first Sophy, were exceeding great: in so much that Tamas his Successor, to ingratiate himself with all sorts of People, released them of all kinds of Customs imposed on Merchandise, either imported, or exported. And this amounted to 90000 Tomans yearly: which, reckoning every Toman at 20 Crowns, made up a Million and 800000 Crowns of annual income, which notwithstanding, his Revenue was computed at 4 or 5000000 of Crowns yearly; raised out of Demam Lands, the tenth of Fruits, the profit of Mines, and the Fine paid by every Subject when he sets up Shop. But Tamas finding this not sufficient to maintain his Royalty, doubled the value of his Money, and thereby for the present, his Revenue also. Since that they have been much impaired by the Conquest made on them by the Turks, who got from them so much Land as maintained 40000 Timariots; and yielded to the Grand Seigneur one Million of yearly income: whether improved again to their former height, I cannot determine. Tavernier, a great man, that Travell'd through these Countries, observes, that the Turks, Persians, and Moguls having taken all propriety from their Subjects, they must all three, sooner or later fall to Ruin and Desolation, p. 73. 'Tis certain that the Turks have desolated all their Asiatick Provinces to that degree, that they are able to contribute little to the preservation of themselves, or the rest of his Dominions; but are over-run by the wild Arabs, who pay him little or no Tribute, and not much Service, but Rob and Spoil his Subjects almost as far as the Archipelago; whereas in the Roman's time, they scarce ever entred into Syria or Palestine, but were forc'd to lurk in their own Desarts, tho' they sometimes made Incursions into these, then Richer and more Populous Countries. It may be supposed that Persia and Indostan, but especially the latter, are equally depopulated, and by consequence prepared for Ruin, according to that French Gentleman's observation, tho' by other means, of which I shall give an account in Indostan. Persia is however the best Peopled of the three, and in the best state, but they are strangely unmann'd by a long Peace with all their Neighbours, for they have had in a manner no War since that of Candabar in 1651. In which Abas II. defeated an Army of Moguls of 300000 men. This loss has ever since been a curb upon that Nation: and Mahomet IV. the last Grand Seigneur of the Turks, was an unwarlike Prince that never engaged against the Persians; so that this Nation hath mostly apply'd themselves to Manufactures and Husbandry; are now become very Populous and Rich, beyond the Turks, or the People of Indostan.

And so much for Persia.

O F T A R T A R Y.

TARTARIA is bounded on the East, with China, the Oriental Ocean, and the Streights of Anan, (if such Streights there be) by which parted from America, or rather from the Terra de Jesso, or Jesso, discovered by the Dutch East-India Company in the Years 1652. and 1653. which is not certainly known, whether it is a Part of America, or a Part of Asia, or a Part of another Continent, towards the North Pole, of vast extent; Parts of which have been discovered in the Latitude of 59. and bend to the N. E. on the back of Island, where it has been discovered in the Lat. of 64. and 65. and in the Lat. of 75. and in the Lat. of 77. and so Northward to 80 degrees, over against the North Cape of Finmark, and may probably be supposed to surround the Samoeds, and here shoot it self to the Southward again, a part of which Japan is supposed to be; and more to the Westward the Terra de Jesso, which was found to lie in the Latitude of 50. in the Years above said. It is commonly called Greenland by the English, Spitzberg by the Dutch, but may more properly be called the North Continent, equal to any of the other Parts of the World, and disjoyned from Asia and America as well as from Europe. See Isaaci Vossii varia Observationes, pag. 187. Lond. 1685. 4to. On the West with Russia, and Podolia, a Province of the Realm of Poland; on the North with the main Scythick or Frozen Ocean; and on the South with part of China, from which separated by a mighty Wall, some part of India, the River Oxus parting it from Badria, and Margiana, two Persian Provinces; the Caspian Sea, which separates it from Aludra, and Hyrcania; the Caucasian Mountains interposing betwixt it and Armenia; and the Euxine which divideth it from Anatolia, and Thracia. So called from the Tartars, a puissant and mighty People now possessed hereof; the reason of whose Name we shall shew hereafter.

It containeth all those great and spacious Provinces, which the Ancients called Seres, Scythia extra Imaum, Scythia intra Imaum, Saccæ, Sogdiana, the greatest part of Sarmatia Asiatica, and part of Sarmatia Europæa: extending it self the whole length of Asia, from the River Tanais, to the Eastern Ocean; taking in Taurica Cherfoneusus, and some other parts of Europe also. So that if we measure it by Miles, it is said to contain 5400 from East to West, and 3600 from North to South: a greater quantity of ground than the Turkish Empire, but of less fertility and accompt.

In measuring by the way of Degrees, it reacheth from the 50 Degree of Longitude, to the 195, which is 145 Degrees from West to East: and from the 40th Degree of Northern Latitude, unto the 8th, which is within 10 Degrees of the Pole it self. By which accompt it lieth from the beginning of the sixth Clime, where the longest day in Summer is 15 hours, till they cease measuring by Climates, the longest day in the most Northern parts hereof, being full six months; and in the Winter half of the year, the night as long.

The Country lying under such different Meridians, and such distant Climes, must needs be such, as no general Character can be given of it; and therefore we shall defer that, with the names of the Rivers and chief Mountains, to the description of the several and particular Provinces.

But for the People, being much of the same nature in every part, we may take the measure of them here. Affirmed to be of square Stature, broad faces, hollow eyes, thin beards, thick lips, flat noses, ugly countenances, swart of complexion, not so much by the heat of the Sun, (which keeps far enough off) as their natural fluttishness. Barbarous every where in behaviour, especially in those parts which they call Asiatica, and Antiqua: but withal very strong of body, swift of foot, vigilant in time of service, and patient of all extremities both of cold and hunger. The Women suitable to the Men, scorning or wanting Ornaments to set themselves out; or when they do, they seldom go beyond Copper, Feathers, or such precious Jew-gaws.

In behaviour they are rude and barbarous, as before was said; eating their Enemies when they take them, as in way of Revenge; first letting out their Blood, which they receive into Cups, and use it as Wine unto the feast. Though swift of foot, yet generally they love to ride, though it be but on Oxen; about whose necks, as about Horses, when they travel, they use little Bells, with which Music they are much delighted. Their speech, even in their common talk, is a kind of whining, and their singing little better than the howling of Wolves. They eat commonly with unwashed hands, the dirt and grease about their fingers serving as a sauce for their meat, which they devour greedily, and with little chewing; and for their ordinary drink use Mares milk. Homely of habit, made of the coarsest stuff, and reaching no lower than the knee; and if they go to the charge of Furs, contrary to the custom of other People, they wear the hairy hide outwards, and the Skin next their own bodies; only to shew the richness of their Apparel. And yet so proud in this beggary, that they account the Christians but as Dogs, condemn all the rest of the world, and think their Cham the only considerable Prince; by whose name they swear, as by their Gods.

In matter of Religion it is hard to say, whether Mahometanism or Paganism, be of most extent: some parts hereof being wholly Pagan, some wholly Mahometan, and some mixt of both. But of the two the Pagan is the better Gentleman, as being of the elder house, and of more Antiquity: the Sect of Mahomet not being entertained amongst them, till the year 1246.

And yet these have not so prevailed, as to extinguish the remainders of Christianity, of which there are amongst them many several Churches. The Christian Faith first planted amongst the Scythians, by the Preaching of S. Andrew, and S. Philip, two of the Apostles. Overgrown in these latter Ages by the Sect of Nestorians, either by the diligence of their Preachers, or for want of others to instruct them in more Orthodox Tenets. Before the prevailing of the Tartars, besides the Circassian Christians, of whom more anon, there are in the most remote parts of Tartary, whole Kingdoms of that Religion; as namely that of Tenduc, then the chief of all: besides some numbers of them in Tanguth, Cauchintales, Cassar, Samarchan, Karthim, Suchair, Ergimul, and Caraiam; where in the time of Paulus Venetus, who surveyed these parts about the year 1270. they lived intermingled with the Pagans. Not so diminished since the Conquest of those Countries by the Tartars, but that they are of a considerable number, especially in Cathay it self: where they are said to have a Metropolitan in the City of Cambalu, (the principal City of that Empire) and he to be so honoured by the Great Cham, that for a time they received their Crowns from no hands but his.

As for the Tartars, they are by the Chronologer Genebrard, said to be the off-spring of the Ten Tribes, whom Salmanassar led away Captive; and that especially for three reasons. The first is, that the word Tartari, by which name (saith he) they ought rather to be called, than by that of Tartari, signifieth in the Syriack and Hebrew Tongues, a Remnant. But unto this it is answered, that the name of this people is derived from the River Tartar, as some; or from the Region called Tartar, where they first dwelt, as most think: and again, that though the Hebrew word רְחִימָה signifie a Remnant, yet can it not properly be applied to the Tartars; who so infinitely exceed the Jews, that they cannot be thought to be a remainder of them. Secondly, he alledgeth for proof hereof, that this people use Circumcision, the Character of the Jewish Nation. And hereunto it is Replied, that Circumcision was common to many People, besides the Jews, as to the Egyptians, Aethiopians, &c. and that rather as a National Custom, than a Religious Ordinance; and again, that the Tartars cannot be proved to have received Circumcision, before they received Mahometanism. Thirdly, there is brought to confirm this Opinion, a place of Eldras, cap. 13. lib. 2. where it is said, that the Ten Tribes (that they might the better keep God's Statutes) passed over the River Euphrates; and after a journey of one year and a half, came into a Country called Arfareth. To refell which, those of the contrary Opinion find no better course, than by shewing the impossibilities of it. For the Tartars (when their name was first known) were meer Idolaters, had no remembrance of the Law, observed not the Sabbath, nor any other point of Jewish Religion: and so the Ten Tribes retired not hither to keep God's Statutes. Secondly, Euphrates lyeth quite West from Assyria, and those places to which Salmanassar transplanted the Israelites; and so it could not be passed over in a journey towards the North. And thirdly, it is very improbable, that the Ten Tribes should either be so simple, as to leave Assyria, where they were peaceably settled, or so Valiant as to force a passage through those Countries of Scythia, which neither Persians, Greeks, or Romans, were able to withstand in the best of their Fortunes.

To let pass therefore all imaginations of a Foreign Pedegree, the truth is, that they were no other than a Ruder and more Northern brood of Scythians; who pressed by want, or otherwise oppressed by the King of Tenduc, unto whom they were subject, Armed themselves against him, obtained a memorable Victory, and settled Cingis their chief Captain in the Royal Throne, Anno 1202. After which, growing of more power, and enlarging their Dominions further, they united in the name of Tartars all the Scythian Nations; as Mahomet did those of the three Arabias, in the name of Saracens; or as in former times, the many several Tribes of the German Nations, were united in the names of Franks, or Alemans. Not known in Europe by this name, till their many great and signal Victories had made them formidable; which was about the year 1212, within very little of which time they had made themselves Masters of a larger Empire, than that of Macedon, or Rome, in their greatest glories. But being of a hasty growth, it decayed as suddenly; the greatest part of their European purchases, being conquered from them by the Dukes of Muscovy, and the Kings of Poland, as their acquets in Asia, and Africk, by the Turks and Persians. Yet still are they possessed of so large a Territory, that were they not distracted into several States; or did those several States depend upon one Supreme, that one Supreme might very easily give Law unto all his Neighbours, and make the Turks and Persians Tributaries, as in former times. The Curious Reader that would willingly farther inform himself of this People, may have recourse to Mr. Hackluyt's Collection of Voyages, Tom. 1. where he will find the Voyage of Joannes de Plano Carпинi, sent Ambassador to them in 1246. pag. 21. And that William de Rubruquis a Minor Fryer sent to them in 1253. pag. 71. Of late years the Great Cham has Conquered China, and his Dominions extend from the Chinean Ocean to the River Obb; where he is bounded to the West by the Great Duke of Russia, of which I shall speak more in China. But laying aside these speculations of what they might do, if united under one command, let us now look upon them as they are divided into these five parts, that is to say, 1. Tartaria Precopensis, 2. Asiatica, 3. Antiqua, 4. Zagathay, and 5. Cathay.

1. TARTARIA PRECOPENSIS. Crim-Tartars.

TARTARIA PRECOPENSIS is bounded on the East with the River Tanais, now Don; on the West, with the River Borysthenes, now called Nipér, by which last parted from Podolia, a Province of Poland; on the North, with Russia; and on the South, with some part of the Euxine Sea: by this accompt lying totally within Europe.

It had the Name of Precopensis from Precopia, a chief Town thereof. By some called Tartaria Minor, to distinguish it from the greater body of that People: the Inhabitants hereof most commonly passing by the name of Crim-Tartars, from the Town of Crim, in which their Cham or Emperour doth reside most usually. The Country by them now possessed, part anciently of Sarmatia Europæa, was inhabited by a Warlike Nation, called the Tauri: from whom those parts hereof which lye betwixt the Empire of Russia, and the two Rivers Tanais, and Borysthenes, were called Tauro-Scythia; that which shooteth out into the Sea, encompassed with the Euxine on the one side, and Palus Mæotis on the other, being called Taurica Chersonesus. In the Description whereof at this place and time, as formerly I made bold with some part of Asia, to lay together the Estate of the Russian Empire: so now to satisfy for that trespass, I shall make bold with part of Europe, to lay together the discourse and affairs of Tartary.

The whole Country plentiful of Fruits, and the Soil indifferently disposed to Tillage and Grazing, though more accustomed unto the last: the people more delighting in their Herds of Cattel, than in the fulness of their Garners. Camels, Horse, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats they have plenty of; great store of delicate Fowl, and abundance of Fish, bred in the large Fens of Mæotis: and in their Forests plenty of all sorts of Venison. Which Character as it belongeth generally to all the Country, so most especially to the Chersonese, or Demy-Island. United to the main Land with so narrow an Isthmus, that the Tartars once went about to dig it thorow; from whence some say they had the name of Precopenses, Precoph in the Sclavonian Tongue, signifying a deep Trench, or digging through. In length not above 24 German, or 96 Italian miles; in breadth but 60 of the one, or 15 of the other. Blest with a very temperate Air, and a gentle Winter: which beginning with the last of December, ends the first of March. Never extreme; and when the frosts are at the sharpest, but of short continuance. Divided in the midst with a Chain of Hills, extended from the East to the West; the boundary of the Dominions of the Turk and Tartar.

The people of the same complexion and composition as the rest of the Tartars; and not much different in manners. Their Diet, Roots, Cheese, Garlick; and of the poorer sort, for the most part Horse-flesh, (none but the better sort presuming upon Beef or Vention, though of both abundance) which they eat without Bread, or any thing else: and therefore when they go to the Wars, every Souldier takes two Horses with him, the one to serve upon, and the other to kill. And yet for all this havock which they make of Horse-flesh, there are few years in which

which they sell not 45 or 50 thousand in the Fairs of Moscow. Towns they had money, and were willing to maintain trade which were lent to their Lords. Nor have they except men of Tatars and Moscovites any standing in arms; removing up and down with their droves of Cattle, moving their houses with them (which they build on wheels) from one place to another. Of Money they make no mention, preferring Lead and Steel before other things, but use money still to them for Swords and Pistols, and small Shields for the most part, especially at the Siege of Orsk; to which I was accustomed from their Customers, for they can shoot as readily backward as forward. I learned also of the Artines to the Angulife, who are like Bandoggers, Turkish Savvaters, and their Hussars of Armes. None can be vanquished but by death, as they are ready rather to die than be taken Prisoners. But the Victors are more intent upon taking Captives, especially young Boys and Girls, whom they sell to the Turks than upon any other booty or spoils of War.

The Religion most universal and countenanced is that of Jesus Christ, mingled with some of their old Principles of Idolatry: for they confess that CHRIST shall be the Judge both of the quick and dead in the day of Judgment; and punish those that speak irreverently of him.

are regard more favourable to the Christians than other Antichristians; which makes great Hosts of Grecian and Roman Christians to dwell upon it them. The Language which they speak is their own Partavian, but written with most of the Syriack & Turkish Tongues, which we write, they use either Chaldean, or Arabic Characters. See Sir John Chardin, pag. 67.

Rivers, and contribute in it, the 1. Boyithicus, and 2. Tanais, which both have their spring-heads in the Empire of Russia (as is there declared) have their falls in this the first in the Euxine, in the 5th, the other into Palus Maotis in the 67th degree of Longitude; by which we may conjecture somewhat of the length of the Country. 3. Iberus. 4. Carcinatus, falling into the Euxine. 5. Agaris, and 6. Byces, which lose themselves in the Fens of Alcotis; as do also 7. Pasiascus, 8. Gerus 9. Lycus, from the main Land; and 10. Istrianus from the Taurian Chersonese. By the confluence of which waters, and many others falling into the Asian side, the Lake or Fens of Alcotis are of great extent, in compass at least a thousand Miles; well stored with Fish, and still retaining somewhat of sweetness of those many Rivers which are emptied into it. So called from the Alcota, who formerly inhabited on the Banks hereof; and giving name to all excellent kind of Fish which were called Meotides by the Ancients. At this day generally called Mar d. le Zabake, by the Italians commonly Mar della Tana, the Sea of Tanais, and sometimes also Mer Bianco, or the white Sea, no difference it from the Euxine, which they call the Black, for the reasons formerly delivered. Passing directly towards the South, it is streightned by a narrow-Channel, not above four miles in breadth, though about 24 in length, called anciently by the name of Bosphorus Cimmerius; Bosphorus, because Oxen did use to swim over; Cimmerius from the Cimmeri who possessed the adjoining Countrey on the Asian side: but known at this day by the name of Stretto di Caffa, from the City Capba near unto it; and by the Inhabitants, Vospero, more near the Original. Out of this Streight that confluence of waters which do meet in the Meotick Fens, do make their way into the Euxine, according to that of Lucan.

Quaque fretum currens Mæotidas egerit undas.

Where the Mæotick Pool at last

Thorow a narrow Streight makes haft.

Chief Cities of it at present, 1. Capha, or Cassa, in the Chersonese, not far from the Streight, called hence Stretto de Cassa; a flourishing Empory, and furnished with a large and capacious Haven. Heretofore possessed by the Genoese, who by the benefit of this Port, and the Plantation which they had in Perah on the North side of Constantinople, engrossed into their own hands the whole Trade of the Euxine. Taken by Mithomet the Great, Anno 1475. it became subject to the Turks, and drew into that unal-dom all the Southern parts of the Chersonese, which depended on it: deprived thereby of the greatest part of its former lustre, the Christian Churches being destroyed, the Towers and publick buildings razed; the houses of Genoa Merchants which were fair and beautiful, destroyed and ruined: yet still the principal of this Biland, or Demy- Island; and anciently better known by the name of The- odusia, and by that name remembered in Ammianus. See J. de Chardin, who saw this City, saith it is a great Town built at the foot of a small hill upon the Sea Shore, stretching N. and S. and having strong walls which end in the Sea both ways; so that it appeareth at Sea in the form of an half Moon. On the South it hath a Castle which is the Seat of the Turkish Basha. It is thought to have 4000 Houses, 800 of which are Inhabited by Christians. The Lands about it are dry and sandy, and the Water not good, but the Air is very pure, provisions are very cheap, but the fruits unpleasant. He saw in 40 days whilest he was here 400 Sail of Ships go out and come in. Their Trade consists in Salt-Fish, Corn, Butter, and Cheese, all of it driven by the Turks and Jews. The Ge- netians in 1672. were denied a Trade here. Chardin, pag.

67. Tavernier, pag. 113. and 115. 2. Perecop, in Latin called Perecopia; a Town and Castle situate in or near the place, where stood the Eupateria of the Ancients, called also Pompeiopolis, I'eraclea, Achillis Curfus, and Isthmus, and so commanding both the Euxine, and the Lakes of Maotis, as Corinth betwixt the Aegean and Ionian Seas.
This City is built on the neck of Land which joyns the Peninsula to the Continent, and is the Bulwark to all the rest; and therefore the Russ have often attempted to gain it, but they could never get up to it by reason of the great distance, and desolate Lands between them and this Town; so that the Summer is spent before their Armies can march so far; I have not yet met with any Traveller that hath given any account of the present state of it. 3. Corfunum, the Chersonesus of Ptolomy, anciently a Greek Colony; and then accounted for the chief of the whole Peninsula: rich, populous, and well-traded, by reason of the Haven which was safe and large; and of great beauty and magnificence, as the ruins testifie. By the Turks at this day called Sari-Germanum, or the Yellow Tower, the soyl about it being of a Saffron colour. 4. Ger- man or Crim, the ancient Seat of the Chams, or Princes of these Tatars; and at that time the fairest and greatest of this Biland: Situate in the midlt hereof, and fortified with a strong Castle, for the height of the Walls, and depth of the ditch esteemed impregnable: supposed to be the Taprae of Pliny, or the Taphros of Ptolomy: Mentioned by Florus, as then lately taken by some Roman Emperour, and so most likely to be Trajan, the first that ever extended the Roman Empire beyond Danubius, and the Euxine: Situate in the very Center of the Peninsula, equally distant from Perecop and Cassa; Baudrand saith, upon what authority I know not, that it is very small now, and not much better than a Village: what the Reverend Author saith of the situation of this place belongs to Perecop. 5. Panticapaeum, situate on the very Bosphorus, and now called Vospero by the Natives: the ancientest City of this Peninsula, and said by Ammianus to be the mother of all the Greek Colonies, which were planted in it. 9. Tanas, the Tanais of Ptolomy and other Ancients, because situate on the mouth of that River; or rather betwixt the two mouths of it, distant from one another a degree of Longitude. A Town of great Trade, and well frequented by the Merchants of all those Countries, which border on the Euxine Sea: but subject to the Turks, who have there a Garrison, and by them called Azac and Asoph; it has a large Haven, and a strong Castle which stands upon the River; in the year 1569, when the Turks went to the Siege of Asfracan, the heavy Cannon were sent by Sea to this City, and were intercepted by the Russ before they came to the Camp at Asfracan; which ruined the Turkish design and Army. Guagninus Hist. Poland. In 1638 it was taken by the Russ, and upon a false accusation it cost Cyrillus Lucaris, then Patriarch of Constantinople, his Life. The Russ enjoyed it quietly till 1641, when it was besieged with the loss of 11000 Turks and not taken: The next year the Turks returned with a greater Army and Fleet, and the Czar of Russia refusing to aid his own Cossacks, then possessed of the Town, it was pillaged, burnt, dismantled, and left an heap of Rubbish before the Turks came up, and so then retired. The Turks immediately fell to the repair of it. It is, saith my Author, built on the side of an hill, in form four square, 1200 paces about, fortified with ancient Walls, flanked with capacious Towers, and having a Castle in the middle on the water-side, which divideth the City into two parts; but the Garrison was not above 400 men when it was taken from the Turks. Heretofore it was a well-traded Mart, but was then an unregarded Frontier. Sir Paul Rycaut's continuation of the Turkish History, pag. 35. 52. and 53. 7. Ingermenum, situate on a large and lofty Mountain, and fortified with a Tower or Castle of stone; under which there is a Church, with great Charge and Art cut of the Rock: formerly of great wealth and fame, now decayed and ruinous. 8. Jamboli, by some called Belachium. 9. Mancopia, by the Turks called Mangutum. 10. Circum; all boasting of their several Castles. 11. Oczakow, or Oczacovia, situate near the influx of the great River *Borysbene*s, into the Bay of Carcinitis, and so most like to be built in the place of that which Ptolomy calleth Olbia; Pliny, Olbiopolis: Honoured of late times (since the taking of Taurica by the Turks) with the residence of the Great Cham: from whence these Tartars are by some called Olsenenses. This is (saith Gauguinus) at this day a City, and has a Castle Garrison'd by the Turks, tho' the Preccopenian Tartars inhabit the City. Whether it be the Axiote of Ptolomy I know not; but the present Pile was certainly built by Vitoldus Duke of Lithuania, a Colony of his Subjects planted in it. Thus far he. Near this City, in 1644, the Poles gave the Tartars a great overthrow. It lies 40 Polish miles from Perecop to the West. 12. Metropolis, as Ptolomy, or rather Melitopolis, as Pliny calleth it; a Colony in old times of the Milesians, not far from Olbia. Besides all which, and many others mentioned by the ancient Writers, of which there is nothing now remaining; the Court of the Great Cham in Summer time makes a moveable City, built upon Wheel-houses, and transported from one place to another, as occasion serveth; which houses at every station are orderly disposed of into Streets and Lanes, and by the Tartars are called Agara, or a Town of Carts.

The reason why there is so few Towns or Cities in Tartary, is from that Nation's way of living; they rove about a large and spacious Country, and employ themselves in nothing but War, Rapine, feeding Cattle, which is their only Treasure; and Fishing. They will curse their Children in their Anger, May you live in one place till the stench of your Dung comes up into your Nostrils. No part of the Country is settled or divided to any man, but lies all in common to the whole Nation. They have no Manufactures, no Trade, but for Horses and Slaves; and they sell not only what they take in War, but their own Children, and what they can steal from their Neighbour Clans. They have no Husbandry, sow no Corn, eat no Bread, wear nothing but skins of beasts, and a coarse Cloath which they make themselves, and employ a great part of it in coverings for their Tents. They never built any one of the Towns or Cities in their Country, but they in the Peninsula were built by the Greeks and Genoese, and those on the Nieper by the Lithuanians. When Christianity prevailed amongst the old Scythians some Towns and Cities were built, but about the year 1200 the irruption of the Tartars ruined all. So that what the Reverend Dr. Heylin saith of the Towns and Cities in Tartary, is transcribed from ancient Histories, and is not true of them at this day. Cassa, Azac or Asoph, and Ocsacom, are kept up by the Turks and not by the Tartars, who might have these Towns if they would, but they do not desire them. The Russ have prevailed greatly against the Tartars by nothing more than the building Forts and strong holds in their Country; and from thence making incursions on them, till they forced them to submit, and then by degrees Civilizing them. The Russ Nation have an infinite number of these Tartar Slaves in all places; and one of the best things that can possibly be done for the English, in the great scarcity of People brought upon us by our western Plantations, were to pass first an Act of Parliament, for the reviving Vilénage, and the enjoying them and their Children; and then the entering into a Treaty with the Czar of Russia, for a liberty to export them. The reason why I mention this here, is because they are an hardy people, and are fitter for our cold Climate than the Negroes; and might in a short time be taught to till our Lands, and they would be cheaper fed and maintained every way than our English can be, and be more at command: and by mixing them with Negroes we might in a few years have a great plenty of Servants, and our own people might be employed in Navigation, Manufactures, and the governing and overseeing these Servants; and without this our Nation will be desolated, and our Husbandry, and consequently our Nobility and our Gentry, will be ruin'd. The ancient Inhabitants hereof were of Scythian Race; for by that name elder Writers call not only the true and proper Scythians, lying on both sides of Imaus; but even the Sauromatae or Sarmatians also; and those not only of Sarmatia Asiatica, bordering next unto them; but even such European Nations, as lived on the Northern banks of Isther, and the Euxine Sea. And so they are affirmed to be by Ptolomy himself; though otherwise more exact than any, in distinguishing Sarmatia Europea from Asiatica, and Asiatica from the Scythians. For speaking of the Nations of Sarmatia Europea, inhabiting on the Palus Maotis, he ranks them thus, Kai par' ollw tlu pleuegn t' Maotid, &c. i. e. and all along the Coasts of Maotis, dwell the Fazyges (distinct from those called Metanastæ) and the Rboxolani; and more within the Land, the Ilamaxobii and Alani, Scythians. More towards the banks of the Euxine, and in the Chersonese itself, dwell the ancient Tauri, subdivided into the several Nations of the Sinchi, Napæi and Arinchi; by the said Ptolomy included in the general name of Tauro Scythæ. To none but these, of all the European Sarmatians, doth he give this name. And therefore I conceive them to have been those Scythians, against whom Darius King of Persia made his fruitless war. Picking a quarrel with this People, because their King had denied to give him one of his Daughters to Wife; or to revenge, as others more probably say, the inroad which the Scythians formerly had made into Asia, he drew together an Army of 700 thousand. Passing over the Thracian Bosphorus, he came at last to the banks of Isther, where it parteth Moldavia and Bulgaria; and there for the passage of his men caused a Bridge to be built, to the keepers whereof he left a Cord of 60 knots, commanding them every day to untie one knot; and if he came not back before all were untied, to return to their houses. This done, he marched towards his Enemies, who still fled before him, leading him into the most desert and uninhabitable parts of their Country, and when they had brought him into a streight, sent Embassadors to him with a Bird, a Mouse, a Frog, and an handful of Arrows; willing the Persians, if they could, to expound that Riddle. Darius, willing to hope the best of his design, conjectured that the Scythians did submit unto him, by delivering into his hands their Air, Earth, Water, and Arms, Hieroglyphically signified in their Present: But Gobrias, one of their seven Princes, made this Exposition, That if the Persians could not fly like a Bird thorow the Air, or like a Mouse creep under the Earth, or like a Frog swim over the Water, they could by no means escape the Scythian Arrows. And to say truth this Commentary best agreed with the Text. For these Scythians following close upon him, or rather driving him before, and vexing him with continual skirmishes, forced forced him to make such haste to get over the River, that he lost 80000 of his men in fight and flight. This was the only memorable Action of these European Scythians in those elder ages: more memorable in the times succeeding for their horrid cruelty, than any argument of their valour. For it is said of these Tauri, or Tauro Scythæ, that for the pleasing of their Gods, especially of Diana, whom they called Orsiloebe, they used to sacrifice all such strangers as they could lay hands on; and with their heads most barbarously adorned the Walls of her Temples. An inhumanity with which the Christian Advocates of the Primitive times did much use to upbraid the Gentiles; taunting them with the Sacrifices of Diana Taurica, (so named from hence) as inconsistent with the nature of a God or goodness; most rightly giving them this brand or censure, that they were not Sacra, but Sacrilegia. Et præstat profanus esse quam sic religiosus. Better it was to be no Religion, than of one so cruel.

But to go forwards with the story, In the actions of the Greeks and Romans we hear nothing of them, unless it were that the Emperour Trajan (as Florus seems to intimate) took the City of Taphre: Which if he did, he added by that action somewhat to his own honour, but nothing to the Roman Empire: this people being never reckoned amongst the Provinces. Nor hear we any thing by name of their infesting the Roman Territories (as the other barbarous Nations did:) except they passed in the account of the Goths, Alani, Hunns, Avars, or other of the Scythian, or Sarmatian People; by which the Majesty of that Empire was trod under foot. But what the Persians, Greeks, and Romans were not able to do, was with ease effected by the Tartars: who in the time of Jocchata, or Hoccata, the next to Cingis, under the conduct of Batbu, or Roydo, one of their most renowned Commanders, subdued all these parts; together with Russia on the North, Bulgaria, and Hungaria, on the East. Subject at first to the Command of the great Cham of Cathai, as the rest of the Tartarians were. In the Year 1250 the Tartars first entered the Taurick Chersonese. In 1252 they took Caffa from the Genoese. William de Rubruquis, who in 1253 crossed Tartary, found this Chersonese, call'd then Gassaria, or Cassaria, that is Casaria; there was then in it three Cities, that on the West side was then called Kersona, now Cassovia or Cassovia; where he pretends St. Clement suffered Martyrdom; and over against it he saw an Island in the Sea, in which was a Church pretended to be built by Angels. In the middle, on the South Cape, was the second City called Soldia, over against Sinope in the lesser Asia; and this was the great Port for the Turkish Merchants from the lesser Asia. On the East side, was Matriga, where the Tanais falls into the Euxine by a Mouth 12 Miles over. The great Ditch on the North side was then cut, and all the Plain Country without the Chersonese was inhabited, before the Invasion of the Tartars, by a Scythian Nation, called the Comani, who forced the Cities in this part to pay them a yearly Tribute. The Tartars drove so vast a number of these Comanians into the Chersonese before them when they invaded it, that the Living eat the Dead, (as a Merchant told him who saw it with his Eyes) preying upon the raw Carcasses like Dogs. Will. de Rub. Cap. 1. This War proved in the end the total Extirpation of the Comanians, who all Perished by Hunger, the Sword, and Sickness, or were made Slaves by the Tartars. These Tartars came at last to have a Prince of their own; one Lochtan Cham, descended from the aforesaid Batbu, and (as it was pretended) of the blood of Cingis. They grew at last of so great power, by conquering the Asiatick Tartars which lay nearest to them, that Mahomet the Great thought fit to keep them down before grown too strong for him: and therefore under colour of taking in the City of Capha then possessed by the Genoese, made himself Master of the greatest part of the Taurican Chersonese, and the Port of Tanais; thereby commanding both Mæotis and the Euxine Sea. In the time of Selimus the first, who had married a Daughter of this Crim Tartar, (for so they call him) and was aided by him with an Army of 15000 men against his Father, the Turks and these Tartarians grew into a League. The chief Conditions of it were, that the Tartar should aid the Turk upon all occasions, with 60000 Horse, if it were required; that they shall not make War with any of their neighbours, (except the Muscovite) without leave of the Turk; that they shall pay yearly to the Grand Signior in the way of Tribute 300 Christians; that the new Cham, upon the death or deposition of his Predecessor, shall receive from the Great Turk a Royal Banner, in token of his Confirmation in that estate; that in reward of these services, the Crim Tartar shall have yearly from the Grand Signior 5500 Ducats, in the way of Pension; and succeed finally in the Turkish Empire, if ever the male Issue of the House of Ottoman should chance to fail. According unto this agreement, the Tartars have been aiding to the Turks from time to time, against the Persians, Polanders, Hungarians, Moldavians, and indeed whom not? and that with great and puissant Armies; the great Cham sometimes arming 150000 of his own Subjects, (leaving but one man in an house to attend their Cattel;) and sometimes adding 50000 Circassians, and others of the Asian Tartars. And for the Muscovite, whom he is left at liberty to assault by this Capitulation, he hath had so hard an hand upon him, that in the year 1571 they pierced as far as to the City of Mosco, and set fire on the Suburbs: which flaming into the City, built most of wood, and then reckoned to be 30 Miles in compass, within the space of four hours burnt the greatest part of it; and therein no fewer than 800000 of all sorts of people. A quarrel not to be composed; the Tartar not only laying claim to the Kingdom of Casan, and Astrachan, which the Russ possesseth; but even to Moscovy it self, as hath there been shewn. Nothing so punctual is the Turk on his part, to perform the contract; who not content to have the Tartar for his friend, or at the worst his Homager, hath of late times attempted to make him his Slave or Vassal. For Amurath the third, quarrelling with Mahomet the Crim Tartar, for a design to intercept Osman-Bassa in his way from Persia to Constantinople, authorized the said Osman to war upon him: by whom the poor Crim and his two Sons, betrayed by some of his own Councillors (corrupted with Turkish Gold) were strangled with a Bowstring; Islan a Brother of the Crim, first sworn a Vassal to the Turk, put into the place; and over him a Turkish Beglerbeg or Bassa, to command in chief. What hopes he hath of succeeding in the Turkish Empire, if the house of Ottoman should fail, hath been already taken into consideration, in our discourse upon that subject.

What the Revenue of this Prince is, it is hard to say; his Subjects having little Money, and living most upon the bartery of their Cattel. But besides what he hath in Lands or Customs, and the 5500 Ducats which he receiveth yearly from the Turk, he hath the tenth of all the spoils which are got in the Wars, and a Checkine for every Captive, for some two or three (whosoever taketh them) according unto their Estates.

As for his power, what he can do in Horse, we have seen already; as for Foot, and Ammunition, and other necessities, he is supplied with them by the Turk, (who doth sometimes espouse his quarrels:) by whose assistance they have brought the Muscovites to some extremities. And upon confidence of the favour and protection of the Grand Signior, the Cham then being, upon the death of Stephen Bathori, (whom Amurath the third commended to the Crown of Poland) sent Embassadors to negotiate his Election to that Kingdom; and to induce them therunto promised them in his Letters, amongst other things, that their Pope should be his Pope, their Luther his Luther; and that rather than put them unto any charge to find his Table, he could live with Horse-flesh. His Emballie entertained with Laughter, as it well deserved.

2. TARTARIA DESERTA.

TARTARIA DESERTA is bounded on the West, with Preopentis, and the Empire of Russia; on the East, with Antipia, and Zagathay; from which last parted by the River Sine, which falleth into the Caspian Sea about the middle of it, and with the great Lake of Kitay, from East to West; on the North, with the Scythic or Frozen Ocean; and on the South, with part of the Euxine Sea, the Caucasian Mountains, and some part of the Caspian.

It took this name from the many Deserts which are in it; and is call'd also Asiatica, to difference it from Preopentis, which is wholly in Europe: or because it taketh up the whole continent of Sarmatia Asiatica, according to the bounds thereof laid down by Ptolemy, except some part hereof incorporated to the Russian Empire.

The Country of it self sufficiently fruitful, if well manured; and were it in the hands of a laborious and industrious people, would yield large increase: as appears by the ill-husbandry of the Tartars, who sow nothing on it but Asill and Punicum (grains unknown to us) and yet without giving it any tillage, receiving very plentiful returns of both. But the Tartar being a Nation that hateth Agriculture, and laugheth at Christians for living on the tops of Reeds, (so they call our bread) neglect all that which is not of a rank Pasture for their Herds and Cattel: moving from one place to another, as the Grass faileth them; which maketh it so full of Deserts, and so empty of Towns as to deserve the name of Tartaria Deserta.

The People or Inhabitants of it are of several sorts, derived from three several Originals, and disposed of in three several parts. 1. The Samoyeds, dwelling towards the Northern Ocean, who are wholly Idolaters, now reckoned as a part of Zagathay, and there we shall hear further of them. 2. The Circassians, bordering on the Euxine, for the most part Christians; and, 3. the Tartars, planted betwixt both, being all Idolaters. These again subdivided into several Tribes, which they call their Hordes: of which the most considerable are, 1. The Nagaian Tartars, 2. The Zavolhenses, 3. The Thumunenses, 4. The Kirgessii; besides the Hordes or Kingdoms of Casan, and Astrachan, added unto the Empire of Russia, where described already; and others of inferiour note, not here considerable.

But before we come to speak with these people in their several places, we must first look upon the whole Country, as presented to us under the name of Sarmatia Asiatica; bounded by Ptolemy as before, save that it did extend more Westwards; and was unknown to him, in the Northern parts of it: now possessed by the Moscovite. So populous in the time of that Author, that he giveth us the names of forty several Nations which did then inhabit it, and of about as many Towns of good estimation. Of which there are but few or none remaining; and for the names of some of the principal of them, we shall have them presently.

Rivers of most note in it, 1. Marabius, 2. Rombitis, the Greater, and, 3. the less; 4. Antecus, 5. Theophanius, 6. Psatthis, 7. Theysiris, 8. Corax, and 9. Vardanes; all of them falling into the Euxine, and Maotic Fens. 10. Vidonis, 11. Alnata, and 12. Rba, paying their tributes to the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. Of these the principal is Rba, by the modern Latines called Volgo; by the Tartars, Edi; rising in Russia, not far from the City of Mosco, (where we have described it.) Most memorable, besides the seventy Mouths or Channels, wherein it openeth into the Caspian, for a Medicinal and wholesome root growing on both sides thereof; which the Physicians call Rba, by the name of the River; and for Distinction sake, Rba-Pontick, to difference it from Rhubarb, or Rba Barbarum, as of a different nature from it; this last being purgative, and the other more apt to bind. 13. Ob, a River unknown to Ptolemy, rising out of the Lake of Kitay, a Lake in bigness like the Sea, and full of many little Islands (most of them inhabited.) Which River at its first parting from this Lake, is said to be of 8 miles breadth; and growing still bigger and bigger, emptieth it self at last in the Northern Ocean: the present boundary betwixt the Russian, and the People in the North of this Country. The Rufs say this River is 80 Versts or Russia Miles over, a great distance from the Sea: Hackluit. Tom. 1. pag. 593. If this is true (for I much suspect it, none of our People having ever seen it) then it is the greatest River by far in the World, which is not at all probable. It is now accounted the North Eastern boundary of Europe and Asia, and is certainly the boundary between the Rufs and the Great Cham of Tartary, whose Dominions reach from hence to the Chinian Ocean in the East, including all the Countries in that space, with China it self.

Principal Mountains of this part, 1. Corax, giving name unto the River issuing out of it. 2. Montes Hippici, extended towards the Caspian Sea. 3. Montes Ceramici, lying in the furthest parts hereof (then known to my Author) to the North and East. 4. Caucasus, or Caucijii Montes, extended from the Euxine to the Caspian Seas; and parting Sarmatia Asiatica from Colchis, Iberia, and Albania; A chain of Hills of which Aristotle saith, Acumine & latitudine omnium maximi, &c. that for height and breadth they are the greatest of the East; the tops whereof are lightned by the Sun beams in midnight till almost day-break, when it is dark night in the valleys beneath. Not passable for horse or foot (except they creep along by the Euxine shore) but at one place only, called Sarmaticæ Pyle, or the Gates of Sarmatia; by others named Caucasice Portæ, from the Hills adjoyning. Situate in the 81 degree of Latitude; and not far from the Caspian Sea: but that so intricate and narrow, that very small force may keep it against strong Armies. Riphei Montes, on the West between Russia, and the Samoyeds, now call'd Petzora, and by the Rufs call'd Zienmoipoias, that is, the Girdle of the World. The tops of it are always naked, and covered with Snow; yet on the sides grow Cedar Trees, and it affords the blackest Sables in the World. These are the Hyperborean Mountains so celebrated of old. So high they are, that some Rufs spent seventeen days in ascending it, and yet never gained the top; so that they that go to the Province of Petzora beyond it, go by Ustiga, Dwina, and Permia, 250 Polish Miles about. Guagninus. They stretch from North to South, a vast length. So carefully did Almighty God in his Heavenly Providence, shut up this fierce and barbarous People, from the rest of Mankind, by such unfordable Waters, and unpassable Mountains: not to be freed out of this Prison, till he thought good to use them, as the Executioners of his wrath and vengeance, for the punishment of sinful and impenitent Nations. This said, we will consider those particular Nations, which before we named, and are now possessed of it in their several places.

1. Opposite to the Preopenses lie the CIRCASSIANS, extended from the Cimmerian Bosphorus and the Fens of Maotis, towards the Eastern shores of the Euxine Sea for the space of 500 miles; and reaching 200 miles towards the North. The name imposed on them by the Tartars, whereas, before they were called by Phry, Zigæ, by some Writers, Zichy, conceived to be the Zinchi of Ptolemy.

The Country is very fitly seated for Trade and Merchandise, as having a fair and large Sea-coast, with many Rivers opening into it (nine of those spoken of before, passing thorow these Tracts:) and not a few capacious Bays, and commodious Havens. Of which the principal were Sinus Cerceticus, or the Bay of Cercetis, Syncla, and Bata, two known Havens, and specified by my Author with the adjunct of Portus. Ptolemy, Lib. 9. Cap. 1. But these conveniences not much looked after by the present Inhabitants, who are more inclined to the Wars, than to Trades, or Merchandize. A Stout and Military People, trained to their Weapons from their Childhood, and sold as soon as trained to it by unnatural Parents. For from these parts did the Mamelucks of Agypt fetch their first first Original; and from hence supply themselves with a perpetual Seminary of Slaves and Souldiers, raised by degrees unto the highest dignities of that slavish Empire; And from these parts the Persian Sophies are supplied with their Cozzel-Bassas, disciplined and instructed by them like the Turkish Janizaries.

The Christian Faith was here planted in the year 860 or thereabouts, by the Ministry of Cyrill (or Chiuril) and Metbodius; employed in that service by the Patriarch of Constantinople. In which respect their Churches are of the Greek Communion, conforming thereto in Rites and Doctrine, and of the jurisdiction of that Patriarch: but differing from them very much in matters practical. For it is ordinary with these half Christians, not to baptize their Children till eight years old; to hear divine Service standing without their Churches, into which they very seldom enter (especially the Gentlemen) till the fortieth, or (as some say) the sixtieth year of their age: dividing the whole course of their life betwixt God and the Devil, in dedicating their youth unto Theft and Robbery, their old age (when they can no longer commit those villanies) to the difficult business of repentance. Tavernier, a French Gentleman, gives a large account of the Country, Manners and Religion of this barbarous Nation: The Country, saith he, is pleasant, and full of variety; abounding in Springs and Rivers, yet it hath no Fish. It has delicate Flowers, Strawberryes, and a vast plenty of Tree-fruits, easily produced: Cattle in abundance, and Race-horses; Goats, and Sheep, whose wool is equal to that of Spain, which they sell to the Russ. They have no Corn but Barly, and Millet; but they have Venison and Fowl in vast plenty. They are very Thievish, preying in the Night one upon another, and are neither Christians nor Mahometans; all their Religion consisting in certain Ceremonies. There is neither City nor Fort in all their Country, but certain Villages all round, and with a round Piazza in the middle. Pag. 128, 129. Guagninus gives them the character of a strong and valiant Nation, who trusting to the mountains about them, do easily defend themselves against the incursions of the Turks. They have a peculiar Language, profess Christianity after the Russ manner, and have their Divine Offices in the Sclavonian Tongue. They are great Pyrats upon the Palus Maotus and the Euxine, to the damage of the Turks.

Places of most observation amongst the ancients, 1. Cimmerium, a Town and Promontory, so called from the Cimmerii, once the chief People of these parts, of whom more anon; situate on the very shore of the Bosphorus, from hence denominated. 2. Phanagoria, in old times a well traded Empory; situate on a little Island raised out of the Sea, by the care and industry of the Greeks, who had here a Factory. 3. Apathurgus, by Pliny called Apaturum, memorable for a Temple of Venus surnamed Apaturia (which name she gave unto this place;) because (saith Strabo) when the Giants assaulted her, she craved help of Hercules, who slew them all one after another. 4. Gerusa, by Ptolomy honoured with the title of Civitas, the Gargaza of Diodorus, now called St. George's. 5. Oenuntia, near the mouth of the River Thebyris. 6. Araza, more within the Land, which with 7. Ampfacis, hath the name of a City also. The names of their chief Havens we have seen before. But few of these, or any other mentioned by the Ancient Authors, being now visible in their ruins: the chief of those which are now extant, are 1. Locoppa, 2. Conioce; but of no great note. The best description of this Coast is that in Ptolomy, it being much more frequented, and better known in his time than in ours. The reason of which is, the Turks shutting up the Navigation of the Euxine, against all other Nations but their own.

The People anciently, though divided into the several Tribes of the Thirsagatae, Zigae, Turcae, the Huns, Avarae, and Maotae, all noted Nations; besides the Coaxtræ, Zinchi, Tyrambae, Pselii, and others as obscure as they, were better known by the name of Cimmerians, in which those several Tribes concentrated. Descended in the right of that common original, from Gomer the Son of Japhet, first planted in the Mountainous places of Albania: his Posterity known by the name of Gomerii, afterwards Cimmerii, left there a memorial of themselves in the Mountains called Cimmerini. But that Country proving both too barren, and too narrow for them, some of them passed into Phrygia Major, where they built the City Cimmeris, not unknown to Pliny, in whose time it was extant: and others in some Tract of Time, keeping the Euxine on their left hand, fixed themselves in these parts; here giving name to the Town and Promontory Cimmerion, to the Cimmerian Bosphorus, and generally to all the people descended of them. From these particularly, as the stout and valiant Nation of the Cimbri, do derive their Pedegree; so from these and the Children of Mesoch, Magog and Tubal, the Sarmatians both of Europe and Asia, the Moscovites, and perhaps the Scythians, are to fetch their Original: all of them great and puissant Nations, and all involved promiscuously in the name of Scythians. Renowned for no other action more than the memorable Expedition, which they made into Media in the Greater, and Lydia in the Lesser Asia: the Cimmerians by themselves alone, or by them as principal; the rest of these Sarmatians in a body together as a Scythian People. Distressed with want, or to disburden their small Country of superfluous multitudes, these Cimmerii in the time of Nabukassar, or Salmanassar, King of Assyria, communicating their design with the rest of the Scythians, to enlarge their quarters; holding along the course of the Euxine Sea, and passing thorow the Country of Colchis, first seized on some parts of Pontus and Paphlagonia. Where having fortified the Promontory on which Sinope was after built; and leaving there their Carriages, and the weakest of their Train with sufficient guards, they marched into Lydia, reputed (as it was indeed) for a wealthy Region. There they possessed themselves of Sardis, the Royal City; and after of the rest of the Country, or the most part of it, Ardes the Son of Giges, who then reigned in Lydia, not being able to withstand them. Both sides being wearied with long War, and grown more pliant by degrees unto one another (as in like case betwixt the Saxons and the Danes) it proved no difficult matter for Halyattes, the Grand-child of Ardis, to compound the business: assigning to the Cimmerians all those parts of his Dominions, which lay beyond the River Halys; and settling his Lydians in the rest. By this transaction there were so good correspondences betwixt the Nations, that when Cyaxares King of the Medes, invaded the Country of these Cimmerians, under colour of the invasion which the Scythians had made in Media, Halyattes did espouse the quarrel, and appeared in their aid. In following times, growing into confidence of one another, and mixt in Marriages and blood, they became one People; or at least passed not under the account of strangers, or the name of Aliens. Such end had this most notable expedition of these Cimmerians; not much remembered after this, for the like undertakings. Yet here they held their own, though in other names, governed by many Petty-Princes, but all associated with Mitridates against the Romans: that King being so great amongst them, that his Son Archares having married into some of their Families, was made King of Bosphorus. But Archares having made his peace with Lucullus, the Romans never looked this way. Nor hear we much of them in succeeding times, till the invasion of the Tartars; by whom subdued, they acknowledge at first the great Cham for their Sovereign Lord; whose power declining, they have successively been subject to the Crim-Tartar, the Turk, and Muscovite; but most commonly to the Crim-Tartar, as their nearest neighbour, and most able to hurt them. And him they furnished on command with 50000 horse for the Grand Signior's Service. Yet so that they supply the Persians with his Cozzel-Bassas, and sometimes serve under him for pay, as they do under any which will entertain them. Governed like the Swissers, by their several Commonalties: yet so, that every Commonalty hath some principal man (which the Swissers have not)

not) whom they call Morseys, (that is Dukes) to direct and order them.

2. Betwixt these and the River Volga dwell the ZAVOLHENSES, one of the greatest Hords or Tribes of all the Tartars; and therefore called Horda Magna. Of these the Crim, or Precopenses were a Castling only; proceeding out of this great Swarm or nest of Hornets, though afterwards they became their Masters. Of the Country or the People, we say nothing here, having sufficiently spoken of both already. Their chief Town hath the name of Bolgar, situate on the River Volga, and from thence so named: Volgar and Bolgar differing but little in Orthography, and not much in sound.

This Country, as I take it by the situation, should be that which Ptolomy calleth Mithridatis Regio: whether so called in honour of him by the Princes of the neighbouring Cimmerians, with whom he had contracted allegiance: or that he had made any Conquest there; or from some other Prince of the same name, I determine not. And in this Tract were those two Pillars, advanced unto the honour of Alexander, in Ptolomy called Columnæ Alexandri, in whose time they stood without defacement: there being Altars erected to him, or in memory of him, near the Banks of Tanais, occurring in the same Author by the name of Aræ Alexandri. Which probably occasioned the error of Qu. Curtius, who brings Alexander in pursuit of the Scythian Wars, as far as Tanais: whereas it is apparent by the course of his Actions, that he never got beyond the River Taxartes; distant from Tanais no less than 2000 miles.

This Tribe first governed by its own King, whom they called Ulu-Cham, or the Great Cham, was in the year 1506 subdued by the Crim-Tartar, and made subject to him. Afterwards conquered by Basilus the great Duke of Moscovy, who thereupon assumed the Title of King of Bolgar: which his Successors still preserve, with the Town it self: well garrisoned to keep open the whole course of the River Volga, by which they manage the great Trade of the Caspian Sea. But for the main body of this people they returned again to their obedience to the Crim, as being a Limb of the same body with him; and are subject unto his Commands: though by reason of their neighbourhood to the Moscovite, and commerce with that Nation, they frame themselves both to their language, habit, and behaviour.

3. East of the Zavolhenses, on the other side of the Volga, dwell the NOIHACENSES, or NAGAIANS, spreading as far the borders of Zagathay, and declining Southward towards the Caspian Sea, and the Montes Hippici: Accompted the best men of war of all the Tartars, but more fierce and cruel than the rest; void of all Arts, not having, or contemning Money, or the use of Corn. Horse-flesh and Mares-milk their best diet: the flesh either roasted by the Sun, or heated by continual hanging at the Saddle-bow. And with such cheer (nor worse nor better) did Azim Can, one of the Princes of this Tribe, entertain Jenkinson and other English men in their travels to the Caspian, from the River Volga. This Mr. Jenkinson lived in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth; And this and all his other more remarkable Voyages are in Mr. Hackluit's 1. Vol. of English Travels. Their chief Town, if possibly it deserve that name, is called Scharayirzick, the Residence of one of their Princes; and the next, Sellisture, where the said Jenkinson found the Cham, as in the prime place of his abode. The Government is by several Morseys, the Heads or Chiefs, no doubt, of their several Clans: agreeing well enough together against the Moscovite; whom they infest with frequent inrodes, and put him to the charge of continual Garrisons, at Casan, Astrachan, and Viarka. Their Wars for the most part only Prædatory, rather to get some present booty, than out of any hope to enlarge their Dominion; and therefore commonly pacified, and sent home with Presents. The Great Duke is so good a Statesman, as to think the expense of Money cheaper than that of Blood; especially when he hath to deal with such an Enemy, who hath neither any

Town of consequence, or fixt place of dwelling, and consequently nothing to be got but blows. Their Morseys, formerly more in number, were of late times reduced unto three; of which he of Scharayirzick was the chief: to whose direction and appointment (especially in matters which concerned the publick) the other two do commonly submit themselves.

4. Betwixt the Nagaians, and the Circassians, lie those Tribes which they call the KIRGESSI, spreading as far as to the mouths or influx of the River Volga; but intermixt with the Heslites, and Baschurides, two other of the Tartarian Tribes, but of less power. Their life, for the most part in continual motion, removing with their Wives and Families from one place to another; and governing themselves in their removes, by the sight of the Pole-star. Partly Mahometan, partly Gentile; but the Gentiles make the greater number; not burying their dead bodies, as in other places, but hanging them upon a Tree, though they stink again: certain enough that they will be devoured or sweetened, before they return back to the same Station. Much reverence yet they give their Priests, by whom sanctified and besprinkled in their publick meeting, with a certain mixture compounded of Blood, Milk, Earth, and Cow-dung, a most sweet Confection, but good enough for them that desire no better. And yet with these the Moscovite is fain to hold fair compliance, and to send them every year some Presents for fear they should joyn with the Nagaians: or otherwise disturb him in his Caspian Trade down the River Volga.

5. The THUMENSES or THUMEN TARTARS lie more North than any of these Tartarians; having on the South, the Zavolhenses, and the Territory of Viarka in the Empire of Russia. A Warlike People, and living near a dangerous neighbour; for which cause they do not straggle so abroad in petit companies as the others do, but keep together in great bodies: For the most part much delighted in Negromancy, and Conjurations. In which the Devil so befools them, that he suffereth them to raise Tempests; and sometimes, by Diabolical illusions, to defeat their Enemies. The only Hord of all Deserta, which still continue in obedience to their natural Lord, the Great Cham of Cathay (if such Cham there be.) And unto these we may adjoyn the Molgomozens, all Gentiles, and the most barbarous of all: living in Caves, and feeding upon Worms, and Mice, and Serpents, and such other vermine as would be poyson unto any but such Molgomozens, who are more poysonous than those Creatures.

These Hords, together with the Kingdoms of Casan, and Astrachan, and such of the Russian Provinces as lie on the East of Tanais, and the River of Duina, make up that Country which anciently passed under the name of Sarmatia Asiatica: inhabited originally by the Descendants of Gomer, Mesech, Tubal, Magog, the Sons of Japhet, spreading themselves more Northwards as they grew in numbers out of Albania, Iberia, Colchis, and the Pontick, or Cimerian Nations. Divided into the Tribes or Families of the Olandæ, Gerri, Samocolebi, Socani, Seci, Scimnira, Agarita, Merdi, Canapseni, Chanides, Basilici, Hyperborei, Hippophagi, and others of as little note: these last so called from their eating of Horses, which diet they have left unto their Successors. So like in manners and conditions, to the neighbouring Scythians, that they passed commonly by that name; and by that name are memorable for the great expedition by them made into Asia the Greater, at such time as the Cimmerians fell into Asia Minor. For passing without opposition thorow the Sarmatian Streights, where they might have been easily kept out; and leaving behind them the more barren Country of Albania, they fell into Media: where they were encountered (but victorious) by Phraartes, then King of the Medes: Who finding that he was not able to remove them by force, assayed it by cunning; and first perswaded them to look towards the South, as into richer Countries, and more like to yield them full content. Hereupon upon, full of Prey and Presents, they marched towards Egypt, but were met in Syria by Psammiticus the Egyptian King, who heard of their coming; and thought it best to entertain them on the way, and not to bid them welcome at home to his great cost. Outvying the Median (as of the two the richer Prince) he loaded them with gifts and treasures, and so sent them back again into Media, from whence they came: where for many years they afflicted that People and the neighbouring Provinces, doubling their Tributes, and using all kind of Insolences: till in the end, Cyaxares, the Son and Successor of Phraartes, acquainting some of his most faithful Subjects with his design, caused the better part of them to be plentifully feasted, made them drunk, and slew them; recovering thereby the possession of his whole Estate. Afterwards imitated by the English in their Hock-Tide slaughter. Such of them as escaped this blow, and were not willing to be subject to the Kings of Media, (as many of them were) were suffered to return home by the same way they came; where at their coming, they found foul work made by their Wives and their Slaves, the story whereof we had when we were in Russia. After this we hear nothing of them in the stories of the Greeks, and Romans, unless those Amazons, who attended their Queen Thalestris, when she bestowed a visit on Alexander, were rather of these Sarmatian Amazons, than of those of Pontus and Thermodon, as I think they were: the nearness of their dwelling to Hircania, in which place they found them, inducing me to this opinion. But possible enough it is, (though it be not certain) that some of these Sarmatian Tribes, though by other names, hearing of the successes of the Huns, Avars, and other barbarous Nations, which made havock of the Roman Empire, might joyn themselves unto them, and make up their numbers: those Nations being else too small to compound such Armies, as by them were brought into the field against the Romans, without such like helps. What their Estate had been, since subdued by the Tartars, hath been shewn already.

3. ZAGATHAY.

ZAGATHAY is bounded on the East, with the Mountain Imaus, by which it is parted from Cathay; on the North, with the main Scythick, or Frozen Ocean; on the West, with Tartaria Deserta, from which separated by the River Soane, and the Lake of Kitay; and on the South, with the Caspian Sea, and the River Oxus, by which divided from the Empire of Persia. So called from Zagathay, a brother of one of the Great Chams, on whom it was conferred for his better maintenance; the Scythia intra montem Imaum of the ancient Writers.

The Country spreading out so far, on all sides, as before appeareth, comprehendeth all those Provinces and tracts of ground, which anciently were called, 1. The Country of the Sacæ, 2. Sogdiana, with 3. Zagathay, specially so called, and 4. Turchestan, included anciently in the name of Scythia intra montem Imaum; and 5. the Terra Incognita, which Ptolemy makes to be the Northern boundary of that part of Scythia. By taking a survey of all which Particulars, we shall find the temper of the whole.

1. SACÆ, or the Country of the Sacans, is bounded on the East, with the Mountain Imaus; on the West, with Sogdiana; on the North with Zagathay, properly and specially so called; on the South, with the River Oxus, by which parted from Bactria. So called from the Sacæ, the Inhabitants of it; but the reason of their name I find not.

The Country anciently either barren, or ill manured; full of vast Forests, wide Deserts, and the like uninhabitable places, few or no Cities in it, and not many Villages (Civitates autem non habent as my Author hath it, Ptol. lib. 6. c. 13.) the People living most part in Caves, or otherwise wandring up and down with their droves of Cattel; called for that reason Nomades by some ancient Writers. The name not proper to these only, but common to all those who followed the like roving life, as the Sarmatians, wild Arabians, Saracens, and the Inhabitants of Lydia and Numidia in Africa. Only one fortified place they had, which from the materials of it had the name of Turris Lapidea, (λίθινος πύργος, in the Greek) or the Castle of Stones; Part hereof being peopled for the most part by Camels, or travelling only with those Creatures, had the name of Camelorum Regio.

Divided it was anciently into many Tribes, the Cavata, and Comari, near the River Jaxartes; the Majigetæ, and Gomedæ, near the hills called Ascatanus; the Bylæ, and Grynæi, more within the Country. All joyned in one by the name of Sacæ; and by that name made a very fortunate Progress into Armenia (to which they had an easie passage by the Northern Banks of the Caspian Sea) and therein gave name unto the Province called Sacafena. But proceeding into Cappadocia, and there slain by the Persians in the midst of their Feastings, they left there also some resemblance of their name, in an annual Festival called Sacæ; celebrated by the Persians, in memorial of their good success in the War against them. Such as staid here, being overcome by Cyrus the first Persian Monarch, did so good service to that Prince, that Amorges the King of these Sacæ, is said to have rescued him from the hands of the Scythians, by whom otherwise he had been slain, or taken Prisoner. In the declining of that Kingdom, they were subdued by Alexander at the end of his Scythian and Sogdian Wars; who hereabouts, by Cobortanes a noble Persian, was presented with a Bevy of Beautiful Ladies; one of the which was that Barsine, whom he made his Wife, and had by her that Hercules, whom Polysperchon and his Faction proclaimed King of Macedon. Not memorable in the following times for any thing which they did or suffered; as they have been made by the opinion or mistake of others, who building Castles in the Air, will needs derive the Saxons (our famous Ancestors) from this Original: as if they were called Saxons, quasi Sacæ Jones, or the Sons of the Sacæ. A fancy in my poor conceit, of no ground at all. For either the number of these Sacæ, when they left these parts, must be great, or little. If little how can we conceive it possible, they should force their way through those valiant Nations of both Sarmatia's, who to the last maintained their Liberties and Estate against the Romans? If great enough to force their passage (for stout and provident Nations use not to give passage to great Armies, but they pay dear for it) how can we think it possible they should be shut up in a corner of Germany, betwixt the River Albis and the Cimbrick Chersonese? The Saxons then, whatsoever they were, were no Sons of the Sacæ; and what in likelihood they were, hath been elsewhere shewn.

2. SOGDIANA hath on the East, the Sacæ; on the North and West, Zagathay specially so called; on the South, the River Oxus, parting it from Margiana. So called from a chain of Mountains named Montes Sogdii, being the chief of all this Country, though of themselves a spur or branch of the Mountain Caucasus.

The Country indifferently fruitful, and very rich in Pasturage, because very well watered. For besides Oxus, and Jaxartes, which are common unto them and others; they have many Rivers of their own. The Principal of which, 1. Dymus, and 2. Araxates both navigable, and capable of very good Ships; both also running down the hills with a headlong course, and passing through the Champion Country, empty themselves at last in the Lake called Oxiana; as is affirmed by Ammianus, but as Ptolemy saith, into Jaxartes.

Places of most consideration are. 1. Drepfa, the Metropolis or Mother-City of this People. By Pliny called Panda, by Solinus Darapsa, situate on the River Oxus. 2. Oxiana, on the same River, and from thence denominated. 3. Maruca, on the same River also. 4. Alexandria, called for distinction sake, Alexandria Oxiana, which name declareth both the founder and the situation.

5. Alexandria, for the same cause of distinction, named Alexandria ultima: either because the last City which he built in these parts: or because it lay furthest off on the borders of the Scythians, against whose invasions or irruption it was said to be built. 6. Tribarra, one of the chief hereof in the time of Ammianus Marcellinus. 7. Cyresebita, more memorable, and not less ancient than any of these named before, by Qu. Curtius called Cyropolis, built by Cyrus to fortifie his borders against the Scythians. It held out against the great Macedonian, a long time; and he himself coming nigher to the Walls than discretion would permit an ordinary General, had such a blow on the neck with a Stone, that he fell to the ground, his Eyes swimming in his head, and his whole Army giving him for slain: but reviving he took the Town by a Mine, and level'd it with the ground, in revenge of so great a danger.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Oxydraca, and Candari, dwelling at the foot of the Sogdian Mountains; the Oxiani, and Cherosmii, near the banks of Oxus; the Jessii, and Tachri, near the River Jaxartes; the Drepstani in the East parts bordering on the Sacæ; whose chief City was Drepfa: descended from their several roots but all called Sogdians. Conquered by Alexander, not without danger to his own person, as before was said; at the solicitation of Spitamenes a noble Persian, it rebell'd again. Who being suppressed, and the Country in some measure quieted, Arimazes, a Native of the Province, renewed the War. Who followed with 30000 men, encamped upon the top of an hill, in a place of such notable advantage, that Alexander, neither by force nor fair words, could get him out of it. He therefore dealt with 3000 of his youngest and most active men, on the promise of great reward, to climb the hill; and without any noise to shew themselves at the back of the Enemy: Which having performed with the loss of 30 of their company, Alexander sent one Cophes to Arimazes; to let him know that the whole Army of Macedon was at his back; who terrified with what he saw, more with what he feared, gave up the place, and was scourged and crucified for his labour. So necessary in the Art of warfare is a piece of wit. After this time, it ran the same alterations and change of fortunes, as the Persians did, till they were conquered by the Tartars, unto whom still subject.

3. ZAGATHIA specially so called, is bounded on the East, with Cathay; on the West, with the Kingdom of Astracan, and part of the Caspian Sea; on the North, with the Country of the Samoyeds, the Terra Incognita of the ancients; on the South, with the Sacæ, and Sogdiana. Anciently part of Scythia intra montem Imaum; and took this new name from Zagathay, the first Prince hereof since the time of the Tartars.

These Tartars are planted by Hondius on the North of the Caspian Sea, on the West of Turkestan. It is probable this whole description of the Asiatick Tartary is taken from Paulus Venetus, whose Itinerary I have not seen, but it is certain it will not agree with the present state, or divisions of these Nations. Hondius placeth here the Kalmuchi Tartars, which signifieth unshaven. Nothing is more usual than for these wandering Nations to change their seats.

The Country reasonably fruitful, but not so rich in the natural temper of the soyl, as the industriousness of the People, more civil far than any other of the Tartars, studious of good Letters, lovers of Arts, as well ingenious as Mechanick; well skill'd in Manufactures, and very seldom without the confluence of Foreign Merchants. Populous, and well stored with Towns and Villages; both for their own more handsome dwelling and the entertainment of others.

Chief Rivers of it, 1. Jaxartes, now called Chesel, the principal of all this Country; great of it self, but made much greater by the waters of, 2. Daix, another River of good note, rising out of the Mountain called Norofus, and falling with many others into Jaxartes; mixt with those streams they are dischannelled in the Caspian Sea: 3. Jartus, 4. Polytimetas, falling into Oxus. Others there are whose names I find not in my Authors, descending from the Mountains of this Northern Region, which are great and many: As viz. 1. Norofus, spoken of before. 2. Aspisi, on the North of that. 3. Toporus, more unto the North. 4. The Mountains called Sychi, more Northward still. 5. Those called Anarai, besides 6. Imaus, of most name, but common unto Cathay, as well as to Zagathay, and there we shall hear further of it.

Cities of most observation in it, 1. Aspabota, the only Town ascribed by Ptolomy to this Country, and by him honoured with the title of Civitas. 2. Zabaspia, of less antiquity, but of greater estimation at the present time, situate on the mouth of the River Oxus (now called Abias) on the brink of the Caspian; and much frequented by the Merchants of foreign Countries, chiefly from India and Cathay. 3. Marachanda, Samarchand, ancient, and of fame, but placed by Ptolomy (why I know not) amongst the Cities of Bactria: differing herein from the common and received opinion of other Authors, by whom this City is affirmed to be on the North side of Oxus, and consequently not within that Province. Made good by Spitamenes, (who having delivered the Traitor Bessus into the hands of Alexander, revolted from him) against the Macedonian Army; by which besieged under the command of Menedemus. But Menedemus being slain, with some of his Souldiers, Spitamenes escaped hence to Bactria, where he was slain by his own Wife, and his head presented to the Conquerour. Here was it also that Alexander, being then Master of the Town, in a drunken fit slew his dear friend Clitus; who at the battle of Granicus had saved his life, by receiving a blow which was aimed at him. It was afterwards called Samarchand, the Seat-Royal of Tamerlane, by whom enriched with all the spoils and treasures he got in the Wars; there being brought hither from Damascus only (and by that one instance we may guess at the rest) 8000 Camels laden with the choicest movables. Still the chief Residence of the Chams of Zagathay, but far short of that magnificence which once it held. 4. Bichend, of no Antiquity, nor of such great name as the Regal Samarchand, but at this time of greater wealth: situate somewhat in the midland, but populous, and a well-traded Town. 5. Azara, memorable for being made the Rendezvous of that mighty Army, which Tamerlane raised against the Turks, consisting in the total of 1200000 fighting men when it was at the biggest. Maranus, from which place the said Tamerlane, having received his aids from China, began his march.

These Tartars, called Zagathayans, by the name of their Country, are of a different government from that of the Great Cham of Cathay, though subject to him at the first, and have so been ever since the time of Zaicham or Batbu, the third great Cham; who gave it unto Zagathay, a younger Son, whence it had the name. To Zagathay succeeded Og, by some called Zain Cham; (the Father of Tamerlane) a peaceable and quiet Prince, who rather studied to preserve than enlarge his Empire. But Tamerlane being of a fierce and more warlike nature, made the first proof of his valour and good fortune against the Moscovite (for spoiling a City which had put itself under his protection) whom he overthrew with the slaughter of 25000 Foot, and 15000 of his Horse. Moved with this notable exploit, and the hopes of greater, Gino Cham, the Great Emperour of the Tartars gave him to Wife his only Daughter, and therewithal declared him his Heir apparent. Encouraged and enabled with this advancement, he first brake down the Wall of China, encountred with the King thereof, overcame him in battle, and imposed on him the sum of 300000 Crowns of yearly Tribute. Having left things quiet at his back, and taking with him a great part of the Forces of China, he advanced forwards against Bajazet, the fourth King of the Turks; of the greatness of whose growing Empire he began to be jealous. Passing along the left hand shores shores of the Caspian Sea, and so through Albania, and the rest of the Provinces which lay in his way (which he took and conquered as he went) he came at last into Asia Minor, where near the City of Sebastia, he encountered with Bajacet, vanquished him, slew 200000 of his men, and carried him away Captive in an Iron Cage; Restored those Princes dispossessed by Bajacet unto their Estates, and taking to himself all the Turkish Provinces in Anatolia, he bestowed a private visit on Constantinople; which seen, he marched towards Syria, subdued both that Province and the Kingdom of Egypt, then possessed by the Mamelucks; visited Hierusalem, and did honour to the Holy Sepulchre; returned by Babylon, and won it. and with it the whole Countries of Babylonia and Affyria. And taking Persia in his way impatronized himself of that Kingdom also; and such Parts of India, as either lay near Persia, or his own Dominions; now made the Sovereign Lord of all the Regions and Kingdoms in both Asia's, excepting India; for which the rich Kingdom of Egypt, may be put in balance. Come home at last to Samarchand, he there died in peace. A Prince of strong body, but lovely lineaments, his eyes bearing in them such rayes of Majesty, that ordinary men could scarce endure to look upon them. His Hair long, contrary to the custom of the Mahometans, (for the most part shaven on their heads) for which he pretended a descent from Sampson. Perfect in the Arabian Learning, and a lover of all Learned men, a hater of Idols, and Polytheism, and a great friend to the Christians. More fortunate in the conquering of so many Kingdoms, than in laying any sure foundation to maintain his conquest. For by holding his Seat-Royal in Samarchand, Cambalu, and others the chief Cities of Cathay, he gave the remote Provinces the opportunity of returning to their former Governours; and by parcelling his Estates amongst his Children, and Kindred, this mighty flood which had so quickly overflowed both Asia's, returned in very little time within its own proper and original banks. Even Zagathay it self divided from the Empire of Cathay, had its King apart (hardly acknowledging the great Cham for the Lord in chief) the most considerable of whom was that Saba, who in the new beginnings and unsettledness of the Sophian Empire, invaded Persia; but instead of recovering that Kingdom into the Power of the Tartars, he lost some Provinces of his own: Hyrkania, Margiana, and some part of Bactria, being since subdued by Abas the late Sultan. Nothing since memorable, that I meet with, in the affairs of this part of the Empire of Tartary. The great Moguls or Kings of Indostan in the East Indies, derive themselves from this fortunate Prince Tamerlane. I have not been so fortunate as to see any late Traveller, that hath been in these remote parts of Tartary.

4. TURCHESTAN is bounded on the East with Zagathay, specially so called; on the West, with the River Zoane, parting it from Deserta; on the North, with those desarts which Ptolomy blindeth under the name of Terra incognita; and on the South, with the Caspian Sea. So called from the Turks; some of which people when they left their first Seats near the Fens of Maotis, settled in this Country, and here still continue. This position is impossible, according to the present state of the Tartars, Hondius placeth it on the South of Zagathay, having Sogdiana to the West, Imaus to the East, and Tagalistan to the South; Baudrand placeth Indostan on the South, and saith it is now called the Kingdom of Thibet, or Tobat, but withal adds, that most of the modern Geographers are of opinion, that there is no such Province as Turchestan, to be sure there is none such on the North of the Caspian Sea, between Zagathay and the Kingdom of Astrachan, which is all of it now possessed by Nogay Tartars, as appeareth by all Travellers that way.

The Country as desert and ill planted as the rest of Tartary, not so much out of any defect in the soil it self, as in the humour of the people: who though originally Turks yet do compose themselves unto the lives of the Scythian or Tartarian Nomades, neglecting tillage, and abiding in no place longer than that place affords them pasturage for their Cattel: huge herds of which they keep as their greatest treasure, but more to cloath their backs with the skins, than to fill their bellies with the flesh.

Amongst the Rivers of most note we may reckon, 1. Rhymnus, mentioned by Ptolomy, which by the position of it in the 91 degree of Longitude, seems to be of this Tract. It riseth out of the Mountains called Montes Rhymnici, giving name to the River, or taking name from it. 2. Ardock, not known by that name amongst the ancients, and whether known at all or not, I am not able to say. Shaping its course towards the North, and weary of so cold a Clime, and such barbarous people, after a long and swift course of a thousand miles, it hideth it self under the ground for five hundred more: but breaking out again, and finding little or no hope of a better fortune, loseth it self for ever in the great Lake of Kitay.

To look for Towns amongst a people which delight not in settled Houses, were a labour lost: yet some I find ascribed unto them; the principal, but of no great note, 1. Calba, and 2. Ocerra. Then there is 3. Crustiana, situate on or near the Lake of Kitay, never without the Company of Russian and Tartarian Merchants: the Russians sayling to it by the River Ob; and the Zagathayan Tartars travelling to it by Land. By these two Nations more peopled, to maintain their Traffick, than by the Turcomans themselves, in whose Land it standeth.

These Turcomans are of the Posterity of some of those Turcs, who wanting Room, or otherwise oppressed with want, forsook their ancient dwelling near the Fens of Maotis, and the Coasts of the Euxine Sea, to seek new seats, Anno 844. That their whole body settled here; and from hence made their conquest of Persia, as some very industrious men are of opinion, I by no means grant. For when the Sultan of Persia, having by the means of Tangrolipix and those Mercenary Turks whom he invited to his aid, obtained the Victory, and thought it fit for his affairs to detain them longer in his Service, it is said he shut up the River Araxes, to hinder them from returning to their habitations. The shutting up of which River, and fortifying against them all the passages and bridges of it, had not served his turn, if the Turks had come from this place, for then he must have manned against them the River Oxus, and such as lay betwixt them and him in the common road. Nor is it probable, that the Turcomans dwelling in this Province, on the East side of the River Volga would undertake the foarding of that dangerous and violent Water, and force themselves away thorow Albania and Armenia, with no greater numbers than 3000 men, which was the whole strength that they carried with them. So that it is not to be doubted but that they came first into Persia out of Turcomania, and not out of Turchestan: and probable enough, that when they first left their own abode, and came into the Northwest shores of the Caspian Sea, they might there divide themselves. Some of which leaving that Sea on the left hand, and passing thorow the Sarmatian or Albanian Streights, made their way into Armenia, and those parts of Iberia, which from them are now called Turcomania. The residue keeping that Sea on the right hand, and crossing the Volga, where they found the passage most easie for them, settled themselves in these parts of Scythia which they found less peopled, now from them named Turchestan. Some of which hearing of the good success of their Country-men in the Conquest of Persia, might afterward joyn with them to assure that purchase. Governed since their first coming hither, by the Chiefs of their several Clans, whom they honour with the title of Chams; but all of them Tributaries and Vassals of the Cham of Zagathay.

5. That part of the Kingdom of Zagathay, which anciently passed under the name of TERRA INCOGNITA, and was accounted the Northern limit of Scythia intra Imaum, hath on the South Turchestan, and part of Zagathay, strictly and specially so called: extending Northwards to the Scythick or Frozen Ocean, and bounded on the West with the River Ob, on the East with Imaus.

The Inhabitants of this Northern Tract are now called by the name of Samoyeds; neither the people nor the Country known to the ancient Romans: and indeed neither of them worth the knowing. The men black-haired, naturally Beardless, and not to be discerned from women, but that the women wear a long lock down to their ears. Clad from the head to the feet in Deer-skins, or Seil-skins, with the hairy side outwards; (nothing more wise in that than the other Tartars.) Their kind of life more rude than theirs, if more rude may be, ranging from place to place, without any propriety of house or dwelling; the leader of each company their Priest, whom they call their Popa, who at every one of their removes is to offer Sacrifice. Idolaters they are all, and most of them Witches; especially such as live most towards the East, and furthest off from the Muscovite, who many times destroy their Idols, and rob them of the skins of Bevers, black Foxes and Sables, wherewith these Idols are set forth to the publick view: but bestow on them greater heats in a good Fire, into which they commonly use to cast them. The Samoyeds or Self-eaters, are not bounded on the West by the River Ob, but extend to the Riphaean Mountains, and beyond them to the River Pet-zora. The Provinces of Obdora and Siberia in Russia being part of their Country, as appeareth by Burrows, who met with them on the East of Nova Zembla in 1556. The Dutch in 1595. Hackluit. Tom. 1. pag. 279. Olearius his Travels. All that part of their Country that lieth on the West of the River Ob, is subject to the Russ, and Christianity was began to be settled here in 1618, Guagninus. That part on the East is subject to the King of China. The Samoyeds are by the Climate they live under, forced to a different way of living from that of the other Tartars, for they do not live a roving kind of Life, but dig Vaults in the Sides of the Hills, in which they live all the Winter, with passages from one Vault to another for their mutual Comfort and Assistance; each of which habitations hath an hole in the top which lets out the Smoke, and lets in the Air: for as for light they have none, but that of the Moon. This vast Country became Subject to the Russ, by the means of the Zaporoge Cossaks that inhabited beyond the Boristhenes, for they having been subdued by the Russ, and not being willing to live under their Conquerors, went to Casan, and from thence to Irtis, a River which falls into the Zobol, in which place they built a City, and called it Zobol, and extended their Dominions to the River Ob, which is properly called Siberia, which in the Sclavonian Language signifieth the North; yet the few Commodities they have for the subsistence of life, and the necessity of vending their Sable Martins, obliged them to submit afterwards to the Russ, who have since filled, civilized, and assured these Provinces, by sending thither their Malefactors of State, and also the Officers of the Army, and the Boyars who have not behaved themselves well. The Zaporoge Cossaks have since, by their Hunting after Sables, discovered beyond the Ob the River Szilka, which has a great City called Nero-zinki, 2. Argus, that falls into the River Yamour, beyond this to the South East, (as I understand it) lies the Lake Dalay, one Weeks journey beyond Nero-zinki, and there you meet with the Subjects of the King of China, who have manured all the Lands about that Lake. Out of this Lake springeth the second River, which is fairer and Navigable to the Yamour. Father Avril's Travels into China. Upon the Yamour is a Fort built by the Russ lately, and called Albazin, three Weeks journey from Pekin, and three Months from Moscom, which occasioned a War between the Russ and the King of China, each claiming the Pearls in the River, and the Hunting the Martins on the Land. This caused the sending frequent Embassies to China, by which the Russ have much more discovered the passages to China by Land, than otherwise they could have done, and opened a Trade between these Nations. The first of these Ambassadors, was Knez Theodore Jacowitz, who went from Zobolks to Pekin in 1653.

These Zagathayan Provinces, with those of Margiana, and Bactria, before described, made that part of Scythia, which anciently was called Scythia intra montem Imaum: though in the time of Ptolomy, when Margiana, Bactria, Sacæ, and Sogdiana, were reckoned of as Provinces of the Kingdom of Persia, this Scythia was restrained within narrower bounds, and comprehended only Turchestan and the Special Zagathay, Inhabited, besides the several Nations dwelling in the four Persian Provinces, by many fierce and savage Tribes, as the Alani, Alanofsi, Saubeni, and Massæi, towards Terra incognita; the Tectofages, and Asiotæ, near the Mountain Imaus; the Jaxartæ on the banks of the River so called, and the Mologene, not far off; the Zaratæ, and Safones, near the Mountains Alani; the Galaſtophagi, or Milk-eaters, more towards the East; the Taporæi, and the Sychi, by the hills so named: and many others not material to be here remembered. All now united under the general name of Tartars, by whom first subdued.

And now we are at last come to Scythia, truly so named; Sarmatia Europæa and Asiatica being called so only by way of participation and resemblance; because the Inhabitants thereof had so much in them of the manners and conditions of these natural Scythians. Here therefore we intend to speak something of them, their Name, Antiquity, Dispositions, Customs, and the most memorable Actions relating to them, as far as we can go by the light of story.

First, for the name, the Græcian Fables have derived it from one Scythes, the Son of Hercules, begotten by him on a Monster, half Woman, half Viper. The Grammarians ἀνδρῶν ὀργιστῶν, signifying to be fierce and angry; whence it is said of the Jewish Puritans, who fasted to be seen of men, Σιωπῶντες ἀνδρῶν, that they looked with a sower, severe, and disfigured Countenance. Geropius Becanus doth derive it rather from the Dutch word Schutten, signifying to shoot: agreeable enough to the custom and exercise of the Scythians, who are observed by Herodotus, Pliny, Lucian, and other of the ancient Writers, to be very good Archers. But that the word Schutten signifieth the same in the ancient Scythick; or that the High-Dutch was originally the Tongue of the Scythians, will not so easily appear.

Letting that pass therefore as a matter not to be defined, let us look on the Antiquity of these Scythian Nations: and we shall find it to be great, if not greatest of all. Scytharum gens semper antiquissima. That the Scythians were of all others, the most ancient people, was received for an Oracle, in the elder ages of the world: and so resolved by way of Verdict, when the great Controverlie touching the Antiquity of those Nations, was to be determined, betwixt the Egyptian and the Scythian, who contended for it. And this hath passed with such a general approbation, that it is not now to be disputed. In which regard I am so far of the judgment of Becanus in that particular, as to conceive that the Countries lying on the North of the Mount Caucasus (on which the Ark is thought most probably to have rested) were peopled by the Sons of Noah before they travelled towards the West, or set themselves on building the Tower of Babel. We had else no doubt heard somewhat amongst the Antiquaries, of the settling of some of those Adventurers in these Northern Regions; when giving off that enterprise, and falling upon new Plantations, they either went themselves, or sent forth their Colonies into all places of the World. But of any such Plantations, ne gry quidem, not one word say they. Nor can it probably be supposed that Zoroaster, the King of Bactria, could have raised 400000 fighting men out of that one Province (though some of the adjoining Provinces were took into the reckoning) in those early days, in which he did encounter Ninus the great Assyrian; had the Bactrians, and the rest of these Scythian Nations, been but a Castling as it were of some second swarm, and not co-æval with the rest. But besides these presumptions we have other proofs: viz. An old and constant tradition on this side the Mountains, tains, that the greatest Vineyard of Margiana was of Noab's planting; and, 2. the affirmation of Portius Cato, (though one of the Writers of Frier Annus) in Scythia Saga renatum mortale genus, that mankind was repaired in these parts of Scythia, so called from Sabatius Saga, an Armenian King, whose Dominions did extend thus far. So that I look upon it as a matter of strong presumption, if not demonstrably concludent, that these people were of the first Plantation which was made after the Flood; before the rest of the world was peopled by the Confusion of Languages: Scytharum gens semper antiquissima, could not else hold good.

As for their dispositions, and natural inclinations, they are said by Trogus, or his Epitomator Justine, to be Gens & laboribus & bellis aspera, "A Nation patient of labours and fierce in War; of bodily strength immense and vast; yet so much Masters of their affections, that they made no further use of their greatest victories than the augmentation of their fame. Theft they esteemed the greatest crime, and that they punished so severely, that their flocks and herds might and did safely wander from one place to another, without fear of stealing. In them they placed their greatest wealth, feeding themselves with the Milk thereof, and making their Rayment of the Skin. Silver and Gold they contemned as much as it was coveted by others; there being no desire of Riches where there was no use. Meum, and Tuum, those common Barretours, and Authors of debate amongst other men, were not known amongst them: and therefore did not care for tillage, or made any inclosures, nor troubled themselves with the care of building. But putting their Wives and Children upon Wains, or Waggon, covered with Hides against the weather, they removed from one place to another, no longer staying upon one than they found grass and herbage to sustain their Cattel. So just in all their actions that they needed not the restraint of Laws; and had attained to such an eminent degree of humane perfection, as not to covet. In a word, that moderation which the Greeks endeavoured to attain unto by the help of Learning and Philosophy, was to these so natural, that the ignorance of Vice did as much contribute to their welfare as the knowledge of Virtue. Such are the ancient Scythians affirmed to be. And being such, it was a wonder that the great Monarchs of the world, who had wealth at will, should make war upon them; amongst whom there was nothing to invite an Army, or reward a Conqueror. Yet either on desire of glory, or to add unto the former multitudes over whom he reigned, they were first invaded by Cyrus the great Persian Monarch: who quarreling with Tomyris Queen of the Massagetes, a warlike Nation, inhabiting on both sides of the River Oxus, discomfited her Army, and slew her Son Spargapises, who commanded it. In revenge whereof, the Queen having in a second battel obtained the Victory, and took Cyrus prisoner, is said to have cut off his head, and cast it into a bowl of blood, with this scornful taunt, Satia te sanguine quem sitiisti, Now drink thy fill of blood, for which thou hast so thirsted. But others tell us otherwise of the success of this fight. By whom it is reported that the Horse of Cyrus being disordered on the sight of some Elephants, which came from India to her aid, and himself dangerously wounded, the Scythians had won the victory but for the coming in of Amorges King of the Sacans, (who of a conquered enemy was become his confederate:) by whom he was rescued, and by the 20000 fresh men which he brought with him, obtained the honour of the day, though long he lived not to enjoy it, dying not long after of the wounds he had received. With Alexander they are said to begin the War, as loath to be behind-hand with him; arming themselves upon the building of Alexandria ultima, so near their borders, which they conceived rather intended for a curb to hold them down, than for a bridle to keep them in. But being repulsed, and wise enough to suffer what they could not hinder, they sued for peace, and had it granted; A- lexander being called away by the revolt of the Bactrians: a matter of more consequence than these Scythian brables. With Alexander's Successors they had nothing to do, nor with the Persian Kings of the Parthian Race; the Parthians being their Allies, and of Scythian breed. And for the Romans, it is well observed by the Historian, Romanorum arma audire magis quam sentire, that they had heard much of their valour, but never felt it. Remaining undisturbed in their honest poverty, till the Tartars, an obscure and beggarly people brake out of their Prison, and carried the whole World before them.

As for their Kings, I find some of their names laid down, but without any note of time in which their reigns might be supposed to begin or end. Nor can I think that the Kings occurring in that Catalogue, did either reign in the same place, or over the same Nations; or that they succeeded one another. Howsoever we will take their names as they come before us, in this list of

The Kings of Scythia.

- 1 Scythes.
- 2 Napis.
- 3 Phitra.
- 4 Sagillus.
- 5 Targitana.
- 6 Plinus.
- 7 Scholypethus.
- 8 Panaxagora.
- 9 Tanais.
- 10 Indathyrfus.
- 11 Saulius.
- 12 Spargapises.
- 13 Tomyris.
- 14 Aripethes.
- 15 Seiles.
- 16 Ostimafdes.

17 Lanthinus, the last of all those Scythian Kings who are conceived to have the Government of these warlike Nations. But for my part I dare not say that ever any one King did command the whole people generally; each Tribe or Nation having their particular Kings, as in other places not reduced into form and order. And therefore for those Kings, if such Kings there were, (as for some of them I durst venture to swear the contrary) they must be such as in their several Countries were of greatest fame, most taken notice of in the world, or employed in the conduct of their joyned and united forces; and so conceived to be the Kings of the whole Scythian Nation: as Cassibelane, King of the Trinobantes, and perhaps not that, is by some Writers said to be the King of the Brittains; because he had the conduct of their forces against Julius Caesar.

4. CATHAY.

CATHAY is bounded on the West with Zagathay, from which parted by the Mountain Imaus; on the East with the Oriental Sea, and some part of China; on the North with Tartaria Antiqua; and on the South with part of India. So called from the proper or special Cathay, the principal Province of the whole, the other parts into which it is commonly divided being 2 Altay, the Countries of the Eastern Tartars.

In probability this part of Tartary hath no boundary to the North, but the Frozen Sea, except it be to the North East, which is utterly unknown, but said by the Tartars to be separated by the Sea from all other Lands. The Russ affirm, that Nova Zembla is the most northern Cape of Tartary, and that from thence the Coast on the East side tends towards the South. The Chinians also in their Maps say, that from their Wall to the Sea is but fourteen days Journey. The Country of the Samoyeds testifie the same thing, for the farther they travel towards the East, the more warm and temperate they find the Air, which is a sign the Sea is not far from them. And

And besides, the Russ have observed there are great Rivers, large Cities, and plenty of all things pertaining to the life of man; which is not possible, if there were great Continents, or spaces of Lands between them and the Sea. Vossius de navigatione ad Indos, pag. 191. This Nova Zembla is in probability the Promontorium Tabinum of Pliny and the Ancients, tho' placed by the Geographers in this part of Tartary. The Southern Boundary of this part of Tartary, is China: and very little of it, if any part bounds on the East Indies, or Indostan. It will appear hereafter in the account of the Rivers, that to the North East, Tartary is washed by the Ocean, which as it comes nearer to China, inclines more to the South.

1. CATHAY, more properly and especially so called, is bounded on the East, with China; on the West, with the Mountain Imaus, by which parted from Zagathay; on the North, with Alta; and on the South, with India extra Gangem: So called from the Chata, an old Scythian people, who having conquered the Ceres, and the rest of the neighbouring Nations, gave their own name unto the whole, according to the Custom of victorious people.

This Country is exceeding long, if it be measured by the Scale, and Rules laid down by Ptolomy; who placeth Auzacia, the most Western Town of Scythia extra montem Imaum, in the Longitude of 144 degrees, and Sera the Metropolis and most Eastern City of Cerica in the Longitude of 177 degrees and 15 Minutes; as on the other side he placeth Seta the most Southern Town of Scythia extra montem Imaum, in the Latitude of 35 degrees, and 20 minutes; and Damna the most Northern Town of Serica in the Latitude of 51 degrees, and 40 minutes. By which accompt, supposing these four Towns to be placed in the very extremities and out-parts of this Country, it must extend from North to South 960 miles and somewhat upwards, and about 1500 miles from East to West in the length thereof; which as it sheweth the dimensions and extent of it to be very great, so it may probably infer that the Country is not in all places of the like fertility; the West parts of it being very mountainous and barren, and consequently not very fruitful, as being overgrown in most places with the spurs and branches of Imaus. But in those parts thereof which lie towards the East, it is said to be abounding in Wheat, Rice, Wool, Hemp, Silk and Musk; Great store of that medicinal Root called Rhubarb, or Rha-Barbarum, to difference it from the Rha-Pontick, growing on the banks of Volga. They have also very great Herds of Camels, of whose hair they make those stuffs which are hence called Camelets or Chamlets; and such an infinite breed of Horses, as besides those which they reserve for their own use, they furnish the whole Realm of China with such multitudes of them, that at one time there were sent no fewer than 80000 for a present to the King of that Realm by the Princes of these Western Tartars, as the Chinois call them; of which he that writ the Book called Bellum Tartaricum, affirmeth himself to have been an eye-witness, and to his credit I refer it, that the great Cham feedeth yearly 10000 white Mares, which he keeps for their Milk. Some of their Rivers are reported also to yield Golden Sands; but whether it be so or not, certain it is, that it is so well provided of all things both for necessary use, and the pleasures of life, that it is thought to be inferiour to few Countries of Europe. The Air indeed not so temperate, as in many places; the Summer-times extremely hot, and in Winter miserably cold: the thunders and lightnings being here so terrible, that in Summer many men die for fear, when they hear it. The winds no less violent than the thunder, do sometimes tear up trees by the roots, and beat men from their horses; but seldom bring with them any storm of rain: the greatest showers which they have hardly wetting the ground.

The people are generally very warlike, strong of body, quick of action, fearless of the greatest dangers, patient both of want and labour: of mean stature, little eyes, sharp sight, and thin beards. Industrious they are in several Manufactures; of a good wit for dispatch of business: more honourable than the rest of the Tartars, as loving to dress themselves gorgeously, to fair sumptuously (if there be occasion) to live in handsome houses, and to frequent the most populous and best-traded Cities. All which civilities or effeminacies, call them which you will, together with the greatest part of their Arts and Manufactures, they first learned of the Chinese, during the time that the Chinois lived as Subjects under the great Cham, and the Nations had continual intercourse with one another. They account not any for a Wife till she bear them Children, nor till then do they meddle with their Dowries; but repudiate them at a certain time, if they find them barren. They reverence their Cham, or Emperour, even to adoration: not suffering any Stranger to come in his presence, except he be first purged: if any otherwise presume, it is present death.

The Religion publickly allowed and countenanced, is that of Mahomet; but so that they retain the Pentateuch of Moses, and observe many things therein commanded. It was much laboured by Pope Innocent, and King Lewis of France, that they should receive the Christian Faith; and they found some inclinations in the People, and chief Princes to it. But finding by the Mahometan Agents, who then laboured to bring them to their Superstition, that Mahomet allowed of many Wives, and other things more agreeable to their fleshly lusts, they conformed to that; Yet so, that there are many Idolaters in Cathay it self (I mean Cathay strictly so called) and some Christians also; the state of whose affairs we have shewn before.

Chief Rivers of the whole. 1. Polysanga, which falling into the Eastern Ocean is navigable up to the City of Cambalu, to which it is a means of conveying great store of Merchandise. 2. Caromoram, so broad and deep that no bridge can be made over it. 3. Quiam, one of the greatest in the world; in length about an hundred days journey; for breadth, in most places six miles, in many eight, and in some ten. 4. Quiautu, about half a mile over, and well stored with Fish: of all which we shall speak more fully when we come to China. Here are also very many Lakes, both large, and useful; as, 1. the Lake of Cannichu, in which are said to be so many Pearls as would make them of no value, if every man might have leave to fish for them; which is therefore interdicted (without special license) upon pain of death. 2. The Lake of Cararmi, about an hundred miles in circuit, and so full of fish, as might suffice for all the Country, did they love to eat of it. The Mountains we shall climb over in their several places. Amongst the Rivers belonging now to this Country, the first is, 1. Genessa, East of the Obb, a great River, but full of Poroki, or Cataracts, nine of which hinder it from being Navigated. 2. Lena, great, but full of Rocks, and not Navigable. 3. Argus, a great and navigable River, which falls into, 4. Yamour, which is now the contested boundary between China and Russia. It falls into the Sea of Japan; and tho' great, has so many Sea Bul-Rushes, (or rather Canes;) as big as a man can grasp with his Arms: and therefore not navigable, as the Russ pretend. This proveth that this River is much more to the South, than any of the other three before mentioned; it having less ice, and such great Reeds, which grow not in cold Countries so very great. The most Eastern River of all, is Chingala, which has a good pearl Fishery. Whether these are the same Rivers with those mentioned by the Author above, but under other names, or other Rivers, I cannot determine: but this proves that the Coast of Tartary turneth to the South beyond Nova Zembla, and is not joyned to the Coast of America. Father Aviril's Travels towards China. The River Lena, saith Mouchim Poukim, Vayvode of Smolensko, who had lived here, emptieth it self into another, called, 6. Kawoina, at the mouth of which, in the Frozen Sea, is a specious well-peopled Island; the Inhabitants of which, he supposeth passed upon the floating Ice into America.

Principal Cities of the whole at this present time, under the notion of Cathay, are, 1. Cambalu, supposed to be

be the Iffedon Serica of the ancients, and like enough to be that City of the Cathayans which made the notable resistance unto Cingis the first King of the Tartars, in his first attempts upon this Country, of which more anon. Made afterwards, in regard of the pleasantness of the situation and extream fertility of the soyl, the chief Seat of his Empire; and being exceedingly enlarged and beautified, had the name of Cambalu, that is to say, the Seat or City of the Cham, in the same sense as the chief City of China had the name of Pequin, signifying in that Language the Court or City of the King. Built of Free-stone, and situate in the midst of the Country, as the heart and center to the rest. It is seated on the River Polysanga, honoured with the great Cham's residence, and enriched with a mighty confluence of Merchants of all sorts. Besides other Merchandises there are every year 10000 Carts loaded with Silk sent thither from China. Affirmed to be in compass 28 miles besides the Suburbs, in which, besides other Inhabitants of all sorts, are said to be 50000 Astrologers or rather Fortune-tellers. 2. Xaindu the Royal Palace of the Emperour, of a foursquare figure, every side extending eight miles in length: within this Quadrant is another, whose sides are six miles long, and within that another of four miles square, which is the Palace it self; between those several Walls are Walks, Gardens, Orchards, Fish-ponds, places for all manner of exercise, and Parks, Forests, and Chases for all manner of Game. 3. Caraio, where the Women are said to gild their Teeth. 4. Gonza, a fair City and a great, adorned with many Idol Monasteries. 5. Careanfu near which there groweth an herb called China-Cathay, of admirable effect against many Deseases; and so esteemed of by the Natives, that they value an ounce of this at a sack of Rhubarb. 6. Segni, the residence of a Nestorian Bishop.

Having thus took as good a view of the present face of this Country, as the time affords us, we will next look upon it in those integral parts, of which it specially consisteth, comprehending (as before was intimated) those two long and ample Provinces, which the Ancients called, 1. Serica, and 2. Scythia extra montem Imaum, according to those Bounds and Characters which are given us of them.

1. SERICA, hath on the East, some part of China; on the South, India extra Gangem, and some part of the Country then inhabited by the ancient Sinæ; on the North, Alta; on the West, Scythia beyond the Mountains of Imaus. In which I follow not the bounds laid down by Ptolomy, who for want of that knowledge in these remote Countries, which these latter Ages have afforded, is fain to shut it up on the North and East with a Terra Incognita. At the present it is called CATHAY, and that most probably from the Chataæ, a Scythian People, who subduing the old Inhabitants, became Masters of it.

But for the name of Serica, it was derived originally from Sera the chief City of it; whence the people had the name of Seres, very industrious in their times, and amongst other things in the making of Silks, (made of a fine wooll growing on their leaves of Trees) from hence named Serica. Of great esteem amongst the Romans, as is said by Pliny, Tam multiplici opere, tam longinquo orbe petitur, ut in publico Matrona transluceat; being far fetched and dear bought, they were good for Ladies. Nor were they industrious only, but chaste and temperate. The names of Thieves and Whores were not known amongst them. They eat not any unclean flesh, nor used the company of their Wives either after conception, or during their Menstrual Purgations. So moderate of diet, that they lived commonly to the age of 200 years; the quietness and mildness of their disposition helping much thereto. Of yellow hair, watchet or Sea-green eyes, and good composure. Men of few words, but very just in all which they said or did. Governed by a Common Council of 5000 men, every one of which was to find an Elephant for the use of the State.

If you will take the Characters both of the Country and people from Ammianus Marcellinus, he will give it thus. "First of the Country, that it is plentiful and "large, circled about with a chain of Mountains, the two "famous Rivers Oechardes, and Banthusis, with a still "and flow stream running thorow the middle of the inclosed Plain, speciously stretched out to the sides of the "precipices: in one place large and open, in another lying "flat and low with an easie descent; in which regard they "have abundance of Corn, store of Cattel, and plenty "of Orchards. The temperature of the Air pleasant "and wholesome, the constitution of the weather clear "and pure, the blowing of gentle winds most commodious, and the Woods with a pritty glimmering of "light, both within and under them: from whence the "people with much sprinkling of water, softening that "which the Trees bring forth like a kind of Fluce, kemb

"a most fine and tender matter, which they spin into
"Silk, serving in former times for the Nobility and Gentry, now become common to those also of inferior "rank. Then for the People, he saith, that they are a "frugal Nation, lovers of quiet, not troublesome unto "their Neighbours, without the use of Arms, and the "knowledge of battels, declining the company of Strangers, and so far from covetousness, or curiosities, that "when any Merchants come unto them to buy their
"Silks, without much beating of the price, they let them "have such things as are bred amongst them, without
"looking after the Commodities of other Countries. So he. And if he did over-act the Panegyrist (as I see no reason why he should) never were people happier in the place of their dwelling, nor Country happier in its people.

Chief Mountains of it (and Mountains they had very many) were 1. the Montes Casii, and 2. Auzacii towards the East. 3. The Annibæ, environing a great part of the Country. 4. The Asmarai, 5. and those called Serici, near the City Sera. 6. Tagurus. 7. Ennodorus, and 8. Ottorocorus: but all of them probably the spurs and branches of the great Mountain Imaus; but by what names now called it is hard to say; and no less hard to say how to accommodate the names of the Rivers spoken of before, to those which we find mentioned in the ancient Writers; the principal of which (all flowing out of these great Mountains) are, 1. Oechardes, by Pliny called Cambis, rising out of the Montes Auzacii; 2. Psitara, issuing out of the Asmiri. 3. Banthus, whose Fountain is in the Montes Casii. And 4. Lanos.

Towns or chief note amongst them, 1. Sera, which gave the name of Serica, and Seres, to the Province and people. 2. Ottorocora, near the hills so called; whence it had the name. 3. Iffedon, for distinction sake called Iffedon Serica, to difference it from another of that name in Scythia, called Iffedon Scythica; the chief City of the Iffedones gens magna, one of the greatest Nations in all the Country, as it was said by Ptolomy; and like enough to be that City of the Cathayans, which made that notable resistance unto Cingis (which before I spake of) in his first attempts upon this Country. 4. Orofana, 5. Drosabe, 6. Daxara, of which little memorable. Some other Cities there were in it (about Nine more being named by Ptolomy) of which we find nothing, but the names, and therefore I shall pass them over without further mention.

But here it is observed, 1. That Ptolomy gives unto this Country, and some of the Towns or Cities of it, such a Northernly Latitude (ranging the furthest parts thereof in the same parallel with the Isle of Thy) as cannot possibly agree with that fertility of soyl, and delightful temper of the Air, which is given to Serica. 2. That he tells us of a Promontory called Talyn, situate in extrema Terræ, in the extremities of the Country between North and East, which I cannot but extreamly wonder at, considering that he shuts up this Country on the East and North with a Terra Incognita, and extends not any part thereof towards the Sea, rendering it thereby incapable of any such Promontory. This is misplaced, and belongs to Russia, as I said before. 3. That some of our late Writers, both in their Table and their Maps, have placed the Regal City of Cambalu so far towards the North, as very ill agreeth with that pleasantness and sweetness of situation, which induced the great Chams to make choice thereof for the Seat Royal of their Empire. The Author of the last relation of China Father Magelhanes, has proved that Pekin in China is the Cambalu of Paulus Venetus; which if our Author had known, he would more confidently have averr'd that China was the Serica of the Ancients, tho' the City so called might not be Pekin; but some City more Southerly Seated, and towards the Western boundary of China; and as I believe, as high as Thibet or Cochin-China, which was then a part of China and subject to it. But as we may easily pardon these mistakes of Ptolemy in places so far distant from him, and then but little known to the Greeks and Romans; so we may as easily pardon these of the latter times, who grounding on the authority of so eminent an Author, have in some things been misguided by him: it hapning very many times (which I find somewhere mentioned on the like occasion) Magnos errores, magnorum virorum auctoritate, transmissos, that great errors are often entertained upon the credit of their authors.

There is no place in all this Eastern part of the World so likely to be the Serica of the ancients, as China; tho' being very far distant from them, they might very easily mistake in the position of it. This Country also abounds in Silk and Cotton, one of which was the Serica of the Ancients. The Caravans have also in all times of peace, passed from Persia to China by land, the beginning of which Trade is not known. The Kingdom of Thibet which lies between Cathay towards the North, China to the East, Indostan to the South, and Imaus to the West, is said to be very Rich by Tavernier Part 2. Pag. 156. And much more conveniently Seated to be the Serica of the Ancients than any part of Tartary. But by reason of the vast Mountains between it and Indostan, China and Mawaralnabar, it is little more known than by the name. This however shews Tartary doth not reach so far to the South as Indostan. This Kingdom of Thibet shews also there can be no Scythia extra Imaum, but what is comprehended in the former description or in this Kingdom, which immediately Butts upon India.

The old Inhabitants hereof, in those parts which lay next the Scythians, are said to have been Anthropophagi, or Men-eaters, most probably a Scythian Nation, that Custom being so abhorrent from the mildness of the Serican temper. Or else we must correct the Copies of Ptolemy, by the History of Ammianus Marcellinus, who instead of Anthropophagi, placeth the Alitrophagi in the self-same Tract. The other nations not distained with the like Reproaches, are the Sizyges, and Anabi not far off from the Auzacian Mountains; the Pialæ near the River Occardes, the Geranæi, Rhabbanæi, their nearest neighbours; the Throani dwelling towards the East, the Batæ and Ottocororæ more towards the South. These with the residue, Governed by a Common-Council of 5000 men, every one of which was to find an Elephant for the service of the Common-Wealth, as was said before. And more than this, we hear not of them in the way of Story; the Natives never going abroad with their Wives, and having little speech with Strangers, when they come amongst them. Being vanquished by the Chataæ, a Scythian Nation, from whom it is like that it took the of name CATHAY (for in this we go but by conjecture) they continued under Kings of their own, till subdued by the Tartars, against whom they made such stout resistance, being besieged by Cingis in their principal City, that when they wanted stones to cast out of their Engines, they supplied that want with molten Silver; and held it out so long, that Cingis finding Victuals to grow short in his Camp, commanded that every tenth man should be eaten. But at last being undermined, the Town was taken, the Citizens Massacr'd, and their King or Emperour (as some call him) slain; after whose death, and not before, Cingis assumed the Title of the Cham, or Emperour. The residue of their Story we shall have hereafter.

SCYTHIA EXTRA IMAUM, was bounded on the East with Serica; on the West with Imaus; on the South, with India extra Gangem; and on the North, with the Countreys comprehended in the name of Altay, which Ptolemy hath given us in the notion of the Terra Incognita. Called Scythia, because planted by a brood of the Scythians. Extra Imaum was put to it, to difference it from that part of Scythia which lay on the West side of that Mountain, nearest unto the Greeks and Romans. But now the Mountain, and the Countrey, have the name of Altay.

To look upon it as it standeth by the name of Scythia extra Imaum, we find not any thing delivered of the Rivers or Mountains of it, but what is common unto them with the neighbouring Nations: the Mountains called Auzacii, and Casii, and Ennodorus, being common unto this with Serica; as Imaus joynly to both the Scythia's, which it divided anciently the one from the other; though now this last be reckoned to belong to Cathay alone, because the Tartars on both sides of it profess themselves subject to that Cham. This is the most famous Mountain in the East of Asia, beginning at the shores of the Scythick or Frozen Ocean, and extending thence directly Southwards unto Cape Comari, a Promontory of the Southern or Indian Seas. By which account it divideth the greater Asia into East and West, as Taurus doth into North and South, which Mountain it crosseth in right Angles, about the Longitude of 140, as before was said. That part hereof which lyeth on the South of Taurus, was by the Ancients called Bitigo; and by the modern is named Gates; of which we shall speak more when we come to India. That on the North of Taurus, called Imaus properly, was anciently most memorable for dividing the vast Countries of the Scythians, into Scythia intra Imaum, and Scythia extra Imaum; a division much observed by the old Geographers: now chiefly memorable for being the Sepulchre of some of the Chams of Tartary; most generally known by the name of Altay, but by some called Belgion.

Chief Towns hereof were 1. Auzacia, at the foot of the hill so named. 2. Chaurana, the chief City of the Chauranæi. 3. Sata. 4. Iffedon Scythica, so called to difference it from the other of that name in Serica. These with the rest, and all the Country, as far as it was known in the days of Ptolemy, inhabited by the Abii Hippophagi, or Horse-eaters, a diet still used by the Tartars or modern Scythians. 2. The Iffedones, who are said by Pomponius Mela to make carousing-cups of their Fathers heads, first trimmed and gilded. 3. The Cauranæi, and 4. The Chataæ, who being (as it seemeth) the most potent Nation, caused all the rest to be called by the name of Cathay, communicating that name also to the conquered Seres. Besides the possessions of which Tribes, there were also the Regions of Acassia, Cusia, and Auzuatis; these last so called from the Mountains upon which they stand. More than this, we have not to say of this Country by the name of Scythia; there being nothing memorable of it in the course of Story, or worth the observation in the way of Chorography. See the notes above.

ALTAY is bounded on the South, with Cathay, especially so called, and part of China; on the North, with Tartaria Antiqua; on the West with the great Mountain Imaus, and on the East, with the Nations or Countries of the Eastern Tartars. So called from its neighbourhood to that mighty Mountain, which the Tartars in their Language call by the name of Alta.

The Country utterly unknown to the Ancient Writers, and not much canvassed or travelled by our Modern Pens. In which respect I shall now trouble my self no further, than by giving a brief touch upon the several parts of it. Of which the most that can be said, will be but little for the information of the judicious Readers; who are not to be bettered by the names of places, if there be not something in them of further use. Now for these Provinces, the Principal of them are, 1. Cascar, 2. Chesmur, 3. Lop, 4. Camul, 5. Tainfu, 6. Camdu, 7. Carazan, 8. Cardandan, 9. Erginul, 10. Tanguth.

1. CASCAR, bordering on the North-West of China, a Mahometan Country, but admitting of some Christians also; the largest Kingdom in all Altay except Tangut only, and furnished with many Towns or Cities both of Trade and note, the Principal whereof are, 1. Nishan, the Royal City of this Country, a Mart famous for concourse of Merchants, and variety of Merchandizes. 2. Cadie, the chief Town of a Province or Kingdom so named, but subject to the King of Cascar, who in the year 1653 was called Mahomet Cham, a Prince of credit in those parts, but neither equal in Port or Power to the King of Tangut. The People generally rude and barbarous, in so much that some parts here of both Sexes do indulge themselves this mutual privilege, that if the Husband or the Wife be absent above twenty days, the other party is at liberty to marry again. This account seems taken from the Voyage of Benedict Goz a Portuguese Jesuit, sent from Indostan in 1653 to China by Land, he arrived there in 1655, but died before he reached Pekin, being poisoned as was suspected. It is this year Printed at the end of Fatner's Travels towards China.

2. CHESMUR, the Inhabitants whereof are generally both Idolaters and Incanters, causing the dumb Winds to speak, the winds to rise, and the Sun to be darkened. For studying which Black Arts (if they come to them by study) they have many Monasteries, in which their Hermites or Monastics live a strict kind of life, and are very abstemious.

3. L O P, memorable for a great Desert of thirty days journey; so true a Desert, that whosoever doth not mean to be starved, must carry all his Victuals with him. Dangerous to Travellers, if not before-hand made acquainted with their danger: the evil Spirits using to call men by their names, and make them go astray from their Company, where they perish with Famine, or are devoured with wild Beasts. The chief Town hereof called Lop, giving name to both.

4. CAMUL, an Idolatrous Country, the People whereof accounted it a great honour to them to have their Wives and Sisters at the pleasure of such as they entertained. From which brutish Custom when restrained by Atango Cham, they petitioned him at the three years end to be restored again to their former liberty; protesting they could never thrive, since they lost that Custom. Which desire of theirs was at last granted, and is still in use.

5. TAINFU, more civil than the rest, the People being very industrious, and good Artificers; making the most part of the Arms which are used by the Cham; and some also which they sell to Merchants.

6. CALINDU, with a Town in it of the same name, of great resort by Merchants (such as we commonly call Pettit Chapmen) for Womens Veils here made, with very great Art, of the Barks of Trees. And it is well that they have Veils to hide their shamefulness, the Women of this Tract being prostituted to every Traveller.

7. CARAZAN, inhabited by a Barbarous and Savage people, who in the day-time live in Dens for fear of Serpents, with which (and some of them ten paces long, and ten spans in thickness) they are much infested, and in the night go forth to prey upon Wolves and Lions. They have an use that when any stranger cometh into their Houses, of an handsome shape, to kill him in the night, not out of desire of Spoil, or to eat his body; but that the soul of such a comely body might remain amongst them.

8. CARDANDAN, near Carazan, and as Savage as that. The people whereof draw black lines on their Bodies, which they count for the greatest Ornament. In case of Sickness they send not to the Physitian but the next Incanters, who taking Counsel of the Devil, apply some remedy; or if they think the man past cure they tell him that his offences are grown too great to admit of help, and so put him off.

9. ERGIMUL, possessed by an Idolatrous people, but mixed with some Mahometans, and Nestorian Christians. in which Country they have certain Bulls as big as Elephants, with man's or fine white hair, like Silk, some of which they tame; and betwixt them and their Kine, engender a Race of strong and laborious Beasts, not inferior in that kind to Oxen. Here is also found a Beast of an exquisite shape, but not bigger than a Goat, which at every Full Moon hath a swelling under the belly; which being cut off by the Hunters, and dried in the Sun, proveth to be the best Musk in the World.

10. TANGUTH, the greatest and most potent of all the rest, bordering on the North of Cathay, especially so called, and (like that) inhabited by an industrious and laborious people, among whom the art of Printing is said to have been extant a thousand years. Blessed heretofore with a great increase of Christianity; but now the Gentiles or Idolaters make the greatest part, with some Mahometans amongst them. And for the serving of those Idols, they have not only many large and beautiful Temples, built in the manner of Christian Churches, and capable of 4 or 5000 persons: but also many fair Monasteries for the use of their Votaries and Recluses. They are possessed of many Towns, most of them well fortified, and planted with good store of Artillery. The chief of which, 1. Sachian, bordering on the Desert of Lop, inhabited by some of all three Religions; in which it is affirmed that they first used the Art of printing. 2. Campion, the Metropolis, or Mother-City of this Country; where the Christians in the time of Paulus Venetus, had three fair Churches: now over numbered by the Gentiles, who have here many Monasteries for the use of their Idols, and many Religious Persons dedicated to their Service only. Who though they live more honestly than the rest of their Order, and hold it an impiety to tempt a Woman to the act of Lust; yet if the Woman make the offer, they hold it no small sin to refuse her courtesie: 3. Sauta, a Town in the middle way betwixt Campion and Succuir, as being five days journey from the one and six days journey from the other; by which we may conjecture at the long extent of this King's Dominions. 4. Succuir situate amongst Mountains cloathed with Rhubarb, from whence conveyed by Merchants over all the World; but so neglected by the Natives, that did not the Foreign Merchants bring it into request, they would scorn to gather it. This once a Kingdom of it self, made subject afterwards with Tangut, to the Cham of Cathay, or the great Cham of Tartary. But the fury of this Tartarian Tempest, being over-blown, the Kings of Tangut did not only recover their ancient Royalty, but by degrees possessed themselves of the most part of the rest of Altay, and perhaps part of Cathay also, being looked on at the present as the greatest and most Puissant Prince betwixt the Mountains of Imaus, and the Eastern Tartar, to the description of whose Countries we next proceed.

The Countries of the Eastern Tartars, are bounded on the West with Altay, on the East with the Oriental Ocean, on the North with Tartaria Antiqua, and on the South with China; so called from their Eastern situation, in regard of those of Cathay and Altay, which by the Chineses are called commonly the Western Tartars.

The Country not very fruitful, because ill cultivated, so that the chief Commodities which they send abroad are the Root called Ginseng, so much esteemed amongst the Chineses, and all sorts of precious skins, as those of Castor, Martron and Zibellus; and also Horse-hair, of which the Chineses make their Nets, and the men (tho' madly) use it in tying up their hair, as the handsomest dress they can appear in. With these Commodities they traffick into Leantong, a Province of the North-East of China, (from which they are parted only by an Arm of the Sea) where commonly they make good Markets, their Merchandize being thence dispersed into all parts of the Kingdom. The people are generally of broad faces, their colour white, but their nose is not so flat, nor their eyes so little as the Chineses are, sparing of speech, and somewhat pensive, but neither so untociable as their neighbours of China, or so barbarous and rude as the Tartars.

of Europe. They shave both the head and the beard, reserving only the Mustachoes which they extend to a great length, and in the hinder part of their head they leave a Tuft, which being curiously woven and plated they let hang down carelessly below their shoulders; they have a round and low Cap, which is always garnished round with some precious skins three fingers broad, of Castor or Zibellin, and serveth to defend their Temples, Ears, and Foreheads from Colds and other Tempests. That which appears above the skin being covered over either with curious red Silk, or else with black and purple Horse-hair, which they dye and dress most curiously; so as their appurtenances being handsomely joyned together make the Cap commodious and handſom. Their Garments are long Robes falling down to the very foot, but their Sleeves are not so long and large as the Chineſes use but rather such as are used in Poland and Hungary, only with this difference, that they fashion the extremity of the Sleeve ever like a Horse's hoof. At their girdle there hangs on either side two handkerchiefs to wipe their face and hands, besides there hangs a knife for all necessary uses; with two Purses, in which they carry Tobacco, or such like Commodities. On their left side they hang their Scymeters, but so as the point goeth before, and the handle behind; and therefore when they fight they draw it out with the right hand behind them without holding the Scabbard with the other. They seldom wear shoes, and no Spurs to their Boots, which they make either of Silk or Horse-skin very neatly dressed; but they often use fair Pattens, which they make three fingers high. In riding they use Stirrups, but their Saddles are both lower and broader than ours. In matters of War they are very nimble, never carrying any Baggage with them, nor taking care for Provision, but filling themselves with what they find; yet commonly they eat Flesh, though half washed or half boyled: and if they find none, they fall upon their Horses and Camels. The Earth covered with their Horse-cloaths is their Bed, for they care not for Houses and Chambers; but if they are forced to dwell in Houses, their Horses must lodge with them, and they must have many holes beaten in the walls to let in the air; but yet their Tents are most beautiful, which they fix and remove with such art and dexterity, as they never retard the speedy march of an Army.

They Inhabit amongst many other Provinces, those of Sumabania, Tanaiu, Gupi, Niulban, and Niuche; of which I am able to say nothing in the way of Chorography, or of the four first in the way of History; only I find that those of Niulban were aiding to the King of Niuche, in the Conquest of China: and of the Gupi, it is written, that they are so called, by reason they make their Coats of defence or Breast-plates of Fishes Skins, which grow (as is affirmed) in a manner impregnable. None of which Nations count themselves originally of Tartarian Race. Yet either terrified by the noise of their great successes, or willing to partake of some part of their fortunes, they not only aided them in their Wars on that side of Imaus, but were contented to take their very name upon them. Never invaded nor subdued till the time of Hombu King of China, who having driven the Western Tartars, then Lording it over that Kingdom, from one part of it to another, compelled them finally to betake themselves unto those parts and Provinces of the Eastern Tartars, which now make up the Kingdom and Province of Niuche where the War followed after them also, till by little and little they became more quiet; compelled to begg their Peace of the Conquering Enemy; divided into seven Hords or Tribes, and Governed for a long time by their several Chiefs, they became at last united into one Kingdom called the Kingdom of Niuche, Anno 1550 or thereabouts. Oppressed by the Prefects of Leotong, in the way of their Trade, and suffering amongst many other indignities the death of their King, whom those Prefects had intrapped and murdered, they make complaint of these outrages to the King of China, and finding no remedy at his hands put themselves into Arms, invade the Province of Leotong, take the City of Leotong, and having besieged the King himself in the Royal or Imperial City of Pekin, they returned home (finding no hope of taking it at that time) with the spoil and plunder of all those parts through which they marched. The War thus first begun was managed for many years with great loss on both sides, the Tartars having got nothing by it, but the Eastern parts of the Province of Leotong, and the honour of having shewed themselves twice more at the Walls of Pekin, till in the year 1644. being invited into China by Uſangueius to support the then failing fortune of the Royal Family; they husbanded the opportunity so well, as to make themselves the absolute Masters of that mighty Kingdom. The whole story and Successes of this notable action, we shall sum up in brief when we come to China. In the mean time take here the Catalogue of

East Tartary

- | | | |
|------|------|---|
| 1550 | 1, 2 | N. N. advanced the Kingdom after the reducing of the main Body of the Tartars, who had succeeded in the treachery of the Prefects of Leotong , as before was said. The Annals of China say that in 1597, these Eastern Tartars being united, the Western Tartars entered into a League with Xin Zum King of China , against them. |
| 1616 | 3 | Theienmingus , who to revenge his Father's death, invaded China , took the City of Leotong , braved the great Emperour at the Walls of the Regal City, and having enriched himself with the spoils of the Country returned home again. |
| 1627 | 4 | Theienzungus , the Son of Theienmingus , followed the War with the same Fortune as his Father did, both of them growing greater in Renown and Riches than in Power and Patrimony. |
| 1636 | 5 | Zungteus , the Son of Theienzungus , secretly brought up amongst the Chineſes , by means whereof he grew not only acquainted with the conditions of that People, but their weaknesses also; and consequently was the better prepared to lay the foundation of that greatness to which the Tartars have attained by the Conquest of it. Called into China by Uſangueius , as before is said; he possessed himself of the City of Pekin , and though he died as soon as he was Master of that City only: yet left he such Instructions to his Brothers, and the rest of his Council, that very easily and speedily they possessed themselves of all the Kingdom. |
| 1644 | 6 | Xunchius the Son of the former, of the Age of nine years only, at the death of his Father; the management of his affairs both for War and Peace being committed to his Uncle's, but chiefly unto Amavangus the eldest of them, by whom so prudently conducted, that within the space of four years he was quietly settled in that Throne, all opposition and pretenders to the Royal Succession, being beaten down, of which more hereafter. |
| 1661 | 7 | Chamili , Son of the former Xunchi , Succeeded his Father being then but eight years of Age, and is supposed to be now living; he perfected the Conquest of China in the year 1680, Reigned over all the Tartars from Imaus and the Banks of the River Obb , and is one of the most Potent Princes in the World. |

5. TARTARIA ANTICUA.

TARTARIA ANTICUA, hath on the South, Altay and the Countries of the Eastern Tartars; on the West and North, the main Scythick Ocean, on the East, the Straights of Anian, (if such Straights there be) by which parted from America. So called, because the first habitation of the Tartars; who from this Den or Goal, made their first eruptions, and have since overgrown so much of Asia.

The Country cold and comfortless, as lying under the Polar Circle, and in part beyond it; not fit for any but such as can live no where else: yet heretofore a receptacle of many Christians (though those of the Nestorian Sect) who here enjoyed that liberty of their Religion which the Persian and Sarazens denyed them in more pleasing Countries. It containeth many Regions, some not considerable. Those of most note are 1. Thebet, 2. Tabor, 3. Tenduc, 4. Barbu, 5. Anian, and 6. Tartar.

T H E B E T, a Fenny Region, and full of Woods, rich in Coral, which they find on the Sea-shore, and use it instead of Money. So named from the chief City of it, the ordinary Seat of the Abasie, or Pope of this Idolatrous People; much revered, and having in his power the disposing of all Offices, which concern the Service of their Idols. They have also good store of Musk, and abundance of wild Beasts which are bred in their Forests: but no beasts wilder than the People, who in times past (if not at the present also) used to bury their Parents in their own Bowels, and to make drinking cups of their Skulls; for fear least in the midst of their jollity they should forget their Progenitors. Yet not more Barbarous than Immodest; it being contrary to their Custom to take a Wife that is a Virgin. And therefore the Mothers use to prostitute their Daughters to the Merchant Strangers, who having had their pleasures of them, gratifie them with a Jewel, or some other present, which they wear on their Wedding-day; she being the most acceptable Bride to her Husband who bringeth the greatest Dowry with her of those base rewards. It contained once several petty Kindoms, (Homagers to the Kings of Tenduc) with many Cities; but now laid desolate by the Tartars. I suspect this is the famous Kingdom of Thibet or Tobat described above, and placed here too far to the North; whereas in truth it abutts upon Indostan to the South, and is divided from it by the Emuli Montes, now called Moghati and Delanguer, being a part of Taurus.

2. T A B O R, once a distinct Kingdom also. One of the Kings thereof in the Year 1340, came to the Courts of Charles the Fifth, and Francis the first; where he found Princely Enterainment. But upon proof that he was a Factor for the Jews, and secretly solicited many unto that Religion, by the command of Charles he was burnt at Mantua.

3. T E N U C, A Populous Kingdom of it self, but greater in name and power; the Kings hereof commanding all these North-East parts, as far as the borders of Cathay. Christians in Religion, till the Conquest of it by the Tartars though according to the Nestorian tendries: but now Mahometans for the most part, with some remainders, and but few of Christianity. Divided into many large and spacious Provinces, as Chincintales. Cerguth, Egrigaia, Cerchaus, and others of less note; so called according to the names of their Principal Towns, or having some Towns in them of the name of the Provinces.

Those of most note in Tenduc it self, 1. Coras, the ordinary Sepulture of the Kings of Tenduc, before it was subdued by the Tartars, and since that also. 2. Caracoras, where Cingis was first honoured with the title of King, the Kings hereof bearing the port of Kings, and the Office of Priests, were anciently called by the name of Presbyter Johannes, or Prester John: a Title now erroneously conferred by some on the Emperour of the Abassines, or Ethiopians in Africk. Concerning which it is a wonder, that Joseph Scalager, a man of such infinite reading, should be so deceived: and by the authority of his judgment deceive so many. For finding that there was a Presbyter Johannes, in the North of Asia, and hearing vulgarly that Title given to him in Africk, he fell upon a fancy that this Abassine Emperour was formerly of so great power, as to extend his Empire over India, and the North of Asia; and in this last for the assurance of his Conquests to hold his residence. A monstrous and undefensible fancy! For besides that, all Histories, even those of the Abassines themselves, are silent in it: how improbable is it, that a King Reigning in the heart of Africk, should subdue the most remote parts of Asia, and there keep his Court, so many great States and most Puissant Nations being interposed; or that so memorable an exploit should be buried in silence, and found in no Record but in Scaliger's Head! Besides it is well known, and generally granted, that Presbyter John of Asia, was by Sect a Nestorian; but he that is called in Africk, of the Sect of the Jacobites: and further, that the Christians of Ethiopia are Circumcised, which never was reported of those of Asia.

Letting this pass therefore as an unwarrantable, and ill grounded fancy, we are to know that formerly this Province of Tenduc, was under the old Kings of Cathay, till the time of Cin Cham, the King thereof. After whose death a certain Nestorian Shepherd (that is to say, the Master of great Flocks of Sheep) being Governor of the Taymans, a People of Tenduc, took to himself the Title of King of Tinduc, whom they called by the name of Prest John or Prince John (the same word in their Language as in the Hebrew, signifieth both Priest and Prince.) Dying he bequeathed his Estate and Flocks to his Brother Unt-Cham, (commonly called in one word Uncham) a greater Sheep-Master than he; whose Flocks ranged over all the Pastures of the Moles, or Mongul Tartars, though dwelling fourteen days Journey off, whom he had in subjection: the Title of Prest John or Presbyter Johannes, going along with the Dignity and Royal Estate. And though afterward this Uncham was subdued by the Tartars, yet his Posterity for a long time were suffered to enjoy the Title of Kings and Presbyters: (but Vassals and Homagers to the great Cham) the great Chams, in regard of their Nobility and Royal parentage, bestowing their Daughters on them in Marriage; as is said by William de Rubruquis, who Travelled in these Countries, Anno 1253, the King hereof being then named George (the fourth from Uncham) but commonly called Presbyter Johannes, as his Fathers were.

4. B A R G U, on the extreme North-West, bordering on both those sides the cold Scythick Ocean, situate under the North-Star; of the same nature, both for the Soil and People, as that of the Tartars. And,

5. A N I A N, on the North-East, opposite unto it, giving name unto the Straights of Anian lying betwixt Tartary and America; which Straights (if any such Straights there be) the Tartars, and some others of these Northern Nations, are thought to have passed over, and to plant that Country. This is made the more probable by our Country-Men's observation, that the farther they go to the North-West in America, the more the People resemble the Samoyedes in Customs, and Language: besides these most northern Nations have neither Horle, Cows or Sheep; and none of these Creatures were found in any part of America, till the Europeans transported them thither. Mochim Poukim, the Vayvode of Smolensko, who had lived many years in Siberia as Intendant of the Chancery in that Government, reporteth that beyond the Obb to the East, was the River Lena, which falleth into the Kawoina; at the mouth of which is a great populous Island, the inhabitants of which hunt upon the Ice about it in the Frozen Sea, for a Fish called Bebemot, affording Excellent Ivory; they being often surprized by a Thaw are carried away (said he) I know not whether; but I believe to the most Northern parts of America, which is not far distant. And I am confirmed in this, because the most Northern Americians have the same Physiognomy as those unfortunate Islanders that are thus carried away. Father Avril's Travels towards China, Pag. 177. Who saith he had it from the Vayvod's mouth in 1586. So that all Nations hereabout, do agree that Tartary is surrounded by the Sea to the North and East; and that America is not very far from it; and consequently that there is such a Straight as this of Anian, which must lye very remote towards the North to answer to the River Lena; and it is likely this great Island is the Southern Boundary of this remote Fretum, which is not yet discovered.

TARTARY, is so called of the great River Tartar, the Principal of this Northern Tract, and giving name unto the Tartars; this being their original Country, where they lived like Beasts, having neither Faith, nor Letters, nor Habitation, nor the use of Arms, nor any Reputation amongst their Neighbours. In matters of Religion, the worst sort of Gentiles, Worshipping the Sun, Moon, Fire, and the very Earth; to which they offered in the Morning fasting, the first of their meats and drinks.

Their Idols made of Felt, and placed on both sides of the doors of their Tents or Booths, as the preservers of their Cattel, and the Authors of Milk. Divided into five Clans or Tribes, denominating so many Towns and Territories in which they dwelt, that is to say, 1. Mongui, 2. Teka Mongul, (or the great Mongul), 3. Sammongul, or the Water-Mongul, 4. Marcat, 5. Motret: each of them Governed by its Chief as commonly it is amongst Barbarous Nations; though all those Chiefs are subordinate to some higher power. Oppressed by Uncham, or Untcham, the King of Tenduc, who invaded their Pastures, and compelled them to pay unto him the tenth of their Cattel; with joynt consent they removed somewhat farther off, and denied their Tribute. This opportunity was taken by Cingis, one of the Tribe of the Teka Monguls, and so well husbanded, that they admitted him for their King. For publishing abroad amongst the credulous people, that an Armed man appeared to him in his sleep, with a white Horse, and said, O Cangius or Cingis, it is the Will of immortal God, that thou be Governour of the Tartars, and free them from bondage and paying Tribute; he found a general belief, especially amongst those of his own Clan, who joyning themselves to him, followed him as their Ring-leader, in all his actions. Thus backed and strengthened, he made War against the Sammonguls, slew their Commander, and subdued them: and by their help successfully assaulted the Mercates, and Metrits, whom he also vanquished. And having thus subdued all the Clans of the Tartars, and added the Estates of Thebet and Tanguth, unto his Dominions, he was by the consent of the seven Princes, or Chiefs of their Clans, (Thebet and Tanguth being added to the former number) placed on a Seat of a piece of Felt, (the best Throne they had or could afford) and saluted King with as great Reverence and Solemnity as their State could yield. And first to make Tryal of his Power, and their Obedience, he commanded the seven Chiefs, or Princes to surrender their Places, and each of them to cut off the Head of his eldest Son; which was done accordingly. Had John of Leyden been a Scholar, as he was but a Butcher, I should think he had studied the Acts of Cingis, and proceeded by them. Assured by this of their Fidelity and Obedience, he set upon the Naymans, a People of the Kingdom of Tenduc, whom he overcame. And now conceiving himself fit for some great Alliance, he sent to Uncham, and demanded one of his Daughters for his Wife; which Uncham with some threats, but more scorn, denying, he marched against him, slew him in the Field, and possessed his Daughter, and with her also his Estate. Proud with this good success, and encouraged by so great an increase of Power, he invaded the Kingdom of Cathay; pretending for that also the authority of an Heavenly Vision, in the name of the Immortal God: in which attempt, discomfited at first with a very great overthrow, but at last Victorious; conquering the several Nations of it one by one, till in the end he brought the War to the chief City of that Kingdom, which at last he took, and therewithal the Title of Cham or Emperour. Continuing this Dignity for the space of six years, and every year adding somewhat to his Dominions, he was at last wounded in the Knee at the Castle of Thaygin; of which wound he died, and was honourably buried in Mount Altay.

This is the best account I am able to give of the beginning of this great Empire, the Original of this spreading Nation, and the description of the Country, of their first Habitation. They that have Christned some of the most Northern part of it, by the names of the Tribes of Dan and Naphthalim, and accordingly placed them in their Maps, might with more Credit have supplyd those vacant places which they knew not otherwise how to fill, with the Pictures of wild Beasts, or monstrous Fishes; which might well enough have pleased the Eye, without betraying the Judgment of the looker on. Of his successors I am able to make no certain Catalogue: their names being doubtfully delivered, and the Succession much confounded amongst our Writers: the names of the Provincial Sultans being many times imposed upon us instead of those of the Chams themselves. But we will wade through those difficulties as well as we can, and exhibit as perfect a Catalogue of them, as the light of Story will direct me: first adding (what should have been before remembered) that it is Recorded, that Cingis before he joynd Battel with Uncham, consulted with his Diviners and Astrologers of the Success. They taking a green Reed, cleft it asunder; writ on the one the name of Cingis, and Uncham on the other: and placed them not far asunder. Then fell they to reading their Charms and Conjurations, and the Reeds fell a fighting in the sight of the whole Army, Cingis's Reed overcome the other: whereby they foretold the joyful news of the Victory to the Tartars, which accordingly happened. And this was the first step, by which this base and beggerly Nation began to mount unto the Chair of Empire and Sovereignty; whereas before they lived like Beasts, having neither Letters, nor Faith, nor Dwelling, nor Reputation, nor Valour, nor indeed any thing befitting a man, as before was said.

The Great CHAMS of the TARTARS.

A. C.

- 1162 1. Cingis, Cingius, Zingis or Changius, was made King or Cham of the Tartars; he subdued Tenduc, and Cathaya, changing the name of Scythians and Scythia, to Tartarians and Tartaria. 6.
- 1168 2. Jocuthan Cham, or Hocata, succeeded. In his time the name of Tartar was first known in Europe, Anno 1212. in which year they drove the Polesockies from the Banks of the Euxine Sea. By his Captain Bathu of Roido, he subdued Moscovia, or Russia; planted his Tartars in Taurica Chersonesus; wasted Hungaria, Bosnia, Servia, Bulgaria; and by his other Captains took Persia from the Turks.
3. Zaincham, Bathu, or Barcham, ruined the Turks Kingdom of Damascus, and Asia the less.
4. Gino Cham, whose Daughter conveyed the Empire unto her Husband Tamerlane, or Tamberlane.
- 1370 5. Tamur-Cutlu, Tamir Cham, or Tamerlane, a great Tyrant, but withal an excellent Soldier. It is thought, that he subdued more Provinces in his life time, than the the Romans had done in 800 years. Of whose Acts we have spoke at large. Dying, he divided his great Empire amongst his Children, as Persia to Amerza Charack his fourth Son, Zagathay to another, (perhaps unto Sautochus his eldest Son) and so to others.
- 1405 6. Lutrochin, the second Son of Tamerlane, succeeded in Cathay though the eldest was at first proclaimed, which his Father had before prognosticated: who when his Sons came to him before before his death, laid his hand on the head of Sautobus, who was the eldest but lifting up the Chin of Lutrochin, who was the second. He lived not long, succeeded by

7. Allan, who added little to his Estate.

8. Mango Cham, to whom Haiton an Armenian Prince (and the chief Compiler of the Tartarian History) went for aid against the Caliph of Bagdet. By whose perswasion the said Mango Cham is said to have been Christned, with all his Household, and many Nobles of both Sexes.

9. Cublay Cham, the Son of Mango,

10. Tamor Cham, the Nephew of Cublay by his Son Cingis.

11. Demyr Cham, the great Cham of Cathay in the year 1540 or thereabouts. What the names of the Chams are who have since reigned, we cannot learn; nor what memorable Acts have been done among them. The great distance of Countries, and difficulty of the Journey, have hindred further discoveries. For the Great Cham, and his next Neighbour the King of China, will neither suffer any of their Subjects to Travel abroad, nor permit any Foreigners to view their Dominions, or enter into them; unless their Ambassadors or Merchants, and those but sparingly, and under very great restraints, to avoid all giving of intelligence touching their affairs; saving that in these latter times the Jesuits have found some footing in China, by whom notwithstanding, we have received little or no Intelligence in matters which concern this Country.

The Government is Tyrannical, the Great Cham being Lord of all; and in his tongue (besides which, they have almost no Laws) consisteth the Power of life or death. He is called by the simple vulgar, the shadow of Spirits, and Son of the Immortal God: and by himself is reputed to be the Monarch of the whole World. For this cause, every day as soon as he hath dined, he causeth his Trumpets to be sounded; by that sign giving leave to the other Kings and Princes of the Earth to go to Dinner. A fine dream of Universal Monarchy. At the death of the Cham, the seven chief Princes Assemble to Crown his Son; whom they place on a black course Cloath: telling him if he live well, Heaven shall be his reward; if ill, he shall not have so much as a corner of that black Cloath to rest his body on: then they put the Crown upon his Head, and kissing his feet, swear unto him Fealty and Homage. And at the Funeral of these great Monarchs, they use to kill some of his Guard-Soldiers, whereof he hath 12000 in continual pay, saying unto them, Itē & domino nostro servite in alia vita. Paulus Venetus reporteth, that at the obsequies of Mango Cham, no fewer then 10000 were slain on this occasion.

These Chams are for the most part severe Justicers, and punish almost every small fact with sudden death; but Theft especially: insomuch that a man in Cambalu taking a Pail of Milk from a Woman's head, and beginning to drink thereof, upon the Woman's out-cry was apprehended, and cut asunder with a sword; so that the Blood and Milk came out together. Nor are Adultery or Lying punished with less than death, and so ordained to be by the Laws of Cingis, their first Emperour. A wiser man than possibly could be expected from so rude a Country, and of so little Breeding in the knowledg of Books or Business; the Tartars being utterly without the use of Letters, till the Conquest of the Huyri, a Cathayan Nation but of Christian Faith.

What Forces the Great Chams, in the height of their Power, were able to draw into the Field, may be conjectured at by the Army of Tamerlane, consisting of 1200000 Horse and Foot, as was said before. And looking on them as confined within Cathay, we shall find them not inferior to the greatest Princes. For Cutlay Cham, long after the division of this great Estate, which was made by Tamerlane, had in the Field against Naian his Uncle, and one Caiadas, who had then Rebelled, an Army of 100000 Foot, and 360000 Horse: there being 500000 Horse on the other side; which made almost a Million of men in both Armies. And this is probable enough, it report be true touching the Chams of Zagathay, and those of Turchestan, (before reduced under the obedience of the other) of which the first is said have been able to raise 300000 Horse, and the last an hundred thousand more. For standing Forces, he maintains 12000 Horse, distributed amongst four Captains, for the Guard of his Person; besides which he has great Forces in every Province, and within four miles of every City, ready to come upon a call, if occasion be; so that he need not fear any outward Invasion, and much less any home-bred Rebellions. But on the other side, admitting this for truth which before is said, we find him of no power at Sea, without which great Princes are exposed most commonly to the Invasions and affronts of such as are strong in Shipping: For either the Eastern Tartars interposed betwixt him and the main Ocean, whereby he is Landlocked (as it were) from all Trade at Sea; or if he have any Port in the North-East parts of this long Country, where it joyneth on Tartaria Antiqua; it is so far off, and so much out of the way, that it adds nothing to his Power and not much to his Purse.

Of the Revenues of the Cham, I can make no estimate, but may conclude them to be what he list himself: he being the absolute Lord of all, the Subject without any thing he can call his own. But that which ordinarily doth accrew unto him, is the tenth of Wooll, Silk, Hemp, Corn, and Cattel. So then doth he draw into his own hands all the Gold and Silver which is brought into the Country: which he causeth to be melted, and preserved in his Treasury: Imposing on his people instead of Money, in some places Cockle-shells; in other a black Coin, made of the Bark of Trees, with his stamp upon it. And besides this he hath to himself the whole Trade of Pearl-Fishing, which no body upon pain of death dare fish for, but by leave from him. So that his Treasure is conceived to be very Rich, though his Annual Income be uncertain, or not certainly known.

Hitherto I have prosecuted the affairs of this mighty Monarch upon the common credit of approved Authors, yet must confess I am not very well satisfied in the truth and reality of the thing it self; it being rather my opinion, That there is no such man at this present time as a Great Cham of Tartary, with Sovereign Power and Jurisdiction over all the other members of that vast body; but that this Empire being broken in pieces by the Sons of Tamerlane, the conquered Countries did by little and little return again to their former Governments, or else were seized on by the Viss Chams, or Governors of the several Provinces. For first I consider it is as impossible that there should be such a mighty Monarch, of such absolute authority, such an infinite power, and such unlimited Revenue; and yet that for the space of an hundred years and more, we should hear neither tale nor tidings of them, no not so much as of their names, especially in an active Age; and when this great building of the World hath such Casements in it. For it must needs seem strange to a rational man, that neither Jenkinson who passed into Persia by the Caspian Sea, nor Sir Robert Shurley who spent much time in the Persian Court, nor Sir Thomas Roe, or Sir Dodmore Cotton (the first Ambassador to the great Mogul, the other to the Persian Sophy) should tell us any thing of this Prince, if such Prince there be; or that the Travellers of our Nation who have rambled over all parts of India, the next neighbouring Country, should bring us home no tidings of him; or the Jesuits with all their diligence should not find him out. Secondly, I consider it as a thing improbable, that if there were any such mighty Prince, keeping his Royal Court in the City of Cambalu, so near unto the Kingdom of China, he should permit the beggerly Nations of the Eastern Tartars to Conquer that Rich and mighty Empire in so short a time; he in the mean season sitting still as a dulk spectator, neither considering his own danger, nor putting in for a share of so great a Booty. Thirdly, I observe that in the treating of a Marriage between Xunchius the great King of the Eastern Tartars, now reigning in China, with a Daughter of the King of Tanguth, the King of Tanguth is called Prince of the Occidental, or Western Tartars, by which name the Chinese call all the Tartars Inhabiting the vast Countries of Altay and Cathay, especially so called, (i. e. being Westward of themselves, and the Eastern Tartars) which Title the King of Tanguth had not merited or durst have assumed unto himself, if there had been any such great Cham then reigning in Cathay, and residing in Cambalu, as our Authors speak of. And fourthly, I observe it as a matter probable, That as at the breaking of this Empire into pieces upon the death of Tamerlane, the Precopenses, or European Tartars submitted to a Prince of their own Nation, under the Power and Government of whose Successors, they do still continue: and much of the Asiatick Tartary being subdued by the Moscovites, the Neighbouring Tartars did return to their ancient Government by Hords or Tribes; that so the Kings of Tanguth might not only recover their own Inheritance, but by degrees possess themselves of the greatest part of Altay, if not of some part of the Proper Cathay also. And therefore that some of the last great Chams mentioned in the former Catalogue, are no other than the Kings of Tanguth, or the Chams of Zagathay, in whom (if any were) remaineth the Succession of the House of Cingis. Gabriel Magehanes or Magellan, in his History of China, Printed at London in 1688, spends his first Chapter to prove, that China is the same Country with that which Paulus Venetus calleth Cataio; He finds all the Cities, Rivers, and Towns mentioned by that Venetian Author, in Cataio in China; but the names are varied according to the Tartars dialect. Pag. 3. The Moscovites as I was informed (saith he) call China by the name of Kirai in imitation of the Tartars. The Kingdom of China Malaha, (supposed to be the Usbeck Tartars) the Inhabitants of which are Mahometans, and which Border on the Province of Kensi. The Kingdom of Tomet or Tibet, which environ a good part of Xenlici and Xanli, and that of Usangue, (to the East of Tibet) Bordering upon Suchuin; having corrupted the word Kita, call it Katai; and the Merchants that come from Indostan and other parts of the Indies, call it Cataio. This Author lived in China from 1640 to 1677, when he died at Pe-Xim; which puts it past all doubt that China is Cathay to much sought after.

From these Premises I conclude, that all which hath before been spoken touching the great Power, Authority, and Revenue of the great Chams of Tartary, must either be referred unto the times of their greatest glory, when their Empire was entire, or not much dismembred; or else relate, with some qualifications, to the Chams of Zagathay, or the Kings of Tanguth. But these my observations and considerations, with the conclusion issuing from them, I willingly submit unto better Judgments.

The Catalogue of the Kings of Niuche, which in the China Language signifies the Eastern Tartars, entered above, Pag. 777 of this Book, shews that this Kingdom was in 1550, divided into 7 Hords, each of which had its Chief, which about the year 1596, were all united under one head; whose name is not expressed in the Annals of China. Hereupon, Xi Zum then King of China, made a League with the Western Tartars, who in former years had much invaded China against this new Family, which was then become terrible to both: This shews that there was then no Cham at Cambalu, which is in East Tartary, before that time, and that the Western Tartars, were before this more considerable than the Eastern. Annals of China, Pag. 89. And in the year 1683, the present King of China made a Progress with a great Army into the Western Tartary, none of the Chiefs of the Hords daring to oppose him; the Bounds of his Empire extending as I have said already, to Russia and the Mountain of Imaus, the Kingdom of Thibet, and the Chinian Ocean; so that there is now no Cham of Tartary but the King of China, who succeeded Xunchi his Father in the year 1661, and was then a Child of about eight years of Age; and whether he is still living is uncertain. It is very much to be remarked, that the Western Tartars submitted without any contest or War to this Family; tho' they were more Powerful than the Eastern Tartars when the War of China began; which shews they were not united under any one Prince or Head: and tho' they were able to invade and vex China, which was a weak tho' populous Nation, yet they never durst resist this victorious Prince. So that what the Reverend Doctor Heylin saith is true, viz. That the Chams of Tartary derived of Cingis, were long since extinct.

And thus much for TARTARY.

C H I N A.

CHINA is bounded on the North, with Altay, and the Eastern Tartars, from which separated by a continual Chain of Hills, part of those of Ararat; and where that chain is broken off, or interrupted, with a great wall extended 400 Leagues in length; built, as they say, by Tzianzon, the 117th King hereof; on the South, partly with Cauchin-China, a Province of India, partly with the Ocean; on the East, with the Oriental Ocean; and on the West with part of India, and Cathay; viz. with the Kingdoms of Pegu, Thibet, and the Western Tartars; the two latter of which are no part of India: from which no otherwise separated than by such natural Bounds and Ramparts as commonly divide great Countries from one another.

The Northern Parts thereof were utterly unknown unto the Ancients, both Greeks and Latines; but for the Southern parts hereof, they make up that Country which Ptolemy call Sina, or Sinarum Regio, by which name the whole Country is called at present by our modern Latinists; and from whence that of China seems to be derived, by Paulus Venetus called Mangi, by the neighbouring Countries Sanglai, by the Natives Taine, and Tabinco: which last signifies no other than a Realm; or by way of Excellence, the Realm. By the Arabians it is called Tzin-in; and the Inhabitants call themselves by the name of Tangis.

There is no part of this Country that was at all known to the Ancients, by the name of Sina; that Country they called by that name, abutting to the West, upon the Bay called Sinus Magnus in Ptolemy, and now the Gulf of Bengala, and was no other than the Kingdom of Pegu, or Siam; to the East of which are the Kingdoms of Cauchin-China, and Tonkin, all of them without the bound bounds of China, as now it stands; tho' the two East are said to have been parts of China, yet the other two were never any part of it. It is notwithstanding probable, the present name China is derived from the ancient name of Sinæ, but misplaced.

It is said to contain in circuit 69516 Dies of China measure, which reduced to our European measure, will make a compass in the whole of 3000 Leagues: the length thereof extended from the Borders of India, to the most Northern Provinces of this Continent, 1800 Leagues. But they that say so, speak at random. For besides that 1800 Leagues in length must needs carry a greater compass than 3000 Leagues, they make it by this reckoning to be bigger than Europe, which I think no sober Man will grant. And answerable to this vast compass, it is said also to contain no fewer than 15 Provinces, every one of which is made to be of a greater Continent than the greatest Realm we know in Europe: Yet not a Continent of waste ground, or full of uninhabitable Desarts, as in other Places; but full of goodly Towns and Cities. The names of which Provinces, and the number of their Towns and Cities, I have thought fit once for all to lay down in this Diagram following.

The Provinces, Cities and Towns in China.

	Prov.	Cit.	Towns.
1	Canton	37	190
2	Foquien	33	99
3	Olam	90	130
4	Sifnam	44	150
5	Tolenchia	51	155
6	Cansay	24	122
7	Minchian	25	29
8	Ochian	19	74
9	Honan	20	102
10	Pagnia	47	150

By which it doth appear, that in these fifteen Provinces there are 591 Cities; 1593 walled Towns; and besides them 1154 Castles, 4200 Towns unwall'd; and such an infinite number of Villages, that the whole Country seems to be but one City only. But here we are to understand, that these great Provinces are divided into many lesser, and some of them presented to us (in late stories) under other names, according to the Languages and Appellations of those several nations, which either have recourse unto them, or do traffique with them; which the Reader may take notice of with less doubt or wonder, in regard that the main Country of China it self is called by so many several names, as before was shewn.

It reacheth from the 130th to the 160th Degree of Longitude: and from the Tropick of Cancer, to the 53d Degree of Latitude. So that it lieth under all the Climes from the third to the ninth, inclusively: the longest Summer's day in the Southern parts, being thirteen hours, and forty minutes; increased in the most Northern parts, to sixteen hours, and three quarters. Enjoying by this site an Air somewhat of the hottest, especially in those parts which lie under the Tropick; but withal very sound and healthy, and fit for the production of the choicest fruits.

The true extent of this great Country is from twenty two to forty Degrees of North Latitude, as appeareth by the latest and best Maps. So that our Reverend Author by misinformation extends it 13 Degrees towards the North further than it lies. Father Magelbanes saith it lies under 23 Degrees from North to South, from the Fortress of Cai Pim, placed on the Frontiers of the Province of Pekim in 41 Degree of Lat. to the Meridional Point of the Island of Hui-Nan, in 18 Degr. of Elevation and to the South of the Province of Quantum: So that the length of it, at 60 Italian Miles to a Degree, is 1360 Italian Miles; and the breadth, from Nim Po in the Kiam to Lean Po in Suchuen, in a straight line from East to West, is 1020 Italian Miles.

The Country is very rich and fertile, inasmuch that in many places they have two, and in some three Harvests in a year: well cultivated, and sowed with all manner of Grain, and planted with the best kind of Fruits; which do not only come to a speedy maturity, but to more excellency and perfection than any of these Western parts. The like is also said of their Pearls and Bezoar; fairer and of greater virtue than those of America, or any other part of the World besides. Particularly it aboundeth with Wheat, Barley, Rice, Wool, Cotton, Olives, Vines, Flax, Silk, all kind of Metals, Fruits, Cattel, Sugar, Honey, Rhubarb, Camphire, Ginger, all kinds of Spices, medicinal wood, called China wood, by the name of the Country, Musk, and Salt; the Custom for which last in one City only, which is that of Cantan, amounteth to the yearly value of 180000 Crowns. It yieldeth also an Herb, our of which they press a delicate juyce, which doth not only serve them instead of Wine, but preserveth their health, and freeth them from many of those inconveniences which the immoderate use of Wine doth breed to others. Such store of Poultry of all sorts, but of Ducks especially that in the Town of Cantan only before-mentioned, it is thought there are 12000 eaten every day, one day with another.

The People are for the most part of swarthy Complexion, but more or less according to their nearness to the heat of the Sun, short-nosed, black-eyed, and of very thin beards. They wear their Garments very long, with long loose sleeves, and their hair much longer than their neighbouring Tartars, who wear their hair exceeding short, and their cloaths much closer; to which two Fashions so addicted, that more of them took up Arms for their Hair and Habit (when required to conform in those particulars to the will of the Conqueror) than had done either for their King, or their common Liberty. So much delighted with their own Fashion and composure, that as the Negroes use to paint the Devil white, as a colour contrary to their own; so when these Chinois use to draw the Picture of a deformed Person, they set him forth in a short Coat, broad Eyes, long Nose, and a bushy Beard. They are much given unto their Bellies, and eat thrice a day, but then not immoderately; drink their Drink hot, and eat their Meat with two flicks of Ivory, Ebony, or the like, not touching their Meat with their hands at all, and therefore no great foulers of Linnen. The use of Silver-Forks with us, by some of our spruce Gallants taken up of late, came from hence into Italy, and from thence into England. Their Marriages they celebrate most commonly in the New Moon, and many times put them off till March, when the year beginneth with them as it doth with us: In which solemnity they spare for no cost or charge, Musick and Stage-plays, and good cheer many days together. Yet doth not this take them off a jot from their natural industry, and their proficiency in Manufactures and Mechanick Arts. For the Son is bound to follow his Father's Occupation: which Law, preventing the roving about of idle people, and exciting in each breast an emulation in every Art, maketh the Inhabitants excellent Artificers. In giving Alms they are bountiful to the maimed, and lame; but reject the blind, as being sufficiently able to get sustenance for themselves by corporal labour, as grinding of Corn, &c. They have long enjoyed the benefit of Printing before it was known in Europe, but Print not as we do, from the left hand to the right; nor as the Jews, from the right hand to the left; but from the top of the leaf downward to the bottom. Guns also have been used among them time out of mind; whence they are so well conceited of themselves, that they use to say, They themselves have two eyes, the Europeans one, and the rest of the People of the World not one. A pretty flourish of self-praising. Now that Guns were in use in these Eastern Countries, and consequently also amongst them, even when Bacchus made his Expedition into India, which was some three or four years before, or after the departure of Israel out of Egypt (as Sir Walter Raleigh seemeth to affirm: because Philostratus, in the life of Apollo-nius Tyanus, telleth us how Bacchus was beaten from a City of the Oxydrace by Thunder and Lightning; which he interpreteth to be Cannon. But certainly himself in another place of his most excellent Book, acknowledgeth this Philostratus to have written fabulously; and therefore no fit foundation for a conceit so contrary to probability, and the opinion of all times. Besides, whereas Dion telleth us, that by the benefit of Thunder and Lightning from Heaven Severus discomfited Pescennius Niger; and by the same means was himself repulsed from the Walls of Petra in Arabia: we may (if this interpretation hold good) as easily maintain, that Severus had great Ordinance in his Camp; as the Arabians in their Town. As for Printing, whether John Gutenberg learned it of the Chinois; or whether good Inventions, like good wits, do sometime, jump, I dare not determine: sure I am that he first taught it in Europe; and as some say, in the year 1440. At Harlem a Town of Holland it was first said to be practised, and at Mentz perfected. Now whereas it is by some doubted, whether the Art of Printing be available to the proficiency and advancement of Learning, or not, I must not herein be both a Judge and a Party; but must leave the decision of the point to men uninterested. Only this I dare boldly say, that this most excellent Invention has been much abused, and prostituted to the lust of every foolish and idle paper-blurrier: The Treasury of Learning being never so full, and yet never more empty; over-charged so with the froth and scum of foolish and unnecessary Discourses. In which (though all Nations have their share therein, and we of late as much as any) the Dutch have been accounted the most blame-worthy: who not content to scatter their poor conceptions amongst themselves, and Print them in their own Tongue only (as our English Paper-blurriers do) publish them in the Latin to the eye of others, and send them twice a year to the publick Marts, though neither worth the Reader's eye, nor the Printer's hand. Scriptorum plus est hodie quam muscarum olim cum caletur maxime; the complaint once of an old Comedian, was never truer than at the present.

But not to dive too deep into this Dispute, the People, as before was said, are good Artificers, ingenious and excellent in all things which they take in hand: the Porcellan Dishes, curious Carvings, and the fine painted Works which we have in Tables, Leather, Stuffs, being brought from thence. Effeminated with much ease and pleasure, they are not much given unto the wars, which make them the more ealie prey to the Neighbouring Tartars, whose very name hath bred more terrors in them, than their Arms or Conquests. Insomuch that when Usanguicus requested Aid of Zungteus King of the Eastern Tartars, against Lycunstzus, and his rabble of Rogues, which sacked the City of Peking, and placed himself in the Throne Imperial; the Tartarian having but few men in readiness, advised him to array a good part of his own Soldiers with the Arms and Colours of the Tartars, that on the Terror of that sight he might obtain the cheaper and more certain Victory; which prudent Counsel was pursued, and it proved accordingly. As the Lacedemonian Government was more fitted for War than Peace, which was the great design of the Founder of it; so the China Government was fitted for Peace, and not for War: The strict Government of the People, and severe Punishment of the least breach of Peace, added to the softness of the Climate, very much tending to the softning and effeminating of the Inhabitants. The building the great Wall against the Tartars, was also an impolitick contrivance; rendring the Tartars more terrible to the Chinians, by this over-great care to keep them out; and softning the China people, and making them overmuch secure: Whereas it had been better to have left that part open, that by perpetual Incurssions the People of China might have been taught the use of their Arms, and hardened to War: Nor was it to be thought such a Wall could be defended, when a considerable Body of the Tartars should at any time attack it in any one place. What they want in Courage they supply with Wit, being said to be a politick and judicious people; but withal very jealous of their women, and great Tyrants over them; not suffering them to go abroad, or sit down at the Table if any Stranger be invited, unless he be some very near Kinsman. A Tyranny or Restraint which the poor Women give no cause for, being said to be very honest and much reserved; not so much as shewing themselves at a window for fear of offence: And if they use painting as most of them do, it is rather to preserve themselves in the good affections of their Husbands, than for any other lewd respects. For the most part of a fair Hair, whereof very curious, binding it about their heads with Ribbands of Silk, and garnished with Pearls and precious Stones. Neat in their dress, and very costly in their apparel, with reference to their estates, and the degree of their Husbands; the richer sort wearing Sattin strip'd with Gold, and interlac'd with very rich Jewels; the poorer in Serge, and razed Velvets. They have most of them little Feet, which they take great pride in, and for this cause bind them up hard from their very Infancy; which they endure patiently though it be very painful, because a small Foot is accounted for so great a grace. And yet it is conceived that this proceeded not so much from their own curiosity, as from the jealousy of the men, who have brought it in, to the end that they should not be able to go but with a great deal of pain; and that going with so ill a grace, and so little ease, they should have no desire to stir much abroad. A Custom so ancient and received, that it hath got the force of Law; and if any Mother should do otherwise in breeding their Daughters, they would undergo some censure or mark of Infamy. If a desire to see their Parents get them the Freedom of a Visit, they are carried to them in close Chairs, and attended by so many waiters, that it is not possible for any man either to see them, or hold any discourse with them.

Of both Sexes it is thought that this Country containeth no fewer than 70 Millions. Which though it seems to be a number beyond all belief; yet it is knowingly averred, and may be thought probable enough, if we consider the spaciousness of the Country. 2. The secret goodness of the Stars, and temperature of the Air. 3. The abundance of all things necessary to life. 4. That it is not lawful for the King to make any wars, but merely defensive, and so they enjoy perpetual peace. 5. That it is not lawful for any Chinois to go out of the Country. And, 6. That here the Sea is as well peopled as whole Provinces elsewhere. For the Ships do resemble a City, in which they buy, sell, are born, and die. And on the several Rivers which water the Walls of Nanquin, and Peking, for no less than 300 Leagues, the Ships are said to be so thick ranked, that it seemeth to be a continual Street.

The People hereof in matters of Religion, are generally all Gentiles, and conceive thus of the Creation; viz. That there was one Taine, who created Panxon, and Panxina, whose Posterity remained 90000 years; but they for their wickedness being destroyed, Taine created Lutitzam, who had two horns; from the right came men, from the left came women. When any of them dieth, they cloath him in his best Apparel, all perfumed, set him in his best Chair, and there all his nearest Kindred kneeling before him, take their leave with tears. When he is collid, they place him in a room richly furnished, and set by him a Table full of viands and good cheer, with Candles continually burning on it. Not much unlike to which Ceremonies, we find, how whilst the Funeral was preparing for Francis the French King, his Statue appoynted in Royal Robes, with the Crown, Scepter, &c. was laid on his Bed; whither Dinner and Supper was daily served in, with the like State and Solemnity as when he was living.

But

But to return again to my dead Chinois, when he has lain as is above said, fifteen days, he is carried forth to his Funeral, the place whereof is in the Fields; for to be buried within the Walls were a thing of all others the most wretched. Hither, when they are in the manner of a procellion, come; they burn his body, and with it Men, Cattel, and other provition, for his attendance and sustentance in the other world: as they use in the Funerals of Tartary. As great Idolaters as any, sacrificing to the very Devil, and that upon the same reason as the most ignorant sort of the Gentiles do; because forsooth he is a wicked and mischievous Creature, and would otherwise hurt them.

Yet in the middle of this darkness there apareth some light, whereby we may perceive that Christianity had some footing here, in times foregoing; for they believe that God is an immortal Spirit, that by him the first Man was made of nothing; that the Soul dieth not with the Body, but is capable of reward and punishment in another life, according to the works it hath done in this. Which left they should be thought to be only some remainders of the light of nature, (the learned Men amongst the Ancient Greeks and Romans, having so much Divinity as this, without the Gospel) we may here add, that the Idol most generally worshipped by them, is painted with three heads looking one on another; signifying as themselves affirm that they have all but one will, which makes some think they had been anciently instructed in the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity. They have also the Pictures of a very fair Woman holding a Child in her Arms, who, as they say, was the Daughter of some great King; and that she was delivered of that Infant when she was a Virgin. And as some add, they have portraitures of the Fashion, and with the marks or Characters of the twelve Apostles, (as usually painted in some part of the Christian Church:) of whom they are able to say nothing but that they were great Philosophers who lived vertuously here, and were therefore made Angels in Heaven. And finally they hold that there is a great number of Saints, or Men estated in an eminent degree of happiness, who in their times exceeded others in knowledge, industry or valour, or lived an austere life without wronging any man: or otherwise deserved nobly of the Common-Wealth, as the Authors of some signal benefit unto their Country. These I conceive to be some evident remainders of Christianity, or the Remembrances rather of that Christianity which formerly was known amongst them: first planted here (as may be probably collected) by St. Thomas, or some of his Disciples; an Ancient Breviary or Liturgy of the Indian Churches, giving good hint to it: Where it is said, Per D. Thomam regnum celorum volavit, & ascendit ad Sinas: i. e. That by St. Thomas the Kingdom of Heaven was preached unto those of China. Some Characters here were also of it, in the time of the Tartars, though now obliterated and not visible but in these detacements: And in this state it stood till the time of our Fathers, in which the Jesuits (commendably industrious in the propagation of the Christian Faith) not without great danger to themselves, have endeavoured, and in part effected, their Conversion. For though they have gained but few Proselytes, (in regard of those infinite numbers of People which are said to live here) yet some Converts they have made amongst them; and thereby sown those seeds of that saving Truth, (though mingled with some Tares of their own) which may in time increase and spread over all the Country. For at the present they have not only got footing in the Ports and Sea-Towns, but also in many mid-land Cities, and in some also very far distant from the Sea; in all which, they have both Churches for their followers, and Cells or Monasteries for themselves; and finally have gained so far upon the Court, as not only to have their doings well approved of by Authority Royal; but have also gained unto the Faith, the Mother, Wife, and eldest Son of Jungly the last declared Emperour of the Chinoises, which eldest Son they have Baptized (and beit an happy Omen for the good of China. The name of Constantine. This Prince by the Chinoises is called Yumlie, he was elected in the year 1644; his Mother, Wife, and eldest Son, were by his permission all Baptized by Andrew Coffler a Jesuit; the Son was called Constantine, and it was hoped he would have proved a Constantine. But in the year 1661, Yumlie the Father was driven into the Kingdom of Pegu, and the Tartar sent a threatening Letter to the King of Pegu, if he did not deliver up this Prince; thereupon the King of Pegu, put him and all his Family into the hands of the Tartar, who ordered Yumlie to be presently Hanged; with him ended the whole Race of the Family Mim; and by this last effort, an end was put to the Wars of China, and the present hopes of the Jesuits to Establish a King of their Religion.

In truth the Religion they would settle here, is nothing less than Christian, they Paint our Saviour like a China-Philosopher, conceal the whole History of his Crucifixion because the Chinians are offended with it; and suffer their Converts to Sacrifice in the Idol-Temples with the unconverted; they have drawn up a new Gospel after their own fancy for them, and conceal from them the true Gospels: So that the other Orders that have gon thither, have loudly declaimed against them for Preaching this mungrel Christianity; which I doubt not, will have the same end with that of Japan, where the same things were put in Practice by them. This Order, though they pretend very much to the spreading of Christianity, never did so; nor believe never will where they have not the Sword to back their Art; their whole design being to enrich themselves, and enlarge the Pope's Kingdom, rather than truly to seek the Salvation of Souls. This perhaps was not so well known when our Author wrote as it is now; books of this nature since that time, have been Printed at Paris, and other places, some of which I have seen.

Hills of great note here are not many, here being but one Mountain touched upon by Ptolemy, in his description of the Country called Sinarum Regio, which we conceive to be the Southern part of this China: agreeable unto the observation of Modern Writers, by whom it is affirmed to be so plain and level, and so unswelled with Hills at all, that they have Carts and Coaches driven with Sails as ordinarily as drawn with Horses, in these parts. Not the less destitute of Rivers for this want of Mountains, Ptolemy naming in it, 1. Aspbara, 2. Senus, 3. Ambastus, and 4. Cottaris; all which had here their fount and fall: and yet he knew the out-skirts of the Country only. But because the Country of the Sinæ, of which Ptolemy speaks, makes but a South part of this great Country, and the Rivers which before we mentioned in Seneca, pass into it also, it is possible enough, that we may find them all amongst the chief Rivers of this Country, whensoever we shall come to have a more perfect Chorography hereof than former times have given us. In the mean season we may know, that the names by which the principal Rivers are now called, are 1. Yalo, which rising in the North-East parts of the Country, and passing by the Southern Skirts of Leatong, falleth into the Ocean over against the Island of Corea, making a little Illet at the Influx of it; fortified with a strong Castle called Xang-bai, to secure that entrance. 2. Croesus, which arising in the West-Borders hereof, first bendeth its course to the North-East, watering the City of Kiangchan, and after passeth directly Eastward, till it falls at last into the Yalo. 3. Polasanga, which issuing out of some of the branches of Mount Imaus, first palleth by the great City of Cambalu, and falls at last into the mighty Lake of Quinsay, and finally again contracted to its proper Channel, doth either lose it self in the Eastern Ocean, or in the great River of Kiang, of which more anon. 4. Cacamican, another of these great Rivers which falleth into the Lake of Quinsay, and possibly may be the same which the Cathayan Tartars call by the name of Caramoram. 5. Kiang, (or Quiam, as the Tartars call it) which having its original from Mount Imaus, and passing thorow the whole breadth of Cathay, cutteth thorow the middle of this Country, which divideth (like an Æquator) into North and South, watering therein the stately Cities of Nanquin and Caijung, where it is no less than 4. miles broad, encreasing more and more in breadth by the falling in of other principal Rivers, till it come at last to be ten miles over, and casting up such Mountains of Water, that the Chineses call it not undeservedly, The Son of the Sea. 6. Cianthang, the same (I think) which the Tartars call Quiantun, which rising out of some other spurs or branches of the Mount Imaus, falleth at last into this Country, and passing by the goodly City of Hangcheu on the North, and the fair Town of Xaoking on the South, endeth its course at last in the Eastern Ocean. 7. Queio, a River of the Southern parts, but not much observable. Here are also many great Lakes, not inferiour to some Seas in bigness; so plentiful in Fish, as if they contended with the soil, which should be most profitable: and yet so swelled with winds (though the winds many times blow strongly) that both upon these Lakes, and on the Rivers and Sea-Coasts they pass up and down in small Barks, with no other Sail than a Bough set up an end in the midst of them; by the help whereof they make good speed in their Navigations. Nor do these Lakes or Rivers use to overflow their banks, or endamage the Country: but when they do, it brings some fatal ruine with it; as in the year 1527, when the Lake of Sancy breaking out, overwhelmed seven Cities, many Towns and Villages, and Country People, almost infinite numbers.

Towns of most note amongst the Sinæ, though nothing but the names be remaining of them, 1. Bramna, and 2. Rhabana, honoured with the title of Civitates; 3. Aspithra, 4. Achatara, more within the Land; but all four under some degree of Northern Latitude. 5. Thine the Metropolis of the Country, by some called Sinæ; 6. Sarata, 7. Catoranagara; these on the South side of the Line. But in this Ptolemy was mistaken; it being found by the more certain observations of our later Writers, that no part of China comes within 20 degrees of the Æquinoctial; and so not capable of having any Towns or Cities of a Southern Latitude. Here was also a large Bay called Sinarum Sinus, a Promontory named Notium, in the fourth degree of Northern Latitude; and another named Satyrorum, lying under the Æquinox. More than this of the Cities of the ancient Sinæ, I have nothing to say, which I dare offer to the Reader.

But to behold them as they are presented to our view in the modern China, it hath been said, that for number there are no fewer than 591 Cities; and those so uniformly built, so conformable one to another, that they differ not in form and fashion, but in quantity only. Much like the Cities of Utopia, mentioned by Sir Thomas More, Idem situs omnibus; eadem, quatenus per locum licet, rerum facies; so near resembling one another, that he who knoweth but one of them, may conjecture at all. And this is the manner of their building. Most of their Cities have the benefit of some navigable River, near which they stand: the waters whereof serve them both for Navigation, and domestick uses. Two great Streets crossing one another in the very midst, so broad that ten horsemen may ride a-breast in the narrowest of them; so straight, that a Man standing in the middle may see either end; each end being shut up with a Gate of great strength and beauty; and those Gates fortified and strengthened with thick plates of Iron. Generally greater and more stately than those of Europe, but defective in that point of elegancy, which the Magnificent Churches, and more sumptuous buildings for the dispatch of publick businesses, in these parts abound with. Their private houses for the most part are so low, and destitute of Porches, Windows, Galleries, the principal ornaments and graces of Architecture. Nor are their Cities built only for resort or trade, but for strength and safety, environed with deep and broad ditches, the Walls of Brick or Stone, strong above belief, planted with Ordinance and Artillery in convenient places, and every night the Gates not only locked, but sealed; not to be opened till unsealed by the principal Magistrate. So like they are to one another, that we may say with Ovid on the like occasion;

———*Facies non omnibus una,
Nec diversa tamen, qualem decet esse sororum.*

Which I find thus Englished by Sir G. Sands.

Amongst them all no two appear the same,
Nor differed more than Sisters well became.

But not to rest our selves on this general Character, let us take a more particular view of some of the principal. And in that list we find, 1. Quinsay, called Suntien by the Natives, situated somewhat towards the South, on the Western borders of this Kingdom, where it confineth on Cathay; of this Town many things are reported beyond all belief, as namely, that it contained once in circuit an hundred miles, and had in the midst of it a Lake of thirty miles compass; in which Lake were two goodly Islands, and in them two magnificent Palaces, adorned with all necessaries, either for Majesty or convenience; in which are celebrated the publick Feasts, and the Marriages of the better sort. The Lake nourished with divers Rivers, the chief being Polifango, and Cacamacan; on which Rivers, 12000 Bridges are said to have lifted up their stately heads: and under whose immense Arches, great Ships with Sails spread abroad, and top and top-gallant, might and did usually pass. It is also said to have had ten Market-places, each of them four miles asunder, and every one in form Quadrangular, the sides thereof half a mile in length. Here were said also to be twelve Companies of Tradesmen or Artisans, each Company having 12000 Shops, and in all a million and 600000 Families. But whatsoever it was in former times, certain it is that at this time (if it hath at this time any being at all) partly on the removal of the Court from hence to Cambalu by the Tartars; and since to Nanquin and Pequin by the Princes of the House of Hombu, and partly the fury of Wars, and partly by the violence of Earthquakes, it hath lost no small part of her ancient beauty and renown. 2. Unguen, famous for the abundance of Sugar there made. 3. Nanquin, seated 9 Leagues from the Sea, on the great River Kiang, whereon ride for the most part no fewer than 10000 of the King's Ships, besides such as belong to private Men. The Town is in compass 30 miles, being girt with three fair brick walls, having large and stately Gates. The Streets in length two Leagues wide, and paved; the number of houses is about 200000; so that it may equal four of the fairest Cities of Europe. 4. Pequin or Pagnia, in the middle of the Province so named; (being one of the four Northern Provinces which take up the whole breadth of this mighty Kingdom) where the King continually resideth; and that either because the Air hereof is more healthful and pleasant, than any of the other, or because it lieth near unto the Tartars, with whom the Chinois are in perpetual War: so that from hence the dangers which may by their Invasions happen unto the Country, may with more convenience be either prevented, or resisted. The City said to be inferiour to Nanquin for bulk and beauty, but to exceed it in multitude of Inhabitants, Soldiers, and Magistrates, occasioned by the King's abode. Environed on the South with two walls, of so great breadth, that twelve Horse-men may run a-breast upon them; on the North with one Wall only, but that so strong and vigilantly guarded, that they fear as little annoyance on that side as they do on the other. But the greatest Ornament hereof is the Royal Palace, compassed about with a triple Wall, the outwardmost of which would well environ a large City; within which space, besides the many Lodgings for Eunuchs, and other Courtiers, are Groves, Hills, Fountains, Rivers, and the like places of pleasure, large in circuit, but not comparable for the Arts of Architecture to the Royal Palaces of Europe; first built built by some of the Tartar Kings of this Country, in imitation of the Royal Palace of Xaindu, mentioned in Cathay; honoured sometimes with the residence of the Chams themselves, which as it gave unto the City the name of Pequin, that is to say, the Court or City of the King, in the Language of China; so gave it occasion unto some Writers, to make this and Cambalu the same; both names being of the same signification, though in divers Languages. 5. Cantan, supposed to be the Cattigara of Ptolemy, by the Chinois called Quamchen, the least of the Metropolitan Cities of this Country, but beautified with many Triumphant Arches, a Navigable River, large Streets, and many goodly Bridges. Fortified with deep Trenches, 83 Bulwarks, and seated in so rich a soil, both for Fowl and Cattel, that here are said to be eaten daily 6000 Hogs, and 12000 Ducks, besides a proportionable quantity of other Victuals. If this be one of the least of their Metropolitans what may we fancy of the greatest? A Town in which the Portugals drive a wealthy Trade, being permitted in the day-time to come within the City it self, but at night excluded, and forced to find Lodging in the Suburbs. By reason of which restraint they have settled their Mart at Macao, the Port-Town to this, where they have their Factor, and many Families; the Town being almost wholly Peopled by them. 6. Leaotong, the chief City of Leaotong, (another of the four Northern Provinces) and the first Town taken by the Eastern Tartars in their attempts upon this Kingdom, by this door making themselves an entrance into all the rest. 7. Ninguiwen, made the Metropolis of Leaotong after the taking of Leaotong by the Eastern Tartars. 8. Sigan, or Singan, the chief City of Xenji, another of the four Northern Provinces and honoured sometimes with the King's residence. 9. Xaoking, on the South side of the River Cientbang one of the fairest Cities of China so environed with sweet waters, as a man may contemplate its beauty, surrounding it in a Boat; consisting in large and fair Streets, paved on both sides with white square stones, and in the middle of them all runs a Navigable Channel whose sides are garnished with the like ornament; and of the same stone there is also built many fair Bridges, and Triumphant Arches; the Houses being all of the same stone also, which render it the neatest (though not the biggest) City in this mighty Kingdom. 10. Sucbeau, about two days journey from the Sea, seated in Marshes like Venice, but more commodiously, because those Marshes are of fresh water: the Streets and Houses founded upon Piles of Pine-Tree, with many Bridges, and conveniences for Passage both by Land and Water. Well Traded, as the fittest Center for dispersion of Merchandize from all the other Ports of the Kingdom: by the multitude and frequency of Ships, almost denying Faith to the Eyes, which would think all the Ships of China to be here assembled. So Infinitely rich, that the small Region whereof it is the Head, containing but eight Cities more, payeth 12 millions to the King of yearly income. 11. Hamsen, or Hangchen, on the North side of the River Cientbang, out of which furnished with a Channel of great length and breadth, by which it trades into the Northern parts of this Kingdom; the Metropolis of the Province of Chequian, about two days journey from the Sea; in compass less than Nanquin, but better builded: no places in it taken up with Gardens, Orchards, or other Pleasures; but all employed for Shops, Houses, and other Edifices. So beautified with Triumphant Arches, erected to the honour of deserving Magistrates, that in one Street there are 300 of great mass, of workmanship. The Temples magnificent and many; the bank-sides of the Channels watering every Street, beset with Trees of shade, and most excellent Fruits: and in the middle of the City a round high Mountain, which gives the Eye a gallant prospect into every Street. And not far off a pleasant Lake of great breadth and length, the banks whereof are beautified with Groves and Gardens, and the Lake it self even cloathed with Vessels of all sorts, on which the Citizens used to feast, and entertain their idle time with Plays and Spectacles. Two Cities so replenished with all kinds of Pleasures, that the Chinois use it for a Proverb, Thien Xam, then thum, ti Xamsu bum, that is to say, Look what the Hall or Presence-Chamber is in Heaven, that Hamsen and Sucbeau are on Earth. 12. Foebea, beautified amongst many other stately Structures, with a magnificent Tower erected on forty Marble-Pillars, of great elegancy, cost and bigness, every Pillar being forty spans in height, and twelve in breadth: not to be parallel'd as some say, by any the like work in Europe. 13. Lachiau, in which are 70000 Families. 14. Colans, famous for the best Porcellane. 15. Seianbay, by some called Thiencin, a station to which an incredible number of Ships resort, both by Sea and River, from all parts of the Kingdom; seated within 24 hours sail of the Isle of Japan, and therefore defended with a strong Garrison, and a Navy. Situate in a pleasant and wholesome Soil, the whole Country so set forth with Trees, as if it were one continued Orchard. So Populous, that it containeth 40000 Households, most of which get their livelihood by weaving Cottons, it being supposed that there are 200000 Persons which attend that Manufacture. 16. Chinchamsu, whence by a River made by hand, there is a passage to Sucbeau; the water of which never freezeth, and for that cause so clogged with Ships in time of Winter, that the passage is stopped with the multitudes of them. 17. Zuanchen, a most rich and beautiful City, environed with large waters, and the only Southern Port within the Land to which Ships or Boats may have access. 18. Canton, or Caifung, seated upon the River Giang, a City once of three Leagues in compass, whose Harbour was seldom without 500 Ships and sometimes honoured with the Seat or Residence of the Kings themselves; most miserably destroyed Anno 1642, by Zunchinius the late King of this Country, who breaking down the Dams and Sluces to let in the River, for the dislodging of some Thieves and Out-laws, who had then besieged it; gave it so great and forcible a passage towards the Town, that it bare down the greatest part of the Houses of it, and therein drowned above 300000 of the natural Citizens; before which time the Metropolis or chief City of the Province of Honan. 19. Kaingcheu, on the South side of the River Croceus, the richest and the fairest City in this part of the Country, commodiously seated to command that River. 20. Chatking, the head City of the Province of Quamtung, for the strength and conveniency of its situation thought fittest for the Seat of Jungly, the last declared Emperour of the Chineses against the Tartars. 21. Quelin, the chief City of the Province of Quangsi. 22. Taitung, the Metropolis or chief City of Xamsi or Cansay, another of the four Northern Provinces, but not else observable for any thing I find of it, either in point of Trade or Story. 23. Manchange, a chief City of the Province of Kiansi, of which little memorable; and less of, 24. Cegiron, but that it is like unto the rest in form and structure.

Besides the Provinces before-mentioned there are three others not directly under the Dominion of the Kings of China, though depending on it, that is to say, 1. The Province of Suchuen, 2. The Island of Corca, 3. The Island of Cheuxan.

1. The Province of Sucbeau, lyeth on the South-West of this Kingdom, of the same nature both for Soil and Air with the rest of China, but possessed by a more warlike people; the Women here being trained up to feats of Arms, and so well practised on their weapons; that when the Queen hereof went to the Aid of the Emperour Kimly against the Tartars, Anno 1618, she took with her a small Army of 3000 women: performing actions not unworthy the bravest men: The chief City hereof is called Cingru, of great capacity, and so exceeding populous withall, that Changhienchungus (that most barbarous Tyrant) caused no fewer than 600000 of them (men, women, and children, all indifferently) to be slaughtered in one day before his face. The whole Country Governed for a long time by its own Kings of the same Taimingian Race with the Kings of China, from whom having received their investiture, they were afterwards of absolute Authority over their own Subjects, who acknowledg no other King but him. And in this state it did continue till the year 1644, when Chanbientchungus, whom before I named, entering into this Country with his rabble of Rogues, made a Conquest of it, murdered the young King, Son to the Amazonian Queen, which before we spake of: dispeopled the great City of Cingtu, butchered at one time twenty thousand Priests, at another time eighteen thousand Students; and finally committed such unspeakable outrages, that the Tartars in meer pity to that wretched People, sent an Army against him, by which he was vanquished, and slain; this Province thereupon submitting to the Tartars as their great deliverers.

2. Corea, is a Peninsula of the Eastern Ocean, not far from the North-East of China, over against the fall of the River Yalo. The quality of the soil, the demensions of it, and what Cities it containeth in it, I have no where found. The People far more warlike than those of China, by reason of the ill Neighbourhood of the Japonites, with whom they have always either open Wars, or uncertain Peace. Invaded by those Islanders and in danger to be conquered by them, they made an offer of their Country to the King of China, who having repulsed the Invaders, restored their Country freely to them, without laying any other Imposition on them than of love and gratitude, which obligations those of Corea, have discharged most fully. For when Vanley, the late Emperour of China, was first invaded by the Tartars, they sent unto his aid twelve thousand men well Armed and Exercised in the Wars; increasing their supplies in the time of Theinkius, who next but one succeeded Vanley. Drawing the whole storm upon themselves by those friendly aids, they were accordingly assisted by the King of China, whose Forces came so seasonably in the heat of Battel between the Coreans and the Tartars, that the Tartars after a long and terrible fight, were driven out of the Peninsula, but with such incredible loss on all sides, that few or none escaped of the Army of China, seventy thousand of the Coreans slain, and the Tartars leaving fifty thousand of their men behind them; after this they were unmolested, till the fatal and final Conquest of the Kingdom of China; when seeing the Tartars Lords of all, and no possibility of resistance, they submitted to them, about the year 1648, upon condition of retaining their Hair and Habit, which no extremity of personal danger, or fear of publick desolation, could compel them to alter.

3. Cheuxan, is an Island of the same Seas, on the South of Corea, opposite to the City of Nympus, in the main Land of China; an Island which being heretofore a dwelling-place of poor Clowns and Fishermen only, is now become a potent Kingdom. For Lu. Regulus, chosen by a party of his own to succeed to the broken Crown of China, and finding no hopes of withstanding the great power of the Tartars, retired himself into this Island with his friends and followers, followed not long after by great multitudes of the natural Chineses, who chose rather to forsake their Country, than to conform in Hair and Habit to the will of the Tartars; insomuch that there are now found in this Island threescore and ten Cities, with a strong and formidable Army, which hitherto hath contemned all the Tartarian Power and Forces, and watch for some happy occasion to advance again their Kingdom in China.

The Ancient Inhabitants of the Sinæ, in the time of Ptolemy, were towards the North, the Semantini bordering a Mountain of that name, and the only one remembered in all this Country: more Southward, the Acadrae, and Aspithrae, towards the Sea Anabastæ, and Ichthyophagi (these last so called from living wholly upon Fish.) United into one body by the name of Sinæ, and known by that name to the Romans, in the time of Ptolemy, who boundeth them on the North with Serica, on the West with India extra Gangem, and on the East and South with a Terra Incognita: which though it make up the least part of the Modern China; Serica touching only on a Corner of the North-West of it, and the main Ocean washing it on the East and South: yet the Arabians in their Tzinin, and our late Latine Writers in their Sinæ and Sinensium Regnum, do from hence give the denomination to this mighty Kingdom. How far they stretched beyond the bounds laid down by Ptolemy, and whether they subdued the Eastern and more Northern Nations, or were Conquered by them, it were hard to say; nor is it easie to resolve, from what original these and the rest of the Inhabitants do derive themselves, whether from the Indians, or the Scythæ: or that it was primitively planted by some of the Posterity of Noah, before the enterprize of Babel: which last may probably be concluded from the extreme populousness of the Country, the many magnificent Cities, their Industry and Ingenuity in all Arts and Sciences, not to be taught them by their Neighbours, more ignorant in those things than themselves. And hereunto the Chronicles of China seem to give some ground, which tell us of three hundred and forty Kings, which for the space of four thousand years have therein reigned. For as their Chronicles inform us, (if they may be credited) the Country being without Rule or settled Government, was first reduced into order by one Vitey, the Son of Ezolem; by whom the people were instructed in Physick, Astrology, Divination, and the Art of Tillage: to which, this Vitey, having found out the way of cutting or sawing Timber, added the use of Ships and Houses, and many other the effects of Mechanical hands. Having by the valour of Lincheon one of the Commanders, subdued a great part of the Country, he drew them into Towns and Villages, distributed them into Offices, and several Trades, disposing those of the same Trade into Streets by themselves; and commanding that no man without leave from himself, or his Officers, should follow any other Trade than that of his Father. He prescribed them also the fashion of their Garments, taught them the Art of making and dying Silks: and having reigned an hundred years, left the Kingdom well established unto his Posterity. Of this Race there are said to have been 217 Kings, who held the State 2257 years.

The last of them was that Tzaintzon, who being ill-neighbourred by the Scythians (not yet called Tartars) is said to have built that vast Wall spoken of before: extended 400 Leagues in length, and at the end of every League a strong Rampart or Bulwark, continually garrisoned, and well furnished with all warlike necessaries. He being slain by some of his Subjects, burdened and wasted with his work, the Race of Vitey ended; and that of Anchosan succeeded, a Prince of much prudence, but greater courage. In his Line it continued under 25 Kings, but shrewdly shaken towards the close by a Civil War, betwixt Trunthey, the 23 of his House, and his Nephew Laupy. Hardly well settled under Quiontey, the latest of this House when Tzobu, a great Tyrant of the other faction, set upon him and slew him. And so the Majesty of the Blood Royal being trod under foot, the Crown was also tossed from one hand to another, and made a Prey unto the strongest: there being of the Race of this Tzobu eight Kings, Reigning sixty two years; Of the Race of Dian, five Kings, who Reigned thirty one; of the Race of Tzoy, three only who Reigned thirty seven; of the Race of Tenco, one and twenty, who held the Crown 294 years, and eight there were who Reigned 120 years, of the House of Tautzon. Of other upstart Families to the number of five, were fourteen Kings also, who Governed only for the space of sixty six years: And then one Zaitzon, deriving himself from Vitey, the first King of the Country, obtained the Kingdom which he and seventeen of his Posterity, for the space of 320 years, Governed with much Peace and Honour. Forfar, the last King of that Royal Family, foretold by Prophecy that he should be deprived of his Kingdom by one who had an

hundred Eyes, neglected the Advertisement, as unworthy credit: but it fell out agreeable to that Prediction, when vanquished by Chifan-baan (which word signifieth an hundred Eyes) Lieutenant unto Ufan, a Tartarian Prince, but Feudatary and Vassal to the Great Cham. China thus made a Province of the Tartarians, was Governed for the space of 93 years, under nine Tartar Kings, Tributaries to the Great Cham and dependants on him: the Chams themselves many times passing into China, and abiding there according as their pleasures or affairs did invite them to it, which occasioned such a continual intercourse betwixt those of China and Cathay, that they have much participated ever since that time of the manners and customs of each other. But here it is to be observed, That the Tartars spent almost as much time in the Conquest of China, as they did in the possession of it; the war being first begun Anno 1206, finished 1268, the Tartars being totally routed when they had Reigned here 90 years only, that is to say, Anno 1358 or thereabouts. For then happened that a mean Person called Hugh, considering with himself the discontentedness of the Chineses under so long Bondage, the Luxury of the Tartars effeminated with the pleasures of that Country, and the unwarlike temper of Gino Cham, then Reigning over all in the City of Cambalu, raised to himself so strong a Party, that in a short time he drove the Tartars out of all; forcing them to betake themselves to those parts of the Eastern Tartars, which now make up the Kingdom of Nieuche.

1. Finally turning towards the West, he not only recover'd back to China such parts thereof as had been laid unto Cathay, and incorporated with it by the Tartars; but growing thereby a formidable Neighbour to the Cham himself; Advanced for this great Service to the Crown of China, Anno 1269, he took unto himself the name of Hungus (our late Writers commonly call him Hombu) which signifieth as much as the Famous Warrior, and gave unto his Children and their Posterity, the name of the Taingian Family; which they still continue. For the recovery of this Country, great Tamberlane mustereth up his Forces, and though Hombu brought into the Field 350000 Horse and Foot, yet nothing could resist the powerful Genius of that mighty Conquerour, who obtained here a signal Victory with the death of 60000 Chineses: but wisely moderating his prosperity; and mainly bent upon his War against the Turks, he thought it his best and safest way to let the people of China have a King of their own, imposing on him a Fine of 300000 Crowns in ready money, a certain annual Tribute (long time after paid) with certain other conditions, which as they were pleasing to the Victor, so they were not destructive to the vanquished. By means hereof it came to pass, that such an long communication in affairs of State, having passed between China and Cathay (those of China in old times Lording it over part of the Cathayans, as the Cathayans in late times did over the Chineses) there grew a great resemblance between both Nations, in Manners, Conditions, Arts and Manufactures, as before is said, which circumstances layed together, may afford some reason why in some Writers, easily misguided by such probabilities, Cathay and China have been reckoned to be one and the same. Nor did the Empire of the Chinois extend in old times only over part of Seythia, but also over part of India, and some of the Oriental Islands. But the Princes of the House of Hombu, finding their own Kingdom large enough to content their desires, abandoned all the Accessories and Out-parts of their Dominions: prompted thereto not only by their own moderation, but by some misfortunes which befell them. For as we find that the Romans having by the fury of two violent tempests, lost no fewer than 260 of their Ships and Gallies, resolved to abandon (and for a long time did forbear) the Seas, which had used them so unkindly: So the Chinois having received a great overthrow, and loss of 800 Ships, near unto Zeilan, they freed all the Islands from obedience unto them, and contented themselves with the bounds which Nature had bestowed on them.

And of their moderation herein we have a very rare example: For when the People of Corea, a small Island abutting on the Confines of China, were invaded by the Japonites, they submitted themselves unto the King of China; who having repulsed the Enemy, and thereby freed his own Country from danger, presently re-delivers over unto the Coreans, their Town and Liberty. A rare fact of a contented people, which whether it favoured of greater moderation or magnanimity, I am not able to determine. In this Family hath the Realm continued under 15 Kings, for the space of 266 years and upward, reckoning from Hombu unto Boneg: who being the twelfth of this Line, succeeded his elder Brother, unfortunately slain with a fall from a Horse, Reported for a Prince of good disposition, great judgment, and a severe Justiciary. This Boneg (otherwise called Vanley) begun his Reign, 1573. Governing this Kingdom in great prosperity and glory for the space of 40 years and upwards; when causing the Christian Subjects and the Jesuits their Converters to be hardly dealt with, and denying Justice to the Eastern Tartars for the many wrongs done them by his Prefects in the Province of Leaotong, he drew that People into Arms, as it marked out for Executioners of Divine displeasure. Stript by them in the year 1618, of a part of Leaotong, and braved by their Forces within sight of Peking, he contracted some melancholick Distempers, of which he died about two years after, leaving the Crown to his Son Taichangus, who having held it but four months, left it, and all the troubles of it to his Son Theinckius, a Valiant Prince and fortunate against the Tartars, but of short continuance. For dying in the year 1627, he was succeeded in that Kingdom by his Brother Zunchinius, a Prince of contrary disposition, cruelly bent, a great Oppressor of his Subjects; and for these causes ill beloved; yet they continued in obedience (though for fear rather of the Tartars, than for love of him) until the year 1640 or thereabouts. At what time the people in many places oppressed with Taxes, and in the Northern parts with Famine, arise in eight Companies of Armies, which growing wanton by success, and warring upon one another, they are at last reduced under two chief Leaders, that is to say, Lycungzus and Changhienchungus.

These two being come to an agreement took their several ways, the last of them falling into Suchuen, whose villanies and deserved destruction we have there related. Lycungzus the more fortunate villain, in the year 1641, besieged Chifang, the chief City of the Province of Honan, a place of great strength, but far greater riches; on the ruin whereof by the King's improvidence, and his subduing the whole Province of Xenji, he took to himself the Title of King, and would be called Lycungzus the Prosperous; and not long after easing the people of the Taxes which the avaricious King had imposed upon them, putting the Tax-masters to death, and gaining upon all sorts of men by his courteous usage, he took unto himself the name of Emperour. Zunchinius succeeds his Brother, hindered by Factions in the Court, from sending seasonable Forces against the Rebels, who passing over the great River Crocerus without any resistance prevailed in all places where they came, even to the taking of the great City of Peking, and the Palace Royal; at the hearing whereof, the Emperour seeing to way to escape their hands, hanged himself in his own Orchard, Anno 1644; his example therein followed by the Emperess and his principal Servants. The body of the Emperour cut in pieces, his two younger Sons beheaded, the principal Magistrates murdered, and that great City sacked by command of the Victor, Forced to remove back again to Xenji by Ufangueius Commander of the Army in Leaotong, who called in the Tartars to revenge those Outrages, the Rebels taking with them all the Wealth and Treasure which the Emperours of the Taimingian Family had amassed together in the space of 260 years and upwards. Zungteus the King of the Tartars having thus got the City of Peking, died presently after, leaving his Son at nine years

hundred Eyes, neglected the Advertisement, as unworthy credit: but it fell out agreeable to that Prediction, when vanquished by Chifan-baan (which word signifieth an hundred Eyes) Lieutenant unto Ufan, a Tartarian Prince, but Feudatary and Vassal to the Great Cham. This Boneg (otherwise called Vanley) begun his Reign, 1573. Governing this Kingdom in great prosperity and glory for the space of 40 years and upwards; when causing the Christian Subjects and the Jesuits their Converters to be hardly dealt with, and denying Justice to the Eastern Tartars for the many wrongs done them by his Prefects in the Province of Leaotong, he drew that People into Arms, as it marked out for Executioners of Divine displeasure. Stript by them in the year 1618, of a part of Leaotong, and braved by their Forces within sight of Peking, he contracted some melancholick Distempers, of which he died about two years after, leaving the Crown to his Son Taichangus, who having held it but four months, left it, and all the troubles of it to his Son Theinckius, a Valiant Prince and fortunate against the Tartars, but of short continuance. For dying in the year 1627, he was succeeded in that Kingdom by his Brother Zunchinius, a Prince of contrary disposition, cruelly bent, a great Oppressor of his Subjects; and for these causes ill beloved; yet they continued in obedience (though for fear rather of the Tartars, than for love of him) until the year 1640 or thereabouts. At what time the people in many places oppressed with Taxes, and in the Northern parts with Famine, arise in eight Companies of Armies, which growing wanton by success, and warring upon one another, they are at last reduced under two chief Leaders, that is to say, Lycungzus and Changhienchungus.

These two being come to an agreement took their several ways, the last of them falling into Suchuen, whose villanies and deserved destruction we have there related. Lycungzus the more fortunate villain, in the year 1641, besieged Chifang, the chief City of the Province of Honan, a place of great strength, but far greater riches; on the ruin whereof by the King's improvidence, and his subduing the whole Province of Xenji, he took to himself the Title of King, and would be called Lycungzus the Prosperous; and not long after easing the people of the Taxes which the avaricious King had imposed upon them, putting the Tax-masters to death, and gaining upon all sorts of men by his courteous usage, he took unto himself the name of Emperour. Zunchinius succeeds his Brother, hindered by Factions in the Court, from sending seasonable Forces against the Rebels, who passing over the great River Crocerus without any resistance prevailed in all places where they came, even to the taking of the great City of Peking, and the Palace Royal; at the hearing whereof, the Emperour seeing to way to escape their hands, hanged himself in his own Orchard, Anno 1644; his example therein followed by the Empress and his principal Servants. The body of the Emperour cut in pieces, his two younger Sons beheaded, the principal Magistrates murdered, and that great City sacked by command of the Victor, Forced to remove back again to Xenji by Ufangueius Commander of the Army in Leaotong, who called in the Tartars to revenge those Outrages, the Rebels taking with them all the Wealth and Treasure which the Emperours of the Taimingian Family had amassed together in the space of 260 years and upwards. Zungteus the King of the Tartars having thus got the City of Peking, died presently after, leaving his Son at nine years years old to succeed him in that glorious fortune. By him commended to the care and protection of Uncles, who very faithfully discharged the trust reposed in them; infinite numbers of Tartars thronging into China upon this occasion, and those not only of the Eastern but the Western Nations.

By these the Infant-King was proclaimed Emperour of China, by the name of Xaunchius, styling the new Imperial Family by the name of Tailing, the eldest of the Uncles whom the Tartars called Amavangus, having the chief conduct of affairs.

Usanguetus by the Tartars not long after is declared King of Xenfi, out of which he shortly drove the Rebels, and possessed himself of it; Lycungzus being either killed in the fight, or else otherwise lost. Hunquangus Nephew to Vanley, and Cousin German to Zunchinius, elected Emperour by the Chineses of the Southern parts, is opposed herein by one that pretended himself to be the eldest Son of Zunchinius; which division gave the Tartars a notable victory over all their Forces, and the great City of Nanquin in reward thereof.

The new Emperour being shortly after betrayed into the hands of the Tartars is by them hanged on the Walls of Peking; which death the Tartars count most noble. The pretended Son of Zunchinius discovered, and served in the same sort also. And though Loangus first, and afterwards Jungley and Lu. Regulus, were chosen and declared Emperours by their several parties, Anno 1648. Yet nothing could prevail against the fortune of the Tartars, Loangus being forced to put himself into their power, Jungley to fly into the Mountains, and Lu. Regulus to secure himself in the Isle of Cheuxan.

What hath succeeded since that year, future times will shew.

The Reverend Author has given an imperfect account of the progress of the Tartarian War, from the year 1644, to 1648, which from the Annals of China I shall farther enlarge.

Usanquei perceiving when it was too late, that he had imprudently called in Lions to curb the insolences of the China-Dogs, took upon him by the permission of the Tartar King, the Title and Honour of King of Xenfi; and had for his Seat the City Singnan, which a little before had been ruined by Li a Rebel Chinian. The Tartar having by this time, made himself master of all the Northern Provinces, proceeded to the Conquest of the Southern. In 1645, Hunquan the Nephew of Vanley, was proclaimed King of China at Nan-kim, but was soon after taken prisoner with his Son Zunchim, and sent to Peking, where they were both Hanged. From thence the Tartar goes to Chekiam, where he found Lavam President, who wisely refused the Title of King of China when it was offered him: When the Tartar came before this City, he kneeled upon the wall and submitted to them without any resistance, saying, He willingly Sacrificed himself for the safety of his people.

In the Province of Fokien, Vanley the Nephew of Lumvu, had been proclaimed King, but upon the coming of the Tartars, the Province was reduced without resistance, and he was put to death. Chimchilum, a Native of this Province was then Admiral of China, who had before been Servant to the Portuguese at Macao, and was by them Baptized by the name of Nicholas; from small beginnings by a Trade with the Spaniards and Hollanders, he became very rich, and turn'd Pirate, pretendingly submitting with his Fleet, first to Zunruu, and after he was slain to the Tartar, who gave him a Government to blind him; and so surpriz'd him by sending for him to Court: Quesium his Son escaped their hands, and took upon him the Command of his Father's Fleet, and would never after trust the Tartar more.

In the mean time the Tartar proceeded to the Conquest of Quantum, and Quamsi, the two most Southern Provinces, in which he met with little resistance except in Quamsi, where Kiu Thomas was President, and Chin Lucas (both Christians) was his General; and they had got together a great Army, with which they fought and beat the Tartar Army. After this Victory, they elected Yumlie, of the Family of Vanley, King of China, who settled at Chaokin a City of Quantum. This Prince suffered his Son and Wife to be Baptized as is said above. Hereupon Vama Priest, and Zuesim the Admiral, recovered the greatest part of Fokien, and Kim Governour of Kiamfi, revolted from the Tartar at the same time.

And in the North, Ho and Kiam, two other Chineses took Arms against the Tartars, and got great Armies together. Ho took many Cities in Xenfi, and besieged without success the Metropolis. And Kiam had in the same Province under him, 140000 Horse, and more Foot, and he beat the Tartar in two set Battels, so that they durst fight him no more in open field; but by Craft, Strategems, Gold, Promises, Delays and Treachery, they at last prevailed against him, and in four years recovered again, all the South Provinces. On the West of China in the Province of Suchuen, Chambienchun got together a parcel of Rogues, and over-run the Provinces of Huquam, Honan, Nankim and Kiamfi; and at last spent the dreggs of his fury upon Suchuen: He murdered the Governour of it; would destroy whole Streets for the offence of one of the Inhabitants, yet at the same time he pretended to be a great friend to the Christians. In the year 1646, he slew all the Inhabitants of Chimtu the Capital of Xenfi, and did so many other Barbarous Actions, that the Tartar sent a small party against him who slew him, he being hated by all men for his exorbitant cruelty; whereupon, the People of Suchuen submitted to the Tartar as to their deliverer. By this time that Prince, was master of all the Northern and Western Provinces, only four of the Southern Provinces viz. Chekiam, Fokien, Quantum and Quamsi, were under Yumlie the last of the Chinian Kings: The Tartar sat down before the Metropolis of Quantum, and after a year's Siege took it, the 24th of November, 1650; in the seventh year of Yumlie's Reign, in which there perished 100000 Chinians: From thence he went against Chaokin his Royal City, but Yumlie distrusting his Forces, fled first into Quamsi, and from thence fled to the King of Pegu. This year Xunchi, the Tartar King of China, being fourteen years of Age, and married to a Daughter of the King of the West Tartars, upon the death of Amavam his Guardian, took upon him the Government of that Kingdom. He settled the Laws, Letters, and Customs of China, with some small changes, retained the six Supreme Courts, putting in an equal number of Chinians and Tartars; committing the Civil Government to the Chinians, and the military to the Tartars. In 1661, Quisim the Admiral, beat the Hollanders out of Formosa, but hearing the next year the Hollanders had made a League with the Tartars against him, he died of despair and rage. Yumlie having fled into Pegu, as is abovesaid, continued there till 1661, and then upon the threatening Letters of the Tartar, was delivered up by the King of Pegu with all his Kindred, and hanged by the Tartars.

The same year, Xunchi the Tartar King of China, died of the Small-pox, and Cambi his Son, a Child of less than eight years of age succeeded him. The first twelve years of his Reign were very peaceable, but in 1673, a new war broke out; Usanquei, who had called in the Tartars and was now Vice-Roy of Yunnan, refused to come to the Court without a guard of 80000 men; hereupon a War ensued, and he soon possessed himself of Suchuen, Queicheu and half Huquam. In 1675, the Vice-Roys of Fokien and Quantum, revolted, with them joyned the Inhabitants of Formosa, and there had been an end of the Tartar Kingdom if they had all united against him; but the Prince of Fokien fell upon the Governour of Quantum and a war followed between them, till the Tartar came down against both, and put an end to it by their ruin. But Usanquei held out still and defended his Province against the Tartars, till the year 1679, in which he died, and Humbor his Son was made King in his stead; who in the year 1681, was reduced by the Tartar to that necessity cessity, that he hang'd himself to avoid falling into his hands. Thus ended the Tartar War in China, which was began in 1616, and lasted 65 years, and had never in all probability had this effect, if the Chinians by their own divisions, animosities and Imprudence had not promoted the Conquest of their Country.

In the year 1682, Cam-Hi the present Tartar King of China, being now the peaceable possessor of the whole Kingdom of China, resolved to visit his paternal Kingdom, and made a Royal progress into East Tartary with an Army of 70000 men; and the next year he went into West Tartary in the same manner, and forty of the Princes there submitted to him quietly, and became his Subjects: an account of both these Journeys were written by one Verbiest a Jesuit, who was in both these Expeditions. This potent Prince (if still living) Reigns over China, and all the Tartars beyond Imaus, to the borders of Russia; which sufficiently shews there is no other great Cham of Tartary besides he.

226 Kim Ti, or Tay, 7. a Child of two years of Age.

1457 227 Ym Zum, 8.
1465 228 Hien Zum, 23.
1488 229 Hiao Zum 18.
1506 230 Vu Zum, 16. This Prince would have gon to War in Person against the Tartars, and was dissuaded by his Council. The Tartars in his last year invaded China, and put him upon thoughts of leaving the North-parts, which was also opposed by his great Men.

1522 231 Xi Zum, 45. He was but 13 when he began to Reign; in the 29. year of his Reign, (1551.) the Tartar brought an Army of 60000 to Peking, which was beaten by the Chinenses. The next Year after, he sent an Embassy to excuse the Inroad, and desire leave to send his Horses to China for sale as before; which was at first granted and then revoked.
After this various Rebellions happened in the Provinces of China; the King neglecting all things and not minding his Kingdom.

1561 232 Mo Zum, 6. A good Prince but impatient of Advice.

1573 233 Xin Zum, 48. A wise Prince, very just and merciful. The second year of his Reign the Tartar was beaten in Leao-tum, by Chin the Prince or Governour of that Province. In 1597. the East Tartars being become terrible, a Peace was made with the Western Tartars, against them. In 1616, The Eastern Tartars began the War against China, which ended in its Ruin. In 1617, they again invaded China, and gained a great Victory, 50000 Chinians being slain in that Battel. This King is often called Kan Lu.

234 Quam Zum, Reigned but one Month.

1620 235 Hu Zum, 7. He was successful against the Tartars, but ruined by the insurrections of his own Subjects.

1628 236 Hoai Zum, or Zum Chin, 17. In his time the War of China with the Tartar, and with the Rebels in Arms against him, grew greater. In 1642, Lie one of the Rebels took the Palace of Peking by Treachery, and and forced this poor King to hang himself.
Ufanquie, General of the Army against the Tartar, joyned with them to revenge this Death of his Master.

1644 237 Xun Chi, the first of the present Tartar Kings of China; his Father dying in the Expedition and never being inthroned.

1662 238 Cam Hi, the perfecter of the Conquest of China, and present King for ought that is known.

From Chin the eleventh Family this Country took the name of China; and at this day is called Chin in Indostan.

The Government of this Kingdom is meerly Tyrannical; there being no other Lord but the King, no Title of dignity or Nobility ever known amongst them; nor Toll or Duty paid unto any but him: the younger Princes of the Blood being maintained by Stipends, and annual Pensions, large enough to support their Trains; but without any Lands or Tenants, for fear of drawing on them any great dependances. The King alone is the general Land-lord, and him the Subjects do not only reverence as a Prince, but adore like a God. For in the chief City of every Province, they have the King's Portraiture made of Gold, which is always covered with a Vail: and at every new-moon, the Magistrates and other inferiour Officers use to kneel before it, as if it were the King himself. By these and other Artifices of like contrivement, the Common people are kept in such awe and fear, that they are rather Slaves than Subjects:
calling their King the Lamp of the World, and Son of the everlasting sun, without whose light they were able to see nothing.

In every Province, except Pequin and Tolombia only. he hath his Deputies or Vice-Roys, maintained by liberal stipends from the publick Treasury: but those he governeth by himself. Some Laws they have, and those affirmed to have been written 2000 years since, as is like enough they were. So strongly do they favour of the ignorance and Atheism of the darkeſt times: the manner of life by them allowed, moſt obſcene and ſhameleſs; their Idolatry moſt groſs and palpable; their Exorcifms ridiculous, and the proſtitutions of their Virgins moſt abominable; and the variety of ſenſual prophanations, to an illuminated mind moſt baſe and contemptible. In a word, nothing commendable in their courſe of life (notwithſtanding the brags which they make of themſelves) but their Arts and Induſtry.

The Forces which this King is able to draw into the Field muſt needs be infinite, conſidering that incredible number of Subjects under his command. For whereas France is thought to contain 15 millions of people, Italy with the Iſles, as many; Germany, with the Switzers and Belgick Provinces, about that proportion; Spain not above ſeven millions; and the Kingdom of England about four; this Country only is computed at 70 millions; which is more by 15 millions than all together. Proportionably his Levies muſt be ſo much greater, than can be ordinarily raiſed out of thoſe Countries. But becauſe it may be thought that his Subjects, though more in number, may be leſs trained to the wars than thoſe of Europe; the contrary is affirmed by ſuch as have taken an eſtimate of the Forces, which every Province is bound to entertain in continual readineſs. And by that eſtimate it appeareth, that in the year 1557. (though a time of peace) there were diſperſed in the fifteen Provinces of this Realm, to the number of five millions, 846500 Foot, and 948350 Horſe. Which notwithstanding it may be ſaid, and not unfitly, that he is able to bring into the field, amongſt ſuch multitudes of Men, but few good Soldiers, the people being generally unwarlike, and of no great courage, as was before obſerved of them in their general Character. Nor is he leſs powerful for Sea-service, having continually great Fleets for the guard of his Coaſts, in continual attendance, and many more ready to ſet out when there is occaſion: inſomuch that the Chinois uſe to ſay in the way of a Proverb. That their King is able to make a Bridge of Ships from China to Malaca, which are 500 Leagues aſunder. Some of theſe Ships (whereof the King hath above a thouſand of his own, beſides thoſe of his Subjects) of great magnificence and beauty: the Officers and Soldiers in all which are exceeding well paid, and rewarded answerably to their merits. And as this King is able to raiſe greater forces than any, from his own eſtates; ſo doth he alſo de facto do it, when the urgency of his affairs doth require it of him: his ordinary ſtint being 300000 Foot, and 200000 Horſe, without which compleat number (not only in the muſter-rolls, but in bodies of Men) he vouchſates not to go into the field.

Answerable unto theſe great Levies of Men, muſt be his Revenue: which they who have travelled in this ſearch, if they tell us true, and do not build upon an hope of not being confuted, (as for my part I fear they do) affirm to be 123 millions of Crowns, answered unto him out of the profits of the Mines of Gold, Silver, and other Metals: the tenth of all commodities which the Earth brings forth; tolls impoſed on that unſpeakable quantity of Merchandize, which paſſeth on ſo many navigable Rivers from one Town to another; the Cuſtoms taken of all thoſe rich wares which are brought into Europe, and the Gabel laid on Salt in all parts of his Kingdom. Out of which ſum, the payment of his Fleet diſcharged, the entertainment of his Soldiers ſatisfied, and his Court defrayed, there remaineth forty millions of Crowns de claro to be diſpoſed of, either in his treasury or private pleaſures, or the works of magnificence and oſtentation.

And thus far alſo according to the general current of received opinions have I followed the deſcriptions and affairs of China, as a diſtinct Country from Cathay; not ignorant that there are many probable reaſons which might incline us to believe them to be one and the ſame; for firſt it is alledged in favour of this opinion, That it is neither new nor ſtrange, for one and the ſame Country, to be called by divers names, according to the languages and fancies of ſeveral Nations; that Country which we call Germany, being by the Natives called Dutch-land, not long ſince known moſt commonly by the name of Almaine; that part of Britain which we call Wales, being by the French called Gailles, and Cambria by the Latine Writers; thoſe mountainous people which the Romans know by the name of Rheti, being by ſome of our Northern Latinifls called Conſederati Cani, Campi Camini by Ammianus Marcellinus, Grauntpunnor by the neighbouring Dutch, and finally Griſons by the French, which four laſt names do carry all the ſame ſenſe and ſignification, though in different words; that China it ſelf, is by the Natives called Tabinco, Tzynin by the Arabians, Mangi by Paulus Venetus, and by the neighbouring Nations Sanglag; that as it cannot be enforced from the like diverſity of appellations, that Almany, Germany, and Dutch-land, make three ſeveral Countries, (& ſic de cæteris) ſo neither can it be concluded on the ſame grounds, that China and Cathay make two ſeveral Empires. In the next place it is alledged, That ſince by later Voyages and Navigations, this mighty Kingdom hath been diſcovered and made known unto us of Europe by the name of China, the name and Empire of Cathay hath grown out of knowledge. For proof whereof they bring in the Itinerary of Benedictus à Goeſ, a Jeſuit, who in the year 1605, croſſing from the North-eaſt parts of Persia to the Realm of China, and naming all the ſeveral Countries and Towns of any note which lay in his way, makes no mention of any ſuch Country as Cathay; nor any ſuch Prince as the Great Cham thereof: telling us alſo that Martin Martinus, who had lived long in China, in his Books entituled Bellum Tartaricum, comprehendeth all the Countries betwixt China and Mount Imaus, under the general Name and Notion of Western Tartars, not taking notice of any ſuch Country as Cathay; nor of any greater Prince amongſt them, than the King of Tanguth; and that Remuſſo in his notes on Paulus Venetus, reporteth ſome conference which he had with Chaggenmet a Persian Merchant, who told him, That he had ſeen Campion and Succur Cities of Cathay, in the reign of Demercan, which muſt be underſtood of Cathay in the general Notion, as it comprehendeth all the Tartarian Countries beyond Imaus; it being well known that Campion and Succur are two Cities of Taguth, and not of the proper Cathay, or Cathay ſpecially ſo called. In the third rank of proofs they inſtance in the ſimilarities or reſemblances betwixt both Countries, and both People, which are ſo great and viſible in the temperature of Air, fertility of Soil, and pleaſantneſs of Situation, in Cuſtoms, in Ingenuity, Arts and Manufactures, as may be thought to carry an Identity, or ſimilarity with them; which ſimilarity or identity they do alſo find in Pequin the chief City of China, and Cambalu, the ſuppoſed chief City of Cathay, being two words of the ſame ſenſe and ſignification, though of divers ſounds; for Pequin ſignifieth the Court or City of the King in the Chinian Language, and Cambalu ſignifieth the Court or City of the Cham, in the Language of Tartary. The like they alſo have obſerved of the Royal Palaces, adjoining to the ſaid two Cities, ſo like in the vaſt greatneſs and extent of the outer Walls, the Parks and Forests intermingled, the magnificent form and ſtructure of the inner Palaces, with all the reſt of the particulars before-recited, that a Man might very well conclude them to be one and the ſame; adding withal that ſuch an immense, and unparalleled work, as the great Cham's Palace called Xaindu, muſt needs require more hands and a longer time than the great Chams (conſidering their continual Wars, and little intervals of leiſure) could beſtow upon it. But their four head-proofs, which which seem indeed to be the strongest, they derive first from the Testimony of Benedict à Goes above-mentioned, who without taking notice of any such Country as Cathay, in so long Journey, telleth us that at Ciales a City of the Kingdom of Cascar, and not far from China, he was first informed that Cathay and China were the same.

2. From the Testimony of an old Mahometan Pilgrim, who returning from Mecca by Labor (the Royal Seat and City of the great Mongul) affirmed there that he had lived long in Cambalu, the chief City of Cathay, which Kingdom had in it one thousand and fifty Cities, the King thereof being a mighty Prince, and having a strength of 400 Elephants brought thither from Malacca and Pegu, and that much Merchandize was brought into the Country by Sea: which if it be not meant of China (to which the story may agree in all particulars) must needs be one of the loudest lies that ever came from the Mouth of a Mahometan, or a Pilgrim either; our Geographers finding very few Cities or Towns of note in Cathay specially so called, no access thither by Sea for any Merchandize, nor any way to bring those Elephants from Pegu and Malacca, which the Pilgrim dreamt of.

3. A clear Testimony of some other Mahometans repairing to Pequin every fifth year, either as Merchants or Ambassadors, or as both together; by whom the Jesuits there living were informed, That the Dominions of the Persian, and the great Mongul, from whence they came, the Kingdom of China was called by no other name than by that of Cathay, they knowing no other Country of that name but China only. And 4. from the asseveration of Pontogia another Jesuit, who in his Letters dated from Pequin, much blamed our ordinary Maps for placing Cathay next to China; whereas (saith he) China, or Sania is Cathay as this Pequin where we now are is the City of Cambalu; which two last evidences coming from the Pen of one who had lived many years in China; and not conducing any way to the advancement of the Catholick Cause, must needs be thought to carry some great credit and authority with them.

These reasons if they be of force and moment to the point in hand, we must then act Penelope's part, unravelling all the Web which before was woven; Atque iterum in lanas omne redibit opus, in the Poet's Language; which that we may the better do, and with as little defacements to the whole piece as possibly we can, I shall thus proceed. First then it is to be conceived that Cathay specially so called, was an aggregate body, containing many several Kingdoms, and distinct Estates, though Homagers to the Kings of Cathay, or dependants on them: as anciently in the Realm of France besides the Kings of France themselves, there was a King of Burgundy, a King of Metz, a King of Soissons, a King of Orleans; and after that a Duke of Normandy, a Duke of Bretagne, a Duke of Aquitain, an Earl of Champagne, an Earl of Tbolouse, all absolute and uncontrollable in their own Estates. And then the Kingdom of Tanguth, which he placed in the Southern parts of Altay, must be made one of the Kingdoms of Cathay; and Demercan, whom we ranked in the Catalogue of the Chams of Tartary, must be brought a peg lower, and looked on as a King of Tanguth only, and no more than so. 2. it must be taken for granted, That the Tartars having Conquered the Realm of Cathay, and afterwards, by the help of that People, subdued China also, caused all the Northern parts of China to be called Cathay, as being in the same Latitude and Parallels with it, and much of the same nature and complexion, both for Soil and Air; giving unto the Southern parts (which was the true and proper Country of the Sinæ) the name of Mangi, transferred afterwards by some Authors to the Country generally: and having thus extended the Name and Territory of Cathay, upon the first foundation of their greatness, they fixed their Regal Seat in the City of Pequin, which by a new Tartarian name (but of the same sense and signification) was from thence called Cambalu. Thus in the first place the French Kings of the Caroline Family, communicated the name of France (East-France it was most commonly called) to the greatest part of Germany, then Conquered by them; the Castilians of Spain extended the name of Castile on every side, as they got ground upon the Moors, till it became the largest Province of any one name in all that Continent; and Roger Earl of Sicily, having Conquered the Eastern parts of Italy (which now make up the Kingdom of Naples) commanded it to be called the farther Sicily and himself to be Crowned King of both, by the name of King of both Sicilies. And in the second place, the Dukes of Zweibrucken in high Germany are by the French called Dukes De Deux ponts, by the late Latine Writer Duces Bipontani, all in the same sense and signification; the Town of Shertzogen Bosch is by the French called Bois le Duc, by the Latine Writers Sylva Ducis: And here at home, the Military Towns or Stations of Leffodurum, Colonia, Præsidium, ad Lapidem, and Portus Magnus were turned by the Conquering Saxons (the former significations being still retained) into Bedford, Colchester, Warwick, Stoncham and Portsmouth, commonly now called Portsmouth; Castrum Alatum into Edenburg by the Picts or unconquered Britains. 3. We may take it for a truth unquestioned, That Hombu having expelled the Tartars out of Mangi, or the Southern parts, and fixed the Royal Seat at Nanquin, on the South side of the River Kiang (tho' paying both Fine and Tribute to Victorious Tamerlane) did afterwards on Tamerlane's engagements beyond the Mountains and the Cantonizing of that great Empire amongst his Children, expell them out of the North parts also; his Successors thereupon removing the Court to Pequin (from henceforth known again by its true, proper and Chinian name) the better to attend the motion of that dangerous Enemy. Jerusalem, commanded to be called Alia by the Emperour Adrian, and London named Augusta Trinobantum by some other of the Roman Emperours; returned to their old names again, as soon as that authority failed which imposed the new. And 4. as from this time forwards the Northern parts of China might still retain the name of Cathay, and being most traded to by the Persian and Indian Merchants, might be best known by that name in their several Countries: so by dividing this great Empire into so many parts, removing the Imperial Seat to Samerchand, on the other side of the Mountains, erecting many new Estates out of the ancient Prefectures, and the Governments of Cathay it self, and parcelling the remainder of it between the Kings of Tanguth, Cascar, and such other Princes of the Tartars, as were not wanting to themselves in those opportunities, the true Cathay might lose that name by little and little, which formerly it had communicated to those parts of China. Thus the Burgundians, Lombards, Vandals, and Hungars, lost those names at home, in their ancient and native habitations, which still remain unto those Countries that were Conquered by them. These reasons and considerations I willingly submit to the Reader's Judgment, being my self so great a Sceptick in this point, that I dare determine nothing positively on either side. It is enough that I have laid the Cause open without partiality, or byassing on either hand, before the Jurors; let them give up their verdict in it as they like the Evidence.

O F I N D I A.

INDIA, is bounded on the East with the Oriental Ocean, and some part of China, or as some others say, with a great Country called Mangi, which is only the South part of China, (not much known unto us of Europe) interjected betwixt it and China; on the West, with the Persian Empire; on the North, with some branches of Mount Taurus, which divideth it from Tartary; and on the South, with the Indian Ocean. So called from the River Indus, the nearest of esteem and note in all the Country, towards these parts of the World.

It is conceived to be the largest Country, of any one name in the World, except China and Tartaria; affirmed by Pomponius Mela, to be of such a great extent on the Sea-Coasts of it, that it was as much as a Ship could sail in 40 days. Extended from 106, to 159 degrees of Longitude, and from the Aequator to the 4th degree of Northern Latitude. By which account it lieth from the beginning of the first, to the end of the sixth Clime: the longest Summers-day in the Southern parts being 12 hours only, and in the parts most North, fifteen hours and a half. India is bounded to the North by China, Thibet and the Usbeck Tartars, and is separated from them by one continued Ridge of Mountains, of great height and difficult passage, called in Ptolemy Ottorocoras Mons; and is indeed a branch of the Taurus placed by him in 35 degrees of North-East, and by the latter Travellers in 36; where it lies most to the North between Thibet and Indostan. This Mountain is now called Delanguer in the Kingdoms of Pegu, Siam, and against Tunkin it runs more to the South.

Concerning the monstrous Fables which the Ages foregoing have delivered to us of this Country, give me leave to say, that as the Poets used of old to fill up the times of which they were ignorant, with strange Fictions, and prodigious Metamorphoses; or as our modern Geographers, in the Maps of the World, fill up those unknown parts thereof, of which they can give us no certain description with strange Pictures and uncouth shapes of Beasts and Trees so also the Writers in former Ages have filled the more remote Countries, of which they knew little, with such impossible and incredible relations. Hence there have been attributed to this India, the Fables of Men with Dog's heads, of Men with one leg only, yet of great swiftness; of such as live by scent; of Men that had but one eye and that in their foreheads; and of others, whose ears did reach unto the Ground. It is reported also that this people by eating a Dragon's heart and liver, attain to the understanding of the Languages of Beasts; that they can make themselves when they list, invisible; that they have two tubs, whereof the one opened yields wind, the other Rain, and the like. But these relations, and the rest of this strain, I doubt not but the understanding Reader knoweth how to judge of, and what to believe. For my part I am of the mind with Curtius, Plura equidem transcribo quam credo; nec enim affirmare ausus sum quæ dubito, nec subducere sustineo quæ accepi; I may perhaps relate some things which I do not credit, but shall not let them pass without some censures, that so I may neither impose any thing on the Reader's belief, nor defraud him of any thing conducing to his contentation.

The Country (to report no more of it than it doth deserve) enjoyeth an exact temperature of the Air, two Summers, (or one as long as two) and a double encrease, blest with all things which are either necessary to the life of Man, or of convenience and delight; particularly with Mines of Gold and Silver, and with precious Stones; with Spices of all sorts, and Civets; with the best medicinable Drugs; Metals of all kinds, except Copper and Lead; abundance of all sorts of Cattel, except Horses: Somewhat defective also in Wheat and Vines, that so this Country might be beholding unto others, as well as others to this. Famed also for abundance of Camels, Apes, Dragons, Serpents, Rhinocerots, Elephants. These last more favouring of reason and humane ingenuity, or else more tractable and docile, than any brute Creature whatsoever. Of this we have a fair instance in the Story of the Acts of Alexander. The Elephant which King Porus sat upon, finding his Master strong and lusty, rushed boldly into the thickest of the Enemies Army: but when he once perceived him to be faint and weary, he withdrew himself out of Battel, kneeled down, and into his Trunk received all the Arrows which were directed at his Master. The greatness of the Creature makes it yet more admirable that either he should have Soul enough of his own, to actuate so vast a Body; or being of such strength and bigness, should submit himself to the instructions of another: some of these Indian Elephants, as Alianus hath affirmed, being nine Cubits high and as many long; and in breadth or thickness about five Cubits. Nor doth the Sea afford less plenty or variety, than we find on shore, yielding abundance of the richest and fairest Pearls, huge shoals of fish, and amongst them the Whale or great Leviathan; exceeding the proportion of that Land-monster the Elephant. For though the ordinary dimension of the Whale be but 46 Cubits in length, and eight in thickness; yet Nearchus in Arrianus is said to have measured one, in these Indian Seas which was of the length of 50 Cubits, and of breadth proportionable: not to say any thing of that incredible report of Pliny, who speaketh of some Indian Whales, which were nine hundred and threescore foot, or four Acres long.

The People are of five sorts, and as many Religions; that is to say the natural Indians, derived from the Original Inhabitants of it. 2. Moors or Arabians, who more than two hundred years ago, possessed themselves of some Sea-Towns, driving the Natives up higher into the Country: 3. Jews scattered and dispersed (as in other places) into all parts of it. 4. Tartars, in those Parts and Provinces which are under the Great Mogul. And 5. Portugueses, who have many Colonies and Factories in the Ports and Islands, but brag as if they had made a Conquest of all the Country. Which notwithstanding, considering that the natural Indians are by far the greatest number, we must relate to them only in the Character which is made of this People. Affirmed to be of tall stature, strong of body, and of Complexion inclining to that of the Negroes: Of manners civil and ingenious, free from fraud in their dealings, and exact keepers of their words. The common sort but meanly clad, for the most part naked, content with no more covering than to hide their shame. But those of greater Estates and Fortunes Fortunes (as they have amongst them many Ancient and Noble Families) observe a Majesty in both Sexes, both in their Attendants and Apparel; sweetning the last with Oils and perfumes, and adorning themselves with Jewels, Pearls, and other Ornaments befitting. They eat no Flesh, but live on Barley, Rice, Milk, Honey and other things without life.

The Women not of much fairer Complexion than the Men, yet of lovely Countenances, wear their hair long and loose, but covered with a thin Vail of Calicut-Lawn. Their Ears hung with many Rings, so great and heavy, that they are torn and stretched to much disproportion: their Noses also ringed, and behung with Jewels according to their Estate and Quality. Servilely obsequious to their husbands, whose affections they divide amongst them without jar or jealousy: the Men allowed here, as in all the East, the use of many Wives, whom they buy of their Parents for a yoke of Oxen; and marry as often as they list. In which they have too great a privilege above the Women, who after the decease of their common husband, do either burn in the same flame with him, or else are forced to doom themselves to perpetual Widowhood. But of this we may speak more hereafter, when we come to the particulars.

The Christian Faith was first planted in these Countries by St. Thomas, from whom the remainders of Christianity take denomination; and unto whom the Records and Monuments of that Church do ascribe their conversion. For in one of their Breviaries written in the Chaldaick Tongue, and translated into Latine by Father John Maria Campanin a Jesuit, we find it thus, Per D. Thomam evanuit error Idololatriæ ab Indis, &c. i. e. by St. Thomas the errors of Idolatry vanished out of the Indies; by St. Thomas, they received the Sacrament of Baptism, and the Adoption of Sons; by St. Thomas, they believed and confessed the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost; by St. Thomas, they kept the Faith received of one God: And finally by St. Thomas, the splendor of saving Doctrine did appear to all India. His body, as they say, intombed in the City of Maliapar, upon the Coast of Choromandel; the truth of which tradition I dispute not here. But this plantation of the Gospel by the hand of St. Thomas, was not universal over all the Country, but in some Parts and Provinces only: or else was forced to give ground a while to prevailing Heathenism. For in the Reign of Constantine, we read how the Indians living on the farther side of the River Ganges (for so I understand the Indi interiores of my Author) were converted to the Faith by the Ministry of one Fruementius, of the City of Tyre; who having spent the greatest part of his time amongst them, was employed in that service, and consecrated the first Bishop (for those Churches) by the great Athanasius of Alexandria. But being the Foundation of this building was laid by St. Thomas, the remainder of Christians here, ascribe the whole work to him; called therefore Christians of St. Thomas. Governed originally by their own Bishops, subordinate to an Arch-Bishop of their own also, residing at Guagamale fifteen miles from Cochin, one of the chief Cities of this Country; who for a long time acknowledged obedience to the Patriarch of Musal, by the name of the Patriarch of Babylon, as by these Christians of India he is still termed. The number of the Christians computed at 15 or 16 thousand Families; or at 70000 persons in the account of others; inhabiting for the most part in that large tract of ground, which beginning at the outlets of Indus and Ganges, stretcheth unto the Cape or Promontory called Cape Comari. The points wherein they differed from the Church of Rome. 1. Their administering the Sacrament of the Eucharist in bread seasoned with Salt; 2. Administering in both kinds, but using instead of Wine (which is scarce, or not at all to be had in this Country) the juyce of Raisins softened in water over night, and so pressed forth; 3. Not baptizing Children untill 40 days old except it be in danger of death; 4. Permitting no Images in their Churches, but that of the Cross; 5. Allowing one marriage to their Priests, but debarring the second; 6. In painting God with three heads on one body to denote the Trinity; 7. Denying the use of extreme unction; And 8. not acknowledging the Pope's Supremacy; but besides these remainders of those ancient Christians, there are some others now of late of a new plantation, by the pains and travel of the Jesuits, though not with such success here, as they found in China; many of the Inhabitants partly by the diligence of the Arabians, and partly by the power of the great Mongul, having embraced Mahometanism; and being consequently less inclinable to admit the Gospel, than when they were in the condition of their natural Gentilism. Yet have they made such good progress in it, that Echebar the Mongul, not only founded a fair Church for the use of the Christians in the City of Agra (the Regal City of that Empire) but committed to the care of the Jesuits the Education of two Princes of the Regal Family. And possibly they might have made a great increase of Christians before this time, had they not been opposed therein by Sultan Curroon, a bitter Enemy to their proceeding in the Reign of his Father, and no great favourer of them since. Infomuch that hearing a Jesuit, called Francisco Carfi, report unto his Father, how miraculously a wooden Cross of his had escaped the fire, he was very urgent with his Father to have a great fire presently made, and the same Cross to be thrown into it, upon these conditions, that if the Cross consumed not, his Father and himself would become Christians; but if it did, the Jesuit should be burned in the same fire with it. A fiery trial which the poor Jesuit had much ado to put off, and preserve his credit. Howsoever by their practising amongst the old Christians, they have gained one point of very great consequence and importance to the Church of Rome. For in the year 1599, by the sollicitation of the Jesuits and others, the Indian Christians renounced their obedience to the Patriarch of Musal, and submitted their Churches to the Jurisdiction of the Pope of Rome, in a National Synod held at Liamper, not far from Maliapar, by the Arch-Bishop of Goa the Primate of the Portugals in those Parts; not only rejecting all opinions contrary to the Roman Tenets, but delivering all their Books and Liturgies to be altered and refined by the said Arch-Bishop, according to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Rome, which was done accordingly.

But these comparatively to the rest, come not to an handful, the main Body of the People wallowing in their Gentilism, and still retaining many of those ancient Customs, which they used of old: as viz. 1. Not knowing their Wives after they had born them two Children; nor keeping them, if after five years Cohabitation they can raise no Issue by them, but then exchanging them for others: 2. Rewarding none for any Military exploit, if they bring not with them in their hands, the head of an Enemy: 3. Killing their Friends, before they were withered or decayed by Age, or Sickness. To these they have added others of a later invention, perhaps more barbarous; of which we may have opportunity to speak anon. Their Priests or Learned Men in the time of old were called Brachmans, from one Brachman the prescriber of their Rites and Laws, by whom instructed in the Rudiments of their Philosophy; some of which, from their going naked, had the name of Gymnosophists; who were to them as the Chaldaei to the Assyrians, the Magi to the Persians; and the Druids to the ancient Britains. Had in great Reverence by the People, and living for the most part an austere and solitary life, in Caves and deserts, feeding on herbs, poorly apparelled, and for a time abstaining from all carnal pleasures; but that time past, they may indulge themselves more liberty, and admit the company of Women. Others of them live together with the common people, as being their ordinary Priests. Of these the great Alexander, when he was in this Country surprized ten; one of them called by the name of Calanus, with whom he had a great deal of communication: propounding to him many strange questions, and receiving back to many of them, (as himself confessed) some not unsatisfying, though strange, answers. To these Gymnosophists, or Brachmans, the Bramines do now succeed, both in place and authority; but differ from them most extremely in point of Learning, and the civilities of their lives: these Bramines being the most impure, libidinous, and sensual beasts in all the Country; privileged with the first night's lodging of every Bride, which when satiated with their filthy lust, they sell, or traffick with, to strangers, serving as Stallions to old Men, and as Panders to young: so fished in wickedness, and ignorant of all good Letters, that they have nothing of a Man but the voice and shape. Mahometanism is also entertained in a great part of the Country; first brought in by the Tartars, and neighbouring Persians, unto whom conterminous; but much increased by the Victories of the great Mongul: who being originally a Tartar, and of that Religion, hath caused it to be propagated in most Parts of his large Dominions. The Gymnosophists of India are still extant as appeareth by Tavernier who gives us the Icons of these mad Philosophers, for such they must appear to any sober Man.

Mountains of most note in it, besides Caucasus, and some other of the branches of Taurus, or Ararat, common to this, and the Tartarian and Persian Empires, 1 Sardonyx, full of Mines of those precious Stones which are called after the name of the Mountain. 2 Vindius, 3 Bittigo, 4 Adisathras. 5 Those called Apocopi, and 6 Those named Orodii. And on the further side of Ganges. 7 Beryrrhus. 8 Macandrus. 9 Those called Damusi, and 10 Semanthinus; part of this last extending also unto China. All of them very fruitfull in the production of Mines, and Rivers, as will appear by looking over the particulars when we come unto them.

But the Mountain of chief note of all, is that which Ptolemy called Bittigo, and is now named Gates; the Southern Part of the great Mountain Imaus spoken of before; extended from Mount Caucasus, where it crosseth the Taurus in right Angles, to Cape Comary, a known Promontory of Indostan, or the hither India (which it divideth into East and West) for the space of 400 Leagues and upwards. Conceived by Postellus, a Learned Writer to be that Mount Sephar, mention whereof is made in the tenth Chapter of Genesis, where it is said to be the utmost Eastern limit of the Sons of Joktan, Gen. 10. 30. With probability enough, for ought I can see; the Sons of Joktan being settled in these Parts of India, and the Provinces of the Persian Empire which lie nearest to them. And so far Stephanus doth concur with Postell, as to affirm of this Mount Sephar, that it is Mons India, an Indian Mountain: both of which grounding on St Hierom, who expressly saith, Sophera Mons Orientis in India, juxta quam habitaverunt filii Joktan. i. e. That Sephar, or Sopher, is the name of a Mountain of the East in India; near to which dwelt the Sons of Joktan. More probably, without doubt, than that we should transfer it into America, as I see some do, and make it there to be the great Mountain of the Andes; which runneth the whole length of Peru, from one end to the other, and thence, as some will have it, to the Straights of Magellan. Which should we grant, we must not look for Joktan, or the Sons of Joktan, either in Arabia Felix, where Bochartus placeth them; nor in the Eastern Parts of Asia, where most probably they may be found; but we must cross the vast Oriental Ocean, and look for them in a place where they never were; besides, that granting this for true, we must allow America to have been known in the time of Moses, which no Author that I ever met with, did so much as dream of.

Rivers of most note are, 1 Indus, which riseth out of that part of Taurus, which the Ancients called Paropamisus, the Moderns, Naturocot; and having received into it 19 other Rivers, after a course of 900 miles, falleth into the Ocean at seven Mouths, that is to say, 1 Sagappa, being the most Western; 2 Sinthum, 3 Aureum, 4 Cariphi, 5 Sappara, 6 Sabalassa, 7 Lonibare, the most Eastward. But five of these being choaked with Sands, or drawn into the neighbouring Channels, there now remains but only two. A River famous in Records and ancient Stories, for giving name unto the Country and that so celebrated voyage of Alexander, who sailed down it towards the Indian Ocean: the voyage holding above five months, of which there is said to have passed no day wherein he sailed not 15 miles, or 600 Furlongs. 2 Ganges, which riseth, as some say, from the Mountain Imaus, (or rather from that part of Taurus, where Imaus falleth right upon it,) and falling headlong down the Rocks, is first collected into a Lake or Pool, (supposed by others for the fountain and original of it) whence with a gentler pace it passeth towards the Ocean; taking in by the way, as is said by Pliny, 30 navigable Rivers: In the narrowest place of eight miles breadth, in the broadest 20, seldom so shallow but that the depth thereof is 100 foot, or 20 Geometrical paces. Parted into five great channels it falleth at last into the Sea; the first of which most towards the West, is called Canbysum, 2 Magnum, 3 Camberychus, 4 Pseudostomum, and 5 that which lieth farthest towards the East, called Autiboli. This River erroneously supposed to be that Pison which watered Paradise: and to increase the reputation of the error we find it countenanced by Josephus, and other no less eminent names; and also backed by some traditions of the people which inhabit near it. By whom it is affirmed, That one of the Bengalan Kings sent Men up the River, who came at last to a pleasant place, blest with a fragrant Earth, sweet air, and quiet waters; beyond which they could go no further. The truth and reality whereof doth so possess them, that at the mouth of this River called Gangasagie, such as are weary of this world use to cast themselves into the Current, and are presently devoured by a Fish, called Sea-dogs, by whom they hope to find a quick passage to Paradise. The occasion of which error among the Ancients, proceeded from those words of the Scripture, in which it is affirmed of Pison, that it compassed the Land of Havilah: which granting that it did, inferreth not that either this River must be Pison, or that India is intended by that Havilah. For besides Havilah the Son of Jocktan, planted in some part of India, there was another Havilah the Son of Chus, settled in the Land of Flavilah or Chusiana, not far from Babylon: this last indeed watered by the River Pison and the first by Ganges; too far asunder, and divided by too many Nations, to be taken or mistaken one for another. But no less famous, because none of those which neighboured the Garden of Eden; perhaps of greater fame than any of those which did. For to this River do the superstitious Indians make their solemn pilgrimages, vainly conceiving that they shall be sure of their Eternity, if at the time of their death they may drink of this water. To the overflowings of this River do the people ascribe the fertility of the Countries adjoining, as the Egyptians do to Nilus. And finally, by this River was the whole Country anciently, and at this present is, divided into two main parts, (each subdivided into many particular Provinces) viz. 1. India intra Gangem. 2. India extra Gangem. Of each of which we will first take a brief survey, with reference to the state and story of it in preceeding times; and then consider them with reference to the present Age.

1. INDIA EXTRA GANTEM.

INDIA EXTRA GANTEM is bounded on the East, with the River Ganges, till the fall thereof into the Sea; and after that, with that large and spacious Bay, called anciently Sinus Gangeticus, now the Gulf of Bengala; on the West, with Paropamisus, Arachosia, Gedrosia, Provinces of the Persian Empire; and part of the Arabian Seas; on the North, where it is the broadest, with Mount Taurus, branched into Paropamisus, Caucasus, and other parts: and on the South, where it endeth in a sharp Point or Promontory, by Ptolemy called Communia extrema, but now Cape Commari, with the Indian Ocean. So named from being situate on the side of Ganges; by the Moderns, Indostan. The

The Country of the same nature formerly, as it is at the present, not altered but by changing of the Channels of Indus; which being shifted by an Earth-quake, turned a great part of the once neighbouring Region to a sandy Defart: Indus (as many other of the Indian Rivers) fatning and enriching all the Land which it overfloweth. The people of those elder times much like the Scythians, especially in their course of life, living without Cities, Temples, or Houses, in their movable Tents; their food the bark of a Tree, called Tala, which served for bread; and the flesh of Bucks, Does, and other Venison, with the skins whereof they made their Garments. All of them Free-men, and no Slaves to be found among them. Less warlike than the Scythians, but as great contemners of death as they; the very women contending eagerly amongst themselves, who should accompany their Husband (one Husband having many Wives) to his Funeral-Pile. Of which thus St. Hierom, He igitur contendunt de amore viri, & ambitio summa certantium est ac testimonium castitatis, dignam morte censerit. A Custom still retained amongst them; of which somewhat hath been said already, and more is to be said in another place.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1. Hydaspes, by Ptolemy (and by him only) called Bidaspes, one of the furthest bounds of Alexander's Conquests. 2. Suastrus, 3. Coa, 4. Acceines, very memorable in the Gestis of Alexander. 5. Saudabilis, 6. Zaradrus: all coming from the Northern Mountains and all falling (Hydaspes with three other Rivers first received into it) into the great bed of Indus. 7. Diamna, 8. Sorabius, and 9. Soa, falling from the like Northern Mountains, into the main Channel of Ganges. 10. Naragonus, issuing from Mount Vindius. 11. Baris, from Bittigo. 12. Chaberis, from Adisathris. 13. Tindis, from the Hill called Uxentius: and 14. Tina, from the Orodian Mountains, with many others of less note. By what names called at the present, I determine not; nor find I any which have dared to adventure on it. But doubtless to be found in 1. Catamul, 2. Cebcha, 3. Rba, 4. Chenon, 5. Rebeth, all Tributaries unto Indus, which is now called Schind. 6. Tapbi, 7. Harunda, 8. Chamehl, 9. Jamena, which empty their waters into Ganges; the which, with such others of the principal Rivers as are now known by name to us, shall occasionally be touched on in that which followeth. Besides which Rivers, here is a famous Lake mentioned in the Gestis of Alexander, (but the name occurreth not) not much above a mile in circuit, but exceeding pleasant, shaded on every side with Woods memorable for the great refreshment which it gave to Alexander's Army, when even pined with thirst.

The Country so exceeding populous in the time of Ptolemy, that it affordeth him the names of more noted Cities, than any one Country in the World. Of which 1. Cotiara, 2. Nigana, 3. Sageda, 4. Rarasia, 5. Mafopelle, and 6. Pitandra, are honoured with the name of Metropoles; as being the Head-Cities of their several and respective Nations. 7. Ozenes, 8. Sora, 9. Palibothra, 10. Gange, 11. Batana, 12. Hippocura, 13. Carata, 14. Madura, 15. Orthura, and 16. Atalanga, mentioned, as the Royal Seats of several Princes, by the name of Kegia. 17. Bardaxema, 18. Tyddis, 19. Argari, 20. Cunula, 21. Chaberis, on the River so called, 22. Palura, on the shores of the Gulf of Bengala, and 23. Palura, on the banks of Cambysum, 24. Telegramocum, marked out above the rest with the name of Civitates (Cities) and therefore probably of more note than others not so distinguished. And finally, 25. Monogassum, 26. Simylla, near a Promontory of the same name, 27. Nitra, 28. Ataziris, 29. Elanchorum, 30. Colchi, 31. Salur, 32. Sobura, 33. Poduca, 34. Atelange, 35. Maliarpha, 36. Contacissyla, 37. Nosygne, 38. Barygaza, specified as the most noted and celebrated Empories; besides 39. Canthynus, 40. Statbmus, and 41. a Road opposite to Chrysar, two Commodious Stations or Roads for shipping. The names and situation of these Places is the most we find of them, which makes me pass them over with a bare recital, only to shew how populous and well planted this Country was in the time of my

Of less name, but of more note in the course of Ptolemy, 1. Nyssa, built by Baculus at the time of his Indian Conquest, and called thus by the name of his Aurife, to preserve her memory, his Mother dying in Child-birth of him. Replenished by him with his best and wounded Soldiers, whose Posterity continued here till the time of Alexander, who loved the City and People for his love to Baculus, who was therein worshipped in a Temple of his own foundation, planted about with Rays, Vines and Ivy; whose flaky branches covered the Roof of it. In the midst thereof an Image, with all the Instruments belonging to a plentiful Image; all of Gold or Silver. 2. Taxilla, or Taxila, as Ptolemy calleth it, founded betwixt Indus and Hydaspes, in the Region called Taxila; and built most probably by Taxiles, a puissant King of India, in the time of Alexander. Adorned in former times with a Temple dedicated to the Sun, and then in with an Ivory-Image of Ajax, a Golden Statue of Alexander, and the Portraiture of King Perus made of Copper. The floor of Alexander's work polished with Pearls, the Walls of red marble interlaid with Gold, which made it shine afar off, like a flash of Lightning. 3. Nagara, called also Dionysopolis in memory of Baculus, who was also called Dionysius, and Liber Pater. 4. Aornus, by Diodorus called Aornus, and Zivernus by Strabo: so strongly seated on a Rock, that Hercules was not able to force it: which made Alexander, (imitating and therein out-going the Acts of Hercules) assault it with the greater force and at last he carried it. 5. Bucephala, built by Alexander on the banks of Hydaspes, and named thus in memory of Bucephalus, his beloved Horse, which had served him in all the course of his Fortunes, and dyed hereabouts, being then thirty years old. 6. Pireta, another of his Foundations, so called by the name of his Dog whom he dearly loved, 7. Alexandria, on the banks of Indus, another of his Foundations also. 8. Mazage, on the West of Indus, one of the first Towns of India, taken by the Macedonians, though garrisoned within, and environed without with an Host of 300000 Men: but yielded after some resistance, with the use of her own body, by Cleopbe the Queen thereof, who received it back with other favours, from the hands of the Conqueror. 9. Nora, a strong City on the same side of Indus, taken by Polysperchon, one of his Commanders. 10. Samus, on the banks of the same River, taken by Alexander in the course of his Navigation down that Sea of waters; the Inhabitants whereof fought against him with poisoned Arrows, with one of which Ptolemy (afterward King of Egypt) was dangerously wounded, and cured with an herb which Alexander dreamt he had seen in the mouth of a Serpent. 11. Oxydrace, the chief City of the Oxydriceans; at the Siege whereof Alexander is said to be the first that scaled the Walls, and the last that could do so, the Ladder breaking as soon as he was at the top. Standing thus alone as a mark to all their Darts, he was by the Soldiers desired to leap down amongst them: he in a daring bravado leaped into the Town amongst his Enemies; where it was not only his good hap to light upon his feet, but to have an old Tree at his back to defend him behind. In this posture he is said to have maintained the fight a long time, against all the Soldiers of the Town; killing two of them with his own hands, and by that example teaching the rest to be more mannerly, till being wearied and dangerously wounded, he was forced to leave his feet, and commit the weight of his body to his knees. In this case Leonatus, Peucestes, and some other of his Captains came to assist him; who defended their dying Master, till the whole Army entered the Town; and put all the people to the sword, in revenge of their King, whose life they had little hope to enjoy: though he with much danger did afterward recover. For my part I give little or no credence to this story, ranging it in the same Catalogue of truth with the Adventures of Donzel del Phabo, Rosicler, Belianis, Amadis, and the rest of the rabble of Knights Errant. Neither is this the first time that Curtius hath disgraced the soundness of Alexander's Judgment, and the truth of his Actions with the like idle and impossible Fables: though indeed in that particular, he saith it was multò magis ad temeritatis quàm de gloria famam. And 12. Nicæa, built by Alexander on the banks of Acesines, in memory of his many great and signal Victories. Not far from which, finding how willing his Soldiers were to pass farther East, he purposed to leave behind him some monument of his great Exploits, and to make his fame immortal amongst the Indians. And to that end he caused the form of his Camp to be enlarged, and the Cabbins to be made bigger than sufficed for his Men to lodge in; the Mangers to be set higher than his Horses could reach; Armour and Bitts for horses of too great a size (made not for use, but ostentation of his might) to be scattered up and down the Camp, for the Savage People to wonder at in the times to come. By means whereof he got nothing amongst knowing Men, but suspicion that his Actions were intended less memorable, than they are reported to have been; since he so vainly laboured to have them thought greater indeed than they were.

The old Inhabitants hereof, were the Indo-Scythæ inhabiting on the North-West of Indus, the Mazagæ, Sadam, Pirataæ, Limeryces, Aii, the Soringi, Arvari, Oxydracaæ, Molli, and Lambataæ; the Gandarites, or Gangarides, near the mouth of Ganges, the Caspiræi, under the shades of Mount Vindius. The Musicanî, Chatziæi, Polindæ, Phyllitæ, Bittigi, Chadramotitæ, Pezuari, Adisabtri, Mandalæ, Drylphitæ, Sabaræ, and Pandioni, with many others, to the number of 122 several Nations, if Magasthenes be not out in this reckoning, too many and too impertinent to be mustered here.

Originally descended from the Sons of Noah, before they left the Eastern parts to go towards the unfortunate Valley of Shinaar. We could not else have found this Country so full of people in the days of Semiramis, the Wife of Ninus: who leading an Army compounded of several Nations, to the number of four millions and upwards (if Ctesias and Diodorus Siculus, who reports it from him, be of any credit; but certainly the greatest Army that ever was raised) was encountered by Staurobates, a King of India, with greater force made up of natural Indians only; by whom she was vanquished and slain. A matter beyond all belief, though neither Army could make up a fourth of that number, if the Indians had been no other than some one of those Colonies, which were sent from BABEL; or rather a second or third Swarm of those former Colonies, which went thence under the command of the first Adventurers: For that any of the first Adventurers, who were present at the building of the Tower of BABEL, travelled so far East, is not affirmed by any who have laboured in the search of their Plantations. So that I take it for a matter undeniable, That the plantation of India preceded the attempt of BABEL; though by whom made, there is nothing to be said for certain: Yet if I might have liberty to express my own conceptions, I am inclinable to believe, That all the Eastern parts of Persia, with China and both the India's, were peopled by such of the Sons of Sem, as went not with the rest to the Vally of Shinaar. For otherwise I can see no reason, that the Posterity of Japhet should plant the greatest part of the lesser Asia, and the whole Continent of Europe, with the Isles thereof; and that the Sons of Cham should spread themselves over Babylonia, Palæstina, the three Arabia's, and the whole Continent of Africk: the Posterity of Sem being shut up in a corner; the greater Asia, hardly so big as some one of the Provinces, taken up by the other Adventurers. And therefore that I may allow to the Sons of Sem an equal Latitude, I think it not improbable to fix them in these Eastern Countries; spreading themselves this way as they grew in numbers, before the rest of the Adventurers went to seek new fortunes at the Tower of BABEL. And being that Country was large and wealthy, and might have room enough to spare for some second comers (especially descending from the same root with them) I doubt not to place here all the Sons of Jocktan, Havilah, Chatsarmaveih, Saba, and Abimail, who left here some Tract or Monument of themselves, as hath been shewn at large in our GENERAL PREFACE; and as concerning Ophir, shall be shewed hereafter. To proceed therefore to our story, the next who made any invasion on this Country, after that of Semiramis, was Bacchus or Liber Pater, the Son of Jupiter and Semele, accompanied with Hercules Ægyptius, not much more fortunate than she: the Forces of Bacchus being defeated and Hercules forced to throw away his Golden Shield. But what they could not do by Arms, they effected by Arts. Bacchus instructing them in the use of Wine, Oil, Sacrifices and the Art of Architecture, and Drawing them into Towns and Cities; for that cause honoured as a GOD. To Hercules they ascribe the Nation of the Pandioni, proceeding from a Daughter of his called PANDÆA: the memory of both preserved in Statues and Pillars erected by them.

After this, unattempted till the time of Alexander, who having made a full Conquest of the Persian Empire, invaded India with an Army of 120000 fighting Men. Beginning with CLEOPHE, Queen of the Magazæ, a People of Indo-Scythia, he brought her to conformity, possessed himself both of her Person and Estate; on whom he begat a Son called Alexander who is said to have succeeded in her Dominions. Being passed over the River Indus, Taxiles (by some called Omphis) a prudent Prince whose Kingdom is affirmed to be bigger than Ægypt, submitted of his own accord: offering his service and assistance to promote his Conquest, and presenting him with a Crown of Gold, and 80 Talents of ready money. This King made welcome, but his money not so much as looked on; the Macedonian being so far from fingering of this Indian Gold, that he gave him a thousand Talents of his own Treasure. Encouraged by this Royal dealing Abiajares, another puissant Prince of the opposite Faction unto Taxiles, submitted also, and was as graciously received. Porus, whose Kingdom lay on the other side of Hydaspes, would not be so Conquered and therefore mustereth up his Forces, and valiantly made good the banks of the River. But vanquished at last, not without much difficulty, he was made a Prisoner to the Victor, who honouring the Man for his brave resistance, gave him his liberty and Kingdom, with a great enlargement. The Conqueror had a great desire to go farther East, but the Soldiers would not be perswaded: sufficiently taught by Porus what they were to look for, if the Indians should unite their Forces. Unable to prevail, he erected in the place twelve Altars, as high as Towers; where he observed many solemn Games and Sacrifices: and having Sacrificed to Hydaspes, Indus and Acesines he sailed down Indus towards the Southern Ocean; which seen at a distance, he turned towards Gedrosia, and thence to Babylon, where he dyed.

After his death, Eumenes raised some part of his Forces hence, but the Macedonians being plunged in a Civil War, one Adracottus stirred up the Indians to recover their freedoms, making himself at first their Captain, but at last their King. Possessed of all that had been conquered by the Greeks, he was encountered by Seleucus, who had then got the command of Asia: against whom he brought an Army of 600000 fighting Men. Frighted therewith, Seleucus made Peace with him, and contracted a Solemn League betwixt them, continued with the interchange of friendly Offices amongst their Posterity; and more confirmed by an interview betwixt Antiochus the Great and Saphagæsenus, one of the Successors of Adracottus; by whom Antiochus was presented with 150 Elephants, and the promise of some Treasure to be sent after him. By the Posterity of Adracottus was the Kingdom held, till the prosperity and full height of the ROMAN Empire. The Power whereof though they rather knew by report than tryal, yet was it not amiss to entertain a potent, though a remote State, in terms of amity. Therefore they sent Ambassadors unto Augustus, who who presented him with a number of Tigers, (which Beasts, with Dromedaries, till then, the Roman People had never seen) and which was most pleasing, a little Boy born without Arms, who with his feet could bend a Bow, shoot and play on wind-Instruments as exactly as others with their hands. Trajan the Emperour had a great desire to see this Country, but was diverted from that purpose by matters of more necessary importance to the state of his Empire. Moved with the fame of Antoninus the Roman Emperour, they sent a solemn Embassie unto him, making him Umpire in some Controversies which they had with the Bactrians: from which Ambassadors it is probable that Ptolemy the Geographer who then lived, might receive his informations of the Estate of this Country. The like they did to Julian the Apostate also, then setting forwards on his expedition against the Persians, desiring his Friendship and Alliance. How it was with them in the time of Constantine and Justinian, hath been shewn already. After these times by little and little, Histories have in a manner been silent concerning the affairs hereof; but for some Conquests made on the parts next Persia, by the Caliphs of Bagdad. For notwithstanding that there was continual Traffick from the Red Sea hither; and between the Persians, Arabians and Indian Merchants for Spices, and the other Commodities of this Region: yet were not these Merchants acquainted with the state of the Country, because they entered not into it; but were met by the Indian Merchants at Samarchand, being as it were the common Empory. Neither did the Agyptians at all enter India, but were met by the Indians at Ormus, or some other Island, even as now the Chinois make some of the Philippines, the Staple of their Trade with the Spaniards, whom they Licence not to come into the Continent among them. But our modern Travellers and Navigators have withdrawn this mask of obscurity, and shewed her lively portraiture in as lively Colours. One of the first who brake the Ice, and gave us any certainty of their affairs, was Sir John Mandeville; accompted at his coming back for the greatest Fabler in the World: so incredible seemed his reports of the magnificence of those Kingdoms, and the wealth of their Countries, and the many rarities which he found amongst them. But better thought of by our Neighbours, he obtained a Monument in a Convent at Lige (where he ended the long course of his Life and Travels, 1372) The Friars of which keep some things of his, Comme pour honorable memoire de son excellence, for an honourable memorial of his excellency. Many of his Relations since confirmed by the Portugals, who under the conduct of Vasquez de Gama first discovered this Country, by the new way of the Cape of Good Hope, Anno 1499, or thereabouts. For so it happened, that the Portugals having discovered all the Coasts of Africk, as far as Cape Ford, by the encouragement and at the charge of Henry Duke of Viseo, one of the younger Sons of King John the first, began to think upon some way to the wealth of India, and getting into their own hands the rich Trade of that Country. To which end it was first thought, that Pedro de Cannanilla, and Alphonso de Padua, should make a journey into the East Parts, to learn the certainty of the Spice-trade, and make report of such other Commodities as these Countries yielded. Being come at last by long journeys to the City of Calicut, and having satisfied themselves in the enquiry which they came about, they prepare for their return to Portugal. Padua dying in the journey, and Cannanilla, tho' detained by the Habassine Emperour (commonly, but corruptly, called Prester John) sends home a full relation of his successes; inflamed with which, King John the second sends out Bartholomew Diaz, Anno 1487, to find out a way into the Indies by the back of Africa: who having sailed as far as the Cape of good Hope, without giving end to the adventure, returned back to Portugal. Undertaken with better fortune 10 years after, at the command of King Emanuel by Vasquez de Gama, above mentioned; who doubling the Cape, and sailing Northward, all along the shores of Africk, as far as the Kingdom of Melinde, received from the King thereof both Pilots and instructions to bring him to Calicut, where he found all true which Cannanilla had before reported. Full of good news at the end of 26 Months from his first setting out, he returns to Lisbon, received for the present with joy and triumph, and about two years after (that is to say 1502,) furnished with 13 Ships and three Caravals, he sets forward again, followed by Stephen de Gama the same year with 5 Ships more, by which great strength he made himself Master of some Ports; and by that means laid the Foundation of that great Command, which the Portugals have attained unto in these Eastern Countries. Seconded in this great enterprize by Ferdinando de Almeda, and Alphonso de Albuquerque, and other noble Adventurers of the Realm of Portugal, as after them by such of the European Nations as had the benefit and trade of the Western Ocean.

If it be asked, why the Castilians, or Spaniards, being strong in Shipping, bent not themselves to the discovery of these wealthy Countries? it may be answered, 1. That they were busied at the same time in the discovery and Conquest of the New World, which they looked on as a nearer, and no less profitable Booty than this of India. 2. The Commodities of this Country, being brought home by the Portugals, were sold to them at far cheaper rates, than they could have fetched them in their own bottoms. 3. And chiefly because by the definitive sentence of Pope Alexander the sixth, both the Castilians, and the Portugals, were so limited in their Navigation, that the Castilians might not intermeddle in the Eastern, nor the Portugals in the discovery or Conquest of the Western Parts, beyond the bounds which he had set to those several Nations before-mentioned; and by some latter observations we have been informed, That in this part of India were no fewer than 47 Kingdoms, whereof some few have still their own natural Kings, the rest all subject to the power of the Great Mongul, contracted into a lesser number by joyning many lesser Territories into one Division. We shall look on it as distributed into 15 Provinces. Some have reduced them into five, but give us neither the bounds nor extent of any of them. And others in the description of their Travels, ramble up and down with such uncertainties (most of them being Men of trades and ignorance) that tho' they tell us where they lodged, and what entertainments they did meet with, yet we shall hardly know by them (for I think they did not know themselves) in what Province they were, or to what part the several Towns, through which they passed did of right belong. So that our passage through these Countries (having such blind guides to follow) will be full of difficulty, and not satisfactory to the Reader as he might expect. Howsoever, I desire him to bear me company, whilst I take the best survey I can of these 15 Provinces, to which the whole may be most handsomely reduced: that is to say, 1. Duljinda, 2. Pengab, 3. Mandao, 4. Delly, 5. Agra, 6. Sanga, 7. Gambat, 8. Deccan, 9. Canara, 10. Malabar, 11. Narjunga, 12. Orissan, 13. Botanter, 14. Pantenar, and 15. Bengala.

The Persians and Arabians, call all India by the name of Indostan. It reacheth on the West, from the River Indus, or Sindo, as far as the Ganges, in the East; on the Western border it hath a Port called Guader, in 2 Degrees Latitude, (which I find in none of the Maps, but I suppose it to be Goadel.) On the East it hath the Kingdom of Mavy; on the North, Caucasus, and Great Tartary; and on the South, Deccan, and the Gulf of Bengala, with the Arabian or Indian Ocean. The extent of it from East to West, is 600 Leagues, from North to South, 700 French Leagues; the South lying in 20 D. Latitude, the North border at 43. This is to be understood of Calicut, which is the most Northern Town in Indostan, and lyeth to the North-West of that Kingdom, but I believe is placed 2 degrees too much to the North. That part of Indostan which is next to Persia, was of old called Cannania, and now by the Persians Sindo Dind; by Dr. Heylin Duljinda; it should be Dind-Sindo from Dind, which lands on the Western Branch of the Indus towards Persia. It is divided into 37 great Provinces, which were heretofore so many Kingdoms. viz. Candabar, now belonging to Persia; but in 1638, under the Mongul. 2. Kaul, 3. Multan, 4. Hacs-chan, 5. Bachar, 6. Tatta, 7. Soret, 8. Iselmeer, 9. Attach, 10. Pang-ab, 11. Chismer, 12. Bankisch, 13. Fengapar, 14. Fenba, 15. Delly, 16. Bando, 17. Malway, 18. Chitor, 19. Gufuratta, 20. Candisch, 21. Bevar, 22. Gualer, or Dulsinda; 23. Agra, 24. Sambit, 25. Bakor, 26. Narwar, 27. Nagracut, 28. Siba, 29. Kakares, 30. Gor, 31. Pitan, 32. Kanduana, 33. Porena, 34. Femal, 35. Menat, 36. Voesa, 37. Bengala. Texira, names Utrat, but saith not whereabouts it is seated. The Portugueses call Gufuratta, Cambaya. Mandeflo's Travels into Indostan, from Pag. 18. to 21.

1. D U L S I N D A. G U A D E L. G U A L E R

D U L S I N D A is bounded on the East, with the River Indus; on the West, with Paropamisus, and Arachosia, two Persian Provinces, but for the most part under the command of the Great Mongul; on the North with Caucasus, by which parted from Tartary; or rather from the Kingdom of Candabar, which is now a part of the Kingdom of Persia, being yielded to that Crown by the Mongul, in 1653, after a bloody War of three years continuance, Tavernier: on the South, with the Indian or Arabian Ocean. So that it taketh up all the Western parts of this Estate, which lye upon the West of the River Indus; from which River called by the Natives Sinda, most probably it is that it took its name: and therefore I have written it with an s, Dulsinda, and not Dulcinda with a c, as I see some do, but on no good reason, for any thing that I am able to understand.

The Country, by reason of the Northern situation of it, more temperate, but less fruitful than the rest of India. The Seat in ancient times, of the Muzages and Indo-Scythæ, when subdued by Alexander. Made up at present, of many lesser Kingdoms, and smaller Provinces; denominated for the most part, from the principal Towns and Cities of them, as in other places. This Country, lyeth between 25, and 30 Degrees of Latitude, and therefore the temperature of the Air is not to be ascribed to its Northern situation; I rather suspect it is exceeding hot, as all those parts of Persia that lye in the same Latitude, and are of the same nature are; and the Mountains to the North of it, must of necessity make it such.

Amongst which those of the most esteem, are 1. Caximir, Cascimur, or Chesmur, (for by all these names it is called) the chief of a Kingdom once, unto which it gave name, till subdued by Echebar the Mongul; who in a pleasant Island, (in the midst of a great and deep Lake, about three Leagues off the City) beset round with Trees, built a Royal Palace: which he honoured sometimes with his Court, removed hither from Labor partly the better to assure this new conquered Kingdom; but principally because his Palace of Labor, and therein an infinite deal of Treasure, had but newly been consumed by fire. The City it self situate in the most healthy Country of all India, encompassed with high Mountains, covered for the most part of the year with Snow, the rest a delicate, goodly Plain diversified with Pastures, Woods and Cornfields, Meadows, Parks, Gardens, and Rivers, even to admiration. The Air hereof, and of the Country round about, by reason of the Northern situation of it, and the snowy Mountains very cool and temperate. The Soil abundantly productive of Wheat, Rice, and Vines, which last they plant at the foot of the Mulberry-Tree, which seemeth by this means to bear double fruits. Both Town and Kingdom subdued by Echebar, the Mongul, about the year 1597: their own dissensions more conducing to that subjugation, than any visible force which he brought before it. This City and Kingdom, is placed at the foot of the Taurus, to the North of Labor; and on the East of the Indus, a vast distance from the Province of Dulcinda, or Dulsinda; it stands near the Fountain of this River, in the Latitude of 38 or thereabouts. 2. Roree, a Fort of the Monguls towards Paropamisus; but bordering upon the Country of Multan, to which people it properly belongeth: Garrisoned not so much for fear of the Persian, (for Paropamisus, now called Cabul, is his ancient Patrimony,) but to preserve the people from the spoil of the Thieves, who always hang about the Mountains. 3. In the most Northern parts hereof, stood the Nagara of Ptolemy; mistook by some for the modern Agra, of which more anon. 4. Segistan, the chief City, as I take it, of the Kingdom of Rebat; situate on the East of Caximir, betwixt it and the Indus: in the same Latitude with that, but not of so temperate an air; the snowy Mountains much conducing to the temperature of the Realm of Caximir. 5. Multan, a great and ancient City and the chief of a Kingdom on the South of Caximir or Chusmur; and about three French Leagues from the banks of the River Indus. The ordinary thorough-fair of the Caravans in the way from Labor to Spaban, (the chief Seat of the Sophy or King of Persia) forced to a bide there divers days, sometimes ten or twelve to enrich the Town; which of it self is of no great trading, nor otherwise able to subsist but by this device; famed most especially for many excellent Bows and Arrows made in it. The Bows made of Horn, excellently glewed and put together; the Arrows of small Canes or Reeds, both of them set off by rich Paint and Varnish. They which are made here being more neat and good than in any part of East India besides. There is another Town or Kingdom of or near this name on the other side of the River Indus, of which we shall speak more in its proper place. 6. Lumkee, a Fort or Garrison, situate in the Straights of the Mountains to secure the Caravans, and protect either Passengers from the danger of Robbers, hovering in these Hill-Countries, the out-parts of this Empire. Dulcinda, the Capital City of this Province, (if any such there be in Indostan) is seated upon the River that goeth to Patanis, to the West of Ilment, and is a part of Carmania Deserta, or at the least bordereth upon it. So that I see no reason why the Cities he sets down, should be reckoned as a part of this Province.

2. P E N G A B.

O Pposite to Dulsinda, on the Eastern side of the River Indus, but more inclining towards the South lieth the Country, or division rather, which my Author calleth by the name of PENGAB: bounded on the West, with Indus, which divideth it from Dulsinda; on the South, with the Kingdom of Mandao; on the North, and East, with those many Kingdoms, which we have comprehended under the name of Botanier. The Persians and Indostans, call the River Indus Pang-ab, that is to say, five waters, because so many Rivers come into it, before it unites into one great Channel. The first is Bugat or Begut, which riseth near Kabul. 2. Chanab, which riseth in Cassamier, fifteen daies journey North of Labor, the 3. Ravy, or Rave, which runs by Labor. 4. Via, and the 5. Osvia or Sindo, come from a great distance and meet near Bakar; which lieth at an equal distance from Labor. Mandeflo, Pag. 18. This is one of the most fruitful Provinces in Indostan, being Seated within, and Watered by all these five Rivers, and Labor is the Capital City of it.

The reason of the name I find not, nor any thing memorable of the Country; but that it was divided in the time of Ptolemy, into the Provinces of the Lambate, Cassiria, Cylindrine, and Saustene: subdued by Alexander in his Expedition into India: the famous Rivers of Acisines and Hydaspis (but by what names now called I find not) having here their source. So that it seemeth to have been a part of the Kingdom of Porus, or that the Kingdom of Porus was a part of this.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Labor, on the Eastern banks of Indus, affirmed to be the fairest and most ancient ancient City in both the Indies; of most esteem for wealth and greatness. In compass about sixteen miles, and honoured for a while with the ordinary Residence of the Great Mongul; till on the burning of his Palace, spoken of before, he removed his Court to Cascimir, from thence to Fatipore, and at last to Agra. Since that time made the Seat of the eldest Son, or Heir apparent, sent hither for avoiding all occasion of Factions, which their living in the Court might breed. A City of exceeding Trade, as being the chief Staple for the Spices in these parts, and other commodities of India, from hence transported into Persia by the way of Candabor, the principal Town of Arachosia; and so to Spahan, the chief City of the Sophian Empire; where they are sold, by reason of so long and chargeable a journey, for excessive rates. It is said that 12000 Camels at the least, pass every year thorough it with their lading; besides what is ferried down the River, and brought up by the Portugals, who therewith traded unto Ormuz, till that Town was Taken. By this we may conjecture at the wealth hereof, but more by that great mass of Treasure which a late Governor hereof did leave behind him. At whose death Echebar the Mongul (for the Mongul is the Heir General unto all Mens Wealth) found in his Coffers three millions of Gold ready coyned, great quantity of Gold and Silver uncoyned, and some store of Jewels; besides Horses, Elephants, Household-furniture, and other goods almost invaluable. The Castle of Labor being very strong, retains its ancient Beauty with part of the Royal Palace; the rest of it is much decayed both in Extent and Beauty. The Houses are higher than those of Agra and Delly, but not so well peopled; the River is also gone off from it as well as the Court, which has made it much less in compass, yet it has five or six Streets still, two of which are above a League long. Tavernier part 2. p. 45. Bernier. p. 123.

2. Sultan-puarc, of more antiquity than beauty; yet of good esteem. 3. Atbec, in the common Road from Labor to China; reported in the description of the Travels of Benedictus à Goes, a Portugal Jesuit, to be a month's journey from Labor, and yet in the same Province with it. Which if it be true, either the Province must be large, or his journeys short: or if not true, we must remember that we had it from the Pen of a Jesuit. And yet as great as this Province or Division is affirmed to be, we do not find the names of any more Towns of consideration, which may be said with confidence to belong unto it; unless perhaps we may reduce under this Division the Kingdoms of Haiacan and Buchor; of which last the chief City is called Bucorsuccor, enriched by the neighbourhood of the Indus, but not else observable.

3. M A N D A O.

THE Kingdom of MANDAO, is bounded on the North, with Pengab; on the South, with the Realm of Agra, on the East, with Delly; and on the West, with the River Indus. So called from Mandao, the chief City of it.

The Country more Mountainous and rugged than the rest of these Provinces, by reason of the many branches of Mount Bittigo (the Southern part of the Imaus) which do over-run it: in other things partaking of the riches of India. The Men, as most of those who live in such Mountainous Tracts, of a warlike temper, comparatively with the rest of the Indians: the Women here anciently as valiant as the Men in other places: riding astride, and practised in the Arts of Horsemanship, for that cause called Amazons; some of which are said to be still remaining. Inasmuch as it is written in the stories hereof, that the King of this Country not long since going to the wars, was accompanied by the Queen his Wife, marching in the Front of two thousand Women all well mounted and prepared for service.

Chief Cities hereof, 1. Mandao, seated on the banks of the River Mandavo, (the Manda of Ptolemy and the Ancients) whence it had the name. A City of great note, said to be 30 miles in compass; yet so well fortified and furnished with all manner of necessities for defence and resistance, that it held out twelve years against Mirumudius, or Merbamed the Great Mongul, who then besieged it. Surrendered at the last, and with it the Kingdom. Memorable for the great battle fought before it betwixt the said Merbamed then coming to the relief thereof, and Badurius King of Cambaia, who had then distressed it: in which Badurius lost his Tents and Treasures, and was fain to fly disguised unto Diu, to crave aid of the Portugals. 2. Moltan, which being mistaken for another Town, of or near the same name, on the Western side of the Indus, is by some Writers, said to have been once the chief City of a Kingdom, or a Kingdom rather of it self, but of no great note: the Women whercof, though not so good soldiers as their Ancestors of the Female Sex, yet to come as near them as they can, use boots and spurs when they take a journey, and so fitted set astride the saddle. This and the former are the same; it is still a great City, and makes vast quantities of Calico, but the length of the Carriage of them to Surat has much abated the Trade of it. Tavernier. p. 2. pag. 43. 3. Scernus on the River so called of more antiquity than greatness, as is also, 4. Polymbotie, the Polibothra of Ptolemy and others of the ancient Writers; then the chief Town of the Palibothri (by Pliny and Strabo called Prasii) a people of as great authority and power as any in India.

This once a Kingdom of it self of great power and wealth, till Badurius King of Cambaia having conquered the Realm of Citor, and therewith a great part of Sanga, made an attempt upon this also. Galgee, then King of Mandao, finding himself too weak for so strong an Enemy, craved aid of Merbamed (or Miramudius according to the Latines) the Mongul Tartar, then reigning in Chambul or Arachosia, and possessed of some parts of India also since the times of Tamerlane. Who compounding an Army of his own Subjects, some mercenary Persians, and a great body of Zagathian Tartars, from whom originally descended, came in accordingly: discomfited the vast Army of Badurius, consisting of 150000 Horse and 500000 foot, in two set battels; the first at Decti, the next at Mandao, and following his blow, possessed himself of the whole Kingdom of Cambaia. But not content with that success, quarrelled the Mandoan King in whose aid he came; besieged him in his principal City, which at last he won, and therewith all the Kingdom also: the wretched King shewing hereby both a fair evidence and example to succeeding Ages, that the easiest way for a Prince to ruine his own Estate, and endanger his neighbours, is to admit a Foreign power into his own Dominions; which he cannot as easily thrust out, as he hath brought them in.

DE L L Y is bounded on the West, with Mandao; on the East, with the Kingdom of Botantur; on the North, with the Eastern parts of Pengab; on the South, with the Eastern parts also of the Kingdom of Agra. So named from Delly, the chief City of it, by some called Delin. The Provinces of this great Kingdom, and those of Russia, are not like our Counties and the Provinces in the populous Kingdoms, where the whole Country is peopled and divided by exact bounds; but here the Principal Cities have Governours sent to them, who reside in them and Administer justice to the People: by which means the parts about the Cities are reasonably well inhabited, those that lye more remote are in a manner desolate; partly by the Nature of the Country, and partly for want of protecting the People from the insults of thieves and wicked Men: So that the shewing the situation of the principal City, is sufficient to shew where the Province lies that depends upon it, without pretending exactly to bound it, which for the most part is impossible and needless. This Note is founded upon Tavernier, but I have not that Book now by me to quote the Page.

The Country, besides what is common to it with the rest of India, is said to be more abundantly stored than any other part of it, with Horses, Elephants, and Dromedaries. Of the people nothing singular, Except it be that many of them taking more delight in thievery than honest trades, live for the most part upon spoil; but those especially whom they call by the name of Belemi, being such of the Nobility or better sort, who since the Conquest of their Country by the Great Mongul, have lived like Out-laws on the Mountains. Of the same temper with the Resbutes in Cambaia, and the Agwans in Sanga and Dulsinda; who rather than submit themselves to a Foreign yoke, (as they count that of the Mongul) chuse to forsake their proper dwellings, and all honest ways and means of living.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Delly, a City not only honoured heretofore with the residence of the great Monguls, who from hence pass in common appellation, by the names of the Kings of Delly, and that amongst their most knowing Subjects; but beautified with many Sepulchres of their ancient Kings, whose Funerals and Coronations were herein celebrated. And though deserted of late times, by the Great Mongul, moving their Courts from place to place; as they enlarged their Empire, and increased their Conquests: yet still a great many of the Nobles, and not a few Captains and Commanders, do frequent the same, and have their houses of pleasure and retirement into it. This City is supposed to be the Seat of that Porus who made himself famous in the invasion of Alexander the Great, by his resistance; for the Proof of which, the Indians do now shew an Obelisk, or Pyramid of stone, which by its unknown Characters seems to be of great Antiquity, and which is said by them to have been built by Alexander the Great, after the defeat of Porus. The City is seated on the River Gemna, which runs East by Agra, and falls into the Ganges; The fortress is half a League in compass, with round Towers at the distance of every ten Battlements, and the Ditches are full of Water, wharfed with stone and it has lovely Gardens round about it; this having been the Court or Royal Palace of the Monguls. The Town has no Ditches, but is defended with Walls filled up with Earth behind, and Towers. The Air is more temperate than that of Agra. Tavernier, Part. 2d. Pag. 45. 2. Tremel, upon the Western side of the River Mandao; but not much observable. 3. Doceti, memorable for the great battle fought near unto it, in which Merhamed the Mongul overthrew the Forces of Badurius, and thereby opened a fair way to the Realm of Cambaia.

This Country Governed a long time by its natural Princes, was at last conquered by some Moors, or Saracens coming from Persia and Arabia, but I find not which; who grew to so great power and wealth, that Sanosaradine a Mahometan, one of their descendents, dreamt of no less than the Conquest of all India, if not of the whole Continent of Asia also. Having about the year 1300 (memorable for the beginning of the Ottoman Empire) subdued by little and little all the neighbouring Princes which made head against him; he pierced at last into Canora, now called Decan, and conquering a great part of it, returned back to Delly. The pursuit of his Victories he left unto one Abdessa his Lieutenant there, who added the rest of that Country to his Master's Territories, but kept the possession to himself; confirmed therein by Sanosaradine, with the title of Regent. But Sanosaradine dying in a War against the Persians, left for his Successor a Son so unlike his Father, that the conquered Provinces revolted from him unto other Masters, more able to govern and protect them. Confined unto its former bounds, it remained notwithstanding of sufficient power to preserve it self, from any of their equal neighbours, till the rising of the great Monguls: whose puissance being unable to withstand, it submitted at the last to Adabar the Son of Merhamed, the second Emperour of this Line: who to assure himself of the peoples loyalty, and conquests, settled his Court a while at Delly, the chief City of it; from whence removed on the next prosperous emergency, as before was noted.

5. A G R A.

THE Realm of A G R A is bounded on the North, with Delly and Mandao; on the South, with Sanga and Cambaia; on the West, with Indus, which parteth it from the Province of Sinda, a part of the Kingdom of Cambaia; on the East, with Oristan or Orixa, so call'd from Agra the chief City of it, and the Seat-Royal of late times of the Great Monguls.

The Country said to be the best and most pleasant of India, plentiful in all things, and such a delicate even piece of ground, as the like is hardly to be seen. Well watered as with other Rivers, so most especially with those of Tamlico and Jemena; which last runneth thorough the midst of it, North and South; or rather from the North-west to the South east, from whence bending more directly Eastwards, it falleth at last into the Ganges, or that which is supposed to be Ganges; for the head of that great River is not certainly known. The people for the most part Gentiles, Mahometanism coming in with the Great Mongul; and generally inclining somewhat to the Pythagorean Sect. For such as live upon the banks of the River Jemena, neither eat flesh nor kill any thing. The waters of which River they esteem so sacred, that thereof they usually make their Temple, and say their Prayers therein, but naked (in which posture they both dress their meat and eat it) lodging upon the ground, being imposed by them as penance, and so conceived.

Places of most esteem herein, 1 Fattipore or Fettibarri, on the West side of the River, a very fair and goodly City once beautified with a Royal Palace here built by Echebar (after the removal of his Court from Cascimer) with many spacious Gardens belonging to it; but much decayed, since the fixing of the Court at Agra, to which most of the stones are carried, and no small quantity of Corn sowed within the Walls. 2 Agra, on the North bank of the River Jemena, inferiour to Labor for wealth and greatness, but far more populous: the constant residence of the Court here in these latter times, drawing to it great resort of all sorts of people. By some supposed to be the Nagara of Ptolemy, but such a supposition as is built on no better ground, than some resemblance of the names. For Ptolemy's Nagara is by him placed on the Western side of Indus, in the Latitude of 33, whereas this Agra standeth on the East of the River Jemena, five degrees more Southwards, in the Latitude of 28. But what it loseth in antiquity, it hath got in honour: the Town and Territory being a peculiar Kingdom, till Echebar the Mongul subdued it, Anno 1598, in his passage from Labor to Decan. But it lost nothing by the hand: for Echebar delighted in the situation of it (and that withall it stood in the middle of his Kingdoms) made it the Seat-Royal of his Empire; fixt there, for the most part ever since: by means whereof exceedingly increased in wealth, beauty and greatness; the very Castle in which the Mongul usually resideth, being two miles in compass, environed with most high and unscalable Walls, and fortified with great store of Ordinance. The whole space betwixt it and Fattipore, being 18 miles, beautified with many Mahometan Temples; and with one also built by Echebar, for the use of such Christians as had been gained unto the faith, by the care and diligence of the Jesuits. For the supply hereof with Victuals, and other necessary Provisions, and the security of such as resort unto it, affirmed to be a continual market: and all the Interval from hence to the Town of Labor (from which distant 400 miles towards the South) adorned with continual Rows of Trees on both sides of the ways, most of them bearing a kind of Mulberry; and at every ten miles end, houses erected by the King or some of the Nobles, for beautifying the way to the Regal City, for preserving their own memory;

memory, and the safe lodging of Passengers, in danger otherwise by night, of Thieves and Cut-throats. The true Latitude of Agra, is 27. 31. It is seated in a Sandy Soil, and very Hot, yet it is now the biggest City in Indostan; tho' the Moguls have removed their Palace to Geban Abad, which in probability, in a short time will waste it, as it has ever done all other Capital Cities. It has no Walls, nor are the Streets built in any order, or adorned with any fine buildings as Tavernier pretends: For our Countryman who saw it in 1584, saith, it was populous, built with Stone, and divided into large and fair Streets, having a large River running by it. The Prince that built the City, was then living in it, so that the Reverend Author is certainly mistaken as to the date of it. Hackluit, Tom. 2. Pag. 254. 3. Hendee, a Town more towards the South, beautified with a fair Castle of the Kings, cut out of the main Rock, and wrought with carved work round about; fortified with 50 Pieces of Ordinance, and thought impregnable; for that cause made a Prison for great Persons. Here are also two Hospitals for such Captains (and Captains only) as are maimed in the Wars. 4. Biani, twelve course or 18 miles from Battipore; the most noted place for Indico in all the Indies; for the making whereof they have here twelve mills. Which Indico (by the way) groweth on a small shrub like our Goosberry-bushes, bearing seed like Cabbage-seed: which being cut down are laid in heaps for half a year, and when rotten, brought into a Vault to be troden with Oxen from the stalks; and being ground small and fine at the mills, is last of all boiled in Furnaces, refined and sorted, and sold to the Merchants.

To this division also, we may reduce the Kingdom of Gwalior so called of Gwalior the chief City, where the Mogul hath a very rich Treasury of Gold and Silver; kept in a strong Castle, wherein his Prisoners are secured likewise; and for those reasons, continually guarded by a strong Company of stout and well appointed Soldiers.

THE Emperours of INDOSTAN, commonly called the Moguls. Tavernier, Part. 2. Pag. 106.

- 1 1370 Tamer-Leng, that is to say, the Lame Prince, because one of his Legs was shorter than the other; was the most Potent Prince that has Reigned for many Ages in the East; he died in the year 1405, and lies buried at Samar-chand, in the Country of the Ubeeg-Tartars the place of his Nativity.
- 2 1405 Miram Cha, the Son of Tamer-Leng.
- 3 1411 Sultan Mahomet, Son of Miram Cha.
- 4 Sultan Mirza, Son of Mahomet.
- 5 Hameth Sheck, the Son of the Sultan above-said.
- 6 Sultan Babur, i. e. the Valiant Prince; the first Mogul that was of great power in India. he died in the year 1532.
- 7 1532 Homajon, i. e. the Happy Son of Sultan Babur.
- 8 1552 Abdul Feta, Gelal Eddin, Mahomet, commonly called Akaba, that is the Great. He Reigned 54 years.
- 9 1605 Sultan Selim, otherwise called Jehan-guir Patsha, that is the Victorious Emperour of the World. He had 4 Sons, Sultan Kofrou, 2. Sultan Kouroum, 3. Sultan Perviez, and 4. Cha Daniel, opposed by Sultan Kouroum, and died of Grief.
- 10 1627 Sultan Kouroum, the 2. Son, succeeded him and was called Cha Jehan. This Prince built a City which he called by his own name, Jehan-abad, and removed the Seat of the Empire from Agra. He was a Prince of great Goodness and Justice, and Governed his Empire for 40 years, more like a Father than a Prince. He had these 4 Sons, 1. Da- ra-cha, a good prince. 2. Sultan Suja, 3. Aureng Zeb, 4. Morad Bakche: falling Sick in the year 1659, the second and fourth Son entered into a War against the eldest, who by the Father's order was proclaimed King; and the third joined with the fourth, but made himself Master of all, and kept his Father a Prisoner, Revenging the Rebellion of this Prince against Jehan-guir his Father, and Sultan Boulaki his elder Brother's Son; who for some time Reigned after his Grand-father. He died in confinement in the year 1666.

- 11 1659 Aureng Zeb, is an Ambitious Dissembling Prince, and outwitted both his Father and all his Brothers, and much enlarged his Dominions; he laid a Foundation also for the Conquest of the Kingdom of Golconda, by the Marriage of the second Daughter of that King, to Mahmoud his Eldest Son. He took Prisoner, and beheaded Dara-cha his Eldest Brother, and then he caused himself to be proclaimed King of Indostan, the 20. of October 1660, tho' he was sick in effect long before. Mahomet his Eldest Son had a great hand in all his Wars, and of him too, he at last became jealous, and put him with Morad Bakche, and Soliman Chekour his Eldest Brother's Son, into the Fort of Goualeor, the 30. of January 1661. Sultan Suja his remaining Brother, perished in the Desarts of Ara-kau; his Father died in the end of the year 1666. To gain the Crown he pretended to have a design to cause the Law of Mahomet to be more exactly observed, which had been much neglected in the Reigns of Sha Jehan his Father, and Geban-guir his Grand-father; and to shew himself Zealous for the Law, he turned Faquir or Derwich, that is a Poor Volunteer: under which pretence of Piety, he cunningly made way to the Empire. He is a follower of the Sect of Sounnis or Turkish Mahometism, to which he forceth his very Persian Soldiers to conform. Tavernier, Part 2. Pag. 159.

Mr. Herbert in his Travels, thus sets down the Great Moguls, Pag. 30. 1. Tamberlaine, 2. Alancham, 3. Bar-cham, 4. Emanpaxda, 5. Shaugb Mahumed, 6. Adabar, 7. Mahumed Selabdyn surnamed Ekbar, 8. Tangbeer, surnamed Shaw Selym. 9. Blokic, slain presently after his Coronation. 10. Courrone, surnamed Shaw Jehan, this happened in October in 1627, the Author being then in Surat-Road.

The C A T A L O G U E of the Moguls, from Dr. Pocock's Supplement to the Compendium of the Dynasties.

- 1 1284 Argan, the Founder of the Mogolian Empire. He Reigned 7 Years.
- 2 1291 Caichu in Texira Ganjatu, he Reigned but 4 Years.
- 3 1294 Baidu, Son of Targibi, he Reigned but 8 Months.
- 4 1294 Kazan, Son of Argun the Founder; he embraced Mahometism, and took the name of Mahomet. In 1299, he took Damascus. He Reigned 18 Years.
- 5 1303 Giyathoddin, Chodohandah, Mahomet, the Son of Argun, the Son of Abga the Brother of the former succeeded, call'd also Al Fattu, and Alyaptu. He died in Soltania built by him.
- 6 1316 Abu Said Bahadur Chan, a Child of 11 years of Age, was the last of this Family; he died in 1335; upon which this Kingdom of the Tartars

Tartars, was divided into Factions and destroyed

- 1 1368 Timur Lenc, commonly called Tamerlanes (the Lame Prince) a Prince of great renown; he Reigned 36 Years. His name is at renown; he known to us, tho' his Successors are not of Asia.
- 2 1404 Chalil Son of Tamerlanes, Founder of the Moguls of Indostan.
- 3 1411 Shah Ruch, Badhadur, Soltan, Son of Tamerlanes, Brother of Chalil. Reigned 43 years.
- 4 1446 Ala'adaulab Mirza, Son of Baisen Kari, Son of Shah Ruch, Seized Chorasan and Reigned there.
- 5 1448 Olug Beg, a Son of Shah Ruch, dispossessed the former.
- 6 1449 Abdo'llatiph Mirza, Son of Olug Beg.
- 7 1454 Mirza Abdollab, Son of Abraham, Son of Shah Ruch, succeeded in Samarchand, Mabomet Mirza, Son of Baigenkari, Son of Shah Ruch, was slain by
- 8 1454 Baber Mirza, in 1451, this Prince after the death of his elder Brothers, continued the Succession.
- 9 1456 Abu Said, a Grand-Son of Tamerlanes.
- 10 1458 Hofain Mirza.
- 11 1505 Mibafer and Badio'zzaman Mirza, Sons of Sultan Hozain.
- 12 1509 Abal, Maban, Mirza, the last of Tamerlanes's Posterity in Chorasan, Bactria.

6. S A N G A.

S A N G A is bounded on the North, with the East Parts of the Realm of Agra; on the South, and West, with Cambaia; from which parted on the West, by the Mountain Gate; and on the East, with Oristan. The reason of the name I find not: this Country being too far South to be so called from Sangalassa, a Town of chief note near the Fountains of Indus; where Placed by Arianus, lib. 5.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Azimere or Agimer, 180 miles from Agra. At the end of every course (each course a mile and a half) a fair Pillar erected, and at every tenth course a fair Seraglio, (such as we call Inns) for the entertainment of Travellers. All built by Echebar who wanting Children, is said to have gon in Pilgrimage on foot from Agra to Azimere, saying his Prayers at the end of every course, and lodging all night at the tenth. 2. Citor, the chief City of Sanga, and once a Kingdom of it self, or the chief of that Kingdom. Situate in the middle way betwixt Surat, a known Port of Cambaia and Agra spoken of before; and most magnificently built on the top of a rocky hill, to which the passage is so narrow and so well fortified, (there being in it three Gates, at the top, the middle, and the bottom) that thereby, and by other advantages of Art and Nature, it was thought impregnable. Affirmed to be 12 miles in compass, beautified with many good buildings both publick and private; but once more glorious than now it is; here being to be seen the ruins of 100 Temples, and above 100000 houses, either demolished by the Wars, or suffered to decay by the great Monguls, who would not willingly have any thing in the Indies of more Antiquity than themselves; and therefore are rather inclined to build new Cities, than uphold the old. The greatness and antiquity of it have made some Men think, that it was the Royal Seat of Porus. Others affirm the same of Delly, but neither rightly: the Kingdom of Porus lying more towards the River Indus, and not so far South. Governed not long since by a Queen called Crementina, not more fair than valiant, who revolting from Badurius King of Cambaia, to whom she formerly had paid Tribute, was dispossessed of the Town of Citor, where she had fortified her self with 30000 Foot, and 2000 Horse: the People in a desperate resolution, laying all their Treasure on which they burnt together with themselves; in which flame it is said that their perished 70000 Persons. But the Cambaian did not long enjoy his Victory, for not long after both the City and a great part of the Country was conquered by the Great Mongul; the mountainous parts hereof being held against him by Ramee, the Son or Successor of Queen Crementina: till seeing himself destitute of all better helps, he put himself into the hands of one of the Sons of the late Sultan, by whom reconciled to his Father. Some other Towns there are in this Province and in the rest before mentioned; and those of good esteem perhaps amongst the Natives: but of no observation or importance in the course of business. Under this name we may also comprehend the Kingdom of Nagrakil, so called of the chief City of it, and that most memorable for a rich and sumptuous Chappel, cieled and paved with Plate of pure Silver, most curiously imbossed over-head in several figures, which they keep exceeding bright, with often rubbing and continual burnishing. Malway, another of these Kingdoms, for it is a near neighbour to Citor, may be Placed here also, affirmed to be a fruitful Province and the chief City of it, to be called Rantipore.

7. C A M B A I A.

C A M B A I A hath on the East, Delly, and part of Mandao; on the West, Gedrosia, a Province of the Persian Empire; on the North, Dulfinda, and the rest of Mandao, on the South, the main Ocean, and some part of Decan. It lieth on both sides of the Indus; and is so called from Cambaia, the chief Province of it. The whole divided into 1. Sinda, 2. Guzarate, and 3. Cambaia, especially so called.

1. S I N D A, (by some called the Kingdom of Tutta, from Tutta the chief City of it) hath on the East, the River Indus, by which separated from Mandao; on the North, that part of India which is called Dulfinda; on the West, part of Gedrosia and Guadel; and on the South, the Indian Ocean; coasting along the Western banks of the River Indus, whence it had the name; that River being now called Schind, as was said before. And for this reason, as I take it, the Western part of India lying North of this took the name of Dulfinda, and not Dulcinda (with a c) as most commonly written.

The Country for the generality very rich and fertile; but in some places nothing but a sandy Defart, inhabited for the most part by wild Asses, Foxes, Deer, and some wilder beasts; but none so wild as the Calies, a robbing Nation, so numerous withal, that they sometimes rob whole Caravans as they pass that way; notwithstanding the many Forts and Castles built of purpose to secure those passages.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Tutta (Gutu Negar Tutta) on the banks of Indus, a Town of great Trade but most frequented by the Portugals, who here receive such Indian Commodities as come down the water from Labor, returning Pepper in exchange, which they bring up the River from their other Factories. 2. Lawribander, at the mouth of the out-let of Indus, three days journey from Tutta, the Port-Town unto which it is, notwithstanding that distance. Supposed to be situate in or near the place of that Alexandria which Alexander built in memory of his Navigation down this River to the Indian Ocean. An Haven much frequented, because free from Worms; which at Surat, and at other Havens on these Seas, so infest the Ships, that without much cost and care bestowed upon them, they make them unable to return. 3. Calvalla, memorable for the Tamers, as given by Ecbatay the Mongul to a company of Monks and their posterity for ever, to bring up their Daughters to dancing, and more wanton exercises. 4. Redampoon, a great Town with a strong Castle, seated on the edge of the Desarts: thorough which those that are to pass use here to provide themselves of water, and other necessaries for their journey. 5. Naraqumir, a pretty Town on the further side of

of the Defarts, esteemed a Paradise by such as have passed thorough those uncomfortable and dangerous Sands, for the space of ten or twelve days journey. 6 Sarrama, a large Town, twenty miles from Tutta, the Center in which all lines meet; and from whence distances of all Towns of Sinda are accustomably measured.

The Country anciently subject to the King of Cambaia, and in the right of that Crown to the Great Mongul: but the people for the most part so untamed and masterless that except in some of the greater Towns, they pay no Tribute; and in some places, even within half a day's journey of Tutta, will acknowledg no King, but rob and spare whom they Please. If at any time the Mongul sends a force against them, (as he doth sometimes) they fire their houses, made like a Bee-Hive of Straw and Morter, which are soon rebuilt, and retire themselves unto the Mountains. Yet one good quality they have amongst many ill ones: When they have robbed a Traveller, took mony of him in the way of Toll or Custom for his Passage by them, they will conduct him honestly to the end of the Defarts, lest any should rob him but themselves.

2. GUZARATE hath on the North, Sinda; on the South the main Ocean, and Cambaia; Clitor to the East; and Tutta to the West, with the Indus.

The soil of the same temper and fertility with that of Cambaia, especially so called; and there we shall speak further of it: The Common people whom they call Guzarates, of the same disposition generally with the rest of the Indians: but the greatest part of the Country is possessed by the Resbutes or Rasbooches, the ancient Inhabitants of this Tract. Who when their Country was subdued by the Moors or Saracens, retired unto the Mountains or Fastnesses of it, standing upon their guard; and were never yet subdued by the Great Monguls. Who though possessed of the Sea-shores, and most Towns of consequence, are fain to leave the In-land parts and open Countries to the power of the Out-laws; who either prey upon the people, or force them to compound for their peace and quiet at uncertain rates, Their Arms most commonly a Sword, Buckler, and Lance; well horsed and resolute in any thing they undertake; which made one of the Monguls say of them, That no Men in the world knew to dye, but they.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Diu in a Peninsula looking towards Persia, but on the East side thereof near the mouth of Indus. Possessed by the Portugals, and by them fortified with strong and impregnable Cittadels, built with the leave and liking of King Bedurius; thereby to buy their aid against Amerbamed the Mongul, who had newly vanquished him. A matter of such consequence to the Crown of Portugal, that John Botelius, confined to India for some crimes by him committed, undertook (in hope by the merit of that service to obtain his pardon) to carry the first news of it in a small Vessel, not above 18 foot long, and about 6 foot broad (the best which for the present could be provided:) Which with great courage he performed, and through that large, wide, and tempestuous Ocean came in safety with his news to Lisbon, to the great joy of the King; but greater admiration of all sorts of people. Scarce settled in their new possession, when besieged by Solyman Bassa Admiral to Solyman the Magnificent, with a Fleet of 80 Ships and Gallies, Anno 1537. offended with the Portugals for aiding the King of Persia; more for diverting the Spice-trade from Alexandria. In which he had so ill success, that having assaulted it in vain with his Land-Forces, he was fain to raise his siege in such haste and tumult, that he left his great Ordnance behind him. 2 Sauran, a Town and Castle of the Resbutes, spoken of before, and by them held against the power of the Great Mongul. 3 Boldra, a very fair and beautiful City, but of no great compass. 4 Ardowat, not far from the banks of the Indus, on the North of this Region towards Sinda. 5 Madabat, by some called Amadabat, affirmed to be both for wealth and greatness the chief of Guzarate, near as big as London, well walled, and situate on a Plain near the River-side: seldom without Merchants of all Religions, Jews, Gentiles, Christians, Moors, some of all and neither. Amadabath, the Metropolis of Guzurat, lies in the Latitude of 23. 32. 18 Leagues from Cambaia to the South; and 45 from Surat, to the North upon a small River, comprehending with its Suburbs and the Villages about it, which are a part of it, 7 Leagues in compass; the Streets are very broad, and the publick and private buildings are very magnificent. There is not any Nation or Merchandize in Asia, which may not be met with in this City; and which much improves the Trade of it, there is nothing paid for Exportation or Inportation: It hath Jurisdiction over 25 great Towns and 2998 Villages, which yield yearly six Millions of Crowns, all expended again upon the Garrison. There are so many Gardens about this City, and so many Trees in it, that the whole City looks like a Garden at a distance. Mandeflo, Pag. 29. 6 Sparinga, 7 Ferlane, 8 Skerkeffe, this last remarkable for the Sepulchres of the old Kings of Cambaia; fair, and well kept, and visited from all parts of the Kingdom.

Nothing considerable in this part of the Country as to point of story, but what is common to them with the rest of Cambaia; but that the Resbutes, or Rasbooches still remain unconquered. Possessed not only of the Hills and Mountains, but of some strong holds; and governed by the heads of their Casts or Tribes, all which acknowledge the Mongul for their Superiour, in regard of his power, but none of them obey him as their Lord or Sovereign: conceiving it to be some abasement of their own authority, if they admit him as an Umpire to compose their differences, which they sometimes do.

3. C A M B A I A specially so called, hath on the North, Mandao; on the South, the main Ocean, and some part of Deccan; on the East, Surat, from which parted by a ridge of Mountains; on the west, the main Ocean, with some part of Guzarate. It standeth on the East sides of the out-lets of Indus, running along the Sea-shore for 500 miles, and took this name from Cambaia, the chief City of it.

The Country said to be the most fruitful of all India, abounding in Rice, Wheat, Sugar, Spices of all sorts, and choicest fruits: of Silk and Cotton so great plenty, that they fraught yearly forty or fifty Ships with those commodities. In the mountains they find Diamonds, Chalcedonies, and a kind of Onyx-stone, which are called Cornelins, and corruptly Cornelians. Amongst the rarities hereof, they reckon the Abades, a great beast, twice as big as a Bull, having on their snouts a little horn, and the Hide so hard, as no Man can pierce it with a thrust, which is the Rhinoceros of the Ancients.

The people effeminate and unwarlike, and therefore not much used by the Monguls in a war of consequence; to supply which defect he furnisheth himself with Soldiers out of Persia, of which his standing-bands consist; most of their Sultans and Commanders of that Nation also. More given to Merchandize than War, and therein thought to be as cunning (if not deceitfull withall) as any people in the World: treacherous in their trust, proud in their carriage, bloody upon advantage, and much given to Venerie; ignorant of Letters, but well practised in Mechanical Arts. In matters of Religion for the most part Gentiles, not knowing, or contemning the Law of Mabomet; but very punctual in their own heathenish superstitions. The Bannians in this Country, being natural Indians, nussed in Paganism, and so wedded to their old Idolatries, that no persuasions can prevail with them, make the greatest number; and seem to be all Pythagoreans in some opinions, for they eat not any thing that hath blood or life, but feed on Rice, Roots, Plantoons and such natural fruits: paying a large Revenue yearly to the Great Mongul, that no Oxen may be killed amongst them. And because that new opininos should not grow amongst them, they marry in their own Tribes only, and never out of their own Trades; secure thereby as they conceive from all innovations

Cities of most observation in it, 1. Cambaia, three miles in compass, one of the greatest and best built of all the East. So populous withal, that it is thought to contain 130000 Families; and is therefore called the Cairo of the Indies. Of most esteem in all this Kingdom (though far less than Madabat) to which it doth impart its name. Cambaia, the Capital of the Kingdom of Guzurat, and a noble Port; lying in a very great Bay of the same name. This Kingdom is now subject to the great Mogul: the City lies in Longitude 105, Latitude 22, 30. This is one of the greatest, the richest and best traded Cities in the East Indies; seated in a fruitful soil and full of people: It is walled with a fair Wall of free-stone, and hath very large houses with straight and broad Streets; it is greater than Surat, being 10 Leagues in compass, and hath 3 Basars or Market-Places, and 4 noble Tanks or Cisterns, able to find the Inhabitants water all the year; tho' there is 7 Fathom water in the Haven of this City at a high water, yet at low water the Ships lie dry on the Sand and Mud which cover the bottom of it: the Inhabitants are partly Heathens and partly Mahometans; and in 1638, the English had here a Factory, as Mandello acquaints us, from whom the latter part of this Description is taken. The Province belonging to it, has the same name, and is bounded to the East, by Mandao; to the West, by Gedrosia; and to the South, by the Indian Ocean. It is a great, rich and fruitful Province; the Inhabitants Moors, Persians and Bannians. Herbert, Pag. 42. Mahometans and Pagans as to their Religion. It is the most Populous Kingdom in Indostan, and the Capital City is 3 miles in compass, and thought to contain 80000 Men. In 1423, it was conquered by an Arabian Prince, whose Posterity in the 3d Descent were conquered by the Mogul. 2. Baracho, Southwards of Cambaia on the top of a hill, with a fair River underneath it; well walled and noted for the best Calicuts (a kind of Linnen-Cloath so called from the City of Calicut, where it was first made) not to be matched in all the Indies. Mandello, Pag. 26. calls this City Broitschia, placing it in 21. 56. Latitude, 12 Leagues from Surat to the North, and 8 from the Sea, upon a pretty high Mountain with a River at the foot of it, having Walls of free-stone so well built that it may be numbered amongst the strongest Places in the Indies: It has a good Garrison for its Defence, and is saith he, sufficiently well peopled; and also its Suburbs; but there live in it few persons of Quality, most of the Inhabitants being Cotton-weavers. 3. Smalley, still more to the South, and about a mile from the Sea-shore; but giving name unto a large and capacious Bay, where the Ships ride that trade at Surat. 4. Surat, about ten miles from the Bay of Smalley, from whence the River navigable but by Boats and Shallops, fortified with a Castle of stone, well stored with Ordnance. The Houses for the most part of Sun-dried Bricks, very large and lasting: built with flat Roofs, but Battlemented on all sides for fear of falling; and beautified with goodly Gardens of Pomegranates, Melons, Figs, and Lemmons, enterlaced with Rivulets and Springs. Made of late years a Factory for the English Merchants, who have here their President, and a magnificent House for their reception, and Staple of their Commodities. Surat is seated in the Latitude of 21. 42. upon the River Tapta, which riseth near Barampour, and four Leagues beneath this City falls into the Sea. The City is four square, and one of its sides is washed by the River, for which cause it is not Walled, but the three sides to the Landward have a good Rampart of Stone, and a Castle of free-stone. The Trade of this City was brought to what it is by the English and Dutch, who settled their Factories here, and made it thereby one of the best Traded Ports in the Indies. The English President of this Factory, was then the principal of all the English Trading in the East Indies. Mandello, Pag. 23. Thevenot, Part. 3. Pag. 15. Tavernier, Part. 2. Pag. 109. Bernier, Pag. 58. 5. Neriand, a great Town, and as remarkable for the making of Indico, of the matter and making whereof we have spoke already, when we were at Biani, a Town, or

City of the Kingdom, or Division of Agra; as memorable for that Commodity as this Neriand, or any other of India. 6. Daman, upon the Sea-side over against Diu; and possessed as that is by the Portugals. A beautiful and pleasant Town, fortified with a strong Castle at the North end of it, of white chalky stone, well planted with ord'nance: opposite whereunto on the South side of the Town, a goodly Church, edged on the top with white. Which with the houses for the most part of the same colour also, afford a pleasant prospect to the Sailors by. 7. Campanels, situate on the top of an high Mountain, and environed with a seven-fold wall, once the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Cambaia. 8. Dicaitote, a place of such strength, that the Great Monguls could never get it by force. Surrendred at last upon composition, conditioned they should still be governed by a King of their own. 9. Netherby, a great Market of Brazen ware, Beasts, and Armour. 10. Bandare, 11. Tanai, &c. 12. Brodra, a City 27 Leagues North from Surat, upon a little River called Wasset, which was lately built by Rafia Ghie, Son of Sultan Mahomet the last King of Guzarate. It is fortified with good Walls and Bastions, after the old way; and hath 5 Gates. It hath under it 210 Villages, and a Garrison sent thither by the Mogul. I am doubtful whether this be not Boldra mentioned above in Guzerat. Mandello, Pag. 27.

This Kingdom taking in Guzarate and Sindia, as parts hereof is extremely populous; said to contain 60000 Towns and Villages, very well inhabited: but the people not accustomed to, or unfit for wars. Anciently governed by Kings of their own, it was first subdued by the Arabians or Moors, Anno 1423. under the conduct of one Mahomet or Machamut; who having forced the Resbutes or Naturals of the Country to betake themselves to the Mountains, was made King hereof. To him succeeded his Son Mamudius, one of no great action. But what he wanted was supplied by his Son Badurius, who having conquered the Kingdom of Citor, invaded that of Mandao also. His Army for that war consisted of 500000 Foot, 150000 Horse, 1000 great Pieces of Ordnance, 500 Wagons loaded with Powder and Shot, and as many Wain-loads of Gold and Silver to pay his Army. But being discomfited in two great Battels by Merhamed the Mongul Tartar, whom Galgoe the Mandaoan King had called in to his aid, he shaved his beard, and fled in a disguise to Diu, then possessed by the Portugals; whom he licensed in that distress to build the Cittadel; slain afterwards by a mean Mariner, at his return from the Portugal Vice-Roy, whom he had Visited on Ship-board. And though Mamudius his successor endeavoured to free his Kingdom from both pretenders, yet weakened with the loss of so great an Army, he was not able to effect it. First driven from Diu, which he had besieged both by Sea and Land, to his great dishonour; and after vanquished in battel by Adabar, the Son of Merhamed, not far from Serkeffe, the ancient burial-place of the Kings of Cambaia, but then the Sepulchre of the Kingdom; which by that victory fell to the Great Monguls, who have since enjoyed it.

4. D E C A N.

D E C A N is bounded on the East, with Narlinga; on the West, with the Indian Ocean; on the North, with Cambaia; on the South, with Atalabar and Camra. The reason of the same we shall have anon.

It lyeth along the Sea-Coast for the space of 250 miles betwixt Aliga and Bate, two noted Rivers; extending East; as far as the Mountain Gates, and afterwards thrulling into the North betwixt Cambaia and those Mountains till it meet with Cambaia. The Soil much of the same nature with the rest of India, but not so flourishing as Cambaia. The people for the most part Mahometans, which Religion was first planted there by the conquests of Sanofaradine, 350 years ago; yet not without some intermixture of their ancient Gentilism.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Bidor, the Seat-Royal

Royal of Mamudza, once sole King of this Country; who to beautify and adorn this City, commanded every one of his Prefects, or subordinate Governours, being eighteen in number, to build here a Palace, and to reside therein certain months in the year: each one to leave a Son there in perpetual Hostage. Situate in the most Northern parts of the Country more near the borders of Delly: from the King whereof Mamudza had then newly revolted; and therefore would make sure of this place, as most in danger. 2. Visapore, bordering on Cambaia, the Princely Seat of Indalcan, one of the Kings of Decan, after it was dismembered into several Kingdoms. 3. Danager, confining on Canara, a beautiful and flourishing City, once the chief Seat of Nisalamoccus or Nizalmoxa, another of the Kings hereof, after that division. 4. Decan, so called by the name of the Province; of which the chief City next to Bider, the Imperial Seat. Six miles from which there is an hill encompassed with an high wall, and kept by a strong Garrison, because of the great store of Diamonds which are digged out of it. The Town so wealthy, that the people generally are attired in Silks, or the purest Tiffany. 5. Sintacora, on the mouth of the River Aliga, where it falleth into the Sea. 6. Goa, a Sea-port Town also, situate in a little but most pleasant Island, called Ticuarinum, fifteen miles in compass; opposite to the mouth or out-let of the River Mandavo. A noted Empory, and one of the chief keys which unlock the Indies; for number of Inhabitants, magnificent buildings, and pleasantness of situation, one of most note in all this Country. Possessed by the Portugals, who have here their Arsenal, and Harbour for their Indian Fleet; by which they command these Seas. So strongly fortified withal, that though beleaguered by Indalcan (of whom before) with 35000 Horse, 6000 Elephants, and 250 Pieces of Ordinance, Anno 1573, yet he could not force it. Made in regard of the convenient situation and strength thereof, the ordinary residence of the Portugal Vice-Roy, who hath here his Council, Chancellour, and other Officers, for the Government of such parts of India as belong to that Crown: as also of the Arch-Bishop or Primate of the Indian Churches planted by that Nation, who is hence called the Arch-Bishop of Goa. 7. Chaul, a Sea-Town, in the hands of the Portugals also, and by them well fortified: infomuch that Nisamalocco assaulting it at the very same time with a very great Army, was fain to leave it as he found it. 8. Balaguete, in the Up-lands or Hill-Country, whence it had the name; Baia in the Persian Language signifying a top or summit of a Mountain, and Guate an Hill. 9. Brampore, once the chief Seat of another Kingdom, called the Kingdom of Chandis, now the chief City of those parts of Decan which are Subject to the Great Mongul. Situate on a great River in the midst of a spacious Plain, beautiful, and of very great Trading; in bigness equal unto Paris, yet yielded to Echebar the Mongul without any resistance, Anno 1600. Miram then the King thereof forsaking it, and betaking himself to, 10. Syca, a strong hold both by Art and nature; situate on the top of an Hill, which is in compass five Leagues, and environed with a triple Wall: furnished with Victuals, and all other necessary Provisions, sufficient to maintain 60000 Men many years; 3000 great Pieces of Ordinance planted on the Walls. Besieged herein by Echebar with an Army of 200000 fighting Men, he held out against him; till overcome by promises of fair correspondence, drawn out of his hold (some of his Counsellors being bribed to persuade him to it) he was detained by the Mongul, and the Commanders won by rewards and hopes, yielded up the Fort, and therein all the Princes of the Royal Family, accustomedly kept therein when the Throne was full; which vacant, the next Heir was taken thence to succeed unto it. Of the same nature as it seemeth, with the hill Amara in Aethiopia, or the Abassine Empire.

The Country formerly inhabited by a People called Venazarari, by Religion Gentiles; and held by them till the year 1300, when overcome by Sa Nofaradine a Mabo- metan, and King of Delly: who driving the Inhabitants into the hill-Countries possessed himself of a great part of it, compelling them to submit to his Religion. The residue hereof subdued by Abeliffa, whom Sa Nofaradine left here to pursue the War; was by him Governed with great Justice for 20 years, when dying he left his Government to his Son Mamudza, confirmed by the Successour of Sa Nofaradine in his Father's Regency, on the payment of an annual Tribute. Mamudza soon finding that the young King was of no great spirit, not only refused to pay the Tribute imposed on him, but took unto himself the title of King of Decan, giving this name unto the Country (before called Canara) in regard that he had filled it with a mongrel body of Christians, Mahometans, and Gentiles, acknowledging no common Parent, nor agreeing in Language, Customs or Religion; the word Decan signifying in that Tongue, as much as an illegitimate Brood, or a body of Bastards. Out of these he made choice of twelve (others say eighteen) whom he appointed Governours of so many Provinces: not daring to trust any of the old Nobility, or of the Natives of the Country; and hoping that these Slaves, so promoted by him, would be more subject to command. But here his silly hopes deceived him. For these Slaves either governed by their Master's example, who had done the like unto the Son and Heir of Sa Nofaradine; or presuming on their own strength, and some Foreign Aids, left to their Master nothing but an empty Title; each one becoming absolute in his several Province. Nor did his Successours for any long time enjoy that Title; Daquem, the last of them being taken at Bider his chief City, and thereupon the name of King usurped by every one of these petty Tyrants; reduced at last into fewer heads. Such of them as were left, became considerable Princes, as appeareth by the great Army raised by Indalcan for the Siege of Goa. But in the end, distressed on the one side by the Portugals who embarrased their Trade, and invaded on the other side by the Great Mongul with most puissant Armies; Melic entituled King of Decan, and Miram King of Brampore, were in fine subdued by Echebar about the year 1600. Against whom and his Successours, tho' the Venazarari still hold out as the Resbutes or Rasbooches do in the Realm of Cambaia; and that the King of Am-danager, perhaps also some other petty Princes, are not yet brought under: yet we may look on the Mongul as the Lord of this Country, the residue of these Roytelets, and petty Princes (if any of them be remaining) being Homagers or Vassals to him. Against whose farther Progress to the Cape of Comari, which Echebar so greedily aimed at, the puissant Kings of Narvinga, and those of Malabar have opposed their power; whose Kingdoms and Estates we must next survey, before we take a view of those other Provinces which are now under the command of that mighty Monarch.

9. C A N A R A.

C A N A R A is bounded on the North, with Decan (whereof formerly it was a part;) on the South, with Malabar; on the East, with Narvinga from which separated by the Mountain Gates; on the West, with the Ocean. The reason of the name I find not, nor is it much worth the searching.

The Country hath a fair Sea-coast, with many capacious Harbours in it, which cannot but add much to the Wealth thereof; as liberally furnished in the in-land parts with Rice, Figs, and Sugars: but destitute of Wheat; Pulse, and Barley. Nor much the poorer for that want; the People either not knowing, or not regarding the use of bread; but living on such fruits as the Earth produceth of it self, without the charge or care of the Husbandman. In other things but little differing, if at all, from the rest of the Indians: their Religion for the most part Paganish, but intermixt with Mahometans.

Principal Towns and Cities of it, 1. Melinde, a commodious Haven. 2. Onor, a Port-Town of good note, sometimes held by the Portugals. 3. Batalia, situate in the the richest part of all this Country; never possessed by the Portugals, but under contribution to them. 4. Mangalor, a Town of great Wealth and Trade; fortified with a strong Castle, once destroyed by the Portugueses, but recovered and repaired by the King of Narsinga, who is of this Country. 5. Mayendre, more within the Land. And so is also, 6. Lispor, famous for her Quarries of Adamant. 7. Salfette, in a Peninsula of 20 miles compass, containing 36 Villages, and 80000 Inhabitants; the Town about 9 miles from Goa, and subject with the whole Peninsula to the Portugals.

This Country is now subject to the King of Narsinga, but formerly under the command of its own Princes: the name of Canara comprehending in those times all that Country also, which is now called Decan. Conquered by Sa Nosaradine and Abdissa, and by Mamudza, cantoned into many Prefectures; this part reverting to its old name, fell to the Narsingan, who taking his advantages in the Minority of one of their Princes, became Master of it. And when Idalcan (for I take that not so much for the name of a Man, as a Title of dignity) questioned his Title to it, as appertaining properly to the Kingdom of Decan; Chrisamorao then King of Narsinga, brought a powerful Advocate to defend his right; that is to say, an Army of 606000 Foot, 29650 Horse; and 537 Elephants; every Elephant having a Tower on his back with four Men in it; with which strong Argument the Idalcan being confuted in the Schools of War, with much difficulty saved himself though he lost his cause; the Narsingan ever since continuing quiet in the possession of this Country, except only some of the Sea-Towns in the power of the Portugals: who in the year 1567, destroyed in those few places by them possessed, no fewer than 200 of their Idol-Temples, with many of their Pagodes, or Idols in them; converting the Rents and Lands which belonged unto them, with the Revenues raised from the several Ports which they hold herein, to the maintainance of a College of Jesuits in Salfette, and other Religious Houses founded by them, in their other Cities.

10. M A L A B A R.

M A L A B A R is bounded on the North, with Canara, from which parted by the River Gangeraco; on the East, with the great Mountain Gates, by which divided from the Realm of Narsinga South-East; on the West and South, with the main Indian Ocean. On the Coast whereof, it doth extend for the space of 300 miles; that is to say, from the River Gangeraco to the Cape Commari: which I conceive to be the Commaria Extrema of Ptolemy, though others take it for the Promontory by him called Cory. But the breadth hereof is nothing answerable to the length, not above 50 miles where broadest, and ending towards the Cape in a point or Conus.

The Country more populous for the bigness, than any in India, enjoying a very temperate Air, and a fruitful soil; well watered and indented with many Creeks: unfit for Corn, but plentiful in Rice, and all manner of Spice, as Ginger, Cinnamon, Cassia, Pepper, and most excellent Fruits. Amongst their Trees there is one whose name my Author speaks, which bears Dates like unto the Palm; out of which they have not only Wood for fuel, but they draw from it Wine, Sugar, Oil, fine Cloath, and Cordage; another Tree, which beareth Cotton, Cyprus or Cobweb-lawn, of the Leaves whereof they make a fine stuff like to Sattin or Taffatic. They have also great store of Apes and Monkeys, Parrots, Paraquettos, and other Creatures not known in these parts but from thence: not to say any thing of their Lions, Elephants, Bears, Bugles, common to them with others of their Indian Neighbours. The flowers there always in their Verdure, and the Trees perpetually green; by reason that the Air is so sweet and temperate.

The People are of a coal-black colour (differing therein from the rest of the Indians, swarthy and complexioned like the Olive) well-limb'd, wearing their hair long and curled: about their heads an handkerchief wrought with Gold and Silver; and about their middle a cloth which hangeth down to conceal their nakedness. Of manners treacherous and bloody, more properly to be termed desperate than stout and valiant; and for more surety in their Wars, they use poysoned Arrows, as they do also in their thieving both by Sea and Land, to which more addicted. In Religion for the most part Gentiles, and more belotted generally on their Idolatries, than the rest of these Nations. The Pagode, or Idol which they worship, seated upon a brazen Throne, and Crowned with a rich Diadem; from his Head issue out four horns; from his Mouth four tusks; his Eyes fiery like a Glow-worm, his Nose flat and ugly, his Visage terrible; his hands like claws, his Legs and Thighs like those of a Lion. In a word, we cannot paint the Devil in a more ugly figure than they do their God. Unto this Pagode or his Priest, they offer the Virginity of all their Daughters: the Pagode having in the place of his privy parts a Bodkin of Gold or Silver, upon which the Bride (married most commonly at ten or twelve years of Age) is forcibly set; the sharpness of it being such, that it forceth out the blood in great abundance: and if she prove with Child that year, it is said to be of his begetting, and more esteemed. Others with more humanity, instead of torturing their Daughters on this wretched Idol (parallel almost to the offering of their Sons to Moloch amongst the Syrians) present them to the Bramin, or Idol-Priest, to be deflowred the first night of the Wedding: and without one of these two handfels no Man is suffered to enjoy the use of his Wife, not their Kings themselves. More privileged yet than many Women neighbouring on them, in that they are not compelled to burn themselves with their Husband's bodies; but may have many husbands either successively or at once, as they list themselves: and if at once, she sends her Children to that Husband (as we know who did) who she thinks to have the best right to them.

The Country very well watered, as we said before, and parted by large Rivers into many Provinces; as if intended naturally to be Cantoned into many Kingdoms. Divided at present, and long since into those of 1. Cononor, 2. Calicut, 3. Cranganor, 4. Cochin, 5. Cai-Colam, 6. Coulan, and 7. Travancor.

C O N O N O R joyneth to Canara, extending Southwards on the shore about 20 miles, where it bordereth on the Kingdom of Calicut. The chief Cities of which, 1. Cononor, giving name to the whole Kingdom, well built and beautified with a very fair Haven no more safe than spacious, capacious of the greatest Vessels, and for that cause much frequented by Foreign Merchants; but especially by the Portugals, who for the assuring of their Trade have here a Cittadel, erected and well garrisoned with the King's consent. 2. Cota, not far from Cangeraco, the border betwixt this and Canara. 3. Peripatan, on the confines of Calicut. 4. Marabia, 5. Tramopatan, 6. Main, intermediate Towns, but not much observable.

2. C A L I C U T, South from Cononor, extended on the Sea-shore 25 Leagues, and situate in the most pleasant and fruitful part of all Malabar. Chief Towns whereof, 1. Pandarano, on the skirts of Cononor. 2. Tanor, a retiring-place of the Kings. 3. Partangale, 4. Chatua, on the borders of Cranganor. 5. Chale, a strong place, once in the hands of the Portugueses; but in the year 1601, recovered by the King of Calicut, who had besieged it with an Army of 90000 Men. 6. Capacote, the Haven of Calicut. 7. Calicut, the chief City of the Kingdom, to which it gives name, in length upon the Sea, three miles and a mile in breadth; containing about 6000 houses, but standing some of them far asunder; mean and low-built; few of them exceeding the height of a Man on horseback; the soil being so hollow and full of water, that it is not capable of the foundation of an heavier building; for that cause unwall'd. Inasmuch that Merchants houses are here valued but at 20 Crowns, those of the common sort at no more than ten. Which notwithstanding, of great trading, and much frequented by Arabians, Persians, Syrians Syrians, Indians, yea the very Tartars; these last from the furthest parts of Cathay (taking Cathay in that general sense as it comprehendeth all the Countries of the Tartars, between mount Imaus, and the Eastern Ocean) being 6000 miles distant from it, insomuch that it is said by some of the Spanish Writers, that when Vasques de Gama, the first discoverer of the way to the East Countries by the Cape of Good Hope, first arrived in this Haven in 1498; he found in it no fewer than 1500 Merchants Ships of all sorts, but without Anchors and the Compasses, few of them fit for Sea-fight, not able to sail (in regard they had not the use of the Compass) but by four winds only. The common Staple in thosetimes of all Indian Merchandize, till distracted into several Ports by the power of the Portugals: who being more industrious and better Architects, have forced a foundation on the Shore, for a very strong Castle; by which they command the Haven, and receive Custom of all Merchandize going in and out. The inconvenience whereof being found by the King of Calicut, he besieged it with 100000 Men, and though the Portugals held it out a whole Winter together, yet in the end they were fain to quit it; but first demolished it to the ground, that it might not be made useful to those of Calicut. A City of exceeding wealth, and of no less wantonness; the Men here using to exchange Wives with one another, to confirm their Amities: and the Women spending their whole time in adorning themselves with Rings and Jewels about their Ears, Necks, Leggs, Arms, and upon their Breasts, though going naked for the most part, one would think that a little dressing might suffice them. If covered it is only with a Smock of Calicut, a kind of Linnen-cloth here made, and from hence so called: and that not used but by those of the better sort.

3. CRANGANOR lieth on the South of Calicut, a small Kingdom, and affording little worth the speaking of; but that a great part of the Inhabitants of it are of those old Christians, whom they call Christians of St. Thomas. Cranganor, the chief City, which gives name to the whole, affirmed to be so full of them, that they amount unto the number of 70000; vexed and exposed to publick scorn both by the Idolaters and Mahometans, amongst whom they live. The City rich, commodiously built for trade, at the mouth of a River, which watering with its crooked streams the most part of the Country, makes it fat and flourishing.

4. COCCHIN, more South than Cranganor, extended on the shore for the space of 40 Leagues; and therein many Christians of the first Plantation, besides some Converts made of latter times by the Jesuits. Towns of most note herein, 1. Augamale, the Arch-bishop's See of those ancient Christians, fifteen miles from Cochin. 2. Cochin, a Bishop's See, but of later erection and the chief City of this Kingdom, which takes name from hence. Situate on the mouth or out-let of the River Maugat, by which almost encompassed like a Demy Island. Of great trade in regard of its Haven, very safe and spacious; as also by the friendship of the Portugal Nation. By whose power and favour they have not only freed themselves from the King of Calicut, to whom before they did acknowledge some subjection; but drawn from thence a great part of the traffick also: this King permitting them to erect a Castle on the Haven, to secure their trade, which the other on good reasons of State forced them to destroy. The King hereof in some respect superiour unto that of Calicut, who is a Vassal to him: this King being the Pope or chief Bishop, as it were of all the Bramines: for which cause revered by all the Kings of Malabar, (as the Pope by many Princes of these Western parts) who look upon him as the head of their superstition, and pay him many annual duties.

4. CALCOLAM is on the South of Cochin, with which agreeing both in temper of the Air, and fertility of the Earth: which notwithstanding, the King hereof is not so rich as his other neighbours. Here live also many of the old Christians, taking name from St. Thomas: but those so destitute of Priests and Ministers to instruct them in the Principles of Christianity, that once in three years there came some formerly from the Patriarch of Muzal in Assyria, to baptize their Children. Better I hope provided for in these latter daies, since their embosoming and reconciliation to the Church of Rome. Their chief Town of the same name with the Country, hath a very fair Haven in the fashion of a Semi-Circle; well traded till destroyed by the Portugals, but since that re-edified. Of less note there are many both Towns and Villages, but such as do deserve here no particular mention.

6. COULAN upon the South of Cai-Colam, extended 20 Leagues more Southwards upon the shores, is said to be destitute of Corn, but plentiful of Pepper, and most sorts of Spices. So stored with Horses, and fit Riders to serve upon them, that the King hercof keeps 20000 Horse in continual readiness either for invasion or defence. This Kingdom as the rest before, takes name from the chief City of it, which is called Coulam 24 miles from Cochin, and once a member of that Kingdom; of great resort by foreign Merchants, by reason of the fair and commodious Haven. In former times the ordinary seat of the Cobritin, or chief Priest of the Bramines, till moved to Cochin; and held to be the Metropolis or Mother-City of all Malabar, the rest being thought to be but Colonies of this. Both in the City and the Country there are many Christians, as well of the original foundation of Christianity, as of the late improvements which are made by the Jesuits.

7. TRAVANCOR, called also TRANCANOR, reacheth from the Kingdom of Coulam, to the Cape of Comari, and turning towards the East, bendeth again unto the North, as far as Cael in the Kingdom of Bisnagar or Narsinga. By which accompt it hath the benefit of the Sea on all sides except towards the North: reaching in breadth from the West Seas unto the East, about 90 miles. The Country as the rest before, inhabited by many with the name of Christians, if they may be called so who want Sacraments: the condition of these Thomæan Christians in former times being so unhappy, that in 50 years before the coming of the Jesuits, (if the Jesuits may be believed from whom we have it) they had seen no Priest, nor other Minister of the Gospel. Chief Towns hereof, (for of those many others of less note I shall make no mention) are, 1. Travancor, the chief City, which gives name to the Province, but neither well built, nor of very much trading. 2. Quilacare, the Head-City of a Signiory, but held of the King of Trancanor, as their next and immediate Lord; though all those Kings are also Feudataries of the Crown of Narsinga. And were that the worst Tenure by which they hold, it might be tolerable; but there is a matter of worse consequence which attendeth these besotted Princes. The Kingdom here is but a pomp of twelve years continuance, and then endeth in a sad Catastrophe. For at the end of those twelve years, the King repairs to Quilacare, prayeth before the Idol above-mentioned, then mounteth on a Scaffold covered with Silk or Tapestry; and in the sight of all his People, gathered together to behold this strange solemnity, cutteth off his nose, ears, lips, and other parts, which he casts towards the Idol, and in conclusion cuts his own throat for his final Sacrifice: his designed Successor being present at this bloody Sacrifice, who at the twelve years end is to do the like. Never was Scepter bought at so dear a rate. For though all Crowns be lined with thorns, yet here the pomps of Sovereignty are less lasting than in other places; the entrance full of fears and the end of horrors.

These Kingdoms heretofore but one, till the year 900 or thereabouts, were branched and cantoned into these seven by Sarama Percimal, the sole Monarch. He by the solicitations of some Arabians, trading to his Ports, became Mahometan; and therein so devout, that he resolved upon a Pilgrimage to Meccha, there to end his daies. At his departure he divided his Estates into these seven parts, distributing them amongst the nearest of his Kindred; alligning unto him of Coulan the preheminance in sacred matters: and the Imperial dignity unto him of Calicut, with the title of Samorin, that is to say, Chief Emperor, or as some write, a God on Earth. He only privileged with the right and power of Coinage; the rest to be subordinate, if not subject to him. From Pereimal's setting forwards to the City of Meccha, the Malabars accompt their reckonings, and begin their years; as the Christians from the birth of their Lord and Saviour. And for a time his Hests were punctually observed. But the Kingdom of Calicut being weakned by the power of the Portugals, the other Kings began to free themselves from that subjection; and in the end to cast off all relation to him, and to his Prerogatives. Yet still he is esteemed of more Power and Majesty than any of the rest of the Kings of Malabar; and looked on with more reverence than any of them. The certainty of his Revenues I have nowhere met with, but conjecture them to be very great; first in regard of that infinite trading which is managed from most parts of the World in this Port of Calicut, the Customs and Imposts upon which must needs be of exceeding value; and secondly in reference to the wealth of private Merchants, many of which are said to equal some Kings in Africk; and Dukes in Europe not a few.

Quid Domini faciant, audent cum talia Fures?
And if the Man such Riches have,
Then what must he that keeps the Knave?

What Forces he is able to raise may be fully seen by that which hath been said before; wherein we find him with an Army of 90000 Men besieging and taking in the Forts of Chalen, with another of 100000 beleaguering the Castle which the Portugals had built near the City of Calicut. And when the said Portugals stirred up the King of Cochin to make head against him, he fell upon them suddenly, both by Sea and Land, with 60000 Land-Soldiers, and 200 good Vessels of War for his Service at Sea. Sufficient force to reduce the rest of these petty Kings to their old acknowledgements, but that some of them to avoid the danger, have put themselves under the Vassalage, or protection at the least, of the Great Mongul: others by suffering the Portugals to build Forts in their Kingdoms, have engaged them in defence of their Estates against this pretender. His Forces consist most of Foot, Horse being unserviceable in these Countries, by reason of the many Rivers which interlace it, and these Foot are compounded most of Gentry, which they there call Nairos, train'd up to their Weapons when they are but seven years of Age; every one to that Weapon which he most delighteth in, which makes them very expert and nimble at them; much privileged for that cause by the Laws of the Country, and so esteemed by the King, that out of them his Sisters chuse what Men they please to their Husbands, some of them by that means being made the Fathers of the succeeding King.

Nothing else memorable touching the affairs of Calicut, but the way of succession to the Kingdom; the Crown descending upon none of the King's Children, but on the Son of his eldest Sister, or nearest Kinswoman. For being that one of the Bramines hath always the maiden-head of his Queens and that some of these Stallions are continually allowed to keep them Company, it is presumed, or very probably supposed, that the Queen's Children are the Bramines and not the King's.

8. N A R S I N G A.

N A R S I N G A, is bounded on the South, with Travancor; on the West, with the Mountain Gates; on the North, with Oristan or Orixa; on the East, with the Gulf of Bengala. So called from Narsinga the chief City of it, and the Royal Residence of the King.

The Country is said to be in length 500 miles, or as some say, of as much extent as can be travelled in six months; plentiful in the same Commodities which the rest of India doth afford, except Pepper and some other Spices which are proper to Malabar. Not so well furnished with Rivers as some other places: which want is liberally supplied by water falling from the Mountains and received into Trenches, Meers, and Lakes, which do wonderfully cool, moisten and enrich the Land, causing the Corn and Cattel to prosper above all imagination. Most destitute in this kind is the Province of Choromandel, in which if any year passeth without rain they fall into such extremities, that they are fain to sell their Children.

The People as to Religion, Gentiles, so worshipping one God as the Lord of all, which is taught them by the light of nature, that they joyn the Devil or their Pagodes in Commission with him; whereto induced by the perswasion of their beastly Bramines, who thereout suck no small advantage. Some Christians there are intermixt of the old Plantation; especially in Maliapur, and the Region of Choromandel; but not so well instructed in the Principles of their own belief, as to be able to convince or convert the Gentiles; nor to dissuade them from the use of some Heathenish Customs though barbarous, inhumane, and against all reason; nor used in any place but amongst the Indians. Amongst which I reckon for most savage, the forcing of poor Women to burn themselves with their Husband's bodies; the Women's Kindred, not the Husband's, thrusting them on these hard conditions; who reckon it a disgrace to their Family, if she should refuse. And because they will be sure not to have that infamy stick upon them; they have ordered that the Woman who shall so refuse, must shave her head, and break her Jewels, and not be suffered to eat, drink or sleep, or company with any body till her death. A life more miserable than the Flames which they seek to shun. This makes them leap into the fire with joy and greediness, and to contend which shall be foremost; she being thought to have been most loving during his life, who is now most willing to accompany him in his death, and offer her self to his Manes, at the Funeral Pile: whereunto thus alluded the Poet:

Et certamen habent, lethi, quæ viva sequatur
Conjugium; pudor est non licuisse mori,
Ardent viâtrices, & præbent pectora flammæ;
Imponuntque suis ora perusta viris,
A shame it's not to die; they therefore strive,
Who may be fam'd to follow him alive,
The Victor burns, yields to the flame her breast;
And her burnt face doth on her husband rest.

Chief Cities of this Country, 1. Cael, on the borders of Travancor, belonging anciently to the Kings of Coulan, now to those of Narsinga; the people whereabout called Paravi, are a kind of Christians, who live for the most part by fishing for Pearl; which they sell to the Portugals, and Bengalian Merchants. 2. Golconda, the chief City of the Province called Masulipatan, the Lord whereof is a Moor, of the Sopbian Sect; but a Vassal to the Kings of Narsinga. In the year 1686, a Monk from Hispahan in Persia, gave an account that Sultan Adoxem, Son of Aurangzeb Great Mogul or King of Indostan, had beaten the King of Golconda, and had made a Peace with him upon payment of double tribute. Hackluit, Tom. 2. Page 253.

Golconda, saith Mr. Fitch an Englishman, is a fair pleasant Town, the Houses built with Brick and Timber, having plenty of Fruit, and Water, but the Air is very hot. The Kingdom more frequently called Orixa is very great, and lyes extended for the space of 260 French Leagues upon the Bay of Bengala, and takes the name of Golconda, from the Capital City of it; which lyes between the River Gunga, and the Mountains of Balagua; and is a great and noble City, and lyes 60 Leagues from the Port of Masulipatan to the North; and 50 from the nearest Coast of the Ocean to the Westly, 24 from Syrat to the East. The other Cities are Donizapatam, Caragaro, Orixa, Masulipatan, Narsingapatam, and Maliapaura, or St. Thomas. This Prince is one of the

the most powerful in the Indies. It is a pleasant Country to travel in, by reason of the Rice and Corn, and the many lovely reservatories. Monsieur Thevenot, in his Travels, assures us, That Golconda is only a Castle, where the King of Orisa resides; and that the City is called Bagnagar, and is a great and a populous, rich, and well traded City, in Southern Latitude, 17. 10. Adorned with many noble Structures and fine Gardens, tho' the common People live in low Thatch'd ill contrived Huts. The Castle of Golconda stands 2 miles West of Bagnagar, upon an hill rising like a Sugar-loaf, secured by a Ditch which is very deep, and a Wall made of stones 3 foot in length and breadth: The Ditches are filled with fair and good water, and besides this Wall it has five round Towers, with a great many Cannon mounted, both on the Wall and Towers for the defence of the Place. The Prince of this Country is a Mahometan, and is Tributary to the Great Mogul: he has vast Revenues being the Proprietor of all the Lands in his Kingdom, and his Toils yield him a great sum of money. Tavernier, Part 2. Chap. 10. Agrees with the former as to the fertility and plenty of this Kingdom. He saith farther, Bagnagar signifies the Garden of Nagar, the Wife of one of the late Kings who prevailed with him to build this City; yet Aurengzeb sacked it afterwards, which occasioned the removal of the Court to Fort-Golconda. This City lyes in 16, 58 Latitude; the Country about it is flat, but near the City are certain Rocks like those of Fountain-Bleau; a great River washeth the walls on the South-West, which after (at Maslipatan) falls into the Bay of Bengala. This City is little less than Orleans, and has beautiful houses, and a delicate Stone-Bridge, with a Suburb beyond it a League in length, called Erengabad, in which live all the Handicrafts-men, and meaner people, the City being reserved for the Nobility, Officers, of the Court, Justice and Army. Our Author exactly describes it, but I must be short. This City lyes 329 Leagues from Surat to the East; and 100 from Maslipatan to the North-West. The present King of Golconda, is Koutob Cha, who zealously maintains the Sect of Chiaïs, or Persian Mahometans. Tavernier Part 2. Pag. 159. For the reasons why the Great Mogul has not reduced the Kingdom of Golconda to an intire subjection, See Bernier, Pag. 59. 60. 3. Chamdagrîn, one of the Seats-Royal of the King. 4. Prepeti, three miles from Chamdagrîn, memorable for a yearly Feast here celebrated, in honour of Pereimal (once sole King of Malabar) reckoned for a Saint at least in these parts of India: and the offerings at which accustomedly amount unto 200000 Crowns. 5. Chadambaram, the Mother-City of those Pagan Solemnities, which are done to Pereimal; who hath here a Temple endowed with 30000 Ducats of Annual Rent, all consumed by the Bramines belonging to it, who pretend to have been born out of Pereimal's head. 6. Madura, honoured with the residence of the Chochananda, or the chief Prelate of the Bramines of this Kingdom; so numerous, that in this Town, and the Territories of it only, are thought to be no fewer than an hundred thousand. Madura, a City in the East Indies, in the Promontory of Malabar, which is great and populous; it was heretofore under the King of Bisnagar, but is now together with the Country in which it stands, subject to a Prince of its own, who is yet a kind of subject to the King of Bisnagar. It lyes between Malabar to the West, and the Gulf of Manar, which parts Malabar from Ceylon to the East, and he is Sovereign of this Coast and draws a considerable Revenue from it. The Seat also of one of the three Naicbi, or Tributary Kings of the Crown of Narsinga; the other two residing at, 7. Gingi, and 8. Tanjaor, the chief Towns of their Principalities, but not else observable. Gingi, a great City which gives name to a Province. This was heretofore under the Kings of Bisnagar, but has now a Prince of its own: it is very strong and has a Castle built upon a Rock. The Province or Kingdom of Gingi, has Bisnagar to the North; the Gulf of Bengala on the East; the Mountains of Malabar, on the West, and the Kingdom of Tanjaor to the South.

Tanjaor, a City in the East Indies, which was formerly subject to the King of Bisnagar, but has now a Prince of its own, who is yet a Tributary to the former. It yes 60 miles from the Coast of Choromandel to the West. 9. Maliapur, called also St. Thomas, from an opinion that the body of the Apostle was here interred: martyred here by the Idolatrous Indians, whose Posterity in other things like unto other Men, are said to have one leg and foot as big as an Elephant's: a punishment inflicted on the whole Generation for the sin of their Ancestors. How true this is I cannot say, but sure I am that Dorotheus saith, That he rested at Calamina, where he was slain with a Dart. However the Portugals, to make some use of the old Tradition, removed some bones from this place, which were said to be his, and enshrined them in Goa, their own City; much visited by profitable Pilgrims, to their great enriching. The City once so large and populous, that it contained 330 Temples, for the use of divers Nations which resorted thither. In these latter daies desolate and forlorn, inhabited only by some old Christians, till the Portugueses began to people it with new Colonies. 10. Choromandel, giving name to a large Sea-Coast, lying on the West-side of the Gulf of Bengala. 11. Castia, a Town of Choromandel, in which the Woman is not burned with her Husband, as in other places of this Country, but buried quick in the same grave with him. 12. Negapatan, in the same Region, inhabited for the most part by St. Thomas-Christians. Negapatau, now under the Dutch, formerly under the Portugueses. This City is 72 miles from the Island of Zilan, on the East of Malabar, and is very great and full peopled, with Portugueses and Christians of the Country converted by them, yet there are some Gentiles. The Trade here is not great, being only Rice and Bombast; but the Country has plenty of Provisions. The City belonged to a Lord of Bisnagar, who treated the Portugueses very well; but in 1565, plundered all their houses for denying him some Arabian Horses he sent for. Hackluit, Tom. 2. Pag. 226. 13. Tarnassari, once the chief City of a Kingdom so called, the King whereof was able to bring into the Field 100000 Horse and Foot, and 100 Armed Elephants, but now subject to the King of Narsinga. The people black, but so out of love with their own colour, that they willingly prostitute their Wives or Daughters, to any people of a whiter and more clear complexion. 14. Bisnagar, this Kingdom is bounded on the North, with the Kingdoms of Decan and Cuncam; on the East, with the Gulf of Bengala; on the West, with the Indian Sea; and on the South, with the Kingdoms of Malabar, and Singa: it is sometimes called the Kingdom of Narsinga. The City that gives name to this vast Kingdom, lyes almost in 15 Degrees of North Latitude and 107 of Longitude; on the Eastern side of a long chain of Mountains, that divide this Promontory from the North to the South; it lyes 45 Leagues West from the shores of the Bay of Bengala; and 35 from Narsinga to the West. This Kingdom is by the late Travelers and Indians, called Karnatêck, or Caratica; and is at this day possessed by a Raja, who is descended from the potent Ramras, Lord of all the Peninsula, from whom the Kings of Decan, Misapour, and Golconda, about 200 years since, revolted. Bernier's, History of the Empire of the Great Mogul, Pag. 59. This was once the chief City of this Kingdom, whence the King is sometimes called the King of Bisnagar. It was in those times 24 miles in compass, with nine Gates in it, (amongst others) continually guarded with Soldiers; and a magnificent Palace, not elsewhere equalled. In the year 1565, sacked by four Mahometan Kings of Deccan, who with their joyn't Forces had invaded this Kingdom; it became desolate and forsaken; and the Court removed to Pene-gardo, eight daies journey within the Land (Bisnagar being seated on the borders of Deccan) but long it had not staid there when removed to 16. Narsinga, where it hath since been fixed, which is now the chief City of this Kingdom, unto which it gives name; though the King many times calls himself by the name of that City where he resideth for the present.

Of the Antiquity of this Kingdom I have little to say, these Eastern parts not being known at all till these later times, nor well known in these. About the year 1550 their King then Reigning, was imprisoned by three of his Captains or Commanders; who shewed him only once a year to his Subjects, parting the Power and Government amongst themselves. He being dead, and his Son kept in the like restraint, ; Romaragio the first Captain ascended the Throne, Timaragio managed the Estate, and Bengabe commanded the Army. But these Usurpers being overthrown by the Kings of Decan, in the year 1565, Timaragio the Survivor took the charge of all; whose Son, to make himself sure of the Kingdom, murdered his imprisoned Sovereign (the life and liberty of Kings being much of a date) whence followed many broils and troubles touching the succession, till settled in the Person of Chrismarao, the undoubted Heir: who did not only restore peace and quiet to Narsinga it self, but recovered Canara out of the hands of the Indalcan, who had before endangered his Estate therein. Of the great Army which he led against this Indalcan, we have spoke already; adding here only, that before he went upon this enterprize (called the journey of Rachiol) he sacrificed in nine daies 2036 Beasts to the Country-Idols, the flesh whereof he caused to be distributed amongst the Poor. Routed at first, and being perswaded by some about him to go out of the field, he is said to have made this noble Answer That he had rather the Indalcan should boast that he had slain him, than vanquished him. And thereupon leaping into the thickest of his Enemies, and well followed by the valiantest of his Friends, he obtained the Victory. But this vast Army of 600000 Foot, 30000 Horse, 537 Elephants with necessaries answerable to such infinite multitudes, speaks only what he can do on extreme necessity, or when he had some long time of preparation, as he had in that Action. The power of Kings is better measured by their Standing-Forces, than by necessitated Levies. And herein this Prince comes not much short of his greatest Neighbours: his Standing-Bands consisting of 40000 Nairos, or Gentlemen of his own Kingdom, that serve on foot; 20000 Horse, who are either Persians or Arabians, and 200 Elephants; well paid, and kept in continual readiness; his Foot defrayed out of his Revenues, his Horse maintained like the Turks Timariots, out of certain Lands distributed amongst his Captains (some of which are said to have a million of Crowns per annum) to furnish him with these stable Bands of Horses and Elephants.

As for his Revenue, it is reckoned at 12 millions yearly, out of which he is thought to lay up three; defraying with the rest the expence of his household, and the entertainment of his Foot. This Sum amassed together out of the Lands, Mines, and Forests of the Country, which are wholly his; and the waters of some Rivers (sold by him to his Subjects) which he monopolizeth, the common people having nothing but their Arms and Labour. Of which, the Mines, Forests and one third of the Lands he retaineth to himself; the other two being divided amongst his Captains. So that it is no marvel if so rich a Country yield him such an income, considering it is all his own. I do rather wonder (of the two) it should yield no more.

9. O R I S T A N.

O R I S T A N or O R I X A, is bounded on the South, with Narsinga; on the West, with Delly, and Sanga; on the North, with the Kingdoms of Botanter; on the East, with the Gulf of Bengala, and part of Patanaw or Patane; so called from Orissa, the chief City of it. This is the name of a City, a Province, and a Kingdom; that here described, is the Province of Oristan: which when the Mogul conquered it was a distinct Kingdom.

The Country hath plenty of Rice, Cloath of Cotton, and a fine stuff like Silk, made of grass, and there called Yervia; with which, together with Long Pepper, Ginger, Mirabolans, and other Commodities here growing, they use to load 25 or 30 Ships from the Haven of Orissa only. The people so well governed, or so hating theft, that in the time of their own Kings, before they came under the Monguls, a Man might have travelled with Gold in his hand without any danger. In other points, of the same Temper and Religion with the rest of the Indians subject to that Prince.

It is generally well watered, and interlaced with many Rivers, which do much moisten and refresh it; but none so beneficial to the Kings hereof as the River Guenga (of old called Chaberis) the Waters whereof esteemed sacred by the Kings of Calicut and Narsinga, and much used by them in their sacrifices and superstitious purgations, are wholly engrossed by this King, who selleth them to those Princes at excessive rates. Besides which Rivers it is watered with a fair Sea-Coast, of 350 miles in length; that is to say, from Cape Guaderino in the South, which divides it from the Realm of Narsinga, to Cape Leogora in the East, which parts it from Bengala. But for all that not very much traded, because not so well provided of Commodious Havens, as many other Indian Provinces of a far less Territory.

Towns of most note herein, 1. Orissa, on the Sea-side or not far from it, the best traded Port of all this Kingdom; to which the name thereof is to be ascribed, as the Head-City of the Country. 2. Cateoba, six daies journey within the Land, the ordinary residence of their Kings before it was subdued by the Great Monguls. 3. Angeli, a well frequented Port, at the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; from whence many Ships are yearly laded with Indian Wares. 4. Bacoli or Bacola, more within the Land, and once the Head-City of a Kingdom, but a very poor one. 5. Simergan, where they held it an impiety to eat flesh, or to kill any beast. 6. Senerpate, of which little memorable. Nor do I find any thing which deserves much memory in the affairs of this Kingdom, but that the Kings hereof were Gentiles, subdued not many years since by the King of Patanaw; and both grown weaker by that War, with Echebar the Great Mongul.

10. B O T A N T E R.

B O T A N T E R (under which name I comprehend all those petty Kingdoms which are crowded together in the North and North-East of this part of India) hath on the South, Oristan and Patanaw; on the West, the River Guenga or Chaberis, by which parted from the Realms of Pengab; on the North, the Zagathaian Tartars, divided from it by some branches of Mount Taurus; on the East, the Famous River Ganges. So called from Botia, the principal City of Botanter, which is the chief of these small Kingdoms.

The Country great, of three months journey in extent, full of high Mountains, one of which may be seen five daies journey off, in which are said to dwell a People with ears of a Span long or more, whom otherwise those of the Valleys count as Apes. In those parts which are next Pengab, they are white, and Gentiles; in others, more inclined to the Olive-colour. Their Garments they wear close to their bodies, so straight that one cannot see a pleat or wrinkle; and those they never put off by night nor day whilst they are able to hang on: nor do they wash at any time, for fear of defiling so pure a Creature as the Water. Contented with one Wife (deserved to be held a miracle in these Eastern parts) and yet cohabit not with her after two or three Children. When any of them die, the South-sayer is to tell them what to do with his body; according to whose direction (first consulting his books) they burn, bury, or eat it. Few Towns of note there are amongst them. The principal, 1. Bottia the Metropolis of it. 2. Clamur, of which little memorable. 3. Kukares, the second Kingdom of this rank, large, but exceeding mountainous, as being over-run by the branches of mount Caucasus, which divides it from Tartary. So named named of Kakares the chief Town thereof, by some called Negariet, their Staples for the sale of their Cloath (most of the people being Weavers) bought of them by the Chinese, and Tartarian Merchants, who resort frequently to those Markets. This is a distinct Kingdom of it self, the Kings whereof are called Dermain, but Vassals to the Great Mongul. And so is he of, 3. Couche, another Kingdom of this Tract, frontiering upon Cauchin-China, beyond Ganges; so called from Cauche the chief Town of it. The Country rich, by reason it may be drowned, and dried up again, when the people will: full of good Pastures by that means, and those well stored with Sheep, Goats, Swine, Dear, and other Cattel; though the people neither kill nor eat them, but on the contrary build Hospitals for them, in which when lame and old, they are kept while they die. Yet many times they eat their money, and I cannot blame them, their small money being Almonds.

4. G O U R E A, the most Northern Realm in this general division, so called of Gor, or Goren, the chief Town of it. The Country in some parts mountainous, out of which springeth the River Sicilly, one of the Tributaries unto Ganges; the rest a kind of a Desert or unpeopled Country, joyneth close to Couche, in which are few Villages, grafs (or Reeds rather) longer than a Man, and therein many Bufs, Tigers, and other wild Beasts; none wilder than the Thievs, who frequent the Wildernesses.

In this Tract also are the Kingdoms of 5. R A M E, and 6. R E C O N, joyning upon Zagathay, or inclining towards it; possessed by the Mongul-Tartars from the time of Tamerlane, if not before: but Feudataries to the Kings of Chabul or Arachofia, who commanded in the North-East of Persia, and these North parts of India; and from those places drew his Army or the greatest part of it, when called unto the aid of Galgee the King of Mandao. Here is also the Kingdom of, 7. T I P P U R A, naturally fenced with Hills and Mountains, and by that means hitherto defended against the Mongul-Tartars, their bad Neighbours, with whom they have continual Wars. But of these Northern Kingdoms lying towards Tartary, there is but little to be said; and that little of no certain knowledge, those parts being hitherto so untravelled, that they may pass in the account of a Terra Incognita. Most of these petty Kingdoms are become so far Tributaries to the Great Mogul, that their Raja's, or Princes, serve in their Armies for pay; and attend his Court: but if he oppresses them in any instance, then they revolt; and in all the Civil Wars of Indostan, they are able to turn the ballance, by joyning with which of the Parties they think fit. This has made that Kingdom very unquiet, and often has endangered the ruin of it.

11. P A T A N A W.

P A T A N E or P A T A N A W, is bounded on the North, with the Realm of Botanter; on the East, with Ganges; on the West, with Oristan; and on the South, with the Kingdom and Gulf of Bengala. So called from Patane the chief City of it. There is another Kingdom of this name in the farther India: but whether it were so called because a Colony of this; or from some resemblances in the nature of the several Countries, or from the signification of the word in the Indian Language, I am not able to determine. Certain I am, that tho' they have the same name, yet they are under several Governments, and situate in far distant places: no otherwise agreeing than in some resemblances, as Holland in the Low Countries doth with Holland in Lincolnshire.

The Country yieldeth viens of Gold, which they dig out of the Pits, and wash away the earth from it in great Balls. The people tall, and of slender making, many of them old: great praters, and as great dissemblers. The Women are so decked with Silver and Copper, especially about the feet, that they are not able to indure a shoe. Both Sexes use much washing in the open Rivers, and that too intermixt together in their natural nakedness; especially such as live near the banks of the River Jamena (esteemed more holy than the rest) which from Agra passing thorough this Country falleth into Ganges.

Chief Towns hercot, 1. Patane, a huge Town and a long one, built with very broad streets; but the Houses very mean and poor, made at the best of earth and hurdles, and thatched over head. The Metropolis of this Kingdom, because the ancientest, and that which gives the name unto it. 2. Banaras, a great Town on Ganges, to which the Gentiles from remote Countries use to come in Pilgrimage, to bath themselves in the Holy Waters of that River. The Country betwixt this and Patanam, very fair and flourishing, and beautified on the Road with handfom Villages. 3. Siripur, the chief Seat of one of the old Princes of the Country; not yet subdued by the Great Monguls. 4. Ciandecan, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; the Seat of another of their Kings. One of which memorable for a trick put upon the Jesuits, when blamed by them for the worship of so many Pagodes, as contrary both to the Law of God and nature; For causing them to rehearse the Decalogue, he told them that he did offend no more against those Commandments in worshipping so many Pagodes, than they themselves in worshipping so many Saints. 3. Satagam, a fair City (for a City of Moors) once part of Patanam, since ascribed to Bengala. 4. Satagam, which lyes at the mouth of the Ganges, seated in an Island, in the Latitude of 29. in the Map of Indostan; this place is 100 miles from the Sea, yet they row to it in 18 hours, by force of the Tide, which is very great: but this is done only with small Barks, the Ships go only to Butor. It is a reasonable fair City, abounding with all things, and in 1568, was under the King of Patane, but was about that time conquered by the Great Mogul. This City was built by the Moors, or Arabians, Hackluit, Tom. 2. Pag. 230. In the latter Maps, it is placed in 24 Latitude. 5. Hugueli, where the Portugueses live, is one League from this Place, and is in the Latitude of 23. Ibid. Pag. 257.

The People of this Country properly called Pataneans; but corruptly Parthians, were once of great command and power in these parts of India: Lords for a time, of a great part of the Kingdom of Bengala, into which driven by Beburxa, the Mongul-Tartar, the Father of Emanpaxda, and Grandfather of Echebar. Their last King being slain in that war, twelve of their chief Princes joyned in an Aristocracy, and waiting upon Emanpaxda had the better of him. After this, their Successours attempted Oristan, and added that also to their Estate, but they could not long make good their fortunes, subdued by Echebar the Mongul, and made subject to him. Three of them viz. the Prince of Siripur, the King of Ciandecan, and he whom they call Mausadalin, retain as yet, (for ought I can learn unto the contrary) as well their ancient Paganism as their natural liberty. The other nine, together with Maometism, have vassalled themselves to the Great Mogul, now the Lord Paramount of the Country.

12. B E N G A L A.

B E N G A L A is bounded on the North, with Patanam; on the East, with the Kingdom of Pegu on the South and West, with the Gulf of Bengala. So called from Bengala the chief City of it. It containeth in length on the Gulf and River 360 miles, and as much in breadth into the Land. A Country stored with all things necessary to the life of Man; great plenty of Wheat, Rice, Sugar, Ginger, and long Pepper. Such abundance of Silk and Cotton, and of flesh and fish, that it is impossible that any Country should exceed it in those commodities. And which crowns all, blest with so temperate and sweet an air, that it draws thither people of all sorts to inhabit it. Here is also amongst other rarities, a Tree called Moses, which beareth so delicate a fruit, that the Jews and Maometans who live here, affirm it to be the fruit which made Adam sin. The Riches, Fertility, and Beauty of

of this Kingdom, are preferred before those of Aegypt; and indeed of the whole Earth, by Tavernier, and Bernier, who had seen it. Pag. 140. This Kingdom in time past hath been as it were in the power of the Moors, [Arabians] yet there are great numbers of Pagans or Idolaters. Hackluit, Tom. 2, Pag 231. At this time it was for the most part under the Mogul; as Aegypt was taken for the product of the Nile, so it is thought Bengala is of the Ganges, see Ganges. The greatest and best part of it is a knot of River-Islands, made by the Ganges and some other Rivers, which from the Kingdom of Pegu, pass through this of Bengala, into the Ocean. This together with the heat of the Climate, is the true cause of the fertility of this Country. There is at the mouth of the River Orenoque in South America, a Country exactly like this, but not equal to it, by reason it wants culture and inhabitants, sufficient to improve and adorn it; and perhaps all the advantages of this, are owing to the Arabians, the great builders of Cities and improvers of this part of the World, before the arrival of the Portugueses here.

The natural Inhabitants for the most part are of a white complexion, like the Europæans, subtil of wit, and of a curious disposition; well skilled in dealing in the world, much given to traffick, and intelligent in the way of Merchandize, if not somewhat deceitful. Not ignorant of other Arts, but with some smattering in Philosophy, Physick, and Astrology. Stately and delicate both in their Diet and Apparel: not naked as in others of these Indian Provinces, but clothed in a shirt or smock reaching to their feet, with some upper Garment over that. The Women of an ill name for their unchastity, tho' Adultery he punished with cutting off of their noses. Neat, if not curious and too costly in this one custom, that they never seeth meat twice in the same Pot, but for every boyling buy a new one. In Religion for the most part Mahometans, especially on the Sea-shores, which lay most open and commodious to the Arabians; by whom Mahometanism was here planted many Ages since.

Of Rivers we need take no care, having spoken of the Ganges; that with its many channels may abundantly serve to water so small a Province. But hereof more anon in a place more proper. Proceed we now to the Cities. The principal whereof, 1. Bengala, which gave name to the whole Kingdom, situate on a branch of the River Ganges, and reckoned for one of the most beautiful Towns of all the Indies. Exceedingly enriched by trade, but more by Pilgrimages, by reason of the holiness and divine operations ascribed by the Indians to the waters of it: there being few years in which not visited by three or four hundred thousand Pilgrims. 2. Gouro, the Seat Royal of the ancient Kings. 3. Carigan, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala, a well-traded Port. 4. Taxda, once a Town of great traffick, and situate in those times on the banks of Ganges; but now by the changing of the channel (occasioned by the frequent over-flowing of it) above a League off from the River. 5. Porto Grande, and 6. Porto Pequeno, two Towns of the Portugals; but without Forces for defence, or rules for Government. Places like the Asylum, which was built by Romulus; whereunto such as dare not stay in their own Countries, or any well regulated Cities, use to make their resort; privileged here to live in all kind of licentiousness.

Here is also in the South parts of this Province, or adjoining to it, the City and Kingdom of Arachan; lying, along the banks of Ganges, but so remote from the Sea that it is 50 miles distant from the nearest branch of it. Wealthy and populous withal; governed heretofore by a King of its own, so wallowing in wealth and sensual pleasures, that he had in this City, and the parts adjoining twelve Royal Palaces or Seraglio's, all stowed with Women for his lust. Now subject with Bengala and Patanaw, to the Empire of the Great Monguls.

There are some small Islands in the Gulf of Bengala which I account unto that Kingdom. 1. Bazacata, now called Basse. 2. Barasse of which name there are five in Ptolemy, three of them, by Mercator said to be Mindanao, Cailon, and Subut. 3. Two called the Islands of Good Fortune, by him placed under the Aequator, and said to be inhabited by Anthropophagi, or man-eaters; as also were three more which he calls, 4. Sadadibæ, now named Cainam. 5. Insulæ Satyrorum, or the Isles of Satyrs, three in number, the people whereof were reported to have tails like Satyrs. And 6. those called Maniola, in number ten, (now Islas de Præcel) reported by Ptolemy to be so stored with Adamant stones, that they violently drew to them any Ships or Vessels which had Iron in them; for which cause they who used these Seas fastned the planks of their Ships with wooden pins. But our later Navigators find no such matter, unless perhaps it may be in the exploits of Sir Huon of Bourdeaux, where indeed we meet with such an Island, in the course of his Errandrie. This story was invented to give a reason, why no Iron was used in the Ships that were employed on this Coast; as very little or none was before the Portugueses came thither. This is mentioned in Hackluit's Voyages, very frequently and alone by this very Author; and in all probability was the custom in Ptolemy's time.

But to return again to the Kingdom of Bengala, we find it of a different constitution from the rest of the Kingdoms of these parts. Not Governed by a Family of Successive Princes, descended from the Stem of a Royal Ancestry, as others are. Chance or necessity, had brought thither many Habassines, or Ethiopians, who made a Conquest of the Country; and chose a King out of themselves. To keep what they had gotten, and perpetuate the Regal Honour to the Habassine Nation, they procured thence yearly, thirty thousand Slaves, whom they trained up unto the wars; advanced unto the highest commands in Civil and Military Service; and out of them elected one for their Lord and Sovereign; as the Mamlucks in the Kingdom of Aegypt, whom herein they followed. By some Arabians trading with them, they came in time to admit Mahometanism, amongst them; on the Sea-coasts especially. Dispossessed first of some part of their Kingdom, lying about Satagan, by the Pataneans, when driven to seek new dwellings by Baburxa the Mongul Tartar; and of their whole Kingdom, by the valour and good fortune of Echegar, who added it unto the rest of his Estate.

Thus have we drawn together all the Indian Provinces on this side Ganges, (the Kingdoms of Malabar and Narsinga being but a Parenthesis in the construction of this sentence) into the hands of the Mongul. So called for his descent from the Mongul-Tartars, one of the five great Tribes or Nations into which that people were divided. Derived originally from the famous and mighty Tamerlane, who having added almost all the Greater and Lesser Asia unto his Estates, left Persia, with the parts of India which lay nearest to it on the North, to Myrza Charork, his fourth Son. But his Issue failing in Abdula, the fourth of that Line, those Estates fell to Abusaid, descended from Maromcha the third Son of Tamerlane: Whose Son and Successour called Zeuzes, by some Malaoncles, being dis seized of the greatest part of the Kingdom of Persia, by Ussan-Cassanes; the rights of all, with the possession of Arachosia (now called Cabul) and Paropamisus (now Candahor or Sablestan) together with so much of India as was held by those Princes, remained in Hamed, one of the younger Sons of Abusaid: whose Posterity laying hold on such opportunities as were offered to them, have made themselves Masters in few years of this mighty Empire. Whose Successours and their achievements we shall here present.

THE Great Monguls.

1473 1 Hamed, the Son of Abusaid, of the Race of Tamerlane, after the Conquest of Persia by Ussan-Cassanes, succeeded in Cabul, Candahor, and the parts of the Realms of India subject to the Tartars

- 1500 2 Babor or Baburxa, in danger to be dispossessed of most of his Estates by the neighbouring Usbeques, living upon the borders of Persia, Tartary and India, whom at last he quieted; enlarging his Dominions by the Conquests of some Part of Patanaw, and other Kingdoms in the North.
- 1532 3 Hamoyen, the Son of Babor or Baburxa, commonly called Amanpaxda vanquished by the Parthians or Pataneans, and their Confederates, craved aid of Thomas, the second Persian Monarch of this Line, on promise to conform to the Sopbian Sect: and by that aid confirmed and settled his affairs; but held himself to the principles of Irreligion.
- 4 Merhamed or Miramudius, Son of Emanpaxda called in by Galgee the King of Mandao against Badurius the Cambaian, vanquished the Cambaian King in two pitched fields; and conquered the Kingdoms of Mandao and Balassia, with some other Provinces.
- 5 Adabar the Son of Merhamed, added the Realms of Delly and Cambaia, unto his Dominions.
- 1550 6 Mahomet Selabden, commonly called Echebar, brother of Adabar, the most fortunate and victorious Prince of all his Family, subdued the Kingdoms of Caximer, Agra, Decan, Orissa, Bengala, Patanaw and divers others of less note.
- 1605 7 Selim, surnamed Fangheere, the Son of Echebar 2. who added nothing that I hear of, to his Father's Conquests.
- 1627 8 Blockie, the Grand-child of Selim by his eldest Son, (wickedly murdered by the practice of Curroon at Agra) proclaimed King on the death of his Grand-father; but shortly after made away by Asaph Chawn, so to make room for,
- 1627 9 Curroon, the third Son of Selim or Fangheere or Cha Jehan, and Son-in-law unto Asaph Chawn; having by his own Ministers, and the hands of his Father-in-law, murdered the proclaimed King his Nephew, and all the other Princes of the Royal blood; succeeded to the Estates, and was Crowned at Agra. A wicked and bloody Prince, still living for ought I hear to the contrary.
- 1659 10 Aurence-Zeb, younger Son of Cha Jehan, taking advantage of a Sickneſs his Father fell into, deposed him, and entering a war with his elder Brother, beat him in the field and so obtained the Kingdom. He kept his Father in restraint to the day of his death, but with great respect and civility. He has been a Prince of great action and success, and has added to the Kingdom several Provinces, on the South side, being a warlike and cunning Prince. He is still living for ought that I know.

Above in the Kingdom of Agra, I have added several Catalogues of these Princes, differing from this here, and from each other; so that I cannot reconcile them: the Reader if curious, may turn back to them.

To look a little on these Princes, their Estate and Power; in matters of Religion they have generally been Mahometans, that Religion being long since embraced by the Tartars, from whom they originally descended. But not so scrupulous or precise in that profession, as to endeavour the suppressing of any other opinions: both Echebar, and his Son Fangheere, being so inclined unto Christianity, that they permitted the Jesuits to build Colleges and Churches in Agra it self, the Imperial City, and many other chief Cities in his Dominions. Of Echebar it is reported, That being doubtful what Religion to adhere unto, he caused thirty Infants to be so brought up, that neither their Nurses nor any body else should speak unto them; resolving to addict himself to the Religion of that Country, whose Language should be spoken by them, as most agreeable to nature; and he did accordingly. For as those Children spake no Language, so was he positive and resolved in no Religion; able to see the vanities of Mahomet, and the horrible impieties of the Gentiles, but not willing to conform unto the strictness of Christianity. And tho' Selim who succeeded, to content his Mahometan Subjects declared himself for that Religion; yet his affairs being once settled, and his Throne confirmed, he became as neutral as his Father, Sulian Curroon now Reigning, (in 1648) is of the same neutrality, and 'tis well he is so; there being no Religion so impure and bloody, which he would not dishonour by his own ungraciousness.

The Language spoken by these Princes, and their natural subjects the Magores, or Mongul-Tartars, is said by some to be the Turkish. But I think rather, that it is some Language near it, than the very same: And that the Language which they speak is the ancient Scythian or Tartarian, from which the Turks (a Scythian People) differ but in Dialect, a sprinkling of the Persian intermixt amongst them. A mixture not to be denied in regard of their long dwelling in that Country, the intercourse which their Subjects of those parts have with these of India; and that the greatest part of their Soldiers, Officers, and Commanders are supplied from thence.

Their Government is absolute, if not Tyrannical, the Great Mongul being Lord of all, and heir to every Man's estate which is worth the having: the Persons and Purſes of his Subjects at his sole disposing; so that he may amass what Treasures, and raise what Forces for the Wars his need requireth; or the Avarice or Ambition of his Ministers shall suggest unto him. First, for his Treasures, it is conceived that his Revenue doth amount yearly to fifty millions of Crowns; and there are reasons to persuade that it may be more. The Country very rich, and notably well traded from all parts of the World, the Impost upon which, is of infinite value; besides the vast sums of money brought into his Dominions from all Countries whatsoever, which hold traffick here; their Commodities not being to be parted with but for ready Coyn. The whole Land being all his, he estates it out for no term certain, retaining a third part of the profits to himself, and leaving two thirds to the Occupants, to be held by them during pleasure. Who if they thrive upon their bargains, they thrive not for themselves, but him: it being in his power, if he want patience to expect the Incumbents death, to enter on the whole Estate of the Tenant by the way of Eſcheat: but if he tarry till the death of the Occupant, it falls to him in course; the Wife and Children of the deceased being fairly dealt with, if he content himself with the personal estate, and leave the Land to them to begin a-new; for instance of those huge sums which in so rich a Country may be had this way, it is said, that when the Vice-Roy of Lahoa dyed, he left to Echebar three millions of Gold, besides Silver, Jewels, Horses, Elephants, Furniture and Goods almost invaluable: And of one Raga Gagnar, another of his great Officers, that at his death the Great Mongul seized of his into his hands 3300 pound-weight of Gold, besides Plate, and Jewels. Besides these means of heaping up Treasure, all the Mines of the Country are wholly his, and the Presents given by all sorts of Suiters, hardly to be numbered; none being admitted to his presence which comes empty-handed. Finally if Badurius, who was King of Cambaia only, could bring into the field at once 500 Tun of Gold and Silver to pay his Army; and after his loss of all that treasure, advanced upon the sudden the sum of 600000 Crowns, which he sent to Solyman the Magnificent to come to succour him; both which it is well known he did: What infinite Treasures must we think his Prince to be Master of, who hath more than four times the estate of the King of Cambaia, and far more trading now than in former times?

By the like Parallel we may conjecture somewhat at his Forces also; Badurius the Cambaiian brought into the field against Merbamed, and the King of Mandao, as was partly touched upon before, 150000 Horse, 500000 Foot, 2000 Elephants armed, 2000 Pieces of brass-Ord'nance, of which were 4 Basilisks, each of them drawn with 100 yoke of Oxen; and 500 Carts loaded with Powder and Shot. What then may we conceive of this Prince, who is Lord of so much a greater Estate than he, but that his Levies may be raised proportionably to so great Dominions? But because possibly Badurius did extend himself to the utmost of his power, and having lost two Battels, was never able to recruit again, which no wise Prince would do but in great extremities: It is conceived that the Mon-gul, without running any such hazards on the loss of a Battel can in an instant raise 50000 Elephants, 300000 Horse, and Foot proportionable; and yet have stock enough for an After-game, if that he should chance to lose the first. But it is seldom that he hath advanced to so high a Mustel. For in his action upon the Kingdoms of Decan, he had but an hundred thousand Men, and a thousand Elephants for fight; though possibly of all sorts of people there might be more than double that number. For in his ordinary removes in times of Progress, it is said that his followers of all sorts amount unto two hundred thousand; and that his Tents do usually take up as much ground as the City of London. Yet notwithstanding this great power, the fortunes of this Empire have not only been at a stand, since the death of Echebar; but the Rasbooches in Cambai, the Venazarari in Decan, and other puissant Rebels in other parts of his dominions, hold out still against him; some of them being said to command as much Land as a pretty good Kingdom, and to have always in readiness 20000 horse, and 50000 foot, to make good their Mountains. Nature, or Divine Providence hath given to Empires, as to Men, a determinate growth, beyond which there is no exceeding.

There are two Reasons why this Vast and Rich Empire has, of Late, Grown no more; the First of these is owing to the Climate: The Tartars, when they made the first Conquest, were an hardy and a valiant Nation, but their Children that Succeeded them, are, in time by the Climate, softened, and become almost as Effeminate as the Indians they have Conquered; so that these Princes are forced to call in mercenary Forces from the Persians and Tartars, to Keep what they now have, which must, in Policy, be few in Proportion; and the children of these too, in a short time degenerate and become meer Indians.

The Second Reason is, because the Conquest at first was too Rapid; the Moguls did not clear the Way as they went, but left several Potent Raja's or Princes in the Mountains, in the Body of the Empire, who maintain their Possession to this Day, and tho' Tributaries, are yet not so far Subject, but they can defend themselves if they are injured, and divide the Empire, when they find a fit opportunity: Which the Contentions and Civil Wars, commonly happening at the Death of every Regent Prince, gives them occasion to do; the Succession not being so regulated, but that the Brothers that Survive, do commonly fight for the Throne: This is the cause of Great Slaughters of Men, and dispirits and Weakness the Empire very much: It is observable also, That most Princes that believe their Empires so Strong as to be in no danger of their Neighbours, do thereupon betake themselves to an easy, luxurious life; and Laying aside all thoughts of Enlarging their Dominions, spend their Time and Thoughts in Pleasures, till after a while, they and their Subjects being rendered soft and unmanly, they become a Prey to some Potent hardy Foreigner, or some Daring Rebel at home.

Luxuria Senior Armis

Incubuit victumque ulciscitur orbem.

Auranga Zeb, the Present King of Indostan, being unfortunate in his first Wars against Persia, in his Father's life-time hath since Employed all his Forces against the Inhabitants of Cape Malabar, with no great Success, tho' some say he has lately forced the King of Colconda to become Tributary to him after a War of 30 years, which is not much, considering the inequality between the Forces of these two Princes. He is now very old, and no great matters are to be expected till he go off the Stage to make way for a younger Prince.

2. INDIA EXTRA GANGETEM.

INDIA EXTRA GANGETEM is that part of the great Continent of India, which lieth on the further side of the River Ganges, from the spring or fountain of it, wheresoever it be, to the fall thereof into the Sea by the fifth and last mouth thereof, which is called Antiboli: The other four being reckoned into the other part of India, on this side of that River: From hence extended Eastward as far as China and the Oriental Ocean, on other parts bounded as before.

The Country in those elder times so renowned for wealth, that one Tract of it hath the name of The Silver-Region, and another of The Golden Chersonese: this last supposed to be the Ophir of Solomon, of which more hereafter. The people of the same nature and disposition, in the elder times, as those who did inhabit on the hither side of the Ganges; not so well known to the Greeks or Romans as the others were, by reason of the remoteness of their situation; nor so well discovered at the present: So that the best account we shall be able to give of (though that lame enough) will not be so exact and peculiar as of that before; with reference either to the times hereof in the times of the Ancients, or the affairs of it in these days.

Mountains of most note in it, 1 Bepyrus, 2 Maandrus, 3 Semanthinus; and 4 those called Damasi, touched upon before, in our general discourse of India. Out of which, and from other springs, flow these following Rivers, 1 Catabeda, 2 Borsanna, 3 Sadus, 4 Temala, 5 Bosynga, 6 Chrysaoras, 7 Polandas, 8 Attabas, these three last in the part hereof called the Golden Chersonese, 9 Daonas, and tenth Dorias, rising out of the Mountains called Damasi. Others there are whose names I meet with in my Author, but of no great note: by what names any of them now distinguished it is hard to say. Nor find I any who have dared to adventure on it.

Of the chief Towns, 1 Balanga, 2 Cirtatba, 3 Tasale, 4 Tagma, and 5 Maltburas, have the name of being the Metropolis of their several Nations, Triglyphon only honoured with the name of Regia: more memorable perhaps for the white Crows, and bearded Hens, which are said to have been thereabouts, than for being the Seat-Royal of some petty Prince. After these, 1 Sada on the banks of the River Sadus. 2 Samba, 3 Sabara, 4 Coly, 5 Zaba, and 6 Sinda, have the name of Cities. 7 Baracura, 8 Berabonna, 9 Bebynga, 10 Tacola, 11 Sabana, and 12 Thibonobastus, are marked out for the most noted Empories, or Towns of Trade: the memory of Sabana being still preserved in the Frith of Sabaon, betwixt this Chersonese and Sumatra. Others there are not noted by those special Adjuncts, of which, 1 Cocconagora, and 2 Balonca, in the Golden Chersonese. 3 Rbandamarcotta, in the Midlands. 4 Pentapolis; near the mouth of Ganges, called Antibolum; 5 Aganagara, near the Bay called Sinus Magnus; and 6 Corygaza, one of the principal Towns of the Maranda, may be some of the chief.

The old Inhabitants hereof, besides the Maranda last spoken of, were the Gangarides, and Gangæni, inhabiting on the banks of Ganges; the Tacoræi, bordering on the Mountain Bepyrus; as the Tilodæ on Maandrus; and the Animachæ and Cabocæ, near the hills called Damasi. The Basadæ, said to be crooked, short, and thick; but of a cheerful aspect, and clear complexion: of which composition also the Inhabitants of the Golden Chersonese were observed to be: the Barrie and Cudutæ, on the Bay called Sinus magnus; the Lestori, a thievish and pyratrical people, who lived in Caves, and were affirmed to be of so hard a skin, that it was not penetrable by an Arrow.

These

These with the rest too many to be here recited, issue in most likelyhood of Chavilah and Saba the Sons of Jocktan; of whom we find so many footsteps in Sabara Civitate, Sabaraco, Siam, Sabana Emporia, Sobanus Fluvius; and in the Countries now called Ava, and the Kingdom of Cavellan. Of any of their actions we find little in ancient stories, or of the power of any of their former Kings, but that it was given out in the time of Alexander, that beyond the Ganges lived a Prince called Agramenes (the most powerful King of all those Countries) able to bring into the field 200000 Foot, 20000 Horse, 3000 Elephants, and 2000 armed Chariots. With which report though Alexander was the more inflamed to try Masteries with him; yet his Soldiers were so terrified with it (remembering the hard bout which they had with Porus) that no persuasions could prevail with them to go further Eastward. Nor hear we much of them after this, unless the conversion of the Indians in the time of Constantine, may be applied to those on that side of the River, as perhaps it may.

As for the latter observations and discoveries of it we find it (as most barbarous Countries else till reduced to order) dismembred and subdivided into many Estates; almost as many Realms as Cities, and distinct governments amongst them, as Tribes and Nations. Most of them Gentiles in Religion, with whom the name of Christ and Christianity not so much as heard of, till the coming of the Jesuits thither; who have not only obtained leave but some invitations, for the promoting of the Gospel. And for Mahometanism, though it had got some footing on the Seacoasts of the Gulf of Bengala, lying most convenient for the trade of the Arabian Merchants: yet on the North, and midland parts, and those towards China, and the Oriental Seas, it was as little heard of as Christianity. But for the Kingdoms of this part, I mean the chief of them, to which as many of the rest who are worth the looking after are to be reduced, they are those, 1 Brama or Barma, 2 Cauchin-China, 3 Camboia, 4 Jangoma, 5 Siam, and 6 Pegu.

1. B R A M A.

THE Kingdoms of B R A M A or B A R M A have on the West, the River Ganges; on the North, part of Cathay in Tartary: on the East, Cauchin-China, and China; and on the South, the Kingdom of Pegu. So called from the Brachmanes, Bramanes, or Brames, possessed for many Ages past of these North-West Countreys. By the transposing of a Letter, they are now called the Kingdoms of Barma.

The Country of these Brames or Bramanes, extendeth Northwards from the nearest of the Peguan Kingdoms, for the space of 150 Leagues, but far more from West to East: watered with many great remarkable Rivers, issuing from the Lake Chiama, which though 600 miles from the Sea, and emptying it self continually into so many Channels, contains four hundred miles in compass, and is nevertheless full of waters for the one or the other.

By the overflowing of which Rivers, and commodiousness of the Lake, the Country is wonderfully enriched, as Egypt by the overflowings of Nilus. Which notwithstanding, there are in it many huge Forests, in the West especially; and therein many Lions, Tigers, Ounces, Serpents and other Creatures of a mischievous and hurtful Nature.

The whole Country containeth the Kingdom of 1 Calam, 2 Prom, 3 Melinta, 4 Miranda, 5 Bacan, 6 Tangu, 7 Ava, and 8 Brama.

Of 1 MELINTAY, and 2 MIRANDA, I find little written, but that they were conquered with the rest, by the Vice-Roy of Tangu, in the first rising of his fortunes becoming the foundation of his following greatness. Of 3 BACAM, it is said, that it is plentifully enriched with Mines both of Gold and Silver. In 4 CALVILAN, commonly and contractedly called CALAM, we find apparent foot-steps of the name of Cavilah the Son of Jocktan. Of the rest more is to be said, but not much.

5 PROMA, though it be a little Kingdom is exceeding populous, and stored with a warlike people. Given by the second King of Pegu of the Tangum Race, to a younger Son; who being by his Father commanded to the siege of Marmorian, which had then revolted, not only declined the service, but rebelled against him, and by the strength of this small Kingdom held it out three years. But seeing his Father's fortunes in a manner desperate, he repented of his disobedience, and went unto his aid with an Army of 50000 Men of his natural Subjects. Treacherously poisoned on the way by his chiefest Counsellour, for fear the Crime of his Revolt would be charged on him.

6. TANGU, is the name of one of these Braman Kingdoms, so called from the chief Town thereof: formerly subject with the rest to the Kings of Pegu, and governed by their several Vice-Roys. One of which taking his advantage of the wars between the Kings of Pegu and Siam, began to set up for himself; and husbanded his affairs so well, that he became sole Lord of the Braman Kingdoms; as afterwards of all the rest in this part of India. Not long enjoy'd by his Successour, when dispossessed and slain by one whom he married to his Sister, and made governour of this very Province. In which he bore himself so stiffly, that being sent for by his King to aid him against some of his Rebels, and to bring all the Inhabitants of the Country with him: he answered that he would send one half; to send all being unreasonable. Incensed with which denial, the King armed against him; but he put the Leaders to the sword, and seized their followers. After this being now in Arms, and despairing of reconciliation, he took upon himself the Title of King of Tangu; and to secure himself therein joyned with the King of Arrachan against his Sovereign: whom he most barbarously slew (after he had put himself into his hands) with his Wife and Children. Neither enjoyed he long the fruits of his villainy, subdued not long after, with the rest of these Indian Princes, by the of King Barma, of which more hereafter.

7. AVA, another of these Kingdoms, and one of the Plantations of Cavilah also, is liberally furnished with all things necessary for the life of Man. It affordeth also store of Rubies, which they dig out of the Mountains, a certain creature which breeds Musk, together with great plenty of Horses and Elephants. Their chief City is called Ava; which name it giveth to the River upon which it is built, issuing out of the Lake of Chiamor, or Chimai, and communicates the same to the whole Province. Subject for many Ages past to the King of Pegu, till conquered by the Vice-Roy of Tangu, as before is said; and by him given, with the Title of King, unto one of his brothers. Who rebelling against the Son and Successour of his Benefactor, and by him slain in single Combat, this Kingdom was conferred on a Son of the Conquerour. A Prince of more vertue than his Brother, and one who grew at last unto so great power, that in the bustle or combustions of the Kingdom of Pegu, he surprized or forced the Fort of Siriangh, formerly given to the Portugals by the King of Arrachan, slew all the Soldiers, and spitted Philip de Britto, who commanded it. After which, gathering together the dispersed Peguans, and repairing part of the City for them, he was likely to have made himself a good bargain by it; if the sudden coming of the King of Barma, had not spoiled his markets.

8. B R A M A or B A R M A, the most Southern of these Braman Kingdoms, the King whereof was Feudatarie to the Kings of Pegu, or of their appointment. Of no account when the Portugals came first acquainted with India, nor in many years after; now of most renown. For sitting still when all the rest of their neighbours were embroiled in wars, they gathered so much power and strength, that in the end, one of the later Kings hereof observing how the Forces of his neighbouring Princes were consumed, and their Treasures wasted, levied an Army of 300000 fighting Men, 20000 Elephants; with all things suitable. And with this power subdued the Kingdoms of Macin, and Arrachan; conquered the Cities of Pegu and Odia, (the two chief Cities of these parts) invaded the Kingdom of Siam, and possessed himself of it making in a little time all the lesser Princes to become his Tributaries, as they still continue.

2. CAUCHIN-CHINA.

CAUCHIN-CHINA is bounded on the West, with the Kingdoms of Brama; on the East, with part of the great Realm of China; on the North, extending towards Tartary; on the South bordering on Cambodia.

The Country aboundeth with Gold, Silver, Aloes, and great store of Silks, of which the Inhabitants make Taffata, and other stuffs. It affordeth also plenty of Porcellane earth which being made up into Cups, Dishes and other Utensils of household, is sold by the name of China-ware; well counterfeited of late amongst us, by putting a white crust on our Potters earth, as neat for use and shew as the natural China.

The people very stout and warlike, especially for Foot-service; though they have many horses here, and those fit for War. Well practised on their Pieces also, on which they spend great store of powder, but not so much in War, as in Sports and Triumphs: yet making much more than they spend, earth in some parts yielding very fit materials for that commodity. Trained up to Manufactures, especially to the making of Powder, Silks, and Porcellane, which they sell to the Chinese. Idolaters for the most part as are those of China, whose Characters and Language they also use: but so that there appear some inclinations unto Christianity, in many of them; who have erected many Crosses, and do admit the Pictures of our Blessed Virgin, and the final Judgment. Men not unlikely to have made a further Progress in the Gospel, if they had met with better Teachers than those Laymens Books.

The chief City hereof is called Cauchin-China by the name of the Province, situate on a River coming out of China, and passing hence into the bottom of a large and capacious Bay. The whole Country divided in three Provinces, and as many Kings; over which one Paramount: Cauchin-China, was, in Ancient Times, subject to the Kings of China, but it Revolted some Ages Since, and is now Subject to a Prince that is able to wage War with China. Belonging hereunto is a little Island called Ainao, ten miles from the Land, where the Inhabitants have a great trade of fishing for Pearls. The Portugals hold in this Continent many Towns and Cities, but no whole Provinces of Cauchin-China: Alexander de Rhodes, a French Jesuit, has lately given a Large Account of this Country.

3. CAMBOIA.

CAMBOIA is bounded on the North, with Cauchin-China, on the East and South, with the Ocean; on the West with part of the Kingdom of Siam, and the Realms of Jangoma. So called from Cambodia, the chief City of it. Divided commonly into the Kingdom of Champa, and Cambodia specially so called. This Kingdom is almost equally divided by a vast River which in July, or August overflows all the Country, as the Nile doth Egypt: The King of this Country is a great Friend to the Portugueses, as he of Siam is to the Dutch. Upon the most Eastern Branch (for there are Three of the River mentioned before) stands Cambodia, the Principal City, built upon a rising Ground to prevent the yearly Deluges. This Kingdom is extreme Fruitful, but not Potent, The King not being able to bring above 25 or 30000 Men into the Field. It was first discovered by Alphonso d'Albuquerque, in the year 1511, as Mandelo Smith. About the year 1550, The King of Cambodia was Slain by the Portugueses under the Walls of Diu; his Captains Divided the Kingdom, and fell to Civil-Wars amongst them themselves, till the King of Indostan, the Great Mogul, conquered it, Hackluit T. 2. p. 217. Cambodia lies in Long. 135. 00 Lat. 10. 35.

1. CHAMPA, the northern part hereof, bordereth on Cauchin-china; and is liberally provided of all necessities: besides which, there is plenty of Gold, and of the Wood called Lignum Aloes, prized at the weight thereof in Silver, much used in Bathes, and at the Funerals of great Persons. This a distinct Kingdom of it self, but subject with the rest to the King of Barma. The chief City of it, called by the name of Champa, which it communicates to the Country, is situate near the Sea-side, and of a very good traffick.

2. CAMFOIA specially so called, lyeth South of Champa, a very great and populous Country, well stored with Elephants and Rhinoceros, which last the Indians call Abades. It yieldeth also great plenty of Sweet-wood, which they call Calamba; as precious and as much esteemed of as the wood of Aloes, (if not the same, or some Species of it as I think it is) together with abundance of Rice, Flesh, and Fish; well watered with the River Mecon which issuing out of China, and having received many lesser streams falleth first into a great Lake of 200 miles compass, and thence into the Indian Ocean: making betwixt the Lake and that an hundred Islands. By the overflowings of this River the whole Country is enriched (as Egypt by the like overflowing of Nilus) the Inhabitants at those times betaking themselves to their upper Rooms, and passing altogether by boats from one place to another.

The people are conceived to be strong and warlike; though more inclined to Merchandize and Navigation, than to deeds of Arms. Idolaters of the worst kind, esteeming Men and Beasts of a like condition in regard of any future Judgment: of late beginning to set up, and adore the Cross, which is (it seems) the first Principle of Religion in which the Friers are wont to instruct their Converts. Not weaned as yet by these new Teachers, from burning the Women with their Husbands, common to them with many other Indian people, nor from burning their Nobles with the King, used only here; but voluntarily to express their loves, not upon constraint.

The chief Towns of it, 1 Cambodia, one of the three prime Cities of this part of India; the other two being Odia and Pegu, of which more anon. Situate on the River Mecon before it was destroyed; where it hath its fall into the Sea. Well traded, as the Staple for all this Country the Commodities whereof are brought hither, and here sold to the Merchants. 2 Cudurmuch, twelve Leagues from Cambodia, on the same River also. 3. Toul on the Sea-side in the very South-west Angle of all the Country. The Kings whereof, once absolute, and at their own disposing, till invaded by a vast Army of the neighbouring Laos: in which their King being slain, and his forces weakned, his Son and Successour was constrained to become a Vassal to the Crown of Siam. But fearing the loss of his Estate, when the Kingdom was made subject to the Kings of Pegu, in the year 1598. he applyed himself unto the Portugals, offered them a Peninsula (part of his Dominions) extending three Leagues into the Sea; and sent to the Jesuits for some of their Society to live and preach amongst the people. Not able for all these honest Policies to preserve himself from being made a Feudatary of the King of Barma.

4. JANGOMA.

JANGOMA, or the Country of LAOS, is bounded on the East, with Cambodia and Champa, from which parted by the River Mecon; on the West, with the River Pegu, by which divided from that Kingdom; on the South, with the Realm of Siam; on the North, with Brama.

It took its name from Jangoma the chief Province of it; the other two (for there are three of them in all) being those of Levea, and Curroy. All of them joyned together called the Country of Laos, by the name of the people.

ple. A mighty Nation and stout, by Religion Gentiles, naked from the middle upwards, and trussing up their hair like a Cap. Their Country very rich and level but very much neighbored by the Gauoni (Paulus Venetus giveth them the name of Gangigu) who possess the Mountains; whence falling in great companies to hunt for Men, whom they kill and eat they commit cruel butcheries amongst them. Inasmuch as this people, not able to defend themselves against their fury, or rather wanting good Leaders to conduct and order them (for it is said that they can make a Million of Men) were fain to put themselves under the protection of the King of Siam, whom they obeyed no farther than the humour took them.

Towns they have none of any note, except those three which give name to the several Provinces, and those of no note neither but for doing that. The people for the most part live on the banks of their Rivers, where they have Cottages of Timber, or else upon the Rivers in Boats and Shallops as the Tartarians of the Desarts in their Carts or Wheel-houses. One of their Rivers (commonly called the River of Laos) said to extend 400 Leagues within the Land, as far as Tartary, and China; and from July to September to invert its course, and flow back strongly towards its Fountain. Not governed by any certain rule or order, till they submitted to the Patronage of the King of Siam; and then no other than they listed: though for their sakes, that King engaged himself in a War against the Cannibals, their most deadly Enemies, accompanied with 25000 Foot, 20000 Horse, and 10000 Elephants. Secured by his protection from the teeth of those Cannibals, (of whom otherwise they had been devoured) in the year 1578. they descended the River in great multitudes, to the number of 200000; and fell into the Realm of Camboia: but they made an unprosperous adventure of it. For though the King of Camboia lost his life in the Battel, yet he gave them such a fatal Blow, that they were almost all slain, drowned, or captivated in the fight. Weakned wherewith they became an easy prey to the Vice-Roy of Tangu, when he first made himself sole Master of this part of India. Who giving to his Brother the Kingdom of Ava, and leaving to his eldest Son the Kingdom of Pegu, with the Sovereignty over all the rest, conferred this Country, with the Title of King of Jah-goma, on a younger Son. But he, begotten on a Daughter of the King of Pegu, and born after his Father had attained this whole Empire, was easily perswaded by the Talapies, (so they call their Priests) that his Title was better than that of his Elder Brother, who was born before it. Prevented in his claim by the Kings of Arracham and Tangu, by whom that King was slain, and his Kingdom wasted. How he sped afterwards I find not: But probable it is, that he submitted with the rest to the King of Barma.

5. S I A M.

S I A M is bounded on the North, with Tangoma, and part of Pegu; on all other parts, with the wide Ocean, save that it toucheth on the East, with a part of Camboia; and on the West with a Point of Pegu. So called from Siam the chief of all those Kingdoms which pass under this name as that from Siam the chief City of it.

The Country of greater length than breadth, stretcheth it self Southwards into the Sea many hundred miles, in form of a Peninsula or Demy-Island, called anciently Aurea Chersonesus, or the Golden Chersonese: one of the five famous Chersoneses or Peninsula's of the elder Writers; the other four being Peloponnesus in Greece, the Thracian Chersonese near Propontis, the Taurican Chersonese in the Euxine, and the Cimbrian Chersonese in the North of Germany; now part of Denmark. It had the name of Aurea, or the Golden, superadded to it, from its plenty of Gold, for which much celebrated by the Ancients, both Greeks and Romans, (and therefore not improbably thought by some to be Solomon's Ophir) still famous with the rest of the Countries of the Kingdom of Siam, for abundance of Gold, Silver, Tin, and other Metals; great quantity of Pepper sent yearly thence, with store of Elephants, and Horses. The whole Country very fat and fertile, well stored with Rice, Corn, Grass and all other necessities.

The people generally much addicted to pleasures, if not to Luxury, delighted much in Mulick and rich Apparel: and such as stand much upon their honour. For their instruction in good Letters they have Publick Schools, where their own Laws, and the mysteries of their own Religion are taught them in their natural Language; all other Sciences in strange Tongues understood by none but by the Learned. To Tillage they can frame themselves, and are painful in it; but by no means will follow any Mechanical Arts, which they put over to their Slaves. In Religion for the most part Gentiles, worshipping the four Elements amongst other Gods; to each of which as they are severally affected, so are their bodies to be disposed of: either burnt, buried, hanged or drowned, after their decease; as in their lives they were most devoted to the Fire, Earth, Air, or Water. Some Christians here also in and about the parts possessed by the Portugals, but more Alahumetans; who possessing 200 Leagues of the Sea-coasts of this Country, have planted that Religion in most parts of the Country now by them possessed.

It containeth in it many Kingdoms some of little note; Those of most observation, 1. Malaca, 2. Patane, 3. Jor, 4. Muantay, and 5. Siam, properly and especially so called. Of which Malaca is now in the hands of the Portugals, Jor and Patane are possessed by the Arabians, or Saracens, the other two have followed the fortunes of the Kings of Siam.

1. The Kingdom of MALACA, taketh up the South part of the Golden Chersonese, extended towards the North from the Cape or Promontory which Ptolemy calleth Malanconia, in the extreme South point hereof, near unto Sabana, then a noted Empory for the space of 270 miles. So called from Malaca the chief City of it, of old times called Musicana, or built very near it; from whence this Tract is called by Strabo, Musicana Terra. The City seated on the banks of the River Gaza, which is here said to be 15 miles in breadth; by the frequent overflowings whereof, and the nearness of it to the Line, (being but two degrees in the North) the Air hereof and all the Territory belonging to it, is very unwholsome; and for that cause the Country but meanly populous. In compass it is said to be 20 miles; of great wealth, because of almost infinite trading, for Spices, Unguents, Gold, Silver, Pearls and Precious Stones, the most noted Empory of the East. Inasmuch that it is said by Ludovico Barthema, who was there before the Portugals knew it, that it was traded by more Ships than any one City in the World; more by far since the coming of the Portugals to it, than it was before. The People (as in all this Tract) of an Ash-colour with long hair hanging over their faces, bloody and murderous; especially when they meet one another in the Night. Few other Towns of any note, in a place so unhealthy, except, 2. Sincapura, situate East from Malaca, near the Promontory of old called Magnum, supposed by some to be the Zaba of Ptolemy: and that more probably, than that it should be his Palura, as Maginus would have it; Palura being a City of the Hither India, and different at least 20 degrees of Longitude from any part of this Chersonese. But whatsoever it was called in the former times, it was in these late Ages the Mother of Malaca; the greatest part of the Trade and People being removed from thence to this newer foundation: before which time it was the best frequented Empory in these parts of the East. 3. Palo Zambilan, 120 miles on the West of Malaca, from whence to Sincapura, coasting about the Southern Cape (now called Lape Liampo) we have a Sea-shore of 270 miles, as before was said. No other habitation of any reckoning, but a few Sheds upon the shore for the use of Fisher-men, and some scattered Villages in the Land: the People dwelling most on Trees for fear of Tigers.

This Tract in former times possessed by the Kings of Siam, about the year 1258, became a Kingdom of it self; founded by Paramisera, and some other of the Javan Nobility, who flying the Tyranny of their own King, came into this Country; where they were lovingly received by Sangasinga, then reigning under the Siamite in Sincapura. Him they perfidiously slew, and invested Paramisera in his Dominion. Outed of which by the King of Siam, he was forced to seek a new dwelling; and after two or three removes, fell upon the place where Malaca now standeth: which City, pleased with the commodiousness of the situation, he is said to have built. The trade of Sincapura in a short time removed hither also, which so increased the wealth and power of the Kings hereof, that joyning with the Moors, who began to plant themselves on the shores adjoining and receiving withal the Law of Mahomet, they began to cast off all subjection to the Kings of Siam, to whom the Son and Successour of Paramisera had submitted his new raised Kingdom, and became their Homager. Incensed wherewith, the Siamite about the year 1500, sent out a Navy of 200 Sail to distress it by Sea; and an Army of 30000 Men and 400 Elephants to besiege it by Land. But before he was able to effect any thing, hindred by tempests, and the insolencies of some of his Soldiers, the Portugals in the year 1511 under the conduct of Albuquerque, had possessed themselves of it, who built there a Fortrefs and a Church. And though Alodinus the Son of the expelled King (whose name was Mahomet) endeavoured the regaining of his Estate, and that the Saracens, Hollanders, and the Kings of Jor, and Achen (two neighbouring Princes) envying the great fortunes of the Portugals, have severally and successively laboured to deprive them of it: yet they still keep it in defiance of all opposition which hath been hitherto made against them. This City stands on the Western shore, in Longitude 127, 25. Latitude 03, 40. and was subject to the King of Ibor, till the Portugals in the year 1511, took it from him under Alphonso Albuquerque: and in the year 1640, the Dutch took it from them, after a Siege of six months. It is a celebrated Mart, and has a large Haven, and a strong Castle, and a River of the same name with the City but lying a mile from it to the South-East. This was the second Government depending on the Vice-Roy of Goa, by reason of the Customs paid here by all the Ships which went to the East. Tavernier, Part 2. Pag. 75. The Hollanders can now hardly get enough to pay the charge of their Garrison which is here kept, 1660.

2. North unto that of Malaca, lyeth the Kingdom of Y O R, J O R, or J O H O R, so called of Jor or Johor, the chief City of it. Inhabited for the most part by Moors, or Saracens, Mahometanism by their means prevailing on the Natives of the Country also. A Kingdom of no great extent, but of so much power, that joyning his Land-Forces with the Navy of the King of Achen, he besieged Malaca, and built a Royal Fort before it; in which when taken by Paul de Lima by the defeat of this King, were found 900 Pieces of Brass-Ordinance. After this picking a quarrel with the King of Paban, he burnt his Houses, Barns, Provisions, and the Suburbs of his City it self; but in the course of his affairs was interrupted by the King of Achen (one of the Kings in the Isle of Sumatra) his old Confederate; who after 29 days siege took the City of Jor. What afterwards became of this King or Kingdom I am not able to resolve. In former times it did acknowledge him of Siam for the Lord in chief.

3. More Northward yet lyeth the Kingdom of P A T H A N E, denominated from Patane, the chief City of it: but different from Patane in the other India, as Cleveland in York-shire from Cleveland in Germany; or Holland in the Low-Countries from Holland in Lincoln-shire, as hath been fully shewn before. The City made of Wood and Reed, but artificially wrought and composed together; the Mesquit only (most of the people being Adabometans) is built of brick. The Chinois make a great part of the Inhabitants of it, insomuch that in this small City there are spoken three Languages, viz. the Chinese, used by that people; the Malayan, (or Language of Malaca) which is that of the Natives; and the Siam, to the King whereof this small Crown is Feudatary. Built of such light stuff and combustible matter, it must needs be in great danger of fire; and was most miserably burnt in the year 1613, by some Javan Slaves in revenge of the death of some of their fellows: at which time the whole City was consumed with fire, the Mesquit the Queen's Court and some few Houses, excepted only. The Country, Governed of late years by Queens, who have been very kind to the English and Hollanders, granting them leave to erect their Factories, in Patane. Not memorable for any great exploit by them performed, but that a late Queen a little before that dismal fire, offended with the King of Pan or Paban, who had married her Sister, and reigned in a little Island not far off, she sent against him a Fleet of 70 Sail, and 4000 Men; by which compelled to correspond with her desires, he brought his Queen and her Children with him to make up the breach.

4. The Kingdom of Siam, strictly and specially so called, is situate on the main land (the rest before described being in the Chersoneuse) betwixt Camboia on the East, Pegu on the West, the Kingdom of Muantay on the North, and the main Ocean on the South. The chief Cities of it 1. Socotai, memorable for a Temple made wholly of metal 80 spans in height, raised by one of the Kings; it being the custom of this Country, that every King at his first coming to the Crown, is to build a Temple; which he adorned with high Steeples, and many Idols. 2. Quedoa, renowned for the best Pepper, and for that cause very much frequented by foreign Merchants. It is seated upon the Promontory of Malaca, over against Sumatra. Longitude 125, 31. Latitude 5. 50. It has an excellent port, and a very great Trade, being the Capital of a Kingdom of the same name which was subject to the King of Siam; but has now a Prince of its own. 3. Tavay, upon the Sea-Coast where it joyneth to Pegu. Whence measuring along the shores till we come to Champa before mentioned, being all within the Dominions of the King of Siam (not reckoning the Chersoneuse in this account) we have a Sea-Coast of the length of 600 Leagues. 4. Lugor, upon the Sea-side also, near that little Isthmus, which joyneth the Chersoneuse to the Land; from whence to Malaca, is 600 miles sail all along the Coast. 5. Calantan, the Head-City of a little Kingdom but subject to the Crown of Siam. 6. Siam, the chief City of this part of the Kingdom, which it giveth this name to. A goodly City, and very commodiously seated on the River Mecam, for Trade and Merchandize. So populous and frequented by foreign Nations, that besides the Natives, here are said to be thirty thousand households of Arabians. The houses of it high-built by reason of the Annual deluge, during which time they live in the Upper-rooms; and unto every house a Boat for the use of the Family. Those of the poorer sort dwell in little sheds, made of Reed and Timber; which they remove from place to place for the best convenience of their Markets: and yet so strong, that being besieged by the Tanguan Conquerour, then King of Pegu, Anno 1567, with an Army of fourteen hundred thousand fighting Men, for the space of 20 months together, it resolutely held good against him: not gained at last by Force, but Treason; one of the Gates being set open to him in the dead time of the night, and by that means the City taken. The people hereof are thought to be inclining to Christianity; but hitherto so ill instructed in the Principles of it, that they maintain amongst many other strange opinions, that after the end of 2000 years, (from what time I know not) the World shall be consumed with fire; and that under the ashes of it shall remain two Eggs, out of which shall come one Man and one Woman, who shall people the World anew. Siam and the Forests are no less pestered with Lions, Tigers, Rhinoceroses, Apes, and Serpents. The Rivers are large but full of Cataracts and Crocodiles of a monstrous bigness, that devour Men if they

they be not very careful; but the water is wholsom, and makes the Earth very fruitful. Siam the Capital City is 3 Leagues in circuit, seated on a River-Island. The Inhabitants are all Slaves to the King or the great Men. The King is one of the richest Princes of the East; but a Tributary to China, which borders on him to the North-East: He and all his Subjects are Pagans. It is thought there are above 200000 Bonzas or Priests in this Nation, wonderfully revered by the King himself, but if they prove Traitors to him, he makes no scruple to execute them. In the year 1665, Father Thomas a Neapolitan Jesuit, taught them to fortifie Siam after the modern way, for which he was much honoured by the King and had a House given him in the City. Tavernier, Part 2. Cap. 18. Lib. 3. It has five Wall'd Towns, India &c. The Soil of it is very fertile as to Rice and other Corn, and nourishes plenty of wild and tame Beasts; the Inhabitants are great lovers of Mechanick Arts; the meanest Man has Land of his own, that he cultivates with great industry. All the Kings furniture is solid Gold. This Kingdom has Mines of Gold and Silver; Lead and Pewter, and Brasil-wood. The Soldiery has no pay from this rich King, but an allowance of Rice for their diet, and are indeed no other than his Slaves, and treated accordingly in times of Peace. The common people are Rich and Gawdy in Apparell, and very chaste in their behaviour tho' Pagans, especially the married Parties; but they allow Polygamy and Divorces. They protect all Nations that come thither, English, Dutch, Portugals and Moors, equally with their own people; which encrease the Strength, Arts and Wealth of this Nation. Struy's.

The City of Siam, Odia, Udia, the vast Capital of the Kingdom of Siam, is seated on the East side of the River Menna, 3 Leagues from the Indian Ocean in the Latitude of 15.00. in a large Plain; and doth every day grow greater. Some think it was anciently called Samarada; there is a branch of the River runs through the City, Baudrand. In 1567, the King of Pegu came before this City with an Army of a million and 400000 Men, and besieged it 21 months, and then took it with the loss of 500000 of his Men, one of the Gates being betrayed to him in the night. I was then in Pegu, and saw the King return with the spoils of that City. Mr. Frederick an Italian, Hackluit, Tom. 2. Pag. 229, 259.

5. MUANTAY, the last of these Kingdoms, lieth betwixt Jangoma and Siam, memorable for nothing more than the City of Odia, or Udia, the principal of all the Kingdoms of Siam; and the usual residence of those Kings. Situate on the banks of the River Caipumo, and containing in it 400000 Inhabitants, of which 50000 are trained to the Wars, and in continual readiness for present service. For tho' this King be Lord of nine several Kingdoms, yet he useth none of them in his Wars but the natural Siamites and those of this City, and the rest of his Subjects of Muantay. It is said that for the use of this City only (being seated like Venice upon many little Islands, not bridged together) there are no fewer than 200000 Skiffs or Shallops, serving to waft the people from one place to another. By means hereof of great strength, and almost impregnable. But being beleaguered by the Tanguan or Bramin Conquerour, with 1000000 fighting Men (an Army big enough to have buried a greater City than this, if every Man had but cast a shovel full of earth upon it) it was won at last.

The Government of these Kings of Siam, was absolute heretofore, if not tyrannical, he being sole Lord of all the Land in his Kingdoms; which he either gave to his Nobles, or Farmed out to Husband-men, during life or pleasure, but never passed over unto any the right of inheritance. And these he grants unto his Subjects, besides rents in money upon condition to maintain a determinate number of Horse, Foot, and Elephants: thereby enabled without further charge unto the Subject, to levy 20000 Horse, and 250000 Foot, for present service; besides far greater numbers out of the residue of his people, if occasion be. And for his ordinary Guard he was said to keep 6000 Soldiers, and 200 Elephants, of which Beasts he is reported to have 3000, of which every tenth Elephant is trained up to the War. By reason of so great a power he became Master of the Realms of Cambaya and Campa; held those of Malacca, Tor, Pahm, and Putane, as his Vassals and Tributaries; with that of Jangoma and the Lao, under his Protection. But when the fatal time was come, and that his City of Siam was betrayed to the King of Pegu, he poisoned himself upon the news, his Son becoming Tributary to the Peguan Victor. This Son of his too much a Prince to be a Subject, revolted from a Son of the Peguan, a vicious and tyrannical King, degenerating from the gallantries of so worthy a Father; by whom he was besieged in Siam with 900000 fighting Men. Unable to resist his Army if he had presently declared such a resolution, he entertained the King with Treaties, and promises of delivering the City to him, till the third month after, (which was March;) when ordinarily the River was to overflow all the Country, for 120 miles about: by which sudden and violent inundation and the Sword together (the Siamites waiting diligently for the opportunity) there perished all of this great Army except 70000. After this blow, the conquering Siamite, Anno 1600, besieged and endangered the City of Pegu, of which more anon; and dying in the year 1603, left his Estate unto his Brother. Whose Son succeeding settled a Factory in Siam of the English Merchants, Anno 1612. and was in a fair way of obtaining the Sovereignty of Pegu, then destroyed and wasted, if the violent and unresistable coming of the King of Barma had not crossed him in it: to whom now subject with the rest of the Indian Princes on that side of the River.

6. P E G U.

P E G U is bounded on the East, with Jangoma and a part of Siam; on the North, with the Kingdoms of Brama; on the West and South, with the Kingdom and Gulf of Bengala. So called from Pegu the chief City. as that by the name of the River upon which it standeth. Divided commonly into the Kingdoms and Estates of 1 Verma, 2 Macbin, 3 Orachan, 4 Martavan, and 5 Pegu specially so called.

1. VERMA is the name of a small Kingdom bordering upon Bengala; and so denominated from Verma the chief Town thereof. A Kingdom which hath no Port or Haven at all; and therefore wholly freed of Moors and Mahometans, which can be said of no other of these Indian Kingdoms.

The people black, naked above the Waste, and covered beneath it only with a Vail of Cotton; in matter of Religion, Gentiles; and in war, right valiant. This last apparent by the long and frequent Wars which they had with the Peguans; to whom made tributary in conclusion, but not fully conquered.

2. MACHIN, so called from Macin the chief City thereof, is another of these Peguan Kingdoms. Of small esteem, but for the great quantity of the Sweet-wood, by the Latines called Lignum Vitæ, by the Natives Calamba, so much in use for Funerals and Bathes, (as was said before) held also by the Indians for a sovereign and unparalleled Medecine against many dangerous diseases; great quantities hereof are brought hence yearly by the Merchants. One of the first Kingdoms which was conquered by the King of Barma, (upon whom it borderth) in the beginning of his Fortunes.

3. ORACHAN, or Arrachan, lieth on the West of Macin, and the South of Verma, environed round with Mountains, and impassable Woods. Chief Towns whereof, 1 Dianga, taken and destroyed by the Portugals, in the quarrels betwixt them and the King of Arrachan, Anno 1608. 2 Sundiwa, situate in an Island unto which it giveth name, six Leagues off from the Continent of Bengal, to which it formerly belonged. Subdued by the Portugals, Anno 1602. And from them taken by this King about two years after; and made a member of his Kingdom.

The

The Island 30 Leagues in compass, very strong, fruitful, and the Town well fortified. 3 Arrachan, the Head-City, which gives name to all, distant from the Sea 45 miles, but seated on a large and capacious River. The King and Kingdom of no note, till the Ruins of Pegu, to the Crown whereof it once pertained. In the Desolation of which State the King hereof combining with him of Tangu, besieged the Second Peguan King in the Castle of Mucac; and had betwixt them the whole Pillage of that wealthy City, together with the Possession of the best Towns of it. After this victory, he returned to Arrachan in triumph leading with him the White Elephant of the King of Pegu, sumptuously adorned; the Brother and two Sons of the Peguan following in the Pageant. A solemn and magnificent entry. The better to assure himself of his new Dominions, this King bestowed upon the Portugals the Fort of Siriangh on the River Pegu. For which favour, ill-requited by the Portugals, who had taken his Son, and put him to a grievous ransom, they brake out into open Wars. In the pursuit whereof, after many losses, the King recovered from them the Isle of Sundiva; and manning out a Fleet of 1200 Sail (of which 75 were of so great burden, as to carry every one twelve Pieces of Ordnance) and in that Fleet 30000 Souldiers, 8000 hand-guns, and 3500 great Pieces, besieged the Fortress: assisted in that action also by the King of Tangu. And though he failed in his design, yet like enough he had prevented the King of Ava, who took it in the year 1613. as before is said, had he not been outed in the mean time of his own Kingdom by the King of Burma: of whose great rise, the conquering of the Realms of Achin and Arrachan were the first foundation.

4. MARTAVAN, the richest of these Kingdoms, lieth South to Arrachan, a little turning towards the West. The soil so fertile, that it yieldeth three Harvests in a year; and sent annually fifteen Ships to Cochin, and as many to Mulaca, laden with Rice. Rich also in Mines of Iron, Lead, Steel, Brass, Silver, Gold and Rubies, and very liberally provided of Springs and Rivers. The Forests well stored with Harts, Boars, and Buffles; store of Pines and Palms: the Woods with Sugar-Canes, many excellent fruits; the ordinary herbs and shrubs either Medicinal or Odoriferous. The principal City of it called also Martavan, situate on a Haven open at all times of the year and not choaked with Sands, as usually other Havens are in the Indian Winter: of great trading, much splendour, and a temperate air. Faithful unto the last to the Crown of Pegu, to the Kings whereof their own were subject; and in that constancy they twice repulsed the King of Siam, who then had conquered the most part of the Kingdom of Pegu. Angry whereat, the Siamite caused two of his cowardly Captains to be cast into a Caldron of scalding Oyl; and at the third Assault became Master of it. Bannalatus the old King hereof (99 years old) with his heir apparent, and 200000 of his Subjects being compelled to hide themselves in the Woods and Desarts. This City is styled Martavan, in Hackluit T. 2. p. 232. Where is the History of a notable Tumult made by the Portugueses in 1557. The Kingdom, belonging to it, lyes between that of Pegu to the North; and Ligor, a Promontory of the Kingdom of Siam to the South.

5 PEGU, the most Predominant Kingdom, lieth like a Crescent or Half-Moon on the Gulf of Bengala; extending on the coast from Negrats unto Tavan, the next Town of Siam, for the space of three hundred miles, and upwards; but little less in breadth, if not quite as much. So called from the River Pegu, which runs through the midst of it, and gives this name also unto Pegu the most noted City.

The Soil hereof exceeding fruitful, by reason of the annual overflowings of the River, which do yearly fatten it, fit to bear wheat, and of Rice yielding an incredible quantity. It affordeth also many Rubies, great numbers of Civet-Cats, plenty of Lacca, (a Gum there made by Ants, as here Bees make Wax) store of Elephants, and abundance of Parrots, which speak plainer, & are much fairer than in any place else.

The people of mean stature, somewhat corpulent, and naturally beardless. If any straggling hair thrust forth, they always carry Pincers with them to pull them out. Nimble and strong, but not very fit for War; spending too much of their strength in the love of Women, to whom most passionately addicted. They black their teeth because they say that dogs teeth are white; and wear no cloaths but on their heads and about their nakedness. Said by the Jews to be descended from some of the Tribes of Israel, confined hither by Solomon; but by the Peguans themselves, to be begotten of a Dog and a China-woman, which were saved here upon a Shipwrack. By Religion for the most part Gentiles, imagining innumerable Worlds one after another, and a determinate number of Gods for every World: more Orthodox, in assigning after this life according to the merits of the party deceased, one place of Torments, and another of Delights and Pleasures, if they had not added a third also for satisfaction.

Chief Cities of this Kingdom, 1 Cosmi, seated in a Territory full of Woods, as those Woods of Tigers, Wild Boars, Apes, and Parrots; the houses made of Canes, which serve here for Timber, (some of them being as big as Hogheads) covered over with Thatch. 2 Jocabel, a great City on the River Pegu. 3. Dian, on the same River also, where they make Barks or Vessels as big as Galleasses; which serve both for Trade and Habitation. 4 Coron, a City four square, and each square four miles. 5 Lanagon, a pleasant Town, and full of Palm-trees. 6 Dala, in which were the King's Stables for his ordinary Elephants; his four White Elephants (for so many he had) being always kept about the Court, not seen abroad, but in great solemnities, when trapped in Furnitures of Gold; and no less honoured by the people, than the King himself: called therefore King of the White Elephants by the neighbouring Princes. 7 Silvanpede, where many victualling Barks are made to serve for dwelling on the Sea. 8 Mecac, where they use to unload such goods, as are to pass by Land to Pegu. Neighbour'd by the strongest Castle in all this Kingdom, and therefore chosen by the King for his place of Retreat, when distressed by the Kings of Arrachan and Tangu. To the last of which making choice to yield up his Person, with his Wife and Children, because he had marry'd him to his Sister, he was by him perfidiously and basely murdered. 9 Siriang, a strong place on the mouth of the River, given by the King of Arrachan to the Portugals, and by them committed to the keeping of Philip de Britto, in the year one thousand six hundred, or thereabouts. Who having made it good against him, and the King of Tangu his associate for the space of thirteen years together, was at last forced to yield himself Prisoner to the King of Ava, by whom cruelly tortured on a Spit. 10 Pegu, the glory of these parts, great, strong, and beautiful: Divided into two Towns, the Old and the New; the Old inhabited by Merchants, the New by the King and his Nobility. The Houses made of Wood but covered with Tiles: a Coco-Tree before every house yielding a comfortable shade, and a pleasant shew. The streets as straight as any line and so broad that ten or twelve Men may ride a-breast in the narrowest of them. In figures square, each square having five Gates, besides many Turrets, all of them beautifully gilded. The whole well walled with Walls of stone environed on all sides with great Ditches; and in the midst the Royal Palace, walled and ditched about, most sumptuously gilded; but especially the Temple or Idol-chappel, the walls whereof were hid with Gold, the Roof tiled with Silver. Pegu is in truth Two Cities, The Old and the New but the first is the Place of Trade. The City is not great, but the Suburbs are vast, and is built with Reeds and covered with Leaves, and so very Subject to Fires. In the New City is the Royal Palace which was built in 1568. It is a great City, very plain and Flat, four Square, Secured by Walls and a Ditch full of Water. It hath 20 Gates, but no Draw-Bridges: The

The Streets are the Fairest I ever saw, and straight as a Line from Gate to Gate, and as broad as 10 or 12 Men may ride a-breast, planted on both sides with Indra-Nits. The Houses are of Wood, covered with Tiles; the place is in the middle like a Castle, but built with Wood, Gilded, Ditched, Walled, and Moated round, Hackluit. T. 2. p. 234.

The Kingdom of Pegu was, Once, a most Potent Empire, but is now much diminished: It lies between the Kingdom of Tungking to the East, and that of Arrachan to the West. About the Year 1567. One, who was in this Kingdom, assures us the King of Pegu besieged Siam with an Army of a Million and 400,000 Men, and took it after 21 Months. He had then Vast Treasures of Gold and Silver, Mines of Rubies, Sapphires, Spinels; and he had 26 Crowned Kings, that were his Vassals. Hackluit. T. 2. p. 236. The Goods exported hence are Gold, Silver, Benjamin, Long-Pepper, Lead, Lacca, Rice, Wine, Sugar, p. 239. This Gentleman who gives the Account, was here in 1569. Hackluit Tom. 2. p. 258.

In this magnificent Palace lived the Peguan Kings, in as much pomp and pleasure as the World could yield: his Empire not extending only over these Kingdoms now described, but over all the Provinces or Kingdoms of the Bramines also; which he governed by his several Vice-Roys, or rather TRIBUTARIE Kings. A happiness too great to continue long. For in the year 1567 the Vice-Roy or Tributary King of Tangu, by the aid of his Faction, and reputation of his Vertues, entred into rebellion; and slaying the Nobles of the Land, usurped that Kingdom. After this he subdued the Cities and Kingdoms of Calam, Mehintay, Prom, Miranda, and Ava, inhabited all of them by the Brames or Bramines, and therefore taking to himself the Title of the King of Brama, because his frame and fortunes took their rise from his victories over them. Following the course of his successes he first assayed the Cities of Odia, and Siam, but repulsed with loss. To make amends for which misfortune, he beleaguered Pegu, and subdued it; and by the reputation which he got in that action, returning to the siege of Siam, had it yielded to him. Dying, he gave the Kingdom of Ava unto one of his Brothers; that of Prom, to one of his Grand-sons; the Kingdom of Jangoma to a younger Son, but born after the time of his obtaining the Crown of Pegu; and finally that of Pegu, with the Sovereignty over all the rest, to his eldest Son, a Prince of a vicious and tyrannical nature: and not more cruel to his Subjects, than they disobedient to him. Whereupon preparations are made on both sides, the people, to defend their liberty; the King, to preserve his Royalty.

During these civil disorders, the barbarous Kan-ai-Siam, whose late overthrow was not yet fully digested, came violently into the Country of Pegu; burning Cities, Churches, and Fruits; killing Men, Woman, and Child: and having finished his Fury, returned to his home. This Spoil of the Fruits of the Earth, was but a poor recompence to an unsupportable Famine, which consumed all the Inhabitants of this flourishing Kingdom, except such who in the Granaries of the City of Pegu preserved some store. For here the Fathers devoured their Children, the stronger preyed upon the weaker; not onely devouring their more fleshy parts, but their entrails also: nay they broke up the skulls of such as they had slain, and sucked out their brains. This calamity incited another Tributary Prince of Tangu to make his best advantage out of his neighbour's affliction; though made his Brother-in-law, and advanced to great honours by his Father. For justly fearing the displeasure of his angry Prince, to whose aid he had refused to come, when sent for by him, he joyned himself with the King of Arrachan, besieged his Lord and Sovereign in the Fort of Alacm. Brought to extremities the unfortunate Prince, thought best to put himself into the hands of his Brother of Tangu, who entered and entred Pegu: where he found as much Treasure as 600 Elephants, and as many Horses, as he could conveniently carry away. This havock being made, he villainously murdered the King, Queen, and their Children and departed; leaving the gleanings of his spoil to the King of Arrachan: who, Anno, 1600. was expelled by the King of Siam, who enjoyed it not long. For the King of Burma having with an Army of an hundred thousand fighting Men, and forty thousand Elephants, subdued the Kingdoms of Alacin, and Arrachan, followed the currents of his Victories; conquered Siam; drove the King thereof from PEGU: where he hath built a most magnificent Palace, and is now the sole Monarch of the Twelve Kingdoms of this India.

A more particular relation of this King, and his new-settled estate, we cannot yet understand: what his Revenues are, what his Government, what his Forces; Merchants, whose inquisitiveness into the State-Matters of other Princes, is dangerous to their trading, cannot give us any full satisfaction: Scholars and Statists are not permitted to observe; and such of the Natives as could give us the most light, are not suffered to travel. Onely we may conjecture by the great wealth of those several Princes, and the vast Armies by them raised in their several Territories, That his Annual Revenues, Casualties, and united Forces must be almost infinite.

And so much for INDIA.

O F

The Oriental Islands.

THE ORIENTAL ISLANDS, so called from their situation in the Oriental, or Eastern Seas, may be divided into the Islands of 1 Japan; 2 the Philippinæ, and Isles adjoining; 3 the Islands of Bantam; 4 the Moluccoes; 5 those called Sinda, or the Celebes; 6 Borneo; 7 Java; 8 Sumatra; 9 Ceilan; and 10 certain others of less note.

1. J A P A N.

J A P A N is an aggregate body of many Islands, separated by small Gulfs, Straights, and Turnings of the Sea; but taking name from Japan, the chief of all. Some reckon them to be 66 in all; others ascribe that number to so many Kingdoms, into which these Islands (be they in number more or less) use to be divided. But whatsoever the number be (the certainty whereof I can no where find) there are three only of account, to which the several petty Kingdoms are now reduced, that is to say, 1 Japan specially so called, which containeth 53 Kingdoms, of which 26 are under the King of Meaco, 12 under the King of Amagunce, the other 15 under other Princes of inferiour note. 2 Ximo which containeth in it nine Realms, the principal whereof are those of Bungo and Figen. 3 Xicoum, which comprehendeth four only of these petty Seignories.

J A P A N, the chief of all these Islands, to which the residue may be accounted of but as Appurtenances, is situate over against the Straights of Amian (if such Straights there be) towards which it looketh to the North: distant from new Spain on the East 150 Leagues, or 450 English miles and 60 Leagues from Cantan a Province of China opposite to it on the West. On the South it hath the vast Ocean, and those infinite shoals of Islands which are called the Philippine, and the Isles neighbouring upon them. Extending in length from West to East 200 Leagues, but the breadth not proportionable thereunto: in some places not above 10 Leagues over, and in the broadest part but 30.

The Country Mountainous and barren, but a very healthy air, if not too much subject to cold, yet in some places they have Wheat ripe in the Month of May; but their Rice, which is their Principle sustenance, they gather not before September. The surface of the Earth, cloathed with Woods and Forests, in which some Cedars of so tall and large a body, that one of them onely is sufficient to make a Pillar for a Church: the bowels of it stored with divers Metals, and amongst others with such inexhaustible Mines of Gold, that Paulus Venetus reporteth some of the Palaces of their Kings to be covered, in his time with sheets of Gold, as ours in Europe are with Lead. But I find no such matter in our latter Travellers. Their Fields and Meadows full of cattel, and hitherto not made acquainted with the making of Butter; their Fens much vilited by wild Ducks, as their house-yards with Pigeons, Turtles, Quails and Pullets.

The people for the most part of good understanding, apt to learn, and of able memories; cunning and subtil in their dealings. Of body vigorous and strong, accustomed to bear Arms until 60 years old. Their complexion of an Olive-Colour, their beards thin, and the one half of the hair of their heads shaved off. Patient they are of pain, ambitious of glory, incapable of suffering wrong, but can withal dissemble their resentments of it till opportunity of revenge. They reproach no Man for his poverty, so it come not by his own unthriftiness, for which cause they detest all kinds of gaming, as the ways of ill husbandry; and generally abhor Slander, Theft, and Swearing. Their mourning commonly is in white, as their feasts in black; their teeth they colour black also, to make them beautiful: they mount on the right side of the horse, and sit (as we are used to rise) when they entertain. In Physick they eat salt things, sharp, and raw; and in their salutations they put off their shoes. The very Antipodes of our World in customs though not in sight, and the true Type or Figure of the old English Puritan, opposite to the Papists in things fit and decent, though made ridiculous many times by that opposition. In other things they do much resemble those of China, if not the more ceremonious of the two: washing their Infant-children in the nearest River, as soon as born, and putting off their shoes when they go to meat.

The People have but one Language, but so intermingled with the words of other Nations, that it seems rather to be many Languages than one. They have long used the Art of Printing, which probably enough, they might have from China: the Characters whereof are a kind of Brachygraphy, and signifie not onely Letters, but some whole Words also. In matters of Religion, Gentiles, adoring anciently the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven; and giving divine honour to wild beasts, and the Stags of the Forests: but specially worshipping some of their deceased Priests and Princes; by the names of Fotoques and Cames; to the first of which they use to pray for goods of the other World, and to the last for Temporal blessings. Their Priests they call by the name of Bonzes, settled in goodly Convents, and endowed with very large Revenues: who though divided into eleven different (if not contrary) Sects, do well enough agree in denying the Providence of God, and the immortality of the Soul. Of late times by the care and diligence of the Jesuits, Christianity hath begun to take footing here; whether with such a large increase as their Letters called Epistolæ Japonicæ have been pleased to tell us, I am somewhat doubtful. They tell us there of some Kings of these Islands, whom they have converted and baptized, that within 50 miles of Meaco they had 50 Churches, 200 at the least in all, and that in the year 1587. the number of their Converts were two hundred thousand. Of this, if the one half be true, we have great cause to praise God for it, and to give them the commendation of their pains and industry; not letting pass the memory of the first Advertiser, who was Father Xavier, one of the first foundation of this Society, (employed in this business by Ignatius, the first founder of it) who landed here about the year 1556.

It lyes 36. Degrees North, from the Line, the Country is hilly and Subject to great Snows and is much colder and Poorer than Portugal, and yet it has plenty of Silver-Mines; the People are civil, courteous and very honest in their Dealings, very proud, and very poor Hackluit. T. 2. p. 2. p. 80. The Cities in it are Meaco, Cangoxima, Coia, Negru, Homi, Frænoi, and Blandu. 16. p. 81. It is supposed to be an Island of 150 German miles in Length and Seventy in breadth. The Inhabitants are all under One Prince, Heathen Idolaters, and the Sworn Enemies of Christianity, which had begun to take some rooting amongst them, by the Preaching of the Portugueses but was extirpated by fire, and Sword, and the bloodiest persecution that ever was practised amongst Men. The Dutch who Trade here are secured with the utmost caution, that they may not Surprize any part of the Shore, or build any Fort, or do any other Act, whereby they may settle themselves, nor will they permit them to see any more of the Country than one small Peninsula, or of the Inhabitants than those they are to Trade with; and for a long time they would not permit them to Land, or buy or Sell till they had renounced their Christianity. This Island lyes 60 Leagues from Cantan a Province of China to the East. The Country is Mountainous and generally barren, but yet maintains a vast number of Cattel; yet the Inhabitants know not how to make either Butter or Cheese. This Island which was totally unknown to the Ancients, was first discovered by Antonio Mota a Portuguese in 1542. The Jesuits in 1556. Sent Xavier to Preach here, and at first they had great Success; insomuch that in the year 1587. they pretended to have gained over 200000 converts. But this Lasted not long, for about the year 1629, they began so dreadful a persecution, as is no where to be met with, and these New converts being not well grounded in their New Religion Apostatized so fast, that in 20 years there were very few Christians to be found, and perhaps at this time there are none. This Country lyes in 35 Degrees of Lat. and the Principal City of it is Meaco, though the Emperour of late resided at Jendo. On the coast of this Island are found excellent Pearl, but they are not much sought for because the Natives regard no Jewels. Tavern. p. 2. p. 145. This Empire consists of several Islands Seated North-East, of China and yields the greatest quantity of Gold of any Kingdom in Asia. 16. p. 156. This which has been represented as one Island is indeed a knot of Isles, Nippon, Ximo, or Sayock and Xicock, being 3 distinct Kingdoms. Nippon, is divided into 5 Provinces (viz) Jamajoit, Jetsessen, Quanto and Ochio. The Capital City is Yeddo which is now 3 Leagues long and as many broad, very populous and close built; the Summer is very hot and the Winter is as cold; Whirlwinds and Earth-Quakes are so common that they are not feared. The Country is barren by default of the Natives, rather than by the Nature of the Soil. The Air is healthful, the waters good, the Natives fair and well bodied, very hardy and valiant by nature and Custom. In great Towns the most of them can write and read. Their houses are built with Timber mostly, and covered within with fine Matts; which are their beds, Couches and Tables. Of old 300 or 400 years since it was all Subject to one Prince, now divided into 66 Kingdoms; the cause of Endless Wars Hackluit. T. 2. p. 2. p. 82.

Rivers of note I find not any, though the Island be generally well watered, more memorable for two Mountains in it, than for all the Rivers. One of which called Pigenoituma, is said to transcend the clouds in height; the other other (but without a name) useth to cast forth dreadful flames, like Sicilian Aetna: on the top whereof the D-ent, environed with a white and shining cloud, doth sometimes show himself unto such of his Notaries, as live about this hill an abstemious life, like the ancient Hermites.

Chief Cities of the whole Islands, 1 Meaco, seated in Japan and the chief of that Island, formerly 21 miles in compass, but now by reason of their wars, scarce a third part of it: The ordinary residence of the Triumviri, or three principal Magistrates, which sway the affairs of all these Islands: of whom the first, entituled Zizo, hath the chief care in sacred matters; the second named Voo, doth preside in Civil; and the third, called Cabacama, manageth the concerns of Peace and War. At this time it is used for the common Empory of the trade of China, that people not permitting Merchants to come amongst them, but bring to this place their Merchandise, as the common Staple; where they are sure to meet Chapmen to buy it of them. Here is also a Royal and Princely Palace in which their Kings formerly Lived and a good Haven and is still very great and Populous, but yet it is much diminished since the Court went to reside at Isdo 125 miles from this City to the West. This City is said at this day to contain above a 100000 houses and is now the Seat of the Dairi a Prince descended of a very ancient and venerable house, but now Subject to the Kings of Nippon, who acknowledgeth his Right and Marries his Daughter if he has one. 2 Offacay, a great and renowned City, conceived to be the richest in all the East; of so great trade, that every ordinary Merchant is said to be worth 30000 Crowns. 3 Fenoiana or Fegenioiana, at the foot of the hill so called, and about nine miles from Meaco. An University of Bonzes, for whose convenience and study, one of the Kings of Japan is said to have founded in this Town, and about that Mountain 3800 Convents, and to endow it with the third part of the Revenues of the Kingdom of Vorn. These Colleges or Convents now reduced to 800 only: but still the University of such fame and credit, that they give not the command or government of it unto any but the King's Son, or his nearest kinsman. 4. Banoun, another of their Universities, where they give degrees; affirmed to be as big as Paris. 5. Bongdo, the chief of all that Province, in which the Jesuits have a College; the Japonites learn the Portugal Language, and the Europeans that of Japan. 6 Coia, the Sepulture of their Princes, or some part of them: it being anciently ordained, That if their whole bodies be not here interred, they must at least send one of their Teeth. 7. Fiongo, about 18 Leagues from Meaco, the subject of many great misfortunes. Destroyed in part by Nabunanga, one of the Kings of this Island, who lived Anno 1550. that which he left, terribly scattered by an Earth-quake, Anno 1596. most of the ruins of it since consumed by fire. 8 Amangasaqui five Leagues from the Sea. 9 Surungo, as big as London with the Suburbs. 10 Edoo, much fairer than that, and the chief Seat of one of their Kings. 11 Firando, a Seat-Royal also of some other King, where in the year 1613. there was a Factory established for the English Merchants. 12 Ochinofamanus, one of their most noted Havens. 13 Tosa, or Tousa, giving name to one of the Islands.

These Islands utterly unknown to the Ancients, were first discovered by Antonio Aboto a Portugal, in the year 1542. I know Mercator taketh it for the Aurea Chersonesus, spoken of by Ptolemy; and I cannot choose but wonder at it: The situation of it so far distant from that of the Chersonese, that either Mercator must be grossly out in his conjecture; or Ptolemy as much mistaken in his informations; which no Man hitherto can justly accuse him of. But passing by the improbability of Mercator's fancy, we are to know, that in former times these Islands were subject to one Prince, whom they obeyed and revered with great affection: which government continued, as themselves report, 1600 years in great State and Majesty. But in the end, the Dairi, (so they call their King) addicting himself wholly unto pleasures, and laying the burden of Government upon other Mens shoulders, his Deputies, or other interior Officers, usurped King power, plumed themselves with the Eagle's feather, and in their Style the name of Yacitas, or Yacitas, in other word, left nothing but the name of Dairi to their Lord and Sovereign. His Issue to this day do enjoy that title, but little else: the Princes bordering on Meaco, once in Royal Seat, hardly allowing him sufficient means to furnish himself Victuals and Apparel; but otherwise bestowing him with as glorious Titles, as if he were possessed still of his ancient power. Only they let him execute the place of an Herald, in giving Arms, and settling Dignities and Honours; which brings him in the greatest profit he hath to trust to. Of all these Kings, he who can make himself Lord of Coquinai (which are the five Realms about Meaco) is called Prince of Tenza, and esteemed Sovereign of the rest. Which height of dignity, Nabunanga, before mentioned, in this time attained to; after him Faxiba, and since him Tacofuma: that Sovereignty being now in a likely way to become hereditary. For Faxiba having brought under his command most of these small Kingdoms, transported the vanquished Kings, and the chief of their Nobles out of one Country into another: to the end that being removed out of their own Realms, and among strange Subjects, they should remain without means to revolt against him: a merciful and prudent course. Having reduced into his power at least 50 of these petty Kingdoms, he divided the greatest part of the conquered Territories amongst his own faithful friends and followers; binding them to supply him with certain numbers of Men upon all occasions. By which, and other politick courses he so settled himself in those Estates, that Tacofuma his Son succeeded without opposition; who, had he lived, would have abolished the vain title of the Dairi, or took it to himself, as he had the power; solicited thereto by the King of China. But dying in or about the year 1607. Fereicifama his Son succeeded, and may be still alive for ought I can learn.

What the Revenues of this King are, it is hard to say. I guess them to be very great, in regard he maketh two millions of Crowns yearly, of the very Rice which he reserveth to himself from his own Demesne. The store of Gold and precious Stones which these Islands yield, being wholly his, must needs add much unto his Coffers. And for his power, it is said, That Faxiba was able to raise so good an Army out of the Estate demised by him to his faithful followers, that he resolved once on the Conquest of China: and to that end caused Timber to be felled for 2000 Vessels for the transporting of his Army. And had he lived a little longer, 'tis probable enough he might have shaken that great Kingdom, the Japonites being so much the better Soldiers, that a small party of them would defeat a good Army of Chineses. The fear whereof made the King of China, after his decease, correspond so fairly with his Successour.

2. The PHILIPPINÆ, and Isles adjoyning.

South of Japan, lyeth a great fry of Islands, which are now called PHILIPPINÆ, in honour of Philip the Second King of Spain; in whose time discovered by Legaspi, a Spanish Captain, Anno 1564. Strangely mistaken by Mercator for the Baruffa of Ptolemy, those being placed by him in the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala, five degrees South of the Equator, these situate on the East of China, in 13 or 14 degrees of Northern Latitude: those being onely five in number, these reckoned at above ten thousand.

The Air in all of them generally very mild and temperate, especially in the mid-land parts; that on the shores somewhat inclining unto heat. The soil abundantly fruitful of all Commodities both for necessity and delight, that is to say, Rice, Pulse, Wax, Honey, Sugar-Canes, many pleasant Fruits, the fairest Figs of all the World, plenty of Fish, variety of Birds and Beasts, as well wild as tame, great store of Cotton-Wooll, some Mines of Gold, and of other Metals great abundance.

Of all these Islands there are onely forty in possession of the King of Spain, belonging properly to Asia, but by him placed under the Government of New Spain in America, because discovered by Lagassi at the instigation or procurement of Don Lewis de Velasco, who was then Vice-Roy of that Province. In these forty Islands there are thought to be at least a million of people, subject to that Crown; many of which have been converted by the Friers and Jesuits unto Christianity. Of these the principal in account are, I. LUSSON, affirmed to contain in compass 1000 miles; beautified by the Spaniards with a fair City, seated on a commodious Haven, which they call Munilla: in which resides the Deputy or Lieutenant-Governor for all these Islands, and the Bishop of the Philippines for ordering all affairs of those Churches. It lyes between Longitude. 145. and 150. and 14. and 20. North Latitude. II. MINDANAO, 380 Leagues in compass; in which are many good Towns, as 1 Cailon, 2 Pavados, 3 Subut, 4 Dapiro, and some others. This is one of the greatest of the Philippine Islands, which was heretofore under the Dominion of the Spaniards but has now revolted from them; it is in length from East to West 400 Spanish miles, and lies in Longitude, 150 and Latitude between 5 and 10. The Principal City lyes on the South West side of the Island and is of the same Name. III. TANDAIR, more fruitful than any of the rest, and of good extent, 160 Leagues in Circuit, more specially called Philippina because first discovered and so named. IV. PALLOHAN, as much mistaken by Mercator for the Bazacata of Ptolemy.

These with the rest were subject in former times to the Kings of China, till they did voluntarily abandon them and confine their Empire within the Continent. On this relinquishment the people fell into Civil Wars, every Man getting what he could for himself and the stronger preying on the weaker: which factions and divisions gave great help to the Spaniard, in the Conquest of those few which are under their power. Islands of more importance to the Spaniards, than is commonly thought; and therefore furnished by them at their first Plantations with Bulls, Kine, Horses, and Mares, which before they wanted, and do now reasonably abound with. For besides the abundance of victuals, and some plenty of Gold, which they find therein, the situation is very fit to subdue the rest of the neighbouring Islands to settle the commerce betwixt China and Mexico; to bring on a continual Trade betwixt the Islands of this Sea, and those of America; and finally, to prevent the Moors or Arabians from planting their Mahometanism any further Eastwards.

Not far from these, on the South of Japan bending towards the West is another great heap of Rocks & Islands. Some of them rich in Gold, and furnished with very choice fruits, and other necessities; and peopled with a stout and warlike breed of Men, well skilled in Archery. The chief whereof have the names of 1 Lequin Major, 2 Lequin Minor, 3 Hermosa, 4 Reix Magos, &c. of which little memorable, but that Hermosa, as the Spaniards, or Formosa as the Latines call it, hath lately got the name of New-Holland; because not long since taken, planted and strongly fortified by some Adventurers of that Country. And not far off are those called 5 Cumbabon, in which is said to be a Plant-animal or sensible tree. 6 Mattan, unfortunately remarkable for the death of Magellanus, slain there in a battel with the Natives, in favour of the King of 7 Sebat, an adjoining Island; by the King whereof he had been kindly entertained: and whom by his perswasions he had gained to the Christian Faith, and baptized him by the name of Charles, in honour of Charles Emperour and King of Spain, under whom he served in this Present voyage. But long this miscreant King (Hamabar he was called before his Baptism) continued not in this good opinion; treacherously killing John de Sarran chief Pilot of Magellanus's small Navy, with about 70 of his Men, and probably relapsing to his former Gentilism.

3. The Isles of BANDAN.

THE Isles of BANDAN are in number seven that is to say 1 Mira, 2 Rosolargium, 3 Aii, 4 Rom, 5 Nerra, 6 Gannape, the last of all, continually burning; and for that cause deserted of its Inhabitants: 7 Bandan, bigger than any of the rest, and therefore giving name to all. Situate South of the Philippines in the seventh degree of Southern Latitude. More fruitful of Nutmegs, than any other of all these parts; for which cause never without the concourse of foreign Merchants from Java, Malaca, and China: and of late times from these Northern Countries of Europe also. Where by the way, the Nutmeg-tree is like a Peach, or Peach-tree, the innermost part whereof is the Nutmeg it self, covered over with a thin film or coat, which we call by the Arabian name of Maciz, or Mace, and over that the fruit it self, as it is in Peaches, Malacotoons, and such fruits as those. Banda lieth in the Southern Latitude 5. to the South-East, of Amboina.

The People barbarous & rude, slothful, of weak bodies, and dull of wit; living confusedly together without rule or order. Some of them still continue in their ancient Paganism; but the greatest part are thought to be Mahometans: in which Religion very zealous, and so devout, that they will not go unto their work or worldly businesses, till they have visited the Mosquits, and done their devotions. A shame or pattern shall I say in this, unto many Christians: All of them bloody and revengful, but yet so far from wronging the body of a Dead Enemy; that they use to bury it with sweet Odours.

Some Towns they have, of which the principal, 1 Nera, and 2 Lontore, joyned in a League against the rest; (the quarrel rising from the cutting down of certain trees) proceeding to the butchery of one another, and ending in the loss of their common liberty. Subject in shew to the King of Botone, one of the Moluccoes, but too much at their own disposing. They had not else entred into quarrels with one another. Which opportunity being taken by the watchful Hollanders, they did not onely settle four Factories there; but for the security of their Trade, and to awe the Natives, they have built three Forts. They had also turned one of their Mosquits to a Fortress; whereat the people were so incensed that they promised liberty to their Slaves, to get them out of it, who falling desperately on, fired it over their heads, and killed every Man of them. The English Merchants have some trading also in these Islands, more acceptable than the other; because not so insolent, and grounding their possession on a better title: the people of Lantore, voluntarily submitting themselves to the protection of King James, the first Monarch of the British Islands, and to this use giving possession of their Country to Captain Robert Hayes, Novem. 24. 1620. The like done at the same time by the Inhabitants of Wayre, and Rosingen, two other Islands; which, if they be not the same with those of Mira, and Rosolargium spoken of before, are probably some lesser Islands, neighbouring to Poleon and Poolamay, of which more hereafter:

There is not far off another Island, not in this account, called Timor, situate in the tenth degree of Southern Latitude; the chief of many little Islands which lie round about it: but not else observable, except it be for that abundance of Sanders both white and yellow, which growing there, is greedily exchanged by the Inhabitants for Iron, Hatchets, Swords, Knives, and the like commodities.

4. The MOLUCCOES.

THE MOLUCCOES are in number many; the King of Terenate which is one of them, being said to have Dominion over 70 Islands: but the determinate number of them I do no where find. Situate on both sides of the Aequator, and consequently of an hot and intemperate air: the soil so dry and spongiuous, that it sucketh sucketh up the greatest Shower of Rain that falls amongst them before it can pass into the Sea. Not very well furnished with necessaries for the life of Man; but that defect supplied with the abundance of Spices which are growing here, Cinnamon, Ginger, Nutmegs, Mustick, Aloes, Pepper, and the like commodities; for which, the Merchants bring them all things that the Country wants. But 'tis the Clove, which is the great Riches of these Islands, and peculiar in a manner to them. A Spice, which groweth on Trees, like Bay-trees yielding blossoms, first white, then green, (at which time they yield the pleasantest smell in the world) and last of all red and hard, which are the Cloves. Of nature so extreme hot, that if a Pail of water should onely stand in the room, in which they are cleansed and sorted, the Cloves in two days would dry it up. Of which nature the unspun Silks of China are affirmed to be.

The People for the most part Idolaters, intermixt with some Mahometans dwelling on the shores; and of late time with Christians in their several Factories. Of several Originals, and different Languages, but all in general fraudulent, perfidious, treacherous, inhumane, and of noted wickedness. Few of them clothed, nor much caring to hide their shame. Not civilized by the cohabitation of more modest and civil Nations; pity such ill conditions should be lodged in such handsome bodies: the people being said to be better proportioned than the other Indians; and for strength and valour not followed by any of them. About the year of Christ 1013 The Chinian Empire being then in a flourishing State, first became Masters of these Islands, but not without blood and Treasure: about 60 years after they were expelled by the Inhabitants of Molucca; after which Succeeded the Persians, mixed with Arabians and by the latter they were called the Molucca Isles. The Ancient Greeks and Romans knew nothing of these Islands though they had Spices from them, brought in by the Indian and Arabian Merchants, by the Way of the Red Sea. In latter times they were brought by Persia to the Caspian and Euxine Seas, and from thence dispersed over Christendom by the Genoueses and Venetians. After the Turks prevailed in Asia, the Trade was again turned by the way of Grand Cairo and Alexandria. But after the Portugueses by many Discoveries had opened their way to the East-Indies about the year 1512; they first arrived in these Islands, and cut off all Trade between the Arabians and these Islands, by which the Sultan of Egypt lost 8000 Ducats by the year. The Spaniards first came hither under Ferdinando Magelhaens about the year 1520; whereupon ensued a contest between Charles the 5th and John 3d King of Portugal, concerning the Dominion of these Islands, and Charles resigned his Right to John for 200000 Ducats. About the year 1579 the English under Drake began to disturb the Portugueses here. About 1599, the Hollanders began to send Numerous and strong Fleets into these Seas; by which, and the great Wars, and changes which have since happened in Spain and Portugal they have intirely possessed themselves of these Islands. The Earth in them is extremely dry and Porey like a Pumice-Stone, and drinks up not only the Rain as fast as it falls, but all those Springs and Rivers too which fall from the hills before they can reach the Sea; and in many places it sends out fire and Smoak. The Plains are covered with sand and Shells, so that except Spice it scarce affords any thing useful to the Life of Man.

Of all the Islands which pass under this name, there are not above five or six of any reckoning: that is to say, 1 Terenate, is the chief of the 5 Molucca-Islands now in the Hands of the Hollanders, tho' it has a King of its own who resides in the Town of Malay. The Dutch have some Forts in this Island to assure its possession. 2 Tidor, 3 Macir, 4 Rachian, 5 Machin, and 6 Botone: None of them above six Leagues in compass, many not so much; the whole cluster of them thronged together in a girdle of no more than 25 Leagues in the Circumference: yet of such consequence and importance, that the two famous voyages of Americus Vesputius, and Ferdinand Magellanus the first employed by Immanuel King of Portugal, the other by Charles the Emperour, and King of Spain, were undertaken only to find out the next way unto them.

Of the rest, Machin and Tidor have their proper Kings; so hath Botone also, if that be one of them: the King whereof had anciently some title and authority over those of Randon, Macir, and Machin, which are subject to the King of Terenate, who is a Mahometan in Religion; and said to be the Lord of 70 Islands. This the most puissant Member of this scattered body; and for that cause most aimed at by all Competitors; the Spaniards having here one Fortress, and the Hollanders three. Both Nations hated by the Natives, whom they consume and waste in the wars betwixt them; but of the two the Spaniard looked on by the people as the more a Gentleman; the other stomached and despised for their sordid dealings. Nothing else memorable in the story of Chorography of them, but that they were discovered by the conduct of Magellanus, in the Reign of Charles the Fifth, who employed him in it, Anno 1519. and that there is in Terenate a Prodigious Mountain, in height above the Clouds of the Air, and in nature agreeing with the Element of Fire, which it seems to mount to: huge flames whereof, with dreadful thunders, and dark smok, it sends forth continually. Reckoned by some amongst these Islands, but howsoever neighbouring near them, are those of Polerone and Poolaway; the first more plentiful of Cloves, the second more proper for the Nutmeg, but both acknowledging the Sovereignty of the Kings of England: for Polerone, by the general and voluntary Act of all the chief Men of the Country, was surrendered into the power of King James I. the possession of it being given for his Majesty's use to Captain Courttop, Decemb. 23. Anno 1616. no other Nation at that time having any interest in it, or Pretensions to it: which notwithstanding it was not long after seized on by the insolent and ungrateful Hollanders, who being to restore it upon composition, cut down all the Clove-Trees, so to deprive the English of the benefit of them. Poolaway made the like surrender at the same time also, declared by setting up the English Colours on the top of their Castle, giving to Courttop a green turf (whereby as by Livery and Seisin) to take possession of the Country, promising the annual tribute of a branch of Nutmegs; and that they should sell neither Mace nor Nutmegs to any, but to those of the English Nation. The like done at or near the same time, by Wayre and Rosingen, two other Islands of these Seas; which if they be not those two of Randon, pointed at before, must needs be brought within the number of this scattered Company.

5. The SINDAE or SELEBES.

Near the Moluccoes, and almost intermingled with them, are a set of Islands which Ptolemy calleth SINDAE; and the Moderns SELEBES; many in tale, but not above four of any weight; that is to say, 1 SELEBES, 2 Gilolo, 3 Amboma, 4 Macassar; of which the two first are situate under the Equator, and the last somewhat on the South of it: all of them in the time of Ptolemy inhabited by Anthropophagi, and a long time after; insomuch as the Kings of the Moluccoes did use to send their condemned Persons into these Islands, there to be devoured. Which said in general, we will take a more particular view of them, as they lye before us.

1. SELEBES, which gives name to the rest, and hath under it many lesser Islands, is large and rich. The soil thereof exceeding fertile, the People tall and comely, and of colour, not so much black as ruddy. Much given to Piracy, and all Idolaters till of late; governed by many Kings or petty Princes, the cause of much contention, and many quarrels: three of which are said to have been converted to Christianity; and for that cause much hated by their heathenish Subjects, who thereupon rebelled against them. It is situate West of the Moluccoes, and hath therein a Town called Sion, honoured with the abode of one of their Christian Kings: but possibly not so called until until their conversion; the proper name thereof being Cian. 2. Nibon, in the South, and 3. Terolli in the North Parts of it.

2. G I L O L O, called also Batachina, is one of those Islands which our late Navigators include under the name of Del Moro. Of large extent, conceived to be half as big as Italy: By that account (the truth whereof I do very much doubt) greater than Zeilon it is in compass, tho' of less reputation: That being Governed by its own Princes; This subject for the most part to the King of Terenate. Situate East of the Molucco's, exceeding plentiful of Rice, well stored with wild Hens; and on the shores provided of a kind of Shell-fish, which in taste much resembleth Mutton. A Tree they have which they call by the name of Sagu, of the pith whereof they make their bread; and of the sap or juice of it they compose a pleasant drink, which serveth them instead of Wine. The Air intemperately hot, the people well proportioned, but rude and savage; some of them Gentiles, some Mahometans, of which last Religion is their King. The chief Town of it is Batchame, or Batachina. (whence the new name unto the Island) in which the Hollanders have a Fort to defend their Factory.

3. A M B O I N A, South of the Aequator, and the third of the Sindæ hath many Islands of less note, which depend upon it, and do communicate in the name. In compass about five hundred miles, said by Maginus to be extremely rough and barren; which must be understood with reference to some kinds of Grain. For otherwise it is very fertile, abundantly productive of Rice, Citrons, Lemmons, Oranges, Coco-nuts, Sugar-Canes, and other fruits, and very plentiful of Cloves; which last, as it makes some to reckon it amongst the Moluccoes; so may it be the reason why the Island is defective in such fruits as require much moisture: the Clove being of so hot a temper as before was noted, that it draweth to it all the moisture of the Earth, which is near unto it. This Island lyes West of Bandao 24 Leagues, and very near the Line.

The people much given to Piracy, wherewith they do infest all the neighbouring Islands, defamed for Cannibals or Man-eaters: it being here a constant Custom, that when their Parents are grown old, or sick of any incurable Disease, they give them to one another to be eaten by them. They have one Town of more note than other, which they call Amboina, by the name of the Island. First taken by the Portugals, and by them secured with a strong Fortrefs: during whose power here, the Jesuits, who had in their several Residences, converted many to Christianity. But in the year 1605, the Island and the Fort both were conquered by Stephen of Hagan, for the States of the United Provinces: who having cleared the Country of the Portugal Forces, possessed themselves of it. Received by the Natives at their first coming with joy and Triumph: but they got little by the change, as they found soon after; their new Masters being more burdensome and insufferable, than the old had been. For claiming it by the right of Conquest, they think they may oppress the Natives by the Law of Arms; and ingross all trade unto themselves as the true Proprietaries. Infamous even amongst the rude and savage Indians for their barbarous inhumanity, executed upon some of the English (the greatest Patrons under God which they have in the World) whom in the year 1618, they most cruelly tortured; and most wickedly murdered; under colour of some Plot to betray their Fortrefs: but in plain truth for no other reason but because they were more beloved by the Inhabitants, and began to gain upon their trade.

4. West of Amboina and South-West of Selebes, lyeth the fourth of these Islands, called MACASSAR; said to contain from East to West 600 miles: It is extended from North to South, 200 French Leagues; and is 100 broad. There are in it six Kingdoms; Macassar, Cion, Sanguin, Cauripana, Gotigan and Supara. The two principal Cities are Macassar, and Bantachia. The South parts of this Island are much frequented by the English and Dutch, which latter of late in 1669, have severely treated the King of Macassar, whose Dominions lye in the South part of the Island, and comprehend the far greatest part of it. This Island lyes between the Moluccoes the East, and Borneo to the West; and is sometimes ascribed to the former. The Line cutteth the Northern part of it. The Inhabitants of it heretofore went naked and eat Man's-flesh; and had all the Criminals of the Molucco's sent over to them for that purpose, but they are now much civiliz'd. There is Gold found in the Rivers mix'd with the Sand. Tavernier, Part 2. Pag. 156. The heats are excessive in the day, but the night is cooler. The Capital City is of the same name, and is seated on the most Southern Point. The King is a Mahometan, and will not suffer his Subjects to turn Christians; yet the Portugueses in 1656 got leave to build a fair Church in Macassar; but the next year it was destroyed. The Hollander in 1658, sent an Embassy to China, which being opposed by the Jesuits there, they revenged this quarrel on the Jesuits and Portugueses in Macassar in 1660; which they effected by burning all their Ships, and forced the King to expel the Portugueses out of his Dominions. This Prince's name was Sumbaco, who was also forced to give 200 Loaves of Gold to redeem the Royal Fort, which the Dutch Fleet had taken. It is but lately that this Prince became a Mahometan. Tavernier, Part 2. Pag. 191. Plentiful of Rice, Flesh, Fish, Salt, and Cotton-Wooll; not destitute of Gold and Pearls, and well stored with Sandar (Sandalum it is called in Latine) a medicinal Wood, growing like a Nut-tree; of several colours, white, red, yellow, but red the best: the fruit in make like a Cherry, but of no esteem. In some parts overgrown with wood, in which certain fiery Flies make nightly such shining light, as if every twig or bough were a burning Candle. In the middle covered with high Mountains, out of which flow many navigable Rivers.

The people for the most part Gentiles, intermixt on the Sea-coasts with some Mahometans. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Senderem, the King's Seat, situate near a large Lake very commodiously for Traffick. 2. Macassar, an English Factory, so called according to the name of the Island.

Near to these Islands, and somewhat North to Batachina, are some other Isles, plentiful of all things necessary for the life of Man; but inhabited by a thievish and Piratical people: the principal of which, 1. Terrao, 2. Sanguin, 3. Solor, 4. Moratay; in which last they eat Battata Roots instead of bread; besides some others of less note. Most of the people Gentiles, except those of Sanguin, the King whereof being gained to the Christian Faith, by some of the Jesuits, hath brought many of his Subjects to the same Religion.
